OF THE

RIGHT REVEREND

TO THE TRULY NOBLE, VERTVOVS, AND WORTHY OF ALL HONORS,

WILLIAM, Earle of Pembroke, &c. and PHILIP, Earle of Montgomerie, &c.

Knights of the Honorable Order of the GARTER.

Right Honorable Lords:

AS Cornelius was warned in a vision to send to Joppa for Simon Peter, who should instruct him in all things which he should learn and doe, for his salvation; the occasion whereof is set down that his Prayers and Almes were come up in remembrance before God. Even so it pleased your Right Honorable Father, out of his piety and zeale to God, and Religion, to send to the University of Cambridge for a sufficient Peter to be sent to him, in like manner to instruct him and his Family, what he should learn and doe; the choice whereof fell on this Reverend Father (who is here represented before your eyes) by the Ancients and Heads of the said University. The seed of these his godly labours was sowed in your Inheritance and Patrimony, (though in your Infancy) so that it doth of right appertain to your Lordships; wherefore to entitle any other Patrons for a dedication of this Worke, were a manifeſt wrong to your Lordſhips. Neither doe I preſent your Lordſhips with a new Dedication, but a continuation of that which is formerly your owne, by dedication and conſecration to your Lordſhips Father. And here muſt not be paſſed over in ſilence the Right Honorable Counteſſe, your Lady Mother who hath her portion in this Worke, as by the Dedications joyntly, and ſeverally unto her Ladiſhip doth appeare, which doth ſtill manifeſt the right that thereof belongeth to your Honorable Stemme and Family.

What manner of perſon, and with what vertues, and what Eminency of place, this Cornelius was endued, and what diligence and behaviour his ſervants uſed in their meſſage, which is attributed to his godly government in his Family, the Scripture mentioneth in the tenth of the Acts, and a moſt Reverend Father hath enlarged the ſame in a Sermon on that Text. The imitation whereof ſhall bee an induction or motive to delineate what Honourable place your Lordſhips Father enjoyed under his Prince in the government of the Kingdome, to whom was committed the ruling of a whole People and Nation; being made Lord Preſident of Wales, and of the Marches thereof, and by the enſample of Cornelius; His godly care for the inſtruction of that people, in placing this Reverend Father among them: whereof I my ſelfe have ſeene the godly proceedings both in the government of your L. Fathers Family at Wilton, where he was firſt placed by him; as alſo at Cardiffe, where hee read a Lecture, as in all other places where he came, which his zeale and aſſiduity in preaching was accompanied with the confluence of the people thereunto adjoyning, bearing record to the ſame. But leſt I bee taxed to be out of my Element, which I doe acknowledge, for my underſtanding parts are too ſhallow, and my mouth too weake to ſet forth the praiſes of this ſo Reverend a Father, who did undergoe theſe travailes for the comfortable helpe and capacity of the weake and ſimple Reader: Comfortable hee was in his countenance, comfortable in his ſpeech and preaching; ſo that hee may truly be called a Zelotes, and as it is ſaid of David; Hee waſted his loynes in preaching, but chiefly by his painfull labours in writing, which in this Volume ensuing remaine to all Christian Readers for their further comfort (though hee be taken from us) to the which I leave them, and to this learned Preface following; besides other the like in this Worke, and to the judgement of the godly learned of these times.

And so returne againe to your Lordships, not doubting but that you are furnished with many rich Pearles of great price. If it shall please your L. to admit this Pearle a place into your treasury, it will surmount them all; It is the same which the rich Merchant in the Gospell having found, Went and sold all that hee had, and bought it. That so it may be said of your Lo: Euge bone serve; Enter into the joyes prepared for you from the beginning of the world. And so submitting my selfe to your L. for my presumption, being so unable and unfit a man to enter into matters of so high a nature to such great Personages: My humble prayer shall be to Almighty God, that you may goe forward in all vertues as you have begun, according to your L. Fathers godly ensample, that so it may remaine to your posterity, whereby God may be glorified, your Prince and Country benefited, and your souls comforted, with all the comforts mentioned in this ensuing Volume: the doctrine whereof is the summe of all which a Christian shall need to make and take hold of in his profession, and shall continue so long as the Sunne and Moone endureth.

Your Lordships humbly to be commanded,

THE PREFACE,
PVRGED FROM THE FAVLTS OF FORMER IMPRESsions, and altered ſomewhat upon the alteration of Circumſtances, for the better behoofe of the READER.

ALthough (Chriſtian Reader) both God and man may looke for at your hands, that the word of God ſhould dwell in us plenteouſly, and that we ſhould have our wits ſo exerciſed in it, that wee bee able to wade in the deep places thereof without a guide, (now, I ſay, when the light of the Goſpell hath been ſet on a Candleſtick ſo long, and not onely Moſes and the Prophets; but alſo the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, have in every towne almoſt, ſuch as preach them on the Sabbaths and Feſtivall dayes,) yet for all that; too true it is, and with griefe to be ſpoken, as well as to our ſhame, the greateſt part know not Chriſt as they ought to know him, and the viſion, I meane the doctrine of the Old and New Teſtament, is as a Booke that is ſealed, as the Prophet ſpeaketh. The cauſes hereof are many and knowne; firſt our naturall corruption, whereby wee love darkneſſe more than light, and eaſe more than paines-taking: next, our naturall dimneſſe, whereby we are too weake to apprehend cleerely the greater matters, as Iuſtinus Martyr hath. Nay, the moſt cleare things of all, doe no otherwiſe dazle our underſtanding, than the light of the day doth offend the Bats eyes, as Ariſtotle confeſſeth: Laſtly, the malice of our ancient enemy, who becauſe he could not hinder the windes from blowing, and the ſeed from being ſowne upon earth, (hinder the publiſhing and free paſſage of the Goſpell, which hee principally ſhot at) therefore hath the greater wrath, and ſtriveth the more eagerly (by himſelfe and by his miniſters) to take that which is ſowne, out of mens hearts, or to make it unprofitable. The remedies likewiſe are eaſie to be diſcerned, I pray God they may be at the length as well thought upon and obtained. And what be they? The chiefe and principall one is the grace of Gods Spirit, which being given to a man he ſearcheth all things, even the deepe things of God, 1.Cor.2. But untill it be given there remaineth a vaile over the heart, untaken away in the reading of Gods Booke, and ſo that which ſhould have beene for our light, is made unto us an occaſion of falling.

The Spirit.

What ſhall we ſay then? Is the Letter darke, or doth it turne any out of the way? No, our mindes are dark, even darkneſſe it ſelfe, Iohn 1.5. And though there appeare unto us as great a light as there did unto Saul at noone day, when he came neare to Damaſcus, yet until by the finger of the holy Ghoſt, as it were by the hand and miniſtery of Ananias, the ſcales of naturall ignorance be taken away, well we may ſuffer our ſelves to be led by others, but wee ſhall not be able to ſee the way our ſelves. It is true that Clemens Alexandrinus conſidering of thoſe words of our Saviour, Mat. 13. He that hath eares to heare, let him heare, fitteth with them that ſaying of Epichar. νοῦς ὁρᾷ, νοῦς ἀκούει, that is, the minde ſeeth, the minde heareth; as though all that bring with them a reaſonable minde, the ſame were by and by capable of divine matters. But (by Clemens leave) the caſe is far otherwiſe. The naturall man (take him in his wiſeſt part) perceiveth not the ſpirituall things of God, 1 Cor. 2. and the Gentile (that is unregenerate) walketh in the vanity, not of his ſenſuall powers only, but alſo of his minde, Epheſ. 4. And if wee will bee good Chriſtians indeed, and prove what is the good will of God, and acceptable and perfit, we muſt be changed by the renuing of our minde, Rom. 12. For this cauſe Saint Paul prayed for the Epheſians, that the Spirit of wiſedome and revelation might be given them, and that the eyes of their underſtanding might be lightned, &c. And for this cauſe our Saviour exhorteth us to annoint our eies with eye-ſalve, that we may ſee. What is this anointing eye-ſalve? but even the anointing which inſtructeth us of all things, 1 Iohn 2. which ſame is none other than the holy Ghoſt, which teacheth us all things, Ioh. 14. The gift of the Spirit therefore is moſt neceſſary if we will underſtand the Scriptures, becauſe he beſt knoweth the meaning of them, who was the author and enditer of them, either of the old Teſtament or of the new. For though the old have the greater covering laid over it, yet the new is not without his covering; except it pleaſe God, who cauſed the light to ſhine out of darkneſſe, to ſhine in our hearts by his Spirit, that ſo we may behold with open face as it were, Chriſt painted out in the Goſpell before our eyes. And hereunto agreeth well the ſaying of Saint Hierome, who ſpeaking of that verſe of the 119. Pſalme, Revela oculos meos, &c. take away the vaile from mine eyes, &c. ſaith that this vaile lyeth not onely upon the face of Moſes, but alſo of the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles too, and that neither of theſe can be underſtood, except they be opened from above. Now the caſe ſtandeth thus, that we bee not ſufficient of our ſelves to underſtand the plaineſt of Gods Bookes, as of our ſelves, but our ſufficiency is of the Spirit. We are taught hereby firſt to be humble, knowing that the ſecret of the Lord is revealed to them that feare him, and them that be meeke he will guide in judgement, Pſal. 25. Then to pray with all manner of prayer and ſupplication, and with all earneſtneſſe, that this key of David, the Spirit of the true David, Ieſus Chriſt may be given us. For if the Spirit once open, no man ſhutteth, but if he ſhut, and as long as he ſhutteth, no man can open. Nay, as Auguſtine ſaith, though God himſelfe ſhould appeare unto us in the likeneſſe of man, and ſpeake unto us, yet if he doe not move us and direct us by his inward grace, (the grace of his Spirit) he ſhould doe us no good at all with all his preaching.

Therefore I ſay deare brother begin here, make prayer for Gods enlightning Spirit, the firſt ſtaffe of thy Ladder, and the firſt ſtone of thy building. Pray for the ſame early and late, and doubt not but it ſhall be given thee: for if we that bee evill can give good gifts unto our children, much more ſhall our heavenly Father give his holy Spirit to them that deſire him. This promiſe is made by Chriſt and by no worſe perſon, and therefore as he that beleeveth it, hath ſealed that God is true, Iohn 3.3. ſo he that beleeveth it not, yea, or doubteth of it, ſaying: Who ſhall aſcend into heaven and fetch me the Spirit: the ſame man maketh Chriſt a lyar, and ſo diſhonoureth the Son and the Father alſo.

This may ſuffice concerning the chiefe author of underſtanding the Scriptures, namely, the Spirit, and concerning the chiefe meane to obtaine the Spirit by, and ſo conſequently the meaning of the Scriptures, namely, prayer. Now beſides theſe there are many other helpes and meanes, which though they bee not as effectuall, as the former, ſpecially as the Spirit, (for God forbid wee ſhould make any compariſon between the power of God, and the weakneſſe of man) yet for all that they be at no hand to be omitted or neglected.

Nay, this is true, that if we doe nothing but pray, as did the Meſſalians of old, or onely hold open our mouthes, as it were, and gape after extraordinary inſpirations, as certaine Enthuſiaſts doe to this day, we ſhould moſt vilely tempt God, (like to them that will looke for a good crop, and yet take no paines with their ground, or that will needs be crowned, and yet care not to ſtrive lawfully) and ſo in ſtead of a bleſſing we ſhould reape a curſe. Therefore though we muſt begin with prayer, yet we may not be content with prayer, but we muſt adde to it in the ſecond place, a diligent hearkening to our Paſtors and Teachers, reading Gods Word unto us, and giving the ſenſe. So the Jewes which were returned from Babylon hearkened devoutly to Ezra, and the Levites reading and preaching unto them, Nehem. 8. So their Elders before the captivity lent a patient eare to Baruc, reading a part of Ieremies Propheſies unto them, though the ſame contained moſt terrible threats againſt them, Ierem. 36. And indeed, when, though it bee but a mans trumpeter, or cryer, no man deſpiſeth him, or turneth the deafe eare unto him, and when the Romans held their Cenſor ſo Reverend, that they thought him worthy of no ſmall puniſhment, that did but yawne before him reakleſly, doe we thinke that God will not judge them that heare not at all, or care not how they heare his Embaſſadors ſent from his owne ſide, and holding forth the word of Truth and reconcilement? yes, he will both judge and puniſh, and that ſeverely.

Therfore, when thou entreſt into the Houſe of God, take heed unto thy foot, for the place whereon thou ſtandeſt is holy ground; it is none other but the Houſe of God, and the Gate of Heaven, Geneſis 28.17. Take heed unto thine eyes, that they doe not ſo much marke him that ſpeaketh, as in whoſe name he ſpeaketh; Otherwiſe, heatheniſh Alexander and Attila that received Iaddus, and Leo, as the Lord himſelfe, and fooliſh Galathians that received Saint Paul as an Angel of God, even as Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall riſe up againſt thee and condemne thee. Laſtly, take heed unto thine eares, and thine heart, and all that is within thee, that thou devote the ſame, as it were, to that which is read or preached (read out of Gods Booke, preached according to that rule) and that thou both minde it and carry it away, as much as thou art able; for this will bring a man light at the laſt, and will make the Scriptures waxe eaſier and eaſier from day to day. But I may not ſtay longer upon this point.

Ioſeph. antiquit. li. 11. cap. 8. P. Diacon. l. 5. Gal. 4.

The third thing that we muſt uſe, is reading. For it is to be wiſhed, ſaith Origen, not onely that you would heare Gods Word in the Church, but alſo that you would be occupied therein in your houſes, for there Chriſt is preſent, and everywhere with them that ſeeke him. So farre Origen. For this exerciſe the men of Berea have obtained a good report, Acts 17. for there it is written that they ſearched the Scriptures daily. Alſo Timothy himſelfe, if hee had not beene very painfull this way, could not in any likelihood have attained to that commendation that is given him, 2 Tim. 3. namely, that he had knowne the Scriptures of a childe. Laſtly, that I trouble you with no more examples, either ancient or later, thoſe faithfull witneſſes of Chriſt in Bohemia, called Thaborites, if they had not plyed the Scriptures diligently, could not have beene ſo skilfull, and ſo ready in them, as Æneas Sylvius, their profeſſed enemy, reporteth them to have beene, even ſo skilfull, that their ſimple women were able to anſwer out of the New Teſtament, and old both, when as the Prieſts of his Countrey of Italy, were ſuch Students, that they did not reade over the New Teſtament once.

3. Reading of the Word. Origen in Levit. homil. 9.

Æn. Sylv. de dict. & fact. Alphon. li. 2. cap. 17.

To this effect writeth Sylvius. For the underſtanding of the Scriptures, it fareth much alike, as it doth for underſtanding of other bookes. Who doe beſt perceive the meaning of an Author, but they who by long uſe and turning him over, have made him familiar unto them? So we, if wee will underſtand what God meaneth in one place, muſt know what hee ſpeaketh in other places about the ſame matter (which cannot be without reading) and then by conferring them together, wee shall bee greatly furthered for the sense, even as the striking of two or three strings together, directeth a Musitian for the tuning of his Instrument, or as the Clouds dashing together in the ayre above, throw from them at the length a most bright lightning. The saying of Iren. is good, Ostensiones quæ sunt in Scripturis, non possunt aliter ostendi, nisi ex ipsis Scripturis: That is, Scriptures may not otherwise be explaned but by the Scriptures themselves: therefore it behoveth us to bee skilfull in them. So farre Irenæus exhorteth us. But to take away all excuses from us, by reason of the hardnesse of them, Augustine mee thinkes speaketh most pregnantly, where he saith, that there is no obscurity (to talke of) in one place, but the same is made most plaine in another: and againe, there is in the Scriptures both verity (or doctrine of faith) and also discipline (or doctrine of manners) and the same so proportioned out, that every man may draw forth thence that which is sufficient for him, so that he come to draw with a devout minde.

Irenæ. 3. c. 12.

Aug. de doctr. Christ l. 2. c. 6. Aug. de ultim. cred. c. 6.

I may not inlarge this matter, either by exhortation or reproofe, lest I be too tedious. In the fourth place Conference is necessary, and conference I say, not of Scripture with Scripture, (for that I have touched already by the way) but with them that are able to instruct us, and set us in the right way, if we be out. Examples hereof we have in Christs Disciples, whose manner was when they had gotten him apart, to ask him what he meant by this and that, &c. Or, if you will have an example of asking a question about the Word written (albeit the reason of the Word written and preached is the same, then look upon the Eunuch, Act. 8. he having gotten Philip into the Chariot with him, demanded of him how that place in Esay the Prophet, (He was led as a sheepe to the slaughter, &c.) which then he was in reading, was to bee understood? This is registred of the Eunuch by S. Luke, and no doubt not onely for our instruction, but also for the Eunuchs praise. And so Hieronym. highly commendeth Marcella for the like respect: namely, because as often as she came in his sight, she moved him for some one doubt or other out of the Scripture: and why? non ut contenderet, sed ut quærendo disceret earum quæstionum solutiones quas opponi posse intelligebat: not to contend, but by questioning, to learne what might be answered to those objections which shee perceived might be moved. The like commendation hee giveth also to Fabiola for the like zeale. Now I know this course of asking questions, and moving doubts for the understanding of the Scripture, is laughed at of the world, and they that are so given, are called busie-bodies, pratlers, idle-headed, &c. Even of the like conscience that Pharaoh said to the Officers of the Children of Israel, Ye are idle, ye are idle, when they desired leave to goe and serve God. Howbeit, while these commandements and promises doe belong unto us, Seeke and ye shall finde: They shall seeke the Law at the Priests mouth: Edifie one another: and this infirmity doth lie upon us, woe unto him that is alone: Either fellowship or death: (the one is the voyce of God in Salomon, the other of nature in the Rabbins.) And lastly, these sentences be subscribed unto, as most true and belonging to all; they that be ignorant of Gods matters, shall not be acknowledged of God; they that be ignorant of those things which they ought to know, Verecundia inquirendi, because they are ashamed to aske, without doubt are not to be excused: I say these things and the like considered, I hope it will never repent the godly minded of their well-doing, namely, of asking when they doubt, and knocking where they hope to finde opening. For surely, howsoever prophane men shall judge of them (whose scorning is true honour, and whose favour is foule disgrace) yet for all that there is a Booke of remembrance written before God for such zeale; yea, and in the world too, wisedome will bee justified of her children, and so the desire to attaine wisedome: Enough of this matter. The last thing that I commend to bee used (which same hath drawne on this discourse) is a diligent searching and perusing of the expositions of the learned, set forth in writing. For this is the benefit of Bookes, that they bring us unto them, whom we cannot come neare, and cause us to heare their voyce, who hundreds of yeares have beene dumbe.

If learned men could either live for ever, or be in every place, certes their writings were not ſo neceſſary nor ſo profitable : for their breathing inſtructions would be more effectuall: but now (ſaith Salomon) one generation paſſeth, and another generation ſucceedeth, and the earth remaineth : and as for the number of learned men, it hath beene alwayes but ſmall, even as the number of Pearles or the like, πολλοὶ βακχοί) πωγωνὶ δὲ τε γῆς ὀλίγοι, many drivers, but few that can hold the Plough aright, (as the old verſe ſaith) therefore bleſſed be God, and bleſſed be the name of his Majeſtie for ever, that this way by their Bookes have provided for our want. But to come neare the point, not onely with profeſſed Divines, but alſo with the Laitie, as they are called, expoſitions of the learned upon the Scriptures hath beene alwayes in requeſt. Ambroſius (not the Biſhop of Millan, but another more ancient) Paula, Pammachicus, Euſtochium, and divers others in the Primitive Church (that I mention none of the later times) were very forward this way, ſo forward, that they procured the godly learned Origen, Hierom, Auguſtine, and others, to write Commentaries upon divers parts of the Scriptures for their edifying. Which thing yet they did not upon any ſuch perſwaſions as the Papiſts have, to wit, that the Scriptures (in themſelves without expoſition) are for hardneſſe, like to the Cities of the Anakins, Numb. 13. which were ſo ſtrong, & ſo walled, that they made the Iſraelites quake to thinke of them, and for danger as perilous, in a manner, to bee medled with, as the tree of the Knowledge of good and evill, which brought preſent death to them that taſted the fruit thereof : No, for then they would not have turned and toſſed the Bible ſo as they did, but either would have runne away from it, as they in Exodus did from the Mountaine ſmoaking, or at the leaſt, as ſoone have been weary of it, as the men of Ekron were of the Arke of God, 1 Sam. 5. But all this they did for two cauſes; firſt, in reſpect of their duty, whereby they were bound, not only not to deſpiſe, but even to uſe the gift that was in others; knowing, that whether it were Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, this Miniſter or that Miniſter, or whoſoever, all was theirs, and by all they might receive profit: partly, alſo for their eaſe, that they might be led forward unto perfection the next way, by them that by all likelihood knew it better than they, their vocation leading them eſpecially to beate it out. Theſe and the like reaſons moved them to have a reſpect unto the direction of thoſe Writers, (to have a reſpect I ſay,) but not to captivate their ſenſes to them, for who is to beare rule over our faith, but hee whom the Father hath ſealed with this prerogative, Heare him? and whoſe writings are we to receive without exception, but the Prophets and Apoſtles? theirs, whom we may not be ſo bold as to judge, but by them judge freely of all others whoſoever (as Auguſtine ſaith) which reaſons becauſe they doe yet remaine, yea, and ſhall to the end of the world; therefore the Commentaries of the learned, for the more eaſie underſtanding of the Scriptures, are alwayes neceſſary.

Indeed unneath a mans life will ſuffice to read the Bookes that are written already upon the Scriptures, in the three chiefe tongues. Our owne mother-tongue of late hath had many worthy ſervants of God, who like the wiſemen in the Goſpell, have dealt liberally with Chriſt, and have powred out their Gold, Frankincenſe, and Myrrhe, for the winning of ſoules. So that I cannot now, as in a former Edition of this Preface, ſay, There is not as yet (to borrow a few of Moſes his words) an helper found out meet for the ignorant; but, Gods name be praiſed, hee that ſeeketh may finde many helpers. The Pens of many have ſtreamed out both Wine and Oyle for the wounded heart of the true Chriſtian, ſince the pen of this Worthy of our Church, was firſt put to paper for the opening and expounding of theſe Bookes of Moſes by Notes or Commentaries, which now preſent themſelves together (before in parts) to every good heart, as an Antidote or Counter-poyſon againſt ſpirituall wickedneſs. In the fourth place Conference is neceſſary, and conference I ſay, not of Scripture with Scripture, (for that I have touched already by the way) but with them that are able to inſtruct us, and ſet us in the right way, if we be out. Examples hereof we have in Chriſts Diſciples, whoſe manner was when they had gotten him apart, to ask him what he meant by this and that, &c. Or, if you will have an example of asking a queſtion about the Word written (albeit the reaſon of the Word written and preached is the ſame, then look upon the Eunuch, Act. 8. he having gotten Philip into the Chariot with him, demanded of him how that place in Eſay the Prophet, (He was led as a ſheepe to the ſlaughter, &c.) which then he was in reading, was to bee underſtood? This is regiſtred of the Eunuch by S. Luke, and no doubt not onely for our inſtruction, but alſo for the Eunuchs praiſe. And ſo Hieronym. highly commendeth Marcella for the like reſpect: namely, becauſe as often as ſhe came in his ſight, ſhe moved him for ſome one doubt or other out of the Scripture: and why? non ut contenderet, ſed ut quærendo diſceret earum quæſtionum ſolutiones quas opponi poſſe intelligebat: not to contend, but by queſtioning, to learne what might be anſwered to thoſe objections which ſhee perceived might be moved. The like commendation hee giveth alſo to Fabiola for the like zeale. Now I know this courſe of asking queſtions, and moving doubts for the underſtanding of the Scripture, is laughedat of the world, and they that are ſo given, are called buſie-bodies, pratlers, idle-headed, &c. Even of the like conſcience that Pharaoh ſaid to the Officers of the Children of Iſrael, Ye are idle, ye are idle, when they deſired leave to goe and ſerve God. Howbeit, while theſe commandements and promiſes doe belong unto us, Seeke and ye ſhall finde: They ſhall ſeeke the Law at the Prieſts mouth: Edifie one another: and this infirmity doth lie upon us, woe unto him that is alone: Either fellowſhip or death: (the one is the voyce of God in Salomon, the other of nature in the Rabbins.) And laſtly, theſe ſentences be ſubſcribed unto, as moſt true and belonging to all; they that be ignorant of Gods matters, ſhall not be acknowledged of God; they that be ignorant of thoſe things which they ought to know, Verecundia inquirendi, becauſe they are aſhamed to aske, without doubt are not to be excuſed: I ſay theſe things and the like conſidered, I hope it will never repent the godly minded of their well-doing, namely, of asking when they doubt, and knocking where they hope to finde opening. For ſurely, howſoever prophane men ſhall judge of them (whoſe ſcorning is true honour, and whoſe favour is foule diſgrace) yet for all that there is a Booke of remembrance written before God for ſuch zeale; yea, and in the world too, wiſedome will bee juſtified of her children, and ſo the deſire to attaine wiſedome: Enough of this matter. The laſt thing that I commend to bee uſed (which ſame hath drawne on this diſcourſe) is a diligent ſearching and peruſing of the expoſitions of the learned, ſet forth in writing. For this is the benefit of Bookes, that they bring us unto them, whom we cannot come neare, and cauſe us to heare their voyce, who hundreds of yeares have beene dumbe.

If learned men could either live for ever, or be in every place, certes their writings were not ſo neceſſary nor ſo profitable : for their breathing inſtructions would be more effectuall : but now (ſaith Salomon) one generation paſſeth, and another generation ſucceedeth, and the earth remaineth : and as for the number of learned men, it hath beene alwayes but ſmall, even as the number of Pearles or the like, πολλοὶ φορεῖν, ὀλίγοι δὲ τοῦ γνῶναι ἕνεκεν, many drivers, but few that can hold the Plough aright, (as the old verſe ſaith) therefore bleſſed be God, and bleſſed be the name of his Majeſtie for ever, that this way by their Bookes have provided for our want. But to come neare the point, not onely with profeſſed Divines, but alſo with the Laitie, as they are called, expoſitions of the learned upon the Scriptures hath beene alwayes in requeſt. Ambroſius (not the Biſhop of Millan, but another more ancient) Paula, Pammachicus, Euſtochium, and divers others in the Primitive Church (that I mention none of the later times) were very forward this way, ſo forward, that they procured the godly learned Origen, Hierom, Auguſtine, and others, to write Commentaries upon divers parts of the Scriptures for their edifying. Which thing yet they did not upon any ſuch perſwaſions as the Papiſts have, to wit, that the Scriptures (in themſelves without expoſition) are for hardneſſe, like to the Cities of the Anakins, Numb. 13. which were ſo ſtrong, & ſo walled, that they made the Iſraelites quake to thinke of them, and for danger as perilous, in a manner, to bee medled with, as the tree of the Knowledge of good and evill, which brought preſent death to them that taſted the fruit thereof : No, for then they would not have turned and toſſed the Bible ſo as they did, but either would have runne away from it, as they in Exodus did from the Mountaine ſmoaking, or at the leaſt, as ſoone have been weary of it, as the men of Ekron were of the Arke of God, 1 Sam. 5. But all this they did for two cauſes; firſt, in reſpect of their duty, whereby they were bound, not only not to deſpiſe, but even to uſe the gift that was in others; knowing, that whether it were Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, this Miniſter or that Miniſter, or whoſoever, all was theirs, and by all they might receive profit : partly, alſo for their eaſe, that they might be led forward unto perfection the next way, by them that by all likelihood knew it better than they, their vocation leading them eſpecially to beate it out. Theſe and the like reaſons moved them to have a reſpect unto the direction of thoſe Writers, (to have a reſpect I ſay,) but not to captivate their ſenſes to them, for who is to beare rule over our faith, but hee whom the Father hath ſealed with this prerogative, Heare him? and whoſe writings are we to receive without exception, but the Prophets and Apoſtles? theirs, whom we may not be ſo bold as to judge, but by them judge freely of all others whoſoever (as Auguſtine ſaith) which reaſons becauſe they doe yet remaine, yea, and ſhall to the end of the world; therefore the Commentaries of the learned, for the more eaſie underſtanding of the Scriptures, are alwayes neceſſary.

Now for them that underſtand the tongues, there are ſo many extant already (the Lords name be bleſſed) and ſo many come forth daily, that a man may ſay of them, as Moſes ſaid of thoſe that offered for the furniſhing of the Tabernacle, Exod. 35. the people bring too much, and more than enough for the uſe of the worke, that the Lord hath commanded to be made. Indeed unneath a mans life will ſuffice to read the Bookes that are written already upon the Scriptures, in the three chiefe tongues. Our owne mother-tongue of late hath had many worthy ſervants of God, who like the wiſemen in the Goſpell, have dealt liberally with Chriſt, and have powred out their Gold, Frankincenſe, and Myrrhe, for the winning of ſoules. So that I cannot now, as in a former Edition of this Preface, ſay, There is not as yet (to borrow a few of Moſes his words) an helper found out meet for the ignorant, but, Gods name be praiſed, hee that ſeeketh may finde many helpers. The Pens of many have ſtreamed out both Wine and Oyle for the wounded heart of the true Chriſtian, ſince the pen of this Worthy of our Church, was firſt put to paper for the opening and expounding of theſe Bookes of Moſes by Notes or Commentaries, which now preſent themſelves together (before in parts) to every good heart, as an Antidote or Counter-poyſon againſt ſpirituall wickedneſs. them, that hee hath attained to the ſame goale with them, though not the ſame way. Many have followed him and done excellently, and have greatly furthered and bettered the Reader. The Notes extant upon the former tranſlations of our Engliſh Bibles, are learned, and out of the moſt learned Commentators, and for the generall are ſuch that a good Chriſtian may uſe them, as a Traveller doth a Map, the better to finde out the way, or as Ioſeph did the mans helpe that adviſed him to leave Shechem, and ſeeke his Brethren in Dothan. They were directed moſt of them rather to informe the underſtanding, than to incline or reforme the will. How could it be choſen? Except we would have the Booke to ſwell to that bigneſſe, that it could not be carried abroad. The Commentaries tranſlated into our mother-tongue, were and are like their authors in their owne tongue right worthy the reading and ſtudying, but yet ſuch as yeeldeth more ſtrong meat than milke, and ſo, not ſo fit to be digeſted by them that were lately weaned from the breaſt, and muſt be tolled on by a little at once, and that pleaſing well enough, and by no meanes overchargeable.

Gen. 37.

The Author of theſe Notes hath ſo provided for the Babe, that the Nurſe alſo may partake the nouriſhment, and be ſtrengthened. He hath ſo ſeaſoned the Law, that in it you may finde the ſweetneſſe of the Goſpell, and yet ſo ſweetned it with the Goſpell, that the impenitent ſinner ſhall every where finde the Law. When I firſt underſtood that God had put it into the heart of this Reverend and excellent builder to imploy his Talent this way alſo; namely, by writing upon the Scripture (not onely by preaching) to profit the common people, I rejoyced greatly, and was full of comfort, not onely becauſe of his learning and ſufficiency, (being knowne to be a workman that needeth not to be aſhamed) but alſo for his wiſe diſcretion ſake, for that he knew how to abound, and how to be ſparing, and ſo to handle the matter, that they for whom it was provided, might bee moſt benefited: for this, I ſay, I rejoyced (like the Iſraelites, who finding a Well in the Wilderneſſe made a ſong in the praiſe on it) yea, I confeſſe, I encouraged him with βαλλ' ὅτις, ſhoot ſo (Homer Iliad 8.) and exhorted him to goe forward with this intendment of his, though he ſhould omit many of his Sermons and Lectures. For I conſidered, that though a mans lively voyce moveth more, yet a mans writing teacheth more: more throughly, becauſe it giveth a man leave to conſider and pauſe on it, and doth not ſtrike his eares onely, and then away (for which cauſe words are ſaid by the fore-ſaid Poet, to have wings, ἐπιπτερόεντα; more generally, becauſe it reacheth not onely to them that are neare, but alſo to them that are farre off, not onely to them that are alive, but alſo to them that are yet unborne. Indeed ſo it is, he that ſpeaketh profiteth his owne congregation, but he that writeth profiteth all: he that ſpeaketh profiteth for the houre, but he that writeth profiteth for ever. Therefore I ſay, I perſwaded him to redeeme this power of doing more good, whatſoever it ſhould coſt him, or rather whatſoever it ſhould coſt thoſe that were to want his readings.

But when I perceived for all this taske, and the like, hee was alwayes the ſame man for aſſiduitie in preaching, even as the Palme timber (they write) bendeth not ever under ever ſo great a lading, but riſeth upward againſt it, and as the children of Iſrael ſhrunk not downe under their labour, howſoever it were increaſed, then I gave glory unto God, ſaying, ſurely the Lord hath done great things for him, yea, the Lord doth great things for the people over whom hee placeth him. For who was able to ſpeake oftner? who was able to doe more good? of them that were painfull: being moſt (ready for gift of utterance) of them that were ready being moſt painfull: of them that were pithy being moſt familiar, of them that were familiar, being moſt pithy: learned without oſtentation, ſweet without glozing, zealous without new fangling, beloved and loving againe, moving and moved himſelfe, comfortable and comforted himſelfe. I doe not give him halfe his due, as they know that knew him, and yet happily more, than every one that knew us both, doe thinke fit to proceed out of my mouth, I being ſo linked to him as I am, or was. But truth is truth whoſoever be the ſpeaker, and of the abundance of the heart, heart, the mouth will utter, and the pen will write, howſoever it be taken. And yet when Chriſt himſelfe refuſed not the Teſtimony of Iohn, for all hee was his kinſman, becauſe though he had knowne Chriſt after the fleſh, yet he knew him ſo no more, I truſt the like reſpect need not make me ſeeme abſurd, all the while I yeeld nothing to fleſh and blood, and doe not ſtretch my ſelfe beyond his meaſure as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. Iohn. 2. 2 Cor. 5.

Well, this Reverend and Honourable man after many removes and tranſlations, alwayes to his preferment and encreaſe of Worſhip or Honor, not ſometimes at reſt, ſometimes in trouble, ſometimes up, ſometimes downe; In which reſpect Pertinax the Emperour, and Doctor Bucer were called each of them, (Pila fortunæ;) at length, the world being not worthy of him, is tranſlated into Heaven, but ſo, that as Elias being caried up in a fiery Chariot, did let fall his Mantle from him, for Eliſha his comfort and behoofe; ſo our Elias, burning with zeale for Gods glory, and for the good of his Saints, hath left behind him ſeverall tokens of his love, both particularly to the Church of Worceſter, where he laſt ſate Biſhop, and alſo to the whole Church of God in generall, for which he was ever carefull. To the former he bequeathed all his Bookes, which was a gift of a good price, and repaired and fitted their Library, to his great charge: To the later hee left theſe his Workes, (ſome being Catecheticall, ſome Exegeticall) wherein hee being dead, yet ſpeaketh. Of Geſner that great Clerke, it is written, that having the plague about him, and being at the laſt caſt, he ſtirred up himſelfe in that weakneſſe of nature above nature, to ſurvey and digeſt his written papers, that lay undigeſted in his Study, leſt proſperity might be defrauded of the uſe of them: Of Calvin alſo, that admirable and moſt judicious and ſound Divine, it is recorded, that having received as it were the ſentence of death in himſelfe, and being deplorately ſick, (his ſickneſſe was not Pthiriaſis, as fooliſh Surius, and malicious Bellarmine doe report, but Phthiſis at the moſt) which is an ordinary diſeaſe; he ſpared not his body nor his health, but laboured his profitable Commentary upon Ioſuah, even in theſe extremities: and even ſo this our lover and follower of Calvin and Geſner, ſo farre forth as they followed Chriſt, forgat himſelfe and his weakneſſe, that hee might perfect that which lay imperfect and confuſed by him, even a great part of the Booke of Deuteronomy. Heb. 11. Thuanus. Beza.

Thus he ranne his courſe, and was faithfull and painfull unto death, and God, I make no doubt, hath waſhed his ſoule in the blood of the Lambe, and hath given him a crowne of life which ſhall never be taken from him. I leave him in the hands of God, whom he ever beleeved and ſerved, and returne to thee, gentle Reader, and exhort thee by thy love to thine owne ſoule, that thou make much of this Worke, and bee carefull not onely to be better learned, but alſo to be a better liver thereby. God is to be honoured for lending ſuch choſen veſſels unto his Church to carry abroad his Name, and to publiſh his truth: and this man deſerveth to bee had in everlaſting remembrance, not onely for his learning, but alſo for his charitable humility toward the weaker ſort; for that for their ſake he hath thus debaſed himſelfe in ſtile, (becauſe hee would not exceed their capacity at any hand) whereas he could otherwiſe have gotten himſelfe a great name like the great men of the earth, by writing after another manner for the better learned. Notes upon every Chapter of GENESIS: gathered and laid downe for the good of them, that are not able to use better helpes, and yet are carefull to reade the Word, and right heartily desirous to taste the sweet of it.

CHAP. I.

The whole Chapter intreateth of the Creation of the World, and particularly delivereth unto us, these points to be considered of:

1. Who created.
2. What was created.
3. When.
4. How.
5. Whereof.
6. To what end.
7. In what space.

OVCHING the first, it saith, God created, therein implying the whole Trinity, God the Father, God the Sonne, and God the holy Ghost: for so wee learne by conference of other Scriptures with this. Of the Father give those Apostles witnesse, When they lift up their voices to God with one accord, and said, O Lord, thou art the God which hast made the Heaven and the Earth, the Sea, and all things that are therein; against thy holy Son Iesus, &c. Also his owne mouth, when he said to Iob, Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the Earth? &c. Of the Sonne is it interpreted by the Apostle himselfe, what the Psalmist saith, Thou Lord in the beginning hast established the Earth, and the Heavens are the workes of thy hand. Also that in the Evangelist, all things were made by it, (to wit by the Word Christ) and without it was made nothing that was made. Of the Holy Ghost witnesseth Iob, when he saith, His Spirit hath garnished the heavens: And againe, The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life. And in this place, by the judgement of very learned men, The Spirit of God moved upon the Waters: by consequence those words of Ieremy, The gods that have not made Heaven and Earth, shall perish from the Earth, and from under Heaven. If then the Holy should not create, he should be no God: yea, of all the three Persons conclude thus, and so this Prophets testimony shall inferre the creation of each Person. Augustine saith, Sicut personæ sunt inseparabiles, ita inseparabiliter agunt: as the Persons are inseparable among themselves, so doe they worke inseparably. Againe, Opera Trinitatis, quoad extra, sunt indivisa & communia, with many such testimonies.

In this very place that we now looke upon, the Hebrew word for God is of the plurall number, to note, (as some thinke) the pluralitie of persons; and the verbe Created, of the singular number, number, to note the unity of Deity in them all. And verſe 26. it is ſaid, Come, let us make Man, noting the three Perſons all joynt Creators together: and cannot bee underſtood of Angels, as ſpoken to them, becauſe man was not created according to the Image of Angels, but of God.

Baſil. Now, if any ſhould doubt how the firſt Article of our Beliefe agreeth with this, which attributeth the Creation to God the Father, it may be anſwered, that it is not ſo done there, to the end to exclude either Sonne or holy Ghoſt, but onely to ſhew the order and manner of the creation, and other workes of God: for as the Father is the fountaine of the Godhead, and yet not therefore either Sonne or Holy Ghoſt excluded from the ſame, but each of them God, and equall with the Father as touching the Godhead: ſo rightly is the Father made author of creation, and yet neither Sonne nor Holy Ghoſt idle in the ſame. But this onely (as I ſaid) ſignified, that by a certaine order the creation was effected. The Father, as firſt in order, willeth it as it was the whole fabricke and courſe of things created. Then he expreſſeth his will by his Sonne, in whom, as the Image of his Father, the decree and order of all the worke ſhined: he ſpake, and they were made and diſtinguiſhed in their orders. Thirdly, the Holy Ghoſt, together with them both, worketh alſo immediately, cheriſhing and nouriſhing what was created, and giving motion unto them. Thus was there an order in the worke, and yet all three Perſons joyntly Creators of all together. This marked and remembred, both anſwereth the doubt now in ſpeech touching our Beliefe, and many other places of Scripture alſo, wherein the Creation is aſcribed in ſhew of words but to one Perſon. Iohn ſaith, All things were made by the Sonne. Paul

1 Cor. 8. 6. ſaith, Yet unto us there is but one God, which is the Father, of whom are all things. And in the ſame verſe he ſaith of Chriſt, that by him are all things, and ſuch like. Auguſtine ſaith, Filius non agit à ſe, ſed per ſe; The Sonne doth not of himſelfe, but by himſelfe. All which ſpeeches, and their

Note. like, either in Scripture or Fathers, note an order among the Perſons in their worke, but exclude none from the ſame. For as we ſay, the fire ſhineth by the light that commeth from the ſame, and yet we make not that light any ſervile inſtrument of, or to the ſame fire, but even his naturall force and power: ſo is the Father ſaid to doe whatſoever hee doth by the Sonne, and yet not as by any under inſtrument, and inferiour meanes, as wickedly the Arrians would conclude, but as by his ſubſtantiall power and vertue. And againe, as we ſay the fire ſhineth, and the light of the fire alſo ſhineth; ſo all which the Father doth, the Sonne alſo doth. Thus much of this point.

Here againe, yet ſaith one, we may bee admoniſhed by the example of our moſt bountiful God, not to be barren and fruitleſſe, neither to hoord and keepe up with our ſelves, what unto others may be both profitable and comfortable: ſeeing hee of his infinite goodneſſe thus bringeth forth ſuch a notable worke, hitherto not had, and now of ſuch unſpeakably joy and ſweet uſe unto mankinde, when it is had. Ever we know the Lord hated hiders of his gifts and graces granted unto them, as partly by that idle ſervant may appeare, that hid his talent, Luke 19. And contrariwiſe, bleſſed and inriched, even with more and more, the liberall drawers out of them to the uſe and ſervice of his Church and Children, as there alſo appeareth by the other ſervants. Wherefore, wee muſt avoid what ſo offendeth, and carefully practiſe what ſo contenteth: For ſhall we ſee here our God ſo liberall of his owne, and we bee niggards of that we have but lent us for that end? Shall he thus draw forth, to mans comfort, a worke of ſuch ineſtimable price, and we grudge unto him and his people our poore gifts, not of ſuch value? God forbid. Feare, whileſt thou have an heart to feare that voyce of an angry God; take that unprofitable ſervant, &c.

By him all things were made; and without him was made nothing that was made.* By which clauſe is made a plaine diſtinction of things created, from things uncreated. Nazianzen and Epiphanius, with other of the old Writers, rightly concluded upon it againſt the Arrians, That as the Father was not made, nor created, ſo neither Sonne nor Holy Ghoſt were: But eſpecially, this clauſe diſcerneth and diſtinguiſheth the workes of God and good creatures from ſinne and death, and ſuch like, which were not things made, but came otherwiſe: not things poſitively (as I may ſpeake) of themſelves, but a privation, deſtruction,

1 Epiſt. 2. 3, 8. concupiſcence of the fleſh is not of the Father, but of the World: and in the next Chapter, Hee that committeth ſinne is of the Devill, for the Devill ſinneth from the beginning. And as for death, By ſinne came death, ſaith the Apoſtle, and the reward of ſinne is death, &c. When it is ſaid therefore, that God made all things, remember to adde this, all things that were made, as Saint Iohn doth, and ſo ſhall you exclude from the worke of God, all ſinne, death, deformity, confuſion, tyrannie, calamity, and ſuch like, which being never made by God, are crept in by Satans malice and mans corruption, as breaches and blots of Gods order.

Thinke how againe of particular things created of God to ſerve thee, and yet peradventure by

by thy folly made Maſters over thee, and thou a ſervant unto them: if this be a very great abuſe, for ſhame leave it, and conſider at laſt of the right uſe of Gods creatures.

3 When? In the beginning, ſaith Moſes here, and much adoe have curious heads made about theſe words. But if wee have that reverent feare in us, that all men ought to have toward the word of God, they are plaine enough: for if he had ſaid, In the end God created heaven and earth, would we not ſtraight have conceived, that he created them laſt, to wit, in the work of the ſixt day? And why ſhould we not as eaſily conceive him, when he ſaith, In the beginning, to meane nothing but firſt of all: to wit, the firſt day, and ſo leave all ungodly quirkes to a vaine heart, that ſhall weepe for ſuch wickedneſſe one day. In principio, ſay the beſt interpreters, that is, Certo ac definito tempore, atq; adeò in principio temporum, non ab æterno: In the beginning, that is, in a certaine and definite time, and even in the beginning of time, not from everlaſting. In principio ſcilicet, creandi: In the beginning, to wit, of creating, ſaith very rightly Abben Hezra, God created heaven and earth. And let theſe grave lights of grave and learned men, ſway more with us than a thouſand ſubtilties, which as Syrach ſpeaketh, are fine ſubtilties, but unrighteous. Syrach. 19.24.

This creation of it in the beginning, convinceth the falſehood that it is eternall: ſo doe many things moe beſides this, and namely that computation which is generally received of all men, of the yeeres which it hath endured, and which be now paſt ſince the creation: but nevertheleſſe on goe ſome with their blinde conceits, and would prove the contrary. For firſt ſay they, if we grant the world had a beginning, then was God idle ever before, but that this is abſurd, therefore it was not created, but was eternall: Wee may anſwer them firſt, that the rule which they harp upon in this argument, namely, that Perfectiſſima cauſa non eſt otioſa: the moſt perfect cauſe is not idle: Non eſt vera de agentibus voluntariis, is not true of ſuch things as work by will, or willingly, as the moſt excellent Carpenter may forbeare his worke and action a time. If they thinke that God was alone, therein they ſhew themſelves carnall, and ſpeak carnally. For how ſhould he be alone more then than now, unto whom all things are preſent, though they be future, and things that are not as if they were. Hierom upon this occaſion citeth that ſaying of Scipio, Nunquam minus ſolus, quam cum maxime ſolus: Never leſſe alone, than when I am moſt alone. And cannot this be true much more with God, that he is not alone without theſe creatures which he made? Could he ſay it when his Country was loſt, his wife and children, friends and lovers, that yet all his goods was with him, and cannot the Lord ſay it much more, that his good ſtandeth not in the preſence of creatures, but before ever they were, and now that they are, yet all his is with him without them? Chriſt ſaith, he is not alone, not in reſpect of any company of man or creature, but in reſpect of his Father, whom he ſaith to be with him. Now ſhall Chriſt not be alone in reſpect of his divine conjunction with his Father, and ſhall it not be alike with the Father in regard of his Sonne, and with the holy Ghoſt in regard of them both, and with each of them in reſpect of others? Surely that inſeparable unity of the Trinity, denyeth to every perſon a poſſibility to be alone. And that inſearchable myſterie of the fruition of his owne glory, is other manner of company (if I may ſo ſpeak) than all the creatures of this world can yeeld him.

The firſt argument againſt the creation of the world.

John 8.29.

O but yet ſay they, what did God ever before? Verily ſaith Auguſtine, He made Hell for ſuch buſie braines, and unreformed hearts and tongues, that will ſo curiouſly enter into Gods ſecrets. How much better would the words of the modeſt and godly Apoſtle become them: O the deepneſſe of the riches both of the wiſdome and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgements, and his wayes paſt finding out! who hath knowne the mind of the Lord, or who was his Counſeller! Rom. 11.34.

Secondly, they reaſon thus. The Mover, and the thing moved, be relatives, and the one ſuppoſeth the other: But God the Mover was ever, therefore the thing moved, to wit, the World. But we anſwer them to this alſo truly, that if there be a mover actually, then there muſt needs alſo be a thing moved. But God, though hee were from everlaſting himſelfe, yet did he not actually move in reſpect of theſe outward creatures, which are without his eſſence, but onely was Movens potentia. It is farre differing therefore to ſpeake of one, as was ſaid before, that worketh by will and freely, and to ſpeake of a thing that worketh naturally, and it is no abſurdity to ſay that the relation betwixt the firſt cauſe and the world made, began in time, ſince the creation of the World is an outward action of God, and voluntary. The very ſame anſwer may be made unto the rule, whence the cauſe is, the effect is: the cauſe eternall, therefore the effect, to wit, the world. For this holdeth in naturall things alſo, that worke naturally and neceſſarily, but not in things that worke freely and willingly, as God did in creating. Otherwiſe, every houſe muſt be as ancient as the Carpenter that made it. No, the relation there betwixt the cauſe and the effect beginneth in time after, becauſe he is a voluntary cauſe, and ſo is it with God. Silly then and ſlack are theſe concluſions you evidently ſee, and far from demonſtrations. The ſecond argument.

Thirdly, they reaſon thus. That which hath no alteration is not ſubject to generation or corruption: The Heaven hath no alteration, for thus many thouſand yeares none have beene obſerved. The third argument.

observed. Therefore it is not subject to generation to be made, or corruption to cease to be. Therefore it is eternall. We answer, that although it might be truely said, that many parts of the world are subject to alterations, as the ayre, the water, the earth, &c. and consequently the whole not perpetuall, whose parts be alterable; Yet with divinity we rather say, that Generatio physica, naturall generation and creation be two things, and differ much: so doe Corruptio physica, naturall corruption and violent destruction, which a ruining shall follow. Therefore although neither generation nor corruption can be without alteration, yet things may be created that have no alterations, as Angels, Starres, soules. And by divine power celestiall bodies may be destroyed, or at least changed and renewed, according to the saying: Heaven and earth shall passe. And again, They all shall waxe old as doth a garment, &c. Behold, I create a new Heaven, and new earth, and with such like. For the argument then it may be granted, that albeit the world was not genitus, generated, as I may say, yet it was created by God of nothing, and so their purpose faileth for all this cavill also.

The 4. Argument.

Fourthly they say, Time is eternall, therefore motus, moving: for time is the measure of moving: and if motion, then a thing moved, to wit, the World, &c. For answer whereunto, first, the consequence may be denyed: for time is not onely taken as Philosophy taketh it, for measure of moving, according to first and latter: But sometime it is put simply and absolutely for the continuance of a thing, though it be not the measure of the motion of the same. So may we call eternity and that infinite continuance, that I may so speak of God, who hath been from everlasting. But this is improperly, for indeed the manner that hath taken place in Schooles, is to call time the measure of moving. Now Aristotle not able by naturall wit to see rightly what difference was betwixt time and eternity, or what manner of continuance eternity was, judged time to be eternall, because he saw an eternity of a mover: which is not so, for there may be a mover eternall, to wit, God, albeit no motus corporis mobilis: for God is not corpus mobile, as the parts of the World are, and as Philosophy meaneth. Now, Tempus est mensura motus corporis mobilis non Dei, according to Philosophy. Secondly, touching the antecedent, that time is eternall, it may truely also be denyed. And for that which is usually brought to prove it, that it began with the first mover, in some moment or point of time, which being a conjunction of passed and future, presupposeth a point passed, and so another infinitely. It may be answered that every point of time is not a continuer and joyner of passed and future, but it is also sometime πέρας τοῦ χρόνου, an ending of time, whether it be at the beginning or ending. For as for example, the point in the line is not ever a continuer of the same line, joyning that which followeth after to that which went before, but also a certaine thing both beginning and ending the line: So in time there is, Nunc initians, a beginning and an instant, or a present that beginneth with the thing, and when the world tooke his beginning, then began also such an instant or present: there is also Nunc continuans, a continuing point, which is properly called time, because Tempus est fluxio à priori ad posterius, a going from the first to the latter: and at last Nunc terminans, an ending point, to wit, the end of the world now thus created, moving and beeing. Nothing therefore helpeth this argument, to prove an eternity of the World, more than the rest did. Many moe might be alleadged to this purpose, but no better than these, and I judge neither these nor them very pleasant to such as I especially labour to profit, because they conceive not such consequences. Wherefore I cut them off, and this onely I commend unto you to be thought of. It is impossible, even by the Philosophers owne rule, that there should be more infinites than one. Now God is one infinite, therefore nothing else in Heaven or Earth beside. But whatsoever is else, it had a beginning, and many things shall have an ending also. The rest by his power shall have an eternity given them to continue, not of themselves.

4 How did God create all things? Not by or with any labour, but by his Word: for He spake the word (saith the Psalme) and they were made, he commanded and they were created. Liberrime sine ulla coactione, non necessitate absoluta, sed necessitate consequentia, nempe suæ voluntatis: Freely without any constraint, not by an absolute necessity, but by a necessity of consequence, to wit, of his owne good will. Solo nutu sine ulla mutatione aut fatigatione: Onely with his beck without any change or wearinesse in himself, which is the highest and excellentest kind of working.

Psal. 33. Rom. 4. 17.

5 Whereof? Not of his essence, neither of any former matter coëternall with himselfe, but of nothing: for if by him all things were made, surely beside him nothing is excepted from making, no not that first matter whereupon all things were made. But you will say, Man was made of the dust of the earth, fishes and fowles of the water, woman of man, and then how were all things made of nothing? Damascene answereth, Deus fecit omnia ex nihilo, alia quidem immediatè alia mediatè: God made all things of nothing, but some immediately, others mediately. His meaning is, that God made first of nothing a matter, a first matter, whereof hee made all other things. Now that first matter is made of nothing immediately, but the rest that were formed of that matter were formed of nothing mediately, because they were made of that which was made of nothing, and so secondarily or mediately, because I say then of nothing. But then you will say againe, Ex nihilo nihil fit, Of nothing nothing is made. And I answer you, that so it is in the the order of nature, now ſet and eſtabliſhed of God, but in God himſelfe this principle holdeth not. Or if you will thus. By man this is impoſſible, to wit, to make any thing of nothing, but with God all things are poſſible, and want of matter letteth not him. It is our comfort that hee could and can ſo doe: for thereby wee know his great ability to preſerve what ſo wonderfully hee hath made, as alſo to confound and turne to nothing all ſubtile and malicious practiſes againſt his children.

Lib. 2. cap 5.

6 To what end? To the praiſe of his glory, ſaith the Apoſtle, for in him, and by him, and for him are all things, and this is the generall end. Beſides which, there be alſo ſpeciall ends and ſubordinate ends under them againe, as the manifeſtation, the acknowledging and contemplation of his heavenly and divine wiſedome and goodneſſe which appeareth in the Creation. For if the Lord would bee celebrated, then muſt hee create things to acknowledge him, and to celebrate and praiſe his name being knowne and manifeſted. Therefore he created things reaſonable and unreaſonable, that they might praiſe him, and be matter of his glory. The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handy-worke. Againe, the government of the World a ſubordinate end to that againe. For therefore created hee the World, that he might governe it with his providence, and preſerve it, and ſo might ever declare his wonderfull workes, which he hath done from the beginning of the world, or now doth, or yet ſhall doe, eſpecially that he might governe his Church of elect Angels and men. Liſt up your eyes (ſaith the Prophet therefore) and ſee who hath created theſe things. Thirdly and laſtly, that all other things might ſerve to the health of body and ſoule, to the life, pleaſure, and neceſſity of man, and eſpecially to the good of his choſen, being unto them as it were meanes and miniſters whereby God doing them good, might bee honoured and prayſed of them. Onely man he created for himſelfe, and all the reſt for man.

Yea, but what may bee ſaid for ſo many hurtfull beaſts and creatures as be in the world upon Land, or in Sea? Why did God create them? Surely it was enough for anſwer hereunto that was ſaid before, that though we know not by and by the good of a creature, yet therefore God may not be condemned for creating them, for hee may doe with his owne as pleaſeth him. Yet nevertheleſſe we may further ſay as ſome doe, that if man had not ſinned, no creature had beene hurtfull to him, and therefore now his fault to be blamed, not Gods creation. Lactantius anſwereth that in great wiſedome God hath made as well hurtfull things as others, that by contraries a fuller knowledge might grow in man to the praiſe of God that hath done all ſo well. And this true anſwer daſheth that great thunder-bolt, as hee thinketh, of the Epicure, made to overthrow Gods providence and care to governe the World, and maketh it ſeeme more fooliſh than fearefull. God (ſaith hee) either would take away all hurtfull things and cannot, or can and will not, or neither can nor will, or both can and will. If hee would and cannot, then wanteth he power, and is not God: if he can and will not, then he is envious, and is not God: if he neither can nor will, then both envious and weake, and ſo no God: if he both can and will, then how doe they yet remaine? This goodly argument is eaſily anſwered, by ſaying, hee can and will not, and yet not envious therein, but good and carefull for man, that hee might by ſight of contrary evill better diſcerne the good, and ſo profit thereby both in wiſedome and thankfulneſſe to the Lord. Lactantius his whole Chapter is very worthy thy reading.

to them that joyne house to house, and land to land, till there be no place left, &c. This is in mine ears, saith the Lord of hoasts, and surely many houses shall be desolate, even great and faire, without inhabitants. A fearefull threatning, if it were observed, that men for denying others place by them, shall lose their own places. How much better were it even of these waters to learn to contain our selves in one place appointed, and to leave roome for others, without drowning and overflowing them with our greedy mindes, till the wrath of the Lord overflow us also, and give unto others all our gatherings? But meditate of this more your selfe, &c. Cesserunt aquæ suo loco, ut terra possit fructificare, tibi verò non præcipitur tuum locum relinquere, sed alienum non occupare. The waters (saith one) went out of their place where they were, and gathered themselves into a lesser roome, to the end the earth might fructifie and bring forth, but thou art not required to leave thine owne place, onely another mans place thou shouldest not covetously and unconscionably seeke to possesse.

Vers. 11. 12. &c. You may note what God saith, of the earth, of the waters, and of the lights, that hee created, &c. How he requireth much of them, as namely, that the earth should bring forth whatsoever it might to mans use, the waters likewise many things, and the lights should not only give light, but be for signs, and for seasons, and for daies, and for yeares, &c. Let it quicken us a little, if being able to doe much, we doe but little, and so sit downe as if we had well deserved both of God and man, both of Church and Common-wealth. These creatures named and noted, performe many things, and looke for no recompence, no hire, and shall it not move us? If giving a cup of cold water shall not lose his reward, when I can give no more, and if casting in two mites shall be both noted and praised, when it is what I may, shall not giving and casting, willing and working of much more, be much more honoured of that spying eye, and rewarding hand of the most High, when we have received ability to doe much more? Surely it shall, and the meditation is profitable, if you pursue it in your mind further. Happy is he that having received but two talents worketh thereafter, and gaineth two moe; but more hath he to rejoyce, if he well consider it, that having received five, gaineth five moe by labouring faithfully, according to his measure received, &c.

When God pleaseth to have man made in his own image, according to his likenesse, it might remember us of the pride of some, who cannot abide to have any like them, no not even a little to resemble them, or come neere them in any circumstance of life or maintenance, but crush, and presse, and pluck down their growing neighbour by sundry devises of malice and envy, if they see him but like to resemble them. A sin that will find as well a crushing God in his due time, as now it bruseth others in unbrotherly sort. The Lord scorneth not, nay the sweetnesse of God most sweetly vouchsafeth thus to honour dust and earth, and wee vile wormes scorne that our Christian brother, as good as we, and peradventure better in respect of God, should any way be said or thought to be like us. Is it well, or will it be well in the end? &c.

In what time God created all.

7 And lastly, in what time, or how many dayes did God create all things? In sixe dayes saith the Scripture, and every day something, saith this place, till the seventh day, wherein he rested. Non uno momento, sed sex dierum spatio: not in one moment, but in six daies space. If you happily think or meet with Syrach his words, who saith, He that liveth made all things together, the Lord who onely is just, &c. you must consider, that he speaketh not of the time, but of the multitude of creatures. Meaning that God made them all together before he rested and gave over creating, but not meaning that he made them all in one moment of time, or in one day, for wee see both this place and others against it: The Lords owne commandement, written with his owne finger giveth testimony, that in sixe dayes the whole was made. Thus are we instructed in all these seven points that I named in the beginning: to wit, Who created, what was created, when, how, whereof, to what end, and in how many dayes, or what time.

How the creation profiteth us to the knowing of God.

Now touching the use, this further. What may be known of God, saith the Apostle, is manifest in these creatures, for God hath shewed it unto them: for the invisible things of him, that is, his eternall power and Godhead, are seene by the creation of the world, &c. The quantity, qualities, course, and perpetuities of things created, how doe they shew God? Surely saith the Prophet, The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy-work. Psal. 19. Againe the same Prophet teacheth the like, when hee goeth from this creation to the view and thought of Gods wonderfull and great love to mankind, saying, When I behold the heavens, even the works of thy fingers, the Moone and the Starres which thou hast ordained, O what is man Lord think I then! &c. Psal. 8. 3. Reade the whole Psalme.

How Moses could write of these so long before him done. Acts 7. 22.

Concerning other things to be observed in this Chapter, some say, How could Moses write of these things that were done so long before hee was borne? Surely not by any wisdome and learning of Egypt, wherein yet he was most excellent, but by that holy Spirit of God, whereby he had received to be a faithfull Minister in the house of God, being in this above all Prophets, that he was inabled not onely to governe things present, and foretell things future, but thus notably to lay downe things passed from the beginning of the world.

Verse 7. Touching those waters above the firmament, well said Beda in his time, what maner of waters they they be, and for what purpoſe ordained he knoweth that made them: thereby giving us to learne what modeſty becommeth us in ſpeaking of the ſecrets of God. The ſame power that is able to uphold all the frame of this World, without any earthly prop, is able to hold thoſe waters there in that place, to that end that his wiſdome hath ordained them for, and this ſhould content us.

Gods Image what it is.

Man is appointed here his food of God that hee ſhould eate, and ſome move the queſtion how that ſhall be. For if man were created immortall if he ſinned not, what needed hee any meate to bee appointed for him, ſince yet he had not ſinned. Anſwer is made by ſome, that there be two kindes of immortall, one that cannot die, but ever live, another that may live for ever, a condition being obſerved, and die alſo if that condition be broken. One immortall after the firſt ſort, needeth no meate; but hee that is immortall after the ſecond ſort doth need, and ſuch was Adam: if hee had not ſinned he had not dyed, but ſinning he was ſo made that he might die, and therefore his fleſh and nature not ſuch that could live without meate. Others anſwer that this appointment of meat was made by God in reſpect of their fall, which he knew would be. Howſoever it was, curioſity becommeth us not: but this comfort wee may rightly take by it, that what the Lord hath made, he will maintaine and nouriſh, and caſteth for them his Providence ever to that end, even as the Prophet ſaith, Caſt thy care upon the Lord, and he ſhall nouriſh thee up, He is our Father, and knoweth what we have need of. He careth for us, as ſaith S. Peter. Againe, in that he ſaith, Ego dedi, I have given, ever may we be put in minde by it when we ſit downe to eate, from whence thoſe gifts and bleſſings come: ſurely even from hence, I have given them, and therefore thankfulneſſe is due, and moſt due to ſo good a God and carefull a Father.

How doth God appoint man food before his fall.

That it is ſaid, When all was made the Lord ſaw, and all was good, yea, exceeding good, the like having beene teſtified alſo particularly, it may admoniſh us, as neare as ever we ſhall obtaine ſtrength, to endeavour to bee like our heavenly Father, in doing nothing but what may receive in his mercy ſuch teſtimony that it is good, for great is the comfort of that, and more than great the diſcomfort of the contrary.

Verſ. 31.

Follow God in doing all well.

The making of all things befor man, ſheweth Gods wonderfull mercy and love to man, who would as it were prepare every thing for his uſe and comfort, before he would have him bee in the world. Not unlike to a man here amongſt us, that loving the friend whom hee intendeth to have with him, and to come unto him, ere ever he will have him come, makes all things ready that may be either for pleaſure or neceſſity to him, and then ſendeth for him to come, all things being ready. O what is man, fraile man, wretched and miſerable man, that God ſhould thus regard him, may we well ſay with the Prophet, yet thus it was. And ſhall that God that thus prepared for man ere ever he was, now forſake man when he is, if he be not moſt unkindly and too unkindly forſaken of man? It cannot bee, it cannot bee, and therefore in all diſtreſſes caſt your eyes upon him, and thinke of ſuch teſtimonies of his love as this was, and bee ſure that he knowing what you have need of, will never forſake you.

Gods love provideth all ready for man before he is made.

Creation of Angels.

And this of this Chapter briefly.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

The generall heads of this Chapter are three.

The institution of the Sabbath.
A repetition of some things concerning Creation.
The institution of Mariage.

Verse 2. How God resteth.

CONcerning the first, it is said, God rested the seventh day, and thereupon consecrated it holy to his Church for ever: which rest of the Lord must bee understood from creating, not from preserving: and from creating, to wit, of any new kinde, for otherwise daily he createth the soules of men, and disposeth them to their bodies. If any question be made of briars, brambles, and such like, not created at first, but springing up since, answer may bee made, that these, and many other things appertaine to corruption, and here mention is made onely of perfection. These things have proceeded from God punishing, and the sixe dayes workes from God not offended.

How the Father yet worketh, &c.

Divers Sabbaths.

2 This Sabbath begun thus by the Lords owne example, after it pleased him by a law to ratifie, Exod. 20. it was called The Sabbath of dayes, because it was every seventh day. Beside which the Jewes had a Sabbath of yeares, every seventh yeare, Exod. 23. Levit. 25. and seven times seven yeares made 49. the next yeare after being ever the Iubile, to wit, every 50. yeare: Then was the Sabbatum magnum: the great Sabbath, when the Passeover fell upon the Sabbath, as it did that yeare Christ suffered, Iohn 19.

3 That most strict and precise rest, specified in the law from all worke, from roasting of meate, gathering of sticks, Exod. 16. 29. 35. 3. and Numb. 15. from any long journey, and such like, were Ceremoniall, and therefore with other the Ceremonies of the law are abrogated by Christ, there remaining to man now a further freedome, and yet without breach of the Sabbath, as I pray you reade in my Treatise upon that commandement at large. The day also of the Jewes Sabbath was changed from the Saturday to the Sunday by the Apostles themselves, Acts 20. 7. 1 Cor. 16. 2.

Ends of the Sabbath.

4 The end and uses of this Sabbath also you may there more at large see, to wit,

For order in the Church of God, that we might meet together, and none be freed from serving God at least one day in seven.
For the reliese of servants and brute beasts, which by pittilesse worldlings might else be abused.
And lastly, to resemble, and still to remember us of our eternall rest in Heaven, to be cared for now, and enjoyed then when this life is ended, Esay 58. 13.

Exercises.

The exercises also of this Sabbath you may there reade, to wit, preaching, praying, reading, singing, conferring, mutuall admonishing, visiting the sicke, poore, prisoners, with many such like.

But before, and beside this doctrine of the Sabbath, you may observe the words of the Text, that Heaven and Earth were finished, and all the hoast of them. Againe, in the second verse, that God ended his worke. And hereby consider if you will, how the Lord not leaving his good and gracious worke once begun unfinished, well shall it beseeme his children and servants to doe the like, even to begin good things, and to end them, not leaving off in the mid-way, as too many doe; much lesse beginning evill, and going through with the same whatsoever it cost us, either of trouble to body or minde, or of charge to the purse. Yea, you may even with good profit observe what the Holy Ghost noteth of the difference of disposition in the godly and the wicked, concerning this thing: namely, how the godly, rightly resolved, and plentifully indued with the Spirit, cannot content themselves to give over a good worke, or a good purpose, but it is an unquietnesse in their consciences if they doe: and the wicked from his wickednesse cannot be drawne, but he will goe through with it, as I said, if he possibly can have his will. An example of either shall serve to occasion you to thinke of moe, whereof both in Scripture, and in our experience there are not a few. David, you remember, went in zeale of his heart to fetch home the Arke of the Lord, but when hee saw the fearfull judgement of God upon Vzzah that touched it, he was dismayed, and left it with Obed Edom, but not quiet in himself that he had given over so good a worke, he voweth with himselfe that he will not enter into his house, nor climbe up into his bed, nor suffer his eyes to sleepe, nor his eye-lids to take any rest, untill he had found out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the Almightie God of Iacob. Wherefore hee prepared a place for the Arke of God, and piched for it a Tent, hee gathered all Israel together to Jerusalem, to bring it up unto the place appointed, &c. Afterward he falleth into consideration with himselfe, and into speech with Nathan the Prophet, that it was not fit hee himselfe should dwell in an house of Cedar-trees, and the Arke of the Lords Covenant remaine remaine under curtaines, and therefore hee would build a house for it, &c. What a working is here of a good purpose in an holy minde, not giving any rest or contentment as long as it is unfinished and given over. So should it be with all good hearts, in all good endeavours to a good and godly use. Contrariwise, see the wicked building the Tower of Babel, with all diligence, paines, and charge, and remember duely what God saith of them, that they could not be stopped from that wicked action of theirs. Here is the forwardnesse and resolution that I speake of in evill men to effect evill things, and not to be drawne from their sinfull purposes. No, they will even fall out with any that will so perswade them. Wherfore let us indeavor to be like our heavenly Father, of whom it is here said, that he ended his worke, and gave not over till it was ended. God by this meanes shall bee greatly glorified, our countrey and friends often more pleasured, and fewer complaints of wavering weaknesse and unstabled mutability bee brought against us. A stedfast heart to effect a good begun, is a great vertue: And an obstinate minde to goe forward with an ill begun, is a damning sinne.

Gen. 11.6.

6 And he rested the seventh day, saith the Text. A remembrance to divers in divers respects. To the greedy covetous man that wanteth nothing and yet cannot rest. But it is said of him as the Wise man speaketh: The sleepe of him that travelleth is sweet, whether hee eate little or much; but the saciety of the rich will not suffer him to sleepe. To the idle slow-belly it is a remembrance, that then he should rest when he had wrought, for so did the Lord; and that hee should worke more, and rest lesse, as did his God also, sixe dayes creating, and one day resting. But many quite contrary turne all these things, and forget the rule laid downe by Gods Spirit, that hee which labooreth not should not eate.

Eccles. 5.11.

Raine the gift of God.

1 Touching the repetition of things concerning Creation, verse 4, and 5. it is said, that God had not yet caused it to raine: Therein ascribing it to the Lord, as his peculiar power to open and shut the heavens, and to send drought or raine, according to his good pleasure. And indeed so it is very often repeated in the Scriptures, that we might duely confesse it, and thankfully ever consider it. I will send you raine (saith the Lord) in due season, and the earth shall yeeld her encrease, yea, I will give the first raine and the latter, that thou mayst gather thy wheate, thy wine, and thy oyle. The use of this knowledge we learne by the Prophet, even to say in our hearts, Come let us now feare the Lord our God that giveth rain both early and late, in due season, and which reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest. That a mist supplyed the place of the raine, and watred all the earth, wee learne the great power of God, to furnish and stead himselfe ever with meanes to effect his will. If he have not one thing, he can take another, and never will he want convenient instruments of mercy for his Children.

Levit. 26.4. Deut. 11.14. Ierem. 5.24.

God will never want meanes.

Verse 7. Mans base matter should humble him.

2 Man was created of the dust of the earth, that so base a matter might ever worke humility of minde, cut the cords of swelling conceits (for wherefore should dust and clay be lifted up) and cause a true remembrance of assured end, that earth we were, earth wee are, and to earth againe wee shall returne: he, not we, can tell how soone.

All made ready to man.

3 But ere ever he made man, he made all things for man, as was noted before. The earth to goe upon, the Heavens to cover him, the Sea for wals, Fishes and Fowles, Hearbs and Trees, to feed and comfort him, to delight and accompany him, light by day, and the like by night, many a greene and pleasant thing, and what wanted of such creatures for man before hee was. Is this God a changeling? was his care for man then so great, and is it now nothing? No, no, he is the same, and though we have sinned, yet he is intreated, and for Christ, as he was hee will be carefull and good for man and to man for evermore. Yet this is not all, but consider we further of this thus: that if this dealing shewed love and care to Adam, then how is it not each one of our cases this day in some respect? For before ever he would have any of us to live and breathe in this world, we see, had he not provided parents and friends, houses and comforts, and whatsoever might be needfull for us? O love then to us also most kinde! and a care that may assure us he will ever care for us. Love him and feare him, honour him and serve him, he is your God, who provided for you before you were borne, things needfull for you against you should be borne, and will he ever forsake you now when you are borne? O faith increase, grow, and be strong!

God not lesse carefull of us then of Adam.

Helpe Lord, helpe, for flesh is full fraile, and fainter than I would.

Verse 7. God both giver and taker of life.

4 God breathed in his face the breath of life, and man was made a living soule. God gave life then, and who can take it away without his leave? can raging tyrants, bloody persecutors, slie Iudasses? No, no, till he will, you cannot die, thunder they, and threaten they never so much, and breathe out slaughter every houre against you; God gave life, and God must take it away, it is one prerogative of his, you need not feare. Againe, who can preserve life but he that first gave it? No man, no meanes. And therefore using as you are occasioned, what God hath appointed of any helps, yet cast your eye ever upon the Fountaine from whom life came at the first. It is another prerogative againe of his, to preserve life also, and to give his blessing for that purpose to his creatures, Hearbs or Plants, meates or drinkes, men and their counsels whatsoever.

No Physicke without God can profit.

Againe, life is the of gift God, therefore abuse not what God hath given you. It was not of your Life must bee accounted for your selfe, but it was given you, you must account for it how you have used it to the givers praise, and your owne discharge.

Verse 8. Paradise made for a figure of Heaven.

5 God made a Paradise, a Garden most pleasant as ever was, that it might bee for ever to posterity after a figure of a celestiall place, abounding with innumerable comforts for the godly, prepared in heaven. He made not man in Paradise, but translated him, and put him in it after he was created, that it might resemble, that we also shall bee removed from the place where we first tooke our beeing, to a place with our God, where we shall never take ending.

Vers. 9. Some pleasures allowed.

God set in this Paradise things not onely profitable for use, but pleasant also for sight, thereby assuring us, that he disliketh not our pleasures any more than our necessaries, but most graciously alloweth that we should have both, so that we will let the Tree of life alone, that is, so that wee doe not swell above that which is allowed unto us, but bee obedient to God, and with praise and thankes use his creatures.

Vers. 15. Idlenesse hated of God from the beginning.

6 God set man in this Garden, to dresse and keepe it, not allowing man in his most innocency to be idle: no, he would not have his Angels to want what to doe, but made them ministring Spirits. How then should hee now, when corruption hath caused a curse, and that curse given cause of force to labour, allow loathsome idlenesse? Be sure he doth not, bee sure he will not. And therefore all honest mindes will not looke for now what was not lawfull then. Yet differed that labour then much from our labour now, for that was an injunction inferring no griefe, and this is a paine deserved by sinne.

Verse 17. Man schooled to obey even in Paradise.

Learne of God how to bring up youth.

7 God allowed them not to eate of the Tree of knowledge of good and evill, that they might be acquainted even from their beginning, with obedience and submission to their Maker: which as it was first and before all sinne, so should it be ever of more account, to a godly minde, than all the pleasure of sinne under heaven. If not, we see the curse upon the contrary, it shall cause us die the death, that is, eternall damnation is the due reward of contempt of Gods commandement by disobedience. Me thinke we may profit thus by it also: to see how God tooke his course to bring up these new created Servants of his, and so we to do to such as God sends to us. He would inure them with obedience even from the first, and have them know what awe was to their superiour: so let us doe to our children and charge, and wee shall follow a good patterne. Bow their backes even from their Cradle, that is, ever as yeares permit, let them learne to obey, and it shall be well: for he well ruleth that hath well obeyed, and he commeth the rather to beare that credit, when other cockered wantons have the wrath of God, and the dislike of men against them. This is enough, though I say no more, yet thinke you much more of it, whom you follow, when you make over bold whom you should keepe under. Wanton darlings have made many weeping parents, and drunke to their woe of the cup of shame, when they might have beene honoured if they had learned subjection. They breake rather than bow, when once time is past.

Mariage the third point of the division, is also laid downe to us in this Chapter, and in this sort:

Verse 18.

1 Who ordained it? even the Lord: for the Lord said, It is not good for man to bee alone, let us make him an helper.

2 For what cause? to be a helpe, a comfort, and good unto Man.

3 When? in Paradise, when man was yet in his innocency.

Verse 21.

4 Whereof the woman was made? of the ribbe of mans side, thereby becomming bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh.

The holinesse of Mariage. Mat 19.

All which are great testimonies, proofes and arguments of the holinesse and goodnesse of this divine institution of Mariage, whereunto may be added the words of the Lord Jesus in the Gospel, Whom God hath joyned together let no man put asunder. Gods conjunctions be ever holy and good, therefore mariage most commendable and honourable. The words of the Apostle, Every one hath his proper gift, but all the gifts of God be holy and good, therefore Mariage honourable. Againe, The unbeleeving husband is sanctified by his beleeving wife, and the unbeleeving wife by the beleeving husband: therefore mariage most holy and good. For how could an impure thing sanctifie and make holy the users? it would pollute them, and not sanctifie them if it were such. Againe, Possesse your vessels in holinesse, meaning of married people; therefore mariage holy. Finally, the prohibition, dislike or contempt of it, is called a doctrine and conceit of the Devill: therefore most holy and honourable is mariage, and ever was since it was ordained.

1 Cor. 7. vers. 14.

1 Tim 4.

Popery impeacheth matrimony.

Mariage holy in all men, not onely in some.

These things thus note wee against all Heretickes, or Popes and Papists whatsoever, that impeach the dignity of this the Lords ordinance, first in Paradise, even in mans innocency. If any ignorantly thinke, yet happily it is not so unto all men, let him truely thinke of the words of the Holy Ghost to the contrary, Mariage is honourable amongst all men: all men I say againe, and marke it, and the bed undefiled, when whoremongers and adulterers the Lord shall judge. When God saith All, dare you say Not all? Let him also view with conscience, not to cavill against againſt the truth, the generality of the ſpeech. For avoyding of fornication, let every man have his owne wife, and every woman her owne husband. Every man, every woman, without exception, Prophets were married, Prieſts were married, Apoſtles were married, Evangeliſts were married, and what calling wholly was ever excepted by God?

Every man, every woman.

· This briefly thus noted of this holy inſtitution, for fuller profit yet by the Text conſider it further, and marke;

Verſ. 18. See by God what to ſhoot at in your actions.

1 How it is not ſaid by God that it was not good for Adam to be alone, but for man to be alone; thereby in wiſedome enlarging the good of mariage to man in generall, that is, to ſome of all ſorts, and not tying it to Adam alone, or to any ſort onely. Againe, in ſaying it is not good, you ſee what the Lord regardeth in his actions and workes, to wit, goodneſſe and profit to the uſers, how good it may be, how comfortable: which is a good leſſon for all ſuch as regard in their deeds, their wils, their pleaſures. Sic volo, ſic jubeo, So will I, ſo command I; not reſpecting at all the good of any other. Shall ſinfull fleſh diſdaine to doe what the Lord of lords doth? He, though hee have all power and authority, yet will not doe onely according to that, but he looketh how good it may be that hee doth; and ſhall ſinfull fleſh, duſt and earth, upon a little authority bee ſo proud, that their will muſt rule all actions? O carry we then this teſtimony of our conſciences with us evermore, that in our doings we regard how good it may be unto others, not to our ſelves onely, and that is to be like God.

Abuſe of authoritie.

2 Marke it with all your heart, how God doth conſider before ever man ſee the want himſelfe, what may be good for man, and entreth into purpoſe to make for him, and prepare for him what yet he wanted and had need of, ſaying, Let us make man a helper like himſelfe. O how may we cleave and cling to the Providence of this God in all comfort of our mindes, that thus thinketh of what may be good for us before ever we thinke of it our ſelves, and not only thinketh of it, but provideth it and prepareth it for us, ſaying in all matters as in this, yet my ſervant ſuch an one wanteth ſuch an helpe, it is not good for him to be without it, come therefore let us prepare it for him, &c. How have you your ſelves that reade this, taſted of this goodneſſe of God ere this in many ſeverall things, that were in his purpoſe prepared for you before you knew your want your ſelfe, and given to you in time, you even now at this inſtant enjoying divers of them? Will you then diſtruſt his care hereafter, if any thing yet bee wanting to you, having found him ſo heretofore? God forbid. And follow this note in your meditation long, for it is comfortable.

God conſidereth mans want before himſelfe. Note.

3 That woman is honoured with the title of a Helper, not onely ſheweth the goodneſſe of the inſtitution, as was noted before, but teacheth alſo how deare and beloved ſhe ſhould bee to her husband, for whoſe good ſhe was ordained and given. Who will not cheriſh, foſter, and love what is given him for a helpe, not by man, but by God himſelfe? Her helpe chiefly conſiſteth in three things, in bearing him children the comforts of his life, and ſtayes of his age, which he cannot have without her. In keeping his body holy to the Lord from filthy pollution which the Lord abhorreth. The Apoſtle ſo teaching when he ſpeaketh thus, For the avoiding of fornication, let every man have his owne wife. And thirdly, in governing his houſe, children, and family, and many wayes tending his owne perſon both in ſickneſſe and health. Theſe all and every one are great helpes, and therefore the woman juſtly to bee regarded for them.

Verſe 18. Woman a helper. Wherein her help conſiſteth. 1 Cor. 7.

In this laſt, man alſo hath his care, to wit, ſo to furniſh the woman with direction and ability, that ſhee may doe within doores what of her ſhould bee done. Whereupon the man is compared to the Sunne that giveth light, and the woman to the Moone that receiveth light from the Sunne: Mulier fulget radijs mariti, the woman ſhineth with the beames of her husband, is an old ſaying, becauſe he ſhould provide what ſhe may diſpoſe and ſhine withall in her houſe, to both his and her comfort and credit. But it is quite contrary with many idle drones, that ſhine with the beames of their wives, that is, idely live by their wives ſore labour, and wickedly ſpend what they truely get by day and by night, with any induſtry.

The man ought to furniſh the woman. The woman is the Moone. Idle men ſpend what their wives get.

4 But whereupon was woman made? Surely not of an outward but of an inward part of man, that ſhe might be deare to him even as his inwards. Not of the head of man, leſt ſhee ſhould be proud, and looke for ſuperiority. Not of the foot of man, leſt ſhe ſhould bee contemned and uſed as farre his inferiour; but of his ſide, that ſhe might be uſed as his fellow, cleaving to his ſide, as an inſeparable companion of all his haps whilſt they two live. And as the ribbe receiveth ſtrength from the breſt of man, ſo doth the woman from her husband: his counſell is her ſtrength, his breſt ſhould ſhe account of to be ruled and governed by in all her wayes, and ſeeke to pleaſe him, and eaſe him from all griefes as ſhee any way can, knowing ever that ſhee is moſt weake without her husbands breſt, from which commeth all her ſtrength and good comfort at all times. No creature had his mate made of his owne fleſh but man, and therefore no creature under Heaven ſhould bee like man in the love of his mate, but Man above them all.

Verſ. 21. Why of the rib made.

Note.

That man was caſt in a ſleepe till the ribb was taken, it may happily admoniſh us how hard it is to get from a man that which may be to his great good, except he bee caſt as it were into a ſleepe,

sleepe till it be taken and used: and when he seeth the good of it, he is contented and glad also, as Adam was here of his wife.

Vers.22. What manner of meeting is right mariage.

5 It is, if you marke it, not onely said that God made Woman, but that he brought her to Man: and thereby we are taught, that mariage is not every meeting of man and woman together upon their owne heads, but when God bringeth them together, either to other: and God bringeth not together, except in his feare they meete with consent of Parents, and such as are interessed in them, and all due circumstances and order appointed by God, and used by his Church wherein they live. Againe, it teacheth his worke and providence, still to bee to bring every Man his Mate. House and riches (saith Salomon) are the inheritance of the Fathers, but a prudent wife commeth of the Lord. Againe, He that findeth a wife, findeth a good thing, and receiveth favour of the Lord. The Lord therefore, I say, did not onely at the first bring the Woman to the Man, but even yet still, and for ever, he is the bringer of every woman to her husband, and of every husband to his wife, that meet as they ought, in his feare. Pray therefore ever to this Fountaine of mercy, when these matters are in hand, that hee in his goodnesse would bring a good one, &c. For, He that hath gotten a vertuous woman, hath begun to get a possession, she is a help like unto himselfe, and a piller to rest upon. If there bee in her tongue, gentlenesse, meeknesse, and wholesome talke, then is not her husband like to other men. Where no hedge is, the possession is spoyled, and he that hath no wife, wandreth to and fro, mourning, &c.

Pro.19.14. Pro.19.22. It is Gods worke still to bring every man his mate. The praise of a good woman. Meeknesse in a woman is a jewell. Eccluſ 36.24.

Verse 24. How farre mariage may allow to forsake Parents.

6 That a Man ought to forsake Father and Mother, and cleave to his Wife, it declareth againe, what neare and deare a conjunction is betwixt them two, what unity and agreement ought ever to be, what monsters they bee that seeke to separate their bodies or mindes that are thus conjoyned, with divers such points. And it is not to bee understood as though mariage freed children from the honour of their Parents, but onely so farre am I to forsake Father and Mother, as the cleaving to them is the forsaking of my Wife: for if these two be repugnant one to the other, then is the Wife before the Parent, but if both may stand together, then is the bond to Parent firme and fast still, and they to be cleaved unto also, and not forsaken.

Verse 25. Three things to be learned by our first nakednesse.

7 The Man and his Wife were both naked, and not ashamed. That they were created naked, doth well declare how peaceable we should be amongst our selves, and how contrary to our beginning these weapons and armour be that now we are forced to use. We were made then, and are borne now with no jacks on our backs, no sallets on our heads, nor speares in our hands, but naked: and now we be armed in such sort, that if a beast should be brought forth in resemblance like us when wee be so armed, surely it would be accounted a great Monster, and brought forth for the hurt of all other creatures. Secondly, it doth teach us, how wee shall depart againe, surely naked, for as naked we came, so naked shall we goe, and carry no more away than we brought with us. Thirdly, it stayeth us with comfort when any losse befalleth us of these worldly goods, for so did it Iob, when upon his losse he said, Naked came I out of my mothers wombe, and naked must I returne againe, the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken, blessed bee the name of the Lord for ever.

Iob 1.

Verse 25. We should walke before God without covers. Esay 29.

8 That they were placed in Paradise naked, so to remaine if they had not fallen, sheweth us how God would have us walke before him, verily naked, without cloakes and covers, maskes and shadowes of any coloured craft. This nakednesse and nudity not of body but of minde, of counsels, and actions, the Lord ever loved, and the contrary cloaking he as heartily hateth, Woe bee to you that seeke deepe to hide your counsels from God, saith the Prophet Esay, for your workes are in darknesse, and you say, who seeth us, and who knoweth us?

Vers.25. Innocency maketh bold, and guiltinesse ashamed.

9 That they were not for all that ashamed, favoreth nothing any fatasticall Anabaptists, that will goe naked, but declareth the innocency that then was in them is now lost by sinne, yet regained in measure by Christ, and shall perfectly be enjoyed in the life to come, when nakednesse shall shame us no more than it did at the first: Many and many are the things, yet mo that might be noted out of this Chapter, but these shall suffice till hereafter.

CHAP. III.

You have seene in the former Chapters the creation of our first Parents and their innocency, now shall you see their sinne, and their fall. And this whole Chapter hath these heads in it.

The fall of man.
The manifestation of the same by God, verse 9.
The punishment of it, verse 14.
The restitution by Christ, verse 15.

Verse 1. CONcerning the first, it is said, That the serpent was more subtill than any beast of the field that God had made. Noting an extraordinary thing in this beast above all others, which when we see see Satan to make choice of, to abuse to mans deceiving and destruction, it may truly yeeld us this note carefully to be observed, that if there be any thing better then another, any gift and grace more in one than another, or any thing extraordinary any way that may helpe him, that will Satan diligently by all meanes assay to make it an instrument to serve his most dangerous and damnable purposes. Examples in the Scripture besides this place many, and examples in experience every day: to note one or two. Satan knoweth that it is a notable meanes to win many to the Lord, to see great men and honourable personages to goe before, as also most effectuall to the contrary to see them draw backe, therefore with might and maine as the Lord will suffer him, he laboureth to stop the one and to further the other, that is, to hinder their zeale to go before Gods people in all godly duties, and to increase their coldnesse and drawing backe, that they being kept in the way of death by him, together with them by their example many may also die and perish, which otherwise would doe well if they had good guides. He laboureth the Rulers and the Pharisees even with all his power, that they may not beleeve in Jesus Christ, to the end that if any begin to draw towards the kingdome of life, and to say, we never heard man speake as this man doth, by and by they may be stopped with this objection, Doe any of the Rulers and Pharisees beleeve in him? and so by the deadly power of their hurtfull examples be overthrowne againe, and that begun zeale utterly quenched. Another example in the Acts of the Apostles: He might no doubt (Satan I meane) in those darke dayes have stirred up many against the Apostles, but amongst all he chose certain honourable and devout women with the chiefe men of the City, that by such outward credit of wealth and piety, honour and dignity, he might give a greater blow to the cause of God, and more easily worke the woe of his true servants, keeping as you see this pestilent policy, if any man or matter be of account, to seeke to win that to serve his purpose. He had rather tempt Demas that hath once followed Paul, to forsake him againe, then many others. For daily experiences, I had rather you should thinke of them, then I note them. Conclude we therefore ever to bee circumspect and most carefull by this remembrance to prevent Satan, knowing that it is his manner, if God have blessed us either with knowledge, birth, wealth, office, credit, or any thing whereby our example may do more harm if we take a bad course, to labour mightily that he may for this cause the rather win us to serve his turne, and so abuse that good thing in us which should serve to Gods glory, to the quite contrary, as here he did the wisdome of the Serpent.

The best things Satan most desirous and busie to abuse.

The greatnesse of men abused by Satan to hurt.

Iohn 7.46.

Acts 13.

2. Observe we here the meanes whereby as speciall helps, our Mother Eve was drawne to her destruction and all ours in her, and with her. The first is here her tittle tattle too long and too much with the Serpent, or with Satan in the Serpent; whereas she should have suffered no such speech against the rule and order that God had set downe, when once shee perceived it tend that way, but with a zeale of defiance have flung away from all such conference and perswasion. Let her experience teach us the danger of such dealings ever. And first for inward temptations, if any arise, as neare as the Lord will assist us, let us not debate the matter with them long, but even quickly reject them, bend our mindes some other way, and take in hand some thing, worke or study, or such like, that we can be most earnest about, calling to the Lord with hearty heate, that he will help us to quench and avert such fiery darts. For truly if we reason with them, meditate on them as many doe, our fall in the end is greatly to be feared. Then for outward assaults by wicked company and lewd persons the messengers of Satan, take heed also by this example of Eve how you tattle with them. They be Serpents as this was, yea subtill Serpents that will deceive and destroy you as this did Eve. They speake not, but the devill in them. Heare no such charmers, charme they never so sweetly. The enchanters of Ægypt never hurt Pharaoh as they will hurt you. Away with your eare betimes. Let dislike as a fire kindle within you, to cause either your tongue very sharply to rebuke, or your steps to turne speedily from such company. O the vertue that hath been lost for want of this care! They that glistred as the Stars, and were for name as the very Sun-beames spreading it selfe into all coasts, have become darknesse, and as vile as the dung to all good ones, by hearkning over long to the hissing of such Serpents. Be warned therefore, and beware betimes, for the Lord hath said it: we cannot touch pitch without spot, and evill words corrupt good manners. Experience teacheth, if a man tarry long in the Sunne hee will bee sunne-burnt, and if hee clap coales to his breast hee will bee singeed. Unskilfull Youth beware by Eve, and bid such Serpents leave their hissing.

The meanes of Eve her falling. Verse 1. Note 1.

How to avoid evill motions.

Note. How to avoid outward assaults.

The good old Father Bernard noteth how the blessed Virgin was troubled at the words of the Angell Gabriel, and thought with her selfe what manner of salutation that should bee, giving thereby a good caveat to all women to beware of greetings and meetings, salutations and conferences, if they purpose honour and honesty. For wilt thou, saith hee, be safe from the devill, be afraid then even of the Angels in heaven, and consider what manner of speeches they use unto thee: for thou hast heard that the devill can transform himselfe into the shape and show of an Angell of light. Who can tell how many virgins, widowes, and wives have been foully deceived and abused, whilst they boldly without feare or care admitted of conference with their kindred? Conſanguinius inquiunt eſt, frater eſt, quid inſidiarum moliri poteſt? &c. He is, ſay they, my kinſman, he is my brother, and what danger can there be from ſuch an one? Multum certe, & diverſi modi, ſurely much and many wayes. For haſt thou not heard of many abuſed this way? Learne therefore of this bleſſed Virgin, to ſuſpect even the Angels and their good ſalutations, rather then to be ſecure, and ſo overtaken by truſting and tatling with every one.

Secondly, ſhe wavereth in beleefe of the Lords truth, and ſaith, Leſt ye die, when the Lord had ſaid, ye ſhall die, abſolutely and flatly. Beware therefore by her in this againe, and what God hath ſaid beleeve ever, diminiſh never. If he ſay we ſhall die, we ſhall finde him true, and if he promiſe life, we may not doubt. Beleeve him ſtedfaſtly whatſoever hee ſaith, and mince not his words with our Mother Eve, neither adde any peradventures, for great vantage hath Satan if we incline to a doubt, be it never ſo little.

Thirdly, by a bold lie of a facing devill ſhe is pulled on to her deſtruction, for he telleth her flatly They ſhall not die. And why did he ſo? becauſe as long as ſhe dreaded any thing the Lords ſentence, as a thing that might fall out if ſhee did eate, ſhee could not bee brought to diſobey, therefore worketh he away from before her eyes that dread I warrant you with all endeavour. The caſe is ours even at this day. As long as the judgements of God are before our eyes againſt ſinne, we feare to ſinne, and this feare is as a ſtrong banke to keepe out the waves of wickedneſſe from overflowing us. But if once the devill ſhake from our hearts this dread by any meanes, as by hope of ſecreſie, impunity, mercy in God, repentance in our ſelves, long life, good workes, or whatſoever (as he hath infinite meanes to draw us with Eve to a deadly fall,) then the will of Satan is almoſt wrought. See examples of both. Ioſeph feared God, and this feare moſt ſtrongly beat backe the wave that would have all to wet him, had hee yeelded to his Miſtreſſe. The Midwives the like, and many moe. But out of Davids minde he got this feare, and he had his will. From Cain, from Abſolon, Achitophel, Iudas, and thouſands daily hee doth the ſame, and hath his will. Beware then of ſuch bold lies as tend to deprive us of this holy feare. Such be theſe, doe this or that, conſent to me, yeeld to me, he will ſave you harmleſſe, wee will have a ſhift, &c.

Quicunq; ergo, ô homo! &c. Whoſoever therefore, O man, ſhall perſwade thee that thou maiſt ſin without danger of puniſhment, although he come to thee in ſheepes clothing, or in an Angels brightneſſe, beleeve him not, conſent not unto him, ſith in this place thine own eyes ſee both man and woman ſeverely puniſhed, although promiſed to the contrary by this ſubtill Serpent. For God that threatneth the puniſhment is true, and the devill that promiſed ſafety is falſe, and father of lies for evermore.

Fourthly, the text ſaith, She ſaw that it was good to eate, and faire to the eye: noting thereby a luſtfull looke, or a looking luſt, with a delight in the thing that God had forbidden; another mighty meanes to pull her to hell then, and us and all fleſh now and ever. For that looking eye of Putiphars wife upon the beauty of Ioſeph made a luſting heart and a ſinfull ſoule within her. So did it in David when he ſaw Berſabe: Hereupon the eyes are ſaid to be full of adultery, and he that thus looketh, to have committed iniquity in his heart.

5 Her ambitious minde was another meanes, noted in the words alſo, and ſtill it continueth a meanes to much evill. Marke Eves fall then, and theſe helping meanes, beware the one, and eſcape the other.

How ſpake the Serpent. Illiad 9.

3. But how could the Serpent ſpeake, ſince this power is not given to beaſts, but onely to man? No queſtion, it was not the Serpent by his owne power, but Satan in and by the Serpent, Which is not impoſſible. We reade of Achilles horſe that foretold his maſter of his death; of the flood Cauſus which ſaluted Pythagoras, of the tree that ſpake to Apollonius; of the Oake Dodonea which ſpake like a man; of Iupiters Bull, and many ſuch, which who ſo conſidereth the guiles of Satan, he needeth not to reject as untrue and impoſſible. When God permitteth, Satan is able to ſhroud himſelfe under the creatures, as may beſt fit his purpoſe. Many wicked Soothſayers Satan caſteth into pangs and fits of fury, and then ſpeake they by him, or hee rather by them what he will.

Wilie heads be fitteſt for the devill.

4. In that Satan choſe the Serpent rather then any other creature, becauſe hee was wily and ſubtill, me thinkes it ſhould give a good watch-word to the crafty heads of this world, to take heed leſt Satan make alſo choice of them for ſome purpoſes, as fitteſt for him, and beſt able by their guilefull fetches, that they abound with and excell in, to ſerve his devilſhip. Surely wee ſee by this they are liker to be aſſayed than plaine men and true dealers are: for plaine men and women, that walke plainly, uprightly, juſtly and honeſtly, they will not fit the devils turne, indeed they are too good for him, and God will not ſuffer them to be abuſed by him, but will ſet him packing, and ſhield them from him. But is there a crafty companion full of ſubtilties, ſleights, wiles, and falſe patchings, walking deceitfully in all doings, O, there is a ſervant for the devils owne tooth, and at him will he, he ſhall fit the devils turne many wayes.

Why the woman feared not when the Serpent ſpake.

5. How was it that the woman was not afraid when the Serpent came to her and offered to talke with her? ſome thinke becauſe his ſhape was then otherwiſe then it is now, God his his curſe upon him having altered both his forme and going. Better me thinkes anſwer they that ſay, becauſe as yet there was no enmity ſet betwixt the woman and him. Cyril thinketh becauſe the woman in ſimplicity thought that ſuch other creatures ſpake as well as her husband and ſhe.

6. She was thus tempted, ſeduced and overthrowne in Paradiſe, and it may well admoniſh us, that if that Paradiſe could not free them from temptation, ſurely our Paradiſes here ſhall never doe it. But even in our Princely Palaces, our gliſtring Chambers, our dainty and delicate Gardens, the Devill will be chatting with us, and ſeeking to work our woe for ever and ever if he can. Nay would God theſe painted Paradiſes were not rather the places and meanes of our wofull falls than poorer places be, we giving our ſelves ſo much to the pleaſure of them, that God is forgotten, and the paſſage to Satans pleaſure laid open a thouſand wayes. O how have they fallen ſwimming in pleaſures, that ſtood moſt holy when they had fewer delights? O how have Courts of Princes robbed them of vertue, whom in country and meaner places no devill could violate or defile? Beware we then of Satan even in our Paradiſes, yea rather I ſay, than in poorer coates: when every thing about us is bright and brave, beware we that enemy that is blacke and foule. Many pleaſures ſhould affect many deſires to pleaſe the Giver, God Almighty, and no pleaſures ſhould make me wanton, luſting and longing for unlawfull things. Let Eve be remembred where ſhe was deceived, and I ſay no more, it was in Paradiſe.

Note: Where tooke our firſt mother ſuch a great fall.

7. In the former Chapters wee have heard nothing but the Lord ſaid, the Lord ſaid; but now come we to heare the Serpent ſaid, and the Serpent ſaid. So ſee wee plainly, how after the word of God, commeth the word of the devill. It was not ſo then onely, but it hath ſo continued ever ſince. When the Lord hath ſpoken by the mouth of his Miniſter, Prophet, Apoſtle, Paſtor or Teacher, then ſpeaketh Satan by his Serpents, contrary. They in the Church, theſe as ſoone as they be out of the Church, yea many times even in the Church they will be hiſſing in their eares that ſit next them. If God have ſpoken to a childe by his parents, to a ſervant by his maſter, to a man by his friend what is true and good, ſtraight commeth a Serpent, one or other and overthroweth all, leading them captive to a contrary courſe. What ſay theſe Serpents, will you be thus uſed? will you beare all this? you are now no childe, doe this and doe that, you ſhall not die, but you ſhall live and be like gods, knowing good and evill, &c. But as Eve ſped by this Serpent, ſo ſhall you by thoſe, if you avoid them not. Such Serpents were thoſe Counſellers that made Rehoboam Solomons ſon, do contrary to the advice of the old Counſellers, to his great loſſe. Againe, mark here which was firſt, the word of God or the word of Satan. Dixit Dominus, the Lord ſaid, goeth before Dixit ſerpens, the Serpent ſaid, and ſo you ſee truth is elder than falſehood, and Gods word before Satans lies: that is Tertullians rule to know truth by, namely, to looke which was firſt; Quodcunq; primum illud verum, quodcunq; poſterius illud falſum; Whatſoever was firſt, that is true, whatſoever was latter, that is falſe, and that is firſt that was from the beginning, and that was from the beginning, that in the writings of the Apoſtles may finde his warrant. Let it not blinde you then that ſuch an errour hath continued a thouſand yeares, if it be to be proved that a contrary truth is elder far.

Verſe 1. After the word of truth commeth the word of deceit. Whiſperers in Sermon or Service time.

Seducers of youth.

1 King. 12.

Truth elder than falſehood.

De præſcript. hæretic.

8. Satan tempteth the woman as the weaker veſſell, and if you have any thing wherein you are weaker than in an other, beware, for he will firſt aſſault you there. It is his manner like a falſe devill to take his advantage. Happily you are eaſilier drawne to adultery than murder: that then ſhall pleaſe him, he will begin there. So did he with David, and then brought him to murder after. David was weaker to reſiſt the one than the other. Thinke of your frailties and be godly wiſe, where the wall is loweſt he will enter firſt.

Satan tempteth where we are weakeſt.

9. He telleth her, they ſhall be like Gods, &c. And it is his continued practiſe ſtill with hope of higher climbing, to throw downe many a man and woman. He will tickle you with honour, with wealth, with friends, and many gay things that you ſhall get by yeelding to him, but whilſt you ſo looke to mount aloft to better your ſtate, and to enjoy promiſes, downe ſhall you fall from heaven to hell, and finde a falſe ſerpent when it is too late to call againe yeſterday, that is, to undoe what you have done. Our mother Eve whilſt ſhe looked to become like God, and her husband with her, ſhe became like the devill, and caſt away her husband alſo: even ſo ſhall you if any vaine hope, promiſe, or ſpeech tickle your heart to offend the Lord, and to undoe your ſelfe and your friends.

Ambition breaketh many a neck.

Aſpiring traytors mark it.

Sunt hodie tales, &c. There are alſo ſaith one, ſome in the world which wring and wrench to the worſt, things commended and impoſed by Superiors and Governours: as though they ſhould be done of envy and malice, which indeed are done of ſpeciall favour and love. But learne wee by this deceiving Serpent to beware of ſuch whiſperers. For ſo dealeth hee here with the Lord himſelfe, ſeeking to make the poore woman beleeve that GOD forbade them that fruit, as grudging them ſuch excellent knowledge as by eating thereof they ſhould ſtraight attaine unto. And know we the duty of an honeſt minde, to bee ever to obey the good Lawes of Superiors, and not to ſcanne and deſcant either upon their Lawes, or upon them, &c.

Verſe 6. Many a man deceived by his friend ſooneſt. Moſt eaſily by his wife. Haman followed his wives counſell, and ſet up a gallows to his woe. Job denies to curſe God as his wife bade, to his glory.

10. When ſhe had eaten, ſhe gave to Adam. She was deceived and ſo was Adam. And many a man is deceived by his friend both in matters of Religion, and of the world, when the friend is once deceived himſelfe, and doth not know it. Eve meant him no harme, and yet ſhee hurt him becauſe ſhe was wrong her ſelfe. Many a Papiſt maketh a Papiſt, and thinketh well, but erroneouſly. Good is that friendſhip therefore where no part is wronged, and a faire warning is this for all people to beware what they are perſwaded to even by their friends. Againe, why did Satan not perſwade Adam himſelfe, but ſet Eve to doe it? Becauſe full falſely hee knew there is no eaſier way to deceive the man then by his wife, the husband yeelding to her often what he will to none. This continueth ſtill a policy of his, and many a man ſtill daily falleth by this meanes. But good wives will learne by this what they perſwade their husbands to, and wiſe men what they conſent unto.

Verſe 7. Pilate had done well if he had followed his wife. How many wayes eyes are opened. Iohn 9. Numb. 22. 2 King. 6. Gen. 21.

11. When they had both eaten, the text ſaith, their eyes were opened, meaning the eyes of their minde and underſtanding; but becauſe in other places the like is ſaid of the eyes of the body, therefore here conſider you how many wayes both the one and the other are ſaid to be opened. For the bodily eyes, they are opened three wayes: Firſt, when of blinde they are made ſeeing. So were the blinde mans eyes opened in the ninth of Iohn, and elſewhere others. Secondly, when a man is made to ſee that which before he could not ſee though he were not blinde. As when Balaams eyes were opened to ſee the Angell in his way with a drawne ſword, whom before he ſaw not, and yet was not blinde. When Elizeus man was made at the prayer of his maſter to ſee the fiery chariots and horſes for his maſters defence, when the towne wherein he was, was beſieged. When Agar was made to ſee the well where ſhe might give her child drink in the wilderneſſe, which before ſhee could not ſee though her eyes were good. Thirdly and laſtly, the bodily eyes are ſaid to be opened when they are made to know and diſcerne what before they ſaw plainly and yet did not know. Thus were Eliſha his enemies their eyes opened when they were in Samaria, and their eyes that were going to Emaus. Theſe men ſaw, but they knew not what they ſo ſaw till their eyes were opened. Then the firſt knew that they were in Samaria, and the other knew that he was Chriſt that talked with them. Now for the eyes of the minde they alſo are opened three wayes: Firſt, by doctrine and teaching. Thus ſaith God to Paul, I have made thee a Miniſter and ſend thee to the Gentiles to open their eyes, that they may turn from darkneſſe to light, &c. Secondly, by adverſity and affliction, for vexation giveth underſtanding, ſaith the Prophet. So were the Prodigall ſonnes eyes opened to ſee to take a better courſe then he did, which in his jollity he did not ſee. Thirdly and laſtly, by conſcience and feeling of ſinne committed. Thus were theſe our firſt parents eyes opened, even to ſee how fearefully they had ſinned and fallen from God. This of all other is the dreadfulleſt blindneſſe, not to ſee ſinne, and this opening of eyes by a piercing blow into my conſcience, is conſequently moſt fearefull. Thus again were Iudas his eyes opened to ſee how hee had ſinned in betraying innocent blood, and when he ſaw it, not able to abide the ſmart of it, he hanged himſelfe. Pray we therefore ever againſt this blindneſſe.

Or were we yet as carefull not to doe evill as we are to hide it when it is done, it were well, but wee care more to cover then to avoid.

Verſe 7. All our covers are Fig-leaves, ſilly covers.

13. Their aprons were but Fig-leaves, add what covers ſoever we deviſe for ſinne, they be like theſe aprons, that is, ſilly covers and poore ſhifts God wot, before his eyes that ſeeth all. Truſt not to them, deſerve not to ſeek them.

The ſecond part of the Chapter: Verſe 8.

Verſe 8. God calleth to repentance ſoone whom he loveth.

1. WHen they had thus ſinned, God is ſaid to have walked in the Garden in the coole of the day. That is nothing elſe, but God in mercy came to viſit theſe ſinners, and to reveale unto them that ſtate they were in: which except he had done, no queſtion but Satan had drawne them further to more iniquity, his manner being to goe forward to worſe and worſe where once he hath begun, if God let him not. Such is Gods mercy to us miſerable ſinners. We fall and offend him, ſome one way, ſome another, and all of us too many wayes. Where it pleaſeth him to ſhew juſtice and wrath, there he letteth them goe on with hardned hearts, brazen browes and ſtiffe necks, every day worſe and worſe: but where it pleaſeth him to ſhew mercy, there he commeth to walke in the coole of the day: that is, as I ſaid, there hee viſiteth the party that hath ſinned happily the ſame day, happily the ſame houre, even as ſoone as the deed is done, by ſmiting the heart as he did Davids, with ſuch remorſe, ſight and ſorrow, of and for what then it is done, that albeit that cannot be undone again, yet it may be lamented with ſpeedy and true repentance, and no more added thereunto, as no doubt wee ſhould doe, if GOD thus walked not to viſit us with his holy Spirit. Happy were wee if wee could not ſinne and offend our God, but ſince that is not now to this corruption of ours poſſible, pray we the Lord with bowed knees that he would visit us ever, and quickly, yea in the coole of the same day, that is, ere we goe to bed, or take any rest, that we may see and sigh for our transgressions that day against his Majesty.

2. God walked not then silent, but the Text saith, they heard his voice. No more doth hee now, but we also heare his voice: for his voice are his Ministers, Preachers and Cryers, crying in his Church, Repent, for the Kingdome of God is at hand. Happy are they that heare them with profit and feeling, and who so contemne them, let them learne by this place, that they despise God himselfe, walking in the garden of his Church, and speaking to them, which contempt he will hotly revenge one day.

God is not silent now in his walking.

3. Againe, by the coole of the day, we may note if we will the opportunity of time that God took to come to doe good upon these seduced sinners, to wit, when the heat of the temptation was past. Thereby teaching his Ministers some godly wisdome, to take their time, and notably discovering our vile corruption, that admits no counsell nor perswasion while the heate of concupiscence and temptation is upon us. Happily in the coole of the day wee will, that is, when wofull experience hath beate us, and sinfull heate is abated in us. But O graceless wee that no sooner! Yet better late than never, so that we presume not: which if we doe, surely it is many to one, that neither in the coole of the day the Lord will visit us, but even cast us away for ever, because we presumed, making no more account of his Majesty, but to be at our beck, and of repentance, which is his great gift, to be at our call.

The coole of the day what it doth signifie.

4. In that they hid themselves from the presence of God, Mark the fruit of sinne, it woundeth the conscience, and the conscience wounded, feareth, accuseth, vexeth, and tormenteth a man, distrusteth in God, flyeth from him, and vainely seeketh a cover from him that admitteth no covers. But let us be warned by it how foolish this course is, nay how desperate and dangerous: and when through frailty, wherewith we are clothed as with a garment, we have offended, run not from God, but run to God, hide not from him, but open to him what indeed he knoweth already. Fall at his footstoole, and cry Peccavi, I have sinned, Lord I have sinned, woe is me that I have so, but have mercy upon me deare God, have mercy upon me, yea againe have mercy upon me, and according to the multitude of thy mercies doe away mine offences. Thus may you live, but by running from him you cannot run from him, by hiding you can hide nothing, and yet for your endeavour you shall dye the death.

Sin maketh us hide from God

5. Adam said, he was afraid because he was naked, when he should have said, because I have sinned: so wayward is flesh to confesse a truth, if it touch our selves with any fault, but God followed him out, and asked him who told him that he was naked? thereby urging him hardly to tell the truth, and teaching us all at this day, that except we confesse truly and fully, plainely and faithfully our sin to God, there is no forgivenesse. Wryings and turnings from the matter will not serve, minsings and shiftings before him were never currant, nor ever shall be. A direct confession becommeth a sinner, and God requireth it: He that hideth his sin, saith Solomon, shall not prosper, but he that confesseth it and forsaketh it, shall have mercy.

Verse 10. How hardly we lay the fault as it is. A direct confession required ever. Prov. 28.

6. But see yet further, when he was so urged that he must needs confesse, then hee layeth it upon the woman and God, saying: The woman deceived me, and, the woman whom thou gavest me. Would God this sinne of translating a fault from our selves to others had dyed with Adam, then had not so many of us been so faulty in the same as we are, some blaming one thing and some another, and few men as they ought blaming themselves. To reckon up particulars, were too long, thinke of them your selves, and avoide the like. Monstrous is that boldnesse or ingratitude, that rather will blame God than themselves, as here Adam did, when they should be thankfull to God for as much as he did. The woman doth the like; and as Adam laid the matter upon her, so she upon the Serpent, both naught, and farre from the course of right repentance.

Verse 12. Translating & posting off faults.

See also by Adam here, that they who will sinne for ones sake, and doe some evill, will shrinke to be punished either for them or with them. For Adam posteth the punishment over to his Wife, although for her he was content to offend, if by laying the blame on her he himselfe could have escaped. But they that will be so kinde as to doe evill for any bodies request, in the justice of God shall also partake of the plagues due to the same, be they never so unwilling. And it is a good caveat if we have grace.

The third part of the Chapter: Verse 14.

IN considering the punishment of each one, marke how first the Serpent is proceeded against, because he was the cause and beginner of this fault: thereby teaching, that ring-leaders to any mischiefe, are first to be dealt against as most worthy: then remember, how before was noted the gifts of GOD in the Serpent, in some respects above other creatures, which hee abusing, now is punished thereby; Wee being truly taught what shall befall them that doe

Verse 14. Chiefe ring-leaders first to be punished.

More gifts more punishment, if abused.

the like. Some have wisdome and learning, some have power and authority, some wealth and riches, some birth and parentage, whatsoever it is, if we abuse it to serve the devill, when it should serve God that gave it, that so doing will smart one day, and the curse of God shall bee upon it, as here it was upon the Serpent, who being more subtill than other beasts, became an instrument for the devill to deceive by.

Wee may also see here, how bootlesse it is to make excuses with God, when once wee have sinned, seeing after all excuses God proceedeth to sentence. First, against the principall causer, (which is to be noted) then against those that yeelded to the same, and were abused by him. Therefore feare to offend, and trust not to shifts. Againe, when you see the justice of God against the Serpent, thinke with your selfe how odious to the Lord it is to deceive man, and especially in matters concerning his obedience to God, &c.

Verse 15. Not onely outward body, but inward affection ruled by God. Prov. 21. 1. Friends in evil, become bitter foes.

2. The Lord saith, He will set enmity betwixt the woman and the Serpent, and betwixt their two seeds for ever: which may well teach us two things. First, that not onely the bodies of men and beasts are in Gods hand, to doe withall what he lists, but their very inward affections, passions, and dispositions, are also ruled by him. If he list, he causeth friendship and love, if he please, he setteth dislike and hatred, and ever well in respect of him. The hearts of Kings, and all men, are in Gods hand, as the rivers of water, and he turneth them which way he will. Secondly, see how just it is, that they two which had joyned in liking one of anothers counsell and deed, further then God allowed, should now as farre jarre, and that for ever. Surely such end will ungodly friendship have. And even daily we see, that of all others they become most hated, who have beene accounted of before, but in bad counsels conspirers against God: so able is God to set at variance amongst themselves, and to continue their jarre to his good pleasure.

The Serpent not quite destroyed, why.

3. He could have destroyed the Serpent quite from off the earth, but he would not, and happily because by his remaining, there might be continued in us a lively remembrance of our lothsome fall and sinne, so often as we light of any of them.

The fourth part of the Chapter: Verse 15.

Verse 15. The benefit by Christ against our fall.

HEE shall breake thy head and thou shalt bruise his heele. He, that is, Christ, not Shee, that is, Mary. This was a promise of restitution unto them and to their seed after them, so many as beleeved in Christ, and by Christ who should be borne of the Woman, to recover their fall; yea to breake the Serpents head, that is the old Serpents head, the devils power, strength, and might, against man by sin, to quash it and quell it, that it should not hurt to eternall death, so many I say as beleeve. Nibble Satan shall at our heeles, but not bite us to death if we hold here: yea, all his power against a chosen one shall be but a nibling, a very nibling, rather to shew his malice than to hurt the heart that so is setled: and what a comfort is this? He had a power by sinne to quell us, and utterly destroy us, but now by Christ it is become but a poore nibling, God make us thankfull.

Verse 16. Womans punishment.

2. This being said, the Lord goeth on with his punishment againe, and now dealeth to the Woman also as she had justly deserved. She was next to the Serpent in offending, and she is next to him punished of the Lord. This dolor and sorrow, this anguish and paine, that here is inflicted, and inseparably joyned to the womans travell, should make both her husband and children love her, not adding by unkindnesse griefe unto griefe: Despise not thy mother, said old Tobias to his Sonne, when I am dead, but honour her all the dayes of thy life, and doe that which shall please her and anger her not. Remember how many dangers she sustained when thou wast in her womb, and how canst thou recompence her for that she hath done?

Chap. 4.

Verse 16. Mans authority, and womans subjection.

3. The subjection of the Woman to the Man, and his rule over her, was a just check of that bold taking upon her, both to talke so much with the Serpent, and also to doe as hee bade her, without any privity and knowledge of her husband. And it is as much as if GOD should have said to her: Because thou tookest so much upon thee without advice of thy husband, hereafter thy desire shall be subject unto him, and he shall rule over thee. Yet this authority of the Man may not embolden him any way to wrong his Wife, but teacheth him rather what manner of Man hee ought to bee: namely, such an one, as for gravity, wisdome, advise, and all government, is able to direct her in all things to a good course. And her subjection should admonish her of her weakenesse and need of direction, and so abate all pride and conceit of her selfe, and worke true honour in her heart towards him, whom GOD hath made stronger than her selfe, and given gifts to direct her by. This I say, this authority in the Man and subjection in the Woman should effect. But alas, many men are rather to be ruled then to rule, and many Women fitter to rule, then to bee ruled of such unruly husbands. On the other side, many men for ability most fit and able to rule, yet for pride in the heart, where subjection should bee, shall have no leave to rule. So fit wee sometimes to the order appointed

To wit, in the woman.

ted of Almighty God. Amendment is good on both ſides, for ſeare of his rod, whoſe order wee breake.

4 In the third place Adam hath his puniſhment appointed, but with mention of his fault before, to wit, becauſe thou didſt obey the voyce of thy wife, and eate. Thereby giving a note to Magiſtrates and Rulers that inflict puniſhments, to doe the like, namely, to bee able ever to lay downe a juſt cauſe of their ſentence. If Herod ſhould have done thus when he killed Iohn, hee would have ſeene his owne cruell injuſtice: and many in theſe dayes would be to ſeeke of true cauſes, if they would keepe this order.

Ver. 17. Adams puniſhment.

5 Adam was drawne to it by his Wife, and ſhe by the Serpent, yet neither of them excuſed by that, well and well againe admoniſhing us, that no yeelding to a friend in an evill matter ſhall ever bee defended by ſuch excuſe. The caſe you ſee here, is in the Church this day. Satan ſtirreth up his falſe charmers in holes and corners, againſt the Lord and his anointed. They are as this Serpent. Many in ſimplicity are abuſed by them, thinking all ſhall bee well, They ſhall know good and evill, &c. Theſe be as Eve. And many yeeld unto theſe for favour and friendſhip, kindred, and liking. &c. and theſe are as Adam. But as Adam was excuſed becauſe his friend perſwaded him, ſo ſhall they be, and no otherwiſe: and would God we might thinke of it at large, and with a full meditation.

Others procuring, no excuſe for ſinning.

Privy ſeducers.

6 The curſe of the earth, is a perpetuall Preacher unto us, how we offended, that wee might be humble; and the benefits that we receive nevertheleſſe by labour from it, declare Gods mercy, that we might be thankfull. The labour that is enjoyned, teacheth how hatefull to God all idleneſſe is, and the curſe being ſo, that with the ſweat of mine owne brow I ſhould eate my bread, a vocation is inferred for every man to walke in; and living at other mens Tables, and other mens Trenchers, eating the ſweat of their browes, and not mine owne, is condemned.

Verſe 17. The earth puniſhed. Men living without a vocation.

7 God made Adam and his wife coats of skinnes. The beginning of apparell is here to be noted, that it was when wee had ſinned. And ſo it is at this day no otherwiſe, than if an offender ſhould weare an haltar all his life in remembrance of his fall. What ſhould more coole this vaine delight of apparell in us than this? Should the theefe that had purchaſed a haltar by his fall, yet had life granted him, with a law to weare that haltar during life, waxe proud of his halter, and dye it red, or greene, or in ſome brave colour, that he might ruffle it out with his haltar? Surely ſo it is with apparell, it is our haltar, and badge of our deſert to die, and we ſhould not be ſo proud with an haltar as we are: whether it be ſilke or velvet, ſilver or gold, all is but an haltar. And it ſhould make us ſigh, rather than ſwell with pride as wee doe. It ſhould humble us truely, and ſerve our need, it ſhould never make us haughty and ſerve for pompe.

Verſe 21. The beginning of apparell, when.

A ſilken Haltar is but a Haltar.

8 Adam is thruſt out of Paradiſe to paine and labour. And it teacheth the judgement of God upon all ſuch as being by his mercy preferred to places of honour, pleaſure and good, gracelesly abuſe them, and themſelves in them, to the Lords diſliking. Surely they ſhall bee thruſt out then in the Lords juſtice and wrath, when he ſeeth his time.

Verſe 23. Men abuſing places of honor

9 The Garden is guarded by the Cherubins, and the blade of the ſword ſhaken, that Adam by a viſible ſigne being put out of all hope to recover it and his eſtate any more, might quietly ſubject himſelfe to the Lords ordinance, and fall to Till the earth, as hee was enjoyned.

Verſ. 24.

If any man ſhould thinke the Lord might have kept the tree of Life from him, and let him nevertheleſſe enjoy the Garden. Truth it is hee could ſo, but he would not ſo; Thereby as in a figure declaring thus much; that if any man be not vouchſafed by Gods mercy and favour, to enjoy Chriſt Jeſus the true tree of Life, the ſame may have no place in the Kingdome of God, the true Paradiſe. And thus much for a taſte of the good of this Chapter, being but a little to that which might be noted; for if either ſhould I ſeeke to note all, or amplifie theſe notes as I might, I ſhould over-burden the buyers, whom I ſeeke to encourage by ſmalneſſe of price, and attempt to doe what no man can doe.

CHAP. IIII.

The chiefe Heads of this Chapter, are theſe three.

The propagation of Mankinde.
The murder of Abel by Caine his brother.
And the puniſhment of the ſame by God.

Verſe 1. Mariage not impeached.

1 CONcerning the firſt, it is ſaid, that afterward the man knew Hevah his wife; as if he ſhould have ſaid, after man was caſt out of Paradiſe, then this was. Which ſome wicked ſpirits, inflamed with venome againſt the holy inſtitution and ordinance of God, have ſnatched at, and thereby ſought to blemiſh godly marriage, ſaying: It was then uſed when Paradiſe was loſt, and not before, then Adam knew his wife, and not before. But theſe wicked impes ſhould know, that if we ſhould alwayes reaſon from the order of ſpeeches in the Word of God, wee ſhould make many abſurdities, the manner of the holy Ghoſt being ſo often to ſpeake of that laſt that was done firſt, and of that before that was done after. In Samuel it is ſaid, They clave the wood of the Cart, and offered the Kine for a burnt offering unto the Lord, and then in the next verſe: They tooke downe the Arke, and put it upon the great ſtone; as if they had cloven the Cart whereupon the Arke was, before they tooke the Arke downe, which could not be, yet the order of the words are ſo. A number of ſuch places there be in the Scriptures, in all which, as there is a plaine figure putting that after, that was done firſt, ſo may it be here very well, that Adam knew her before, although now ſpoken of, and not before, and ſo the Act of mariage nothing impeached by this order of words. But ſuppoſe it were not ſo, but that now firſt hee knew her, yet cannot theſe ſpirits deny, but even in Paradiſe it was ſaid, Increaſe and multiply, thereby authoriſing and ſanctifying the act, if they had never fallen: ſo that holy every way ſtandeth Gods Ordinance, notwithſtanding this Word, Afterward Adam knew his wife.

1 Sam. 4. 16.
Verſe 15.

Verſ. 1. Children the gift of God.

2 When Hevah had borne her firſt ſonne Caine, ſhe ſaid, I have received a man from the Lord. The firſt Mother that ever was, aſcribing the firſt Childe that ever was unto Gods giving: ſo then acknowledged, ſo ever ſince acknowledged by the godly, that children are a bleſſing comming onely from the Lord: He maketh the barren woman to bring forth, and to be a joyfull Mother of Children, and he onely doth it.

Verſe 2. Names of children what they often ſhew.

3 She called her eldeſt, Caine, which ſignifieth a poſſeſſion, and her ſecond ſonne, when ſhee had alſo borne him, Abel, which ſignifieth vaine or unprofitable. By which diverſity of names evidently appeareth a diveſity of affection in the namers, and ſo teacheth us two things. Firſt, the prepoſterous love that is in many Parents, eſteeming moſt oftentimes of thoſe children that are worſt, and leaſt of them that deſerve better. Their Caines bee accounted Jewels, and wealth, but their Abels unprofitable, needleſſe and naught. Secondly, it teacheth the lot of the godly in this world many times, even from their very cradle, to bee had in leſſe regard than the wicked are. So was here Abel, ſo was Iacob of his Father, ſo was David and many moe. Such and ſo crooked are mens judgements often, but the Lords is ever ſtraight, and let that be our comfort; he preferreth Abel before Cain, whatſoever his Parents thinke, he loveth Iacob better than Eſau, and he chooſeth little David before his tall brethren: hee ſeeth my heart, and goeth thereafter, when men regard ſhowes and are deceived. Care away then, if the heart bee ſound, God eſteemeth mee, and let man chooſe.

A ſweet comfort.

Verſ. 2. Idleneſs hated. Antiquity of Husbandry.

4 Their trade of life and bringing up we ſee, the one, a keeper of ſheepe, the other, a tiller of the ground, both holy callings allowed of God. Idleneſſe hated then from the beginning, both of the godly and ſuch as had but civill honeſty, or the uſe of humane reaſon. The antiquity of Husbandry herein alſo appeareth, to the great praiſe of it, and due encouragement unto it. But alas our dayes! many things hath Time invented ſince, or rather the Devill in time hatched, of farre leſſe credit, and yet more uſe with wicked men, a nimble hand with a paire of Cards, or falſe Dice, is a way now to live by, and Jacke muſt be a Gentleman, ſay nay who ſhall. Tilling of the ground is too baſe for Farmers ſonnes, and we muſt bee finer, but take heed wee bee not ſo fine in this world, that God know us not in the world to come, but ſay unto us, I made thee an Husbandman, who made thee a Gentleman? I made thee a Tiller of the ground, a trade of life moſt ancient and honeſt, who hath cauſed thee to forſake thy calling wherein I placed thee? Surely thou art not he that I made thee, and therefore I know thee not, depart from mee thou wicked one, into everlaſting fire.

Dice & Cards.

Thinke of this yee over-fine Farmers.

Verſe 3. Heb. 11. True worſhip hath ever God the Author. Rom. 10.

5 In the next place mention is made of the Sacrifice or Offering that theſe two brethren brought unto the Lord. The Apoſtle ſaith, that, Abel by faith did offer. Faith ever preſuppoſeth a word, becauſe it is a fruit that ſpringeth only of that ſeed, and therefore it neceſſarily followeth, that albeit wee reade not preciſely, when God taught them thus to worſhip him; yet certaine it is that hee taught it, and commanded it, otherwiſe it could not be done of faith, nor pleaſe him. Moſt like therefore that God taught Adam, and Adam his Children, leaving behinde him this holy practice, as ancient as the world, within a little, that Parents ſhould inſtruct in religion the ſeed that God hath given them, and ſo looke upon them, that their Cains, if they have any, dare doe no other, but at leaſt make a ſhew of obedience to God, how wicked ſo ever their hearts be. Such care would cut the combe of ſuch vile Atheiſme as ruleth now, and make all curſed ſpirits at leaſt not to dare to ſhew their contempt of God, and holy exerciſes appointed for man to ſerve God withall, and by, as now they dare to doe.

How ancient inſtruction of parents is, and of what force.

6 But though they both offered, yet mark you a difference in their doings: Cain brings an offering, but Abel brings an offering of the fat of his ſheepe, which the Spirit of God noteth, by a repetition, of ſet purpoſe, with an edge of ſpeech, ſaying, not onely that he brought of the Sheepe, but of the fat of them. Thereby delivering to us this difference betwixt a true heart and a falſe, a true godly man or woman, and a ſinner. They both offer, but the one thinketh any thing good enough, and the other in the zeale of his ſoule, and fulneſſe of his Lord, thinketh nothing good enough. He bringeth his gift, and of the fatteſt, that is, of the beſt hee hath, and wiſheth it were ten thouſand times better. This heate of affection towards God, let us all marke, and ever thinke of: it uncaſeth ſuch as in theſe dayes thinke any ſervice enough for God, halfe a quarter of an houre in a weeke, &c. And ſuch, as if they have any Tythes to pay to their Miniſter, who is in the place of God to receive them, whileſt that courſe ſtandeth for his maintenance, chooſe out the broken and blinde, the hault and lame, the ſcabbed and ſcurvie, and the worſt of every thing, thinking that alſo too good. But theſe hollow-hearted Cains, and covetous hypocrites God ſeeth, and their rewards ſhall be as Cains was.

Verſe 4. Levit. 22.

How hypocrites diſcover themſelves.

Bad Tythers.

7 Of whom it is ſaid, that unto Cain his offering God had no reward, but unto Abel hee had. See the contempt of God of ſo unwilling worſhip, ſo cold love and grudged gifts. Thus will he ſerve ſuch hollow ſervers of him, but ever regard, bleſſe and like his true Abels, and their Offerings, and what wiſh you more?

Verſe 4, 5.

8 Cain was angry, ſaith the Text, when he ſaw his brothers Offering regarded more than his, yea, and exceeding angry, for his countenance changed, and was caſt downe. Marke, I pray you, how hypocrites, though they be hypocrites, yet can they not abide to bee ſerved like hypocrites, no, they will not give God himſelfe (much leſſe man) leave to deale with them as they deſerve. Cain will fret, and rage and fret, if his falſe heart be rejected of God: and all ſuperſtitious idolaters will doe the like, if their faſtings and prayers, croſſings and creepings, and all their worſhip either in matter or manner, or both, diſliked of God, be diſcountenanced. That which they doe is wicked and naught, and yet neither God nor man may ſay ſo, or ſhew ſo. But wee muſt be content, you ſee this malice for telling truth is not of two dayes age, but as old as Cain.

Verſe 5. Hypocrites cannot abide their due reward.

9 But how appeared this liking and diſliking of their ſacrifices, and whereby knew they of it? The uſuall anſwer and opinion is, that either from heaven fire came downe and conſumed Abels offering, as that of Elias in the Kings, of Salomon when he dedicated the Temple, or out of the ſtone whereupon it lay, as we reade of Gedeon; but becauſe the Scripture is ſilent, let not us be curious: contented with this, that it did appeare, what way we know not certainly. The text is plaine, Cain ſaw the difference, and was highly diſpleaſed. Something therefore was done of God, and ſome ſigne given of his gracious favour, more to Abel and his gift, that came from a true heart, than to Cain and his gift, not from the like proceeding.

How the favor and diſlike of God appeared. 1 King. 18. 2 Chron. 7. Iude 6.

10 It is eſpecially to be noted, that God is not ſaid to have reſpected only Abel his offering, putting a regard of Abels perſon, before the regard of his gift. Thereby teaching us, that it is not with God, as it is with men; for men regard chiefly the gifts, and then the perſons according to their gifts, if they give much, they regard them more, if they give leſſe, they love them thereafter, but God quite contrary: Hee reſpecteth firſt the perſon, and then the gift, and if the perſon pleaſe him, his gift he accepteth, if not, no gifts of his doth GOD care for. Now the perſon pleaſeth onely in Chriſt, and therefore no gifts, but the gifts of the godly doth God reſpect. Baſe is that minde that is wonne to love by gifts, or to diſlike for want of gifts great enough. Such ſinne is not in God, and therefore away with Opus operatum; ſuch Popiſh traſh offendeth God. It is not, you ſee, the deed done that pleaſeth God, as they ſay, but the party that doth it muſt firſt pleaſe God, as you ſee here. He had reſpect to Abel firſt, and then to his offering; that is, firſt it pleaſed him to accept in Chriſt Abels perſon, and then the duties that came from his accepted ſervant, he regarded. Like place is that in the Prophet; I have no pleaſure in you, ſaith the Lord of Hoaſts, neither will I accept an offering at your hands. Firſt, profeſſing the diſlike of their perſons, and then his neglect of any thing they gave. Eſay the like againe, and many times elſewhere in the Scripture. Wherefore, if ever we would that any thing proceeding from us ſhould be accepted of God, let us labour, firſt, that our ſelves may be accepted by being truely grafted into him by faith, with whom God is perfectly pleaſed, and for him with all that depend upon him. This doth not the Papiſt, but wearieth himſelfe in outward things, thinking for his many faſtings, much babling and toyles of the fleſh to be regarded, but you ſee the contrary here.

How dangerous anger kept is.

11 This conceived wrath in Cain his breſt ſtayed not ſo; but having leave to lodge there a while, it brought forth murder, bloody and unnaturall, of his brother: a good warning to all that ſee it, to beware of keeping wrath, and lapping up cloſely in their boſomes a conceived diſpleaſure: for queſtionleſſe it is the way to greater ſinne, if God prevent not. Old anger proves curſed malice, and old malice will have murder cruell, if other circumſtances of time, place, and the like may be had. Let not the Sunne goe downe then upon your wrath, but ſtop beginnings in a godly zeale, and prevent ſuch ends by a godly care. Marke the meanes to attaine his will: he ſpeaketh to his brother to goe into the fields, and when hee had him there, hee ſlew him. Anger that cannot ſpeake is moſt wicked, but anger that can ſpeake, and faire ſpeake, and meane ſo ill, is wickedneſſe it ſelfe. It is a Cains curteſie to ſpeake faire, and meane ill, to walke with me as a Brother, and to cut my throat as an enemy, and even that ſhould make us hate it. See alſo here, and obſerve it well, how old a practiſe of Satan it is, to ſet brethren at variance for Religion. Cain hateth Abel, becauſe God made it knowne that his religion and worſhipping of God was better than his. Old Satan hath not caſt his coate yet, but ſoweth diſlike ſtill for the ſame cauſe. Gods word giveth teſtimony to one brothers truth, and diſliketh utterly the other brothers falſhood. This maketh the worſe to gnaſh at the better, where hee ſhould rejoyce for him, and partake in his good by yeelding to it.

A faire ſpeaking anger.

To ſet brethré at variance, how old a practice of Satan.

12 God regarded this jarre in Cain, and expoſtulateth with him, what ailed him. Doth not God abide it, and will Cain doe it? Have wee any Cains now that hate their brethren, and heare this, are they not afraid of Gods eye? are they not aſhamed to bee like Cain? Doe they thinke to jumpe with him in crime, and not to jumpe with him in judgement? It can not be.

To hide malice, as old as Cain.

13 But will Cain confeſſe to God what is the matter? No I warrant you, neither his hatred before, nor his murther after, but concealeth all as much as he could, though indeed from God nothing can bee hid. So old againe is this corruption of hiding and covering, cloaking and ſhadowing of our ſinnes. When we doe it, we reſemble Cain, and what fouler patterne to bee painted by?

Verſe 10. No ſecreſie from God.

14 Thy brothers blood cryeth to me (ſaith God) out of the earth. And doe we hope ſecreſie for want of witneſſes? Alas, we are deceived. The wickedneſſe it ſelfe will torment us, as if a thouſand knew it. The conſcience cannot be bribed to hold his peace, it will give evidence doe what we can. And the very deed wee have done will give God no reſt, but cry againſt us, till it be revenged, and we puniſhed. If you knew your ſecret ſinnes ſhould be cryed at the market-croſſe as ſoone as you have done them, you would bee afraid to ſinne, and take no comfort in the want of witneſſes, nor hope of reſt by the ſecreſie. Now you heare with your eares, and ſee with your eyes, that be it never ſo ſecret, and without the knowledge of man, it cryeth in heaven, and maketh all heaven ring of it, as Abels blood did, and ſhall it not feare you? Care not then for ſecreſie, if it be evill; for if God ſee it and heare it, he is privie that can doe more to you than any man, even Kill the ſoule as well as the body, and caſt them both into hell fire.

Verſ. 11, &c. What the marginall notes ſuffice in, here I paſſe over.

15 The Juſtice of God upon Cains murder, truly ſheweth us how all ſinne ſhall ſpeed: For he hateth not murder alone, but all ſinne. Reade the words well, and marke the wrath, ſharpe is his hand upon this offender, and yet moſt juſt.

Verſ. 17.

16 In Cains building a Citie, and calling it after his ſons name; we ſee the care of the wicked, ever more to deſire to magnifie themſelves than to glorifie God, more to ſeeke after a name in earth, than a life in heaven, more to eſtabliſh their ſeed with Townes and Towers, than with Gods favour. But ſuch courſe is crooked, and like Cains here. If wee deſire a name, the love of God and his Word, the love of Chriſt and his truth is the way. You remember a ſilly woman, that in a true affection to her Lord and Maſter, powred upon him a Boxe of oyntment, and what got ſhee: Verily (ſaith Chriſt) whereſoever this Goſpell ſhall be preached throughout the world, this ſhall be told of the woman, for a remembrance of her. Here was a name well gotten, and firmely continued to the very worlds end. The memory of the righteous ſhall remaine for ever, and the name of the wicked, doe what they can, in Gods good time ſhall rot and take an ending. For which cauſe Moſes, if you marke it, maketh no mention of the time, that either Cain or any of his ſonnes lived, as he doth of the godly. Filthy Polygamie you ſee in this place began with wicked Lameth, that is, to have moe Wives than one at one time: ſo old is this evill, that from the beginning was not ſo. That mention that is made of the children here of the wicked, telleth us how they flouriſh for a time with all worldly things whom yet God hateth. The laſt words ſhew you what eclipſes true Religion ſuffereth often in this world, and let us marke it.

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

The whole Chapter handleth the Genealogie of the Fathers before the Floud, and hath also divers particulars worthy marking.

1 AGaine it is said, God created Adam after his likenesse, which what it was, you heard in the first Chapter, referring you to the Apostle, who expoundeth it by righteousnesse and true holinesse, meaning by those two words, all goodnesse, as wisedome, truth, innocency, power, and such like, incident to mans nature, unspotted by sinne.

Vers. 1. Ephes. 4. 24.

2 He called them both Adam, saith the Text, both the Man and the Woman: by that one name noting unto us, that inseparable, holy, and mysticall union, that is made by the marriage of two persons to become but one flesh: the like, in some sort, remaineth still in use amongst us, in that the wife is called by her husbands name, her owne name ceasing, and it being used no more, as it should be said, now that you are maried, though before you were two, ye are become one, and therefore fit that one name should serve you both, to note so much both to your selves and others. The man is the worthier person, and therefore by his name shall you be called, and the womans name shall cease to be as it was, since now shee is changed, and become one flesh with him, whose name she enjoyeth.

Vers. 2. The union of mariage. Why women maried leave their owne names, and are called as their husband.

3 Adam is said to have begot a sonne after his likenesse: which is to be understood thus, a man as hee was, and corrupt as hee was. Like him in sexe and nature, and like him in corruption, impure of impure.

Verse 3. Adams likenesse, what.

4 From the 4. verse to the 22. two things chiefly are noted; The long life of these Fathers, and their assured death, many yeares they continued, yea many hundreds, but at last they dyed: Death long ere it came, but at last it came. And touching their long life, some questions are moved: First, why it was so long. Secondly, whence or how it came to bee so: of the first, two causes are alledged, one for the propagation of mankinde, so much the faster and more speedily: the other for continuance of remembrance of matters, and deducing of them to posterity the better. To the second, answer is made, that as all mens lives at this day are from God, and of God, as the fountaine; so was also that long life of theirs, and by him onely it was produced to and for such terme as it was. Nevertheless, if we speake of causes in nature (by which also God worketh when it pleaseth him) divers and sundry there were then, now to bee remembred if we will, wherefore their life might passe ours, as it did, and be so long. The indifferent mixture, equall temperature, and good disposition of the chiefe and first qualities, heate, cold, moysture, drinesse, is in nature the ground of life, and by all probability in that beginning this was so, more than now: Their dyet better, and temperance more from surfetting and fleshly pleasures, than is now. The Region they dwelt in hot, in a strength to dry up and consume superfluity of humors, when they were corrupt and rotten: Their mindes quieter from eating and gnawing cares, the shortners of mans life: since iniquity then being not so strong, many woes and vexations were unfound. And lastly, the fruits of the earth, in their purity, strength, and vertue, not corrupted, as after the Floud, and ever since still more and more, might bee to them a true cause, and a most forcible cause of good health, greater strength, and longer life, then ever since by nature could be.

Long life, and death at last, of the old Fathers. Their life, why so long. How so long.

Causes in nature of long life.

Cura quasi corrodens.

5 Their certaine death is noted, to shew the truth of Gods word ever infallible, and unmoveable. The Lord said, If they did eate, they should die: they did eate, then death must follow, or God be untrue, warning us faire, if we will be warned, never to mince and qualifie what the Lord pronounceth peremptorily and flatly, for he will be true, doe what we can, and we shall finde it so. Adam lived nine hundred yeares and thirty, but he dyed. Sheth nine hundred and twelve, and he dyed. Methuselah nine hundred threescore and nine, and yet he dyed: dyed, dyed, is the end of all, that God might be true, how long so ever they lived: The same word of the Lord is no falser now than then, but the same for ever: and therefore for this eaten Apple against commandement, die we must still, and whilest the world endureth: would God this repetition of death, death, to all these Fathers, might make us as duely to remember it, as we are sure truly to finde it. To finde it, I say, and God knoweth, not we, how soone. To day I, to morrow thou, saith the Wise-man. His conceit was not unprofitable, that imagined mans life to bee as a Tree, at the roote whereof, two Mice lie gnawing and nibling without ceasing, a white Mouse and a blacke: The white Mouse hee conceived to bee the day, and the blacke Mouse the night: by which day and night mans life, as a tree, by continuall gnawing, at last is ended: Who can now tell how farre these two Mice have eaten upon him. Happily the Tree that seemeth yet strong, ere night may shake, and ere day againe fall flat downe. O let us thinke of this uncertainty, and that is all I wish by this speech. Adams coate of Skinnes might fitly remember him of this. And what doe we still in our most ruffe weare, which appertained not sometime, in some sort, to a living creature, by whose death we being clad, may fitly thinke of of our owne deathes that are ſo ſure? But you ſee the ſnow how blinde it makes a man by his great whiteneſſe: ſo doth this world by his manifold pleaſures, baites and allurements, dazell our eyes, and blinde us ſo, that we forget to die, we dreame of life, when there is no hope, and we cannot heare of it to goe away: O death, how bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man, that liveth at reſt in his poſſeſſions, unto the man that hath nothing to vexe him, and that hath proſperity in all things, yea, unto him that is yet able to receive meate.

To walke with God. Mich. 6.8.

6 In the 22. verſe it is ſaid, that Henoch walked with God: To walke with God, ſometime ſignifieth to obey and ſerve, to reverence and feare the living God, and (by the way) when it doth, if godly men be ſaid to walke with God, I pray you with whom walke they that are ungodly? Surely with him, that if they ſaw him would feare them, and ſhame them to bee arme in arme with ſo foule a gueſt. But what the eye ſeeth not, the heart feareth not, yet the end will finde it, when it is too late. In this place to walke with God, ſignifieth he was tranſlated out of this life and world, not by death as others, but alive, as were no others then, to live with the Lord. Which tranſlation to him was in ſtead of death, that following to him by this rapt, that to others without it after death. The Lord did this to give us ſome ſigne of the reſurrection to a better life prepared, and to bee a teſtimony of the immortality of ſoules and bodies. As to enquire where hee became, is meere curioſity. The like we reade of Elias the Prophet, that hee alſo was caught up into heaven in this extraordinary manner. Many vaine motions about them both, by idle heads, which I will not ſcan; yea, even godly men have waded further, than by any neceſſity they were conſtrained: for where God hath not an anſwer, we ſhould not have a queſtion, that is, where it pleaſeth him to be ſilent, we ſhould not be ſifters, for hee concealeth nothing that may bee profitable. Syrach is alledged, where it is ſaid, that Henoch was tranſlated into Paradiſe: But as the Booke is not Canonicall, ſo in that is the Latine tranſlation falſe, the Greeke having nothing of Paradiſe, but ſimply that hee was tranſlated. Other gueſſes and talkes I take as they be, onely gueſſes, and paſſe them over. Where ſhould they be, but with others of the godly where they are? their bodies in the rapt changed, as the Apoſtle ſaith all ours ſhall be, when corruptible ſhall put on incorruption, and mortall, immortalitie; and as they that be alive at the Lords comming, ſhall be changed. For we ſhall not (ſaith he) all die, but we ſhall be changed. The Lord ſhall deſcend himſelfe from heaven with a ſhout, and with the voyce of the Archangell, and with the Trumpet of God, and the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt. Then ſhall we which live and remaine, be caught up with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the ayre, and ſo we ſhall be ever with the Lord. So were theſe, no queſtion, at this time changed. That againe the body may bee ſo caught, the Apoſtle ſheweth, when he ſaith, he was ſo, whether in the body, or out of the body, ſaith hee, I know not; noting thereby that both might bee. Wee reade how Philip was caught from the Eunuch, and found at Azotus, but I goe no further in this matter.

Verſ. 24. The Lords care for life or death.

7 God tooke him away, ſaith the 24. verſe, and it may well remember us of the care that the Lord hath over his, ever to deliver them from the woes of this world, when it ſhall bee good. He ſeeth and knoweth us, and our eſtate: while it may be good for us to live we ſhall live, and when another place ſhall be better for us, the Lord, as he did Henoch, can take us away, yea, and will, if we truſt in him.

In the 29. verſe, ſome have noted how greatly the inventions of Arts and Sciences are to bee eſteemed and made of. For by them men be mightily eaſed in the labours of this life, that being done by skill and cunning, eaſily and quickly, that otherwiſe muſt have long time, and much paines. Examples in every thing our owne experience can give. Whereupon againe may ariſe in our hearts, how bad members in a Common-wealth they are, that either condemne or hinder good and lawfull knowledge, or are inventers or finders out of bad and evill things: of whom their parents cannot ſay, as Noah his parents ſaid of him here, that they are, or ſhall bee, comforts unto them, concerning their worke and ſorrow of Hands, as touching the earth which the Lord hath curſed, but rather great diſcomforts many wayes. Alſo, all idle Drones and ſlowbellies, borne to eate and ſleepe, and to doe no good by any invention, labour, or induſtry, may here be thought of, but I goe no further.

Col. 3. 1, 2, 3.

8 Laſtly, let us thinke upon this occaſion, that though all of us in body, cannot obtaine this honour, to be thus caught up, to walke with God, yet may wee in minde bee partakers of thus much, to aſcend upward, to have our hearts above, and not beneath, and to walke in ſpirit amongſt thoſe endleſſe joyes that are prepared for us.

CHAP. VI.

Hitherto we have heard of mans generation, now muſt we heare of his degeneration, that we may well perceive, if we will ſee any thing, how vaine a thing man is, rebelling ever againſt God. This whole Chapter containeth chiefely, but theſe three things.

1 Mans degeneration from God: in the foure firſt verſes.
2 The juſtice of God, ordaining puniſhment for him: from the 5. verſe to the 8.
3 The mercy of God even in this juſtice: from the eight to the end.

Verſ. 1. Mans great corruption.

1 TOuching the firſt, it teacheth us, as I ſaid, the great and grievous corruption of man, who the more bound he is for mercy to ſerve God truly, the more apt and prone hee is to offend him highly. The Lord had now encreaſed mankinde, and made them many, to their great comforts, if they could have uſed it, and now without all regard and thankfulneſs for ſuch his goodneſs, headily and haſtily, wickedly and ungodly, they provoke him to anger and great diſpleaſure againſt them, by fleſhly following their owne wills, every man marying as he beſt liked, for outward beauty, without regard of Gods liking, and inward vertue. The Sons of God, that is, the Children of the godly, ſaw the daughters of men, that is, of wicked parents deſcended, ſuch as Cain was, that they were faire, and they tooke them wives of all that they liked. When men bee multiplied, it ſhould be a comfort, but by our corruption it is a multiplication of ſinne even according to the perſons. Wherefore holy men have wiſhed rather to dwell alone, than to bee vexed with the ſight of ungodlineſs that is amongſt many. Beauty alſo ſhould be a comfort, but behold, by us it becommeth a ſnare, and here it is an occaſion of a dreadfull deſtruction. A thing to bee conſidered of all immodeſt gazers and ſtarers upon womens faces. Are they holyer than theſe were, or deſcended of more holy Parents? if not, conſider the fall of theſe, and beware betimes. Often reade the ſixt of the Proverbs, amongſt many other Scriptures, and remember his wiſdome that wrote ſo. And if Salomons wiſdome may not prevaile againſt your will, thinke what hope there may be of a good end. Conſider more your ſelfe, for theſe my notes I make but remembrances, and as it were helps to enter by into more full meditations.

As amongſt many diſhes it is hard to be temperate, ſo amongſt many women to be well minded. Lis magna pudicitiæ cum forma. Looke Oſea 2. verſe 14.

Vnequall mariages how dangerous.

2 We ſee how grievous a thing unequall mariages bee, when the godly with the ungodly, the beleeving with the Infidels, the religious with the ſuperſtitious, are unequally yoaked: ſurely even ſo grievous to God, that for this cauſe eſpecially, the whole world was deſtroyed by the Floud. The Lord is no changeling, he diſliked it ever, and diſliketh it ſtill. It is a ſecret poyſon that deſtroyeth vertue more ſpeedily than any thing. Salomon was overthrowne by the daughters of men, for all his wiſdome. Ieboſaphat matched his ſonne to Ahabs daughter, and it was his deſtruction. Hee forſooke the way of the Lord, and wrought all wickedneſs in a full meaſure. Why? becauſe ſaith the text, The daughter of Ahab was his wife. Ahab was wicked, but a wicked wife made him farre worſe, for ſhee provoked him, ſaith the text. Be not unequally yoaked with Infidels, ſaith the Apoſtle, for what fellowſhip hath righteouſneſs with unrighteouſneſs? and what communion hath light with darkneſs? what concord hath Chriſt with Belial? or what part hath the Beleever with the Infidell? It is a law of mariage that ſhould not be broken, that it be in the Lord, that is, with his liking, and in his feare, with ſuch as be godly and hold the truth. Our children we allow not to marry againſt our wils, but our right we challenge to give a conſent. And ſhall the children of God ſeeke no conſent of their Father in heaven to their mariages? But his conſent he will never give to marry his enemy, and therefore doe it not. It is not lawfull, it is not expedient if it were lawfull. The Floud came to puniſh ſuch diſobedience, and forget it never.

2 Chron. 21.6.

2 Cor. 6.

Think of theſe reaſons, and marry vertue, not wealth nor will.

Conſider how God hateth it that in mariage, onely beauty and favour ſhould be reſpected: for their faireneſſe the ſonnes of God choſe wicked women, ſaith this place, and God plagued it. Favour is deceitfull, and beauty is vaine, ſaith wiſe Salomon, but a woman that feareth God, ſhee ſhall be praiſed.

Beauty is vaine.

Prov. 31.30.

Verſ. 3. Gods great patience and long ſuffering.

3 Marke the word, ſtrive, in the third verſe, My Spirit ſhall not alwayes ſtrive with man. And ſee in it, and by it, the deepeneſs of Gods goodneſs to us miſerable ſinners, hee doth not by and by bring upon us the deſert of our ſinnes, but beareth with us daily and hourely, giving mercy more, notwithſtanding all thoſe ſinnes, yea, hee ſtriveth with us, and tuggeth with us, that wee might bee ſaved, and not periſh. O what a God is this? Looke how your ſelfe ſtrive with your childe, or friend whom you love, to bring him to good, and to ſave him from evill; even ſo doth the Lord with you, yea much and farre more, As I live, ſaith the Lord, I deſire not the death of the wicked, but that he may turne from his way and live. O turne you, turne you from your evill wayes, for why will yee die, O houſe of Iſrael? The Lord of his promiſe is not ſlacke, as ſome men

Ezra. 3.11.

2 Pet. 3.9. count ſlackneſs, but is patient toward us, and would have no man to periſh, but would all men to come to repentance, ſaith the Apoſtle Peter. And deſpiſeſt thou O man, ſaith Saint Paul, the riches of Gods bountifulneſs, patience, and long ſuffering, not knowing that the bountifulneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance? Thus good is God, and thus he ſtriveth with us. Let Judges alſo here learne, that although for a time they beare, yet ever and ſtill they may not beare. Likewiſe may we all thinke how good it is, rather to be gently chaſtiſed when wee ſinne, than ſuffered to runne till an utter deſtruction fall upon us.

Rom. 2.4.

4 Againe, marke his mercy in the time that he granteth here to repentance: An hundred and twenty yeares, ſaith hee, ſhall his dayes bee: that is, though thus greatly and grievouſly man hath offended, and even all the earth is become corrupt, ſo that with great juſtice I might bring a Flood forthwith, and conſume them all: yet will I not doe ſo, but ſtill beare longer, and looke for amendment, yea an hundred and twenty yeares yet will I give him, ere I bring the Flood upon him, to ſee if they will returne and avoyd my wrath. What is long ſuffering if this bee not? And this is the ſweet nature of our God. Good is the ſaying of Saint Ambroſe, Vim Deo facimus, non litigando, ſed flendo, We force God, not by ſtriving, but by weeping, &c.

Gyants.

5 Of Gyants and mighty men the Word ſpeaketh ſundry times in ſeverall places: Here he ſaith, of theſe ungodly mariages came many of them, which being mightier than the uſuall ſort of men, uſurped by their might, authority over others, and did degenerate from the ſimplicity wherein their Fathers lived. In the Booke of Numbers, they that went to ſearch the Land of Canaan, when they returned made report, that they had ſeene there Gyants, in compariſon of whom, they ſeemed Graſhoppers. In Deuteronomie, mention is made of Og, King of Baſhan, whoſe bed was of Iron, nine cubits long, and foure cubits broad. That great Goliah alſo of the Philiſtims, you remember. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, he ſaw the tooth of a man as great as an hundred of ours, what was the body then? Somewhat you may gueſſe. Pliny reporteth, that in Crete, out of a Mountaine was digged the remnants of a man, by gueſſe of proportion when he lived, ſixe and forty cubits, but there were no end to tell you all we reade of this matter. Thus much ſufficeth to cauſe us to conſider Gods power, which mightily and marvellouſly hath ever ſhewed it ſelfe in his Creatures. Our laſt Engliſh Chronicles, the firſt part, and in the beginning, reade you a whole Chapter of Gyants, if you cannot reade other Stories.

Chap. 13.34.

Chap. 3.11.

Verſ. 5. God ſeeth all.

6 In the fift verſe it is ſaid, The Lord ſaw the wickedneſſe of man, that it was great. Hee ever ſeeeth both good and bad whatſoever it is: neither walles nor darkeneſſe can hinder his ſight. To the godly it is a comfort, who are many times wronged by falſe ſuſpition, ſlanders and lyes, but the Lord ſeeth. To the wicked it muſt be a terror, and a very great one, that cloake they, or cover they, hide they, or lap they their ſinnes never ſo much, yet the Lord ſeeth. And what will he doe? ever ſee, and never puniſh? Then were he unjuſt, but that he cannot be for any man, therefore the end will ſmart, without repentance.

Verſe 6.

7 If you doubt of this, beleeve the Text which telleth what fell out when God ſaw it would be no better, It repented him that ever he had made man: That is, ſpeaking after the manner of men; God deſtroyed man, and in that, as it were, did diſavow him to be his creature. And marke withall how lively the Lord doth diſcover the corruption that is in us, ſaying: All our imaginations, and all our cogitations are evill, and onely evill, and ever evill. What greater evill, than in this ſort and meaſure to be evill? Where is that free-will that wilfull men deviſe to do good, when our mould and mettall is become thus bad? Away with ſuch dreames, experience is the fooles Schoole-maſter, and ſhall not even that teach us, but will we gain-ſay our owne knowledge? Auguſtine telleth us and the whole world, that Homo male utens libero arbitrio, & ſe & ipſum perdidit: Man abuſing that free-wil, which before his fall he had, he loſt both himſelfe and it. We are nought waking, wee are nought ſleeping, we are ſinfull dreaming, and when we doe not dreame, where is our good?

Verſ. 5. Mans corruption how great.

The meaſure of ſinne, then how great.

8 Somewhat conceive of the meaſure of ſinne that was now in the earth, by theſe ſpeeches of God, that he repented, and that he was ſorry in his heart. Could a ſmall meaſure make God thus grieved? No, hee daily endureth great wickedneſs, and yet repenteth not that hee made man: wherefore this muſt teach us their ſinne was great, and warne us againe to beware, at the leaſt with great ſin to offend the Lord. If wee cannot but ſinne through our imperfection, yet let us not encreaſe the meaſure without remorſe by any wicked malice: but ſtay to go on, if we cannot ſtay to goe in: Stop the courſe as the Lord ſhall inable, and not by fulneſs of meaſure, as this people did here, pull vengance from heaven whether God will or no. O heavy day and houre to you or me, if the Lord ſhall ſay, it repenteth mee that I have made ſuch an one! yea, I am ſorry, and ſorry at mine heart for it. Beware then of great ſinnes, and of heaping ſinne upon ſinne, till God be driven to ſay thus much againſt you. The contrary is ſweet, when the Lord rejoyceth at our being, and ſhall ſay to Satan, haſt thou marked my ſervant Iob, ſuch a man, ſuch a woman, how they love me? &c.

9 But why was the Lord ſorry that hee made man? Surely, becauſe hee muſt deſtroy him againe, his ſinne is ſo great. Why then he is ſorry to deſtroy man? Truth it is, if he could with juſtice chooſe. O then what ſee we! Cannot God proceed to puniſhment of rebellious ſinners, yea of ſuch rebellious ſinners as theſe were, that made the whole earth ſmell of their ſinnes, but with ſome griefe, with ſome diſcontent, with ſome loathneſſe as it were, to have it ſo, if they would amend? And ſhall he be haſtie and furious, implacable and unmercifull to a poore ſinner that groaneth and grieveth, ſigheth and ſobbeth, weepeth and cryeth for woe, that he doth ſinne againſt ſo good a God, and ſo deare a Father, and wiſheth it better every day he riſeth, and every night he goeth to bed? No, no, it cannot be: And therefore be of good comfort, thou grieved ſpirit, the Lord loveth thy longing care to ſerve him better, and he can ſooner ceaſe to be God, which is impoſſible, than caſt away his eyes of mercy and pitty from thee. He will not puniſh thee, but he luſteth to exerciſe thee, that the glory of thy faith, after ſuch aſſault, appearing bright, may receive a crowne of comfort brighter than gold, or beaten gold beſet with precious ſtones: O tarry then the Lords leaſure! Be ſtrong, and he ſhall comfort thine heart, and thou ſhalt put thy truſt in the Lord.

God how ſlow to anger.

O comfort to an heavy ſpirit.

Pſalm. 27.

10 In the ſeventh verſe the Lord ſaith, I will deſtroy. Before we noted his mercifull ſtriving to bring to repentance, but now note his juſtice, if man will not repent, hee beareth long and ſaith, turne, turne, but at laſt he catcheth his ſword and ſaith, I will deſtroy. Tempt not the Lord therefore over long, you unfeeling hearts, for you ſee a feare. Many times admoniſhed, and never amended, thinke you heare this word, I will deſtroy. As I live, ſaith the Lord, though Coniah the ſon of Iehoiakim, King of Iudah, were the Signet of my right hand, yet will I plucke him thence, &c. Jerem. 22. 24. Therefore preſume not ever that God will ſpare, &c.

Verſe 7. God juſt,

11 In the eight verſe it is ſaid, But Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord. So then God puniſheth that ever yet he ſpareth ſome. So is he juſt that he forgetteth not his mercy. He ſpareth Noah and his houſhold with him, and that in mercy, Gratiam invenit, non meriti mercedem: Grace he found, but no reward of merit. Yet what God giveth him, we may not deny him, Hee was a juſt man, and upright in his time, and walked with God. A ſingular praiſe in ſo corrupt an age to be ſo unlike them. Would God it might teach us the praiſe of this, not to be carried away with corruptions among us, be they never ſo generall, or ſo embraced of the greateſt men. To walke with God is a precious praiſe, though none doe it but my ſelfe, and to walke with man, with the world, with a Towne or Pariſh in wicked wayes, is a deadly ſinne, though millions doe it. Juſtice and uprightneſs will abide the touch, when craft and diſſembling will be diſcerned droſſe. Noah in his wicked time, and in this univerſality of ſinning, was a juſt man and upright, and walked with God, doe they all what they would, he would not follow them, and let us marke it.

Verſe 8. So God juſt that ever mercifull, and contrary. Multitude of cuſtome.

12 In the 24. verſe, and ſo to the end of the Chapter, direction is given to Noah how hee ſhould be ſaved, even in an Arke, which he is commanded to make to that purpoſe. The preſcription you ſee, and every particular as they lye. Let me tell you the reſemblance that hath beene made by ſome, peradventure not unfitly. Noah, ſay they, was a fit figure of our Saviour Chriſt, for in him was fulfilled moſt effectually that which was ſaid of Noah in the fift Chapter the 29. verſe: Lamech begate a ſonne and called his name Noah, ſaying: this ſame ſhall comfort us concerning our worke and ſorrow of our hands, as touching the earth which the Lord hath curſed. The Arke a figure of the Church, for as out of that there was no ſafety, ſo out of the Church there is no ſalvation.

Verſe 24.

The reſemblance of the Arke.

The matter of it muſt not be every thing, but of Pine-trees direction was given. The children of the Church are not every ſort, not they which are borne of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God. The Pitch repreſented the love of the Church, wherewith, as with glew, the members are united and faſtned together. Within and without the Arke was pitched, and within and without a true member of the Church is unfained love. Hee loveth within, he loveth without, he loveth without, and he loveth within; it is not ſecret and cannot be ſeene, it is not ſeene outward, and wanteth within, but truth and ſhew, and ſhew and truth goe together in this man. O bleſſed Pitch! would God we were all thus pitched, for the more of this cleaveth to our fingers, the better we. It defileth not, but maketh us holy before the Lord. In the Arke were divers roomes, and in the Church are divers gifts, divers orders and degrees of men. In the heaven we ſeeke for divers manſions. In the Arke are beaſts uncleane, as well as cleane, and in the true Church, and of the true Church, he that denyeth ſinners to bee, ſhall proove an Anabaptiſt. The window, they ſay, might repreſent the Goſpell and the preaching thereof, for as by that window came light into the Arke, to lighten their bodies, ſo by the preaching of the Goſpell came light into the Church, to lighten the heart and minde, and underſtanding of thoſe that are within. The doore, Chriſt: I am the doore, and ſo as followeth. The Arke was great, and very great. So is the Church of great largeneſſe, diſperſed by God both farre and wide. Reade the 54. of Eſay 2. Rejoyce thou barren that beareſt not, &c. Inlarge thy tents, &c. The Flood reſembled Baptiſme, which killeth the old man, and reſtoreth the new. While the Arke was preparing, ſaith S. Peter, whereby eight ſoules were ſaved in the water,

Iohn 1. 13.

1 Pet. 3. 2.

whereof the Baptisme that now is, answering that figure, &c. saveth us also by the resurrection of Iesus Christ. Finally and lastly, the Arke was tossed in those waves of water, both up and downe, and so is the Church, whilest it here is militant, to and fro. Yea every member doth witnesse this, tossed of the world, tossed of flesh, tossed of Satan, and tossed by sinne, never able to hold together, if God, as he did the Arke, did not defend it, guide it, and keepe it, and governe the waves, that they shall not hurt further, than in mercy he will heale againe. This is the figure of the Arke, and summe of this Chapter.

Chap. VII.

Having heard in the former Chapter the sinne of man in those dayes, and the gracious striving of God with him, to bring him to amendment, giving even then, when hee might justly have punished, yet an hundred and twenty yeares to repentance. In this Chapter we shall see how all this goodnesse of God was despised and neglected, those hundred and twenty yeares in all wickednes likewise spent, and therefore God forced, as it were, at last to bring the Flood upon them. The generall heads may be these two.

{ The entrance of Noah into the Arke.

Verse 1. Noah entred commanded.

1 CONcerning the first, it is to be observed that God biddeth him enter into the Arke, thereby giving his Faith that sure stay of the Word, without which it must needs have wavered, and beene shaken in peeces in that great triall. And Noah his not entring till he was bidden, teacheth us truely to take God for our guide in all actions, and his word for our warrant and assurance in what we goe about.

Verse 1. Such God taketh us as we will to be. A great cõfort.

2 The Lord saith, He saw Noah righteous in that age before him, not meaning thereby that Noah wanted weaknesse of humane imperfections, but so calling him in respect of others, and because hee had a desire and hearty affection to be such an one. Whereby wee have given us a great comfort, that the Lord doth measure us according to our will, and not according to our power, and finding us willing with unfained affection to serve him uprightly (which will commeth not yet of our selves) he vouchsafeth us the honor and title of righteous men, notwithstanding our great weakenesse and want of perfection. These and such like places wee should ever have in store, against those fiery darts of our deadly foe, that would perswade us wee are nothing regarded of God, because wee labour of some imperfections. How honourable is the remembrance of their faith, in the eleventh to the Hebrewes, all which had their wants and many infirmities.

Verse 1. True praise to be righteous before God, not before men.

3 The addition of the words before me, make his praise great, and his vertue true: for many seeme glorious before men, which before God are nothing so: that is true righteousnesse which before God is so. This if we thought of as well as we know, we would more regard God, and lesse thinke of men, whereas now we pricke at it, as our great marke, to be approved of men, and to gaine their praises. But the Apostle said, I passe very little to be judged of you, or of mans judgement, 1 Cor. 4. 3.

Verse 2. God careth to maintaine his worship, and we care not.

4 A question is asked why of cleane beasts by sevens, and of uncleane but couples, were taken and preserved? And the best answer is, after the preservation of seed, because the cleane served for sacrifices, which God had appointed to bee served by. God then provided for commanded exercises, that there might be to performe them with, and we, as though we were not his Children, nor ever meant to be his heires, most carelesly contemne them, and will provide nothing for them: if we provide any thing, it shall be how to hinder them and put them downe, and this is our resembling of God.

Verse 4. God hateth doubting. Numb. 20.

5 God telleth Noah when he would begin to raine, and how long he would continue, that his faith might be firme in every respect, and not doubting, sith nothing more grieveth God than so to do, as you may remember in divers examples of the best men, as in Moses and Aaron, those great pillers, who for their doubting and wavering, went never into the Land of Promise. In Zacharias, whose doubting brought him dumbnes for a time, and such like. When God saith he will do a thing, he would be beleeved, and because he knoweth our weakness, he provideth often for us by such particular circumstances as here you see.

The profit that commeth by the godly.

6 Noah was not only saved, but his wife, his sonnes, and his sonnes wives, yet reade wee not of their righteousnes, as of Noahs. But this is the good that commeth by the company of the godly, even to be within the shadow of Gods great mercy for their sakes. So good is the Lord to his loving Children, that to their friends alſo he will be good. So was he to Lot and to his friends, if they would have beene ruled. So was he to Rahab, and her Fathers houſe. So is his manner to bee in his great mercy. Yet what is ſo loathſome to wicked wretches, as the company, fellowſhip, kindred, or acquaintance of the godly? But what marvell, ſince like with like are beſt pleaſed. Gen. 19.

to

7 If you aske how all the beaſts were gotten, the Text anſwereth, they came of themſelves, God compelling them by his divine power to preſent themſelves before Noah as before Adam, when he gave them names, in the ſecond Chapter. Verſe 9.

8 In the eleventh verſe you ſee the time, In the ſixth hundred yeere of Noahs life, in the ſecond month, the ſeventh day: as we reckon about the beginning of May, when all things flouriſhed, and yeelded ſhow; then, even then began this wofull Tragedy of mans deſtruction. So ſure ſhall it be that God ſaith, and ſo inchangeable is his purpoſe. Then were all the fountaines of the great deepe broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened, heaven and earth agreeing together to accompliſh Gods will, and to deſtroy mankinde. O heavy day, when man ſhould ſo offend God, that the creatures abhorre him, the fountaines and deepes and waters below and above! But nothing will warne men. Verſe 11. The flood commeth, and creatures conſpire to deſtroy ſinners.

9 When all were entred into the Arke, the Text ſaith, God ſhut them in, thereby declaring, that by his divine power they were onely ſaved, and the Arke kept whole againſt all dangers; and inſinuating to us the like cauſe of all our ſafety evermore. It is not our houſe, our Caſtle or tower when we go to bed that ſaveth us, but that the Lord ſhutteth the doores, and cloſeth us in, this is our ſurety, that no power can withſtand, whatſoever it wiſheth; this is our ſafety, that we may truſt unto. Were the gates of the City iron or braſſe, if he ſhut them not, they will never hold out: but were they wood or clay, made ſtrong by his defending mercy, no Canon can batter them, nor man get them open to hurt any within, whom the Lord will have ſafe, and to that end hath ſhut them within. Verſ. 16. All ſafety from the Lords ſhutting in, not ours.

10 Then all fleſh periſhed that moved upon the face of the earth ſaith the 21. verſe. But whether man periſhed eternally or no, that is the queſtion, I meane all that were drowned in the flood, whether were they alſo condemned to hell, and ſo periſhed that way? wee may anſwer truely, that it becommeth duſt and aſhes to leave Gods ſecrets to himſelfe. But for the argument, that therefore it ſhould ſeeme ſo, becauſe they taſted of his outward judgement alike, it followeth not: for the two theeves crucified with our Saviour, had like outward puniſhment, and yet not one eternall condemnation. Many dye the deaths of ſeverall offences, and yet are ſaved by mercy in the world to come. God forbid we ſhould cenſure men ſo, as to conclude their eternall death upon their temporall ſufferings: wee may not do it. Well may we learne by theſe words (that all things periſhed) that if nothing could helpe it ſelfe when GOD was angry, what ſhall it bee that ſhall have ſtrength to helpe us, and ſhield us from his wrath? may the ſtrength of a Gyant, gold, ſilver, horſes, wiſedome, or any thing do it? no, all theſe things in this flood could not profit any thing the owners of them, and ſo ſhall it ever be, therefore truſt not to them. Verſe 21. Like puniſhment in this life doth not argue like in the next world. Truſt in nothing to ſave, if God doe frowne.

11 The raine from above, and the fountaines beneath, are things wee cannot lacke, yet ſee wee in this place how they made a flood. Learne wee then by it what a great difference Gods favour and anger make in the ſame creatures. If in favour he rayne, wee are nouriſhed by it: if in anger he doe it, wee are deſtroyed: ſo is it with the fire, with the aire, with our meats and drinkes, and whatſoever wee uſe in this mortall life, his mercy maketh, and his wrath marreth the ſame thing. O how ſhould we then valew Gods favour? how ſhould we ſeeke to have it, and feare to loſe it? Pray we when we riſe, and pray wee when we ſleepe, that his creatures we may enjoy in favour. Gods favour and anger changeth the uſe to us of creatures.

12 Onely Noah was left alive, and they that were with him in the Arke. Yet ſay the wicked in the Prophet Malachy; It is vaine to ſerve the Lord, there is no profit in it. But we ſee the contrary in this place and ever. If the Lords wrath be kindled never ſo little, bleſſed are all they that truſt in him. When mountaines and hils, caſtles and forts, trees, nor any tall towers can ſave a man, this keepeth him cloſe from all harme, and not onely him, but his friends with him, that he was godly and ſerved the Lord. Let this be our gaine then whilſt we ſee this light, and we ſhall never loſe. Doeſt thou thinke to raigne ſaith God, becauſe thou cloſeſt thy ſelfe in Cedar? No, no, thy Fathers godlineſſe made him proſper, and thy want of that ſhall make thee periſh, be thy Forts never ſo ſtrong, and thy braveries never ſo many, they ſhall not ſerve. Reade the 1 Peter 3. 10. Profit by fearing God againſt evill men. Mal. 3. 14. Pſal. 2. Ier. 22. 15.

Chap. VIII.

After mercy commeth judgement, and after judgement mercy againe, as wee may see in this Chapter: wherein we have,

The ceasing of the flood: to the 15. verse.
The comming out of Noah: to the 20.
His sacrifice, and Gods speech: to the end.

COncerning the first, we see the author, God. The meanes, hee made the winde to passe upon the earth, the fountaines of the deepe, and the windowes of Heaven were stopped, &c. The time when, after the hundred and fiftieth day, by our computation about the 19. of October. And for other particulars, Verse 1. The Lords care over his ever. Esay 49. 15.

1 It is said, the Lord remembred Noah: wherein is discovered unto us, the most faithfull care, and carefull faithfulnesse that is in almighty God for his true servants ever: he looketh upon their perils, he seeth their dangers, and in his due time he remembreth to relieve and release them, as he did here Noah and his family. Can the Bride forget her ornaments, nay can the mother forget her child? these things be hard, and easily are not done, yet suppose they might bee done, the Lord for all that cannot forget his, who making him their God, he hath made his servants, and written them in his hand, yea made them as signets upon his right finger, that he may never forget them. O Lord, saith David, what is man that thou art so mindfull of him, or the son of man that thou so regardest him? Tarry then but Gods leasure as Noah did, and be sure of remembrance in due time as he had.

Psal. 8.

Vers. 1. God careth for the cattell. Mat. 6.

2 To strengthen us in this, consider how it followeth of the Cattell, that God also remembred them. Alas! doth the Lord care for Sheepe and Goates, yea for creatures many of meaner regard, and forget man in his tribulation and woe? Behold the fowles of the ayre, doe they sow or spin to be fed or clothed thereby? yet God remembreth them. O how much more Man, that is Lord of all these, if we had faith! Yet hereby may a good minde, even by the Lords example, (than the which there can be no better) learne also to remember his beast, as occasion serveth, that is, as Syrach expoundeth it, to have pitty and compassion on his poore beast, that being dumbe cannot complaine. Againe, that they onely may be said to be mindfull of the poore, which reach out the hand of helpe and comfort to them by some reliefe: not they that with words pitty them, and say God help. For God is said here to remember by deeds, not by words onely as you see, &c.

Verse 2. How to stay sinne. Note.

3 When it is said, the fountaines were stopped, and the windowes closed to stay the Flood: profit by it in a godly policy after this sort, that if any flood of sin, and streame of iniquity go about to drowne us, wee stop the fountaine, and close up the windowes by which it issueth and getteth out: so shall we stay the course of it in Gods blessing, and be free from danger. O that this lesson were learned in Court and Country fully and well, then many a filthy flood would bee religiously stayed, and many a flowing wave of a sinfull temptation be beaten back! I say if the fountaines were stopped, and the windowes shut: conceive of it further, and meditate of it a whole houre by your selfe, I say no more.

Vers. 4. The Arke stayeth. A comfort.

4 The Arke stayed about the 26. of October, upon the mountaines of Armenia, and why? because when wind bloweth and water faileth, sayling is dangerous, and the rocks may be hit upon: what a providence then is here for poore Noah in his gracious God? what a prevention of danger? Shall nothing make us know him and his sweet goodnesse? Sayle we then on the Sea of this world while God will, surely when it shall be good he will make us to rest, and prevent our perill, if we trust in him, and ô Lord give faith and patience for thy mercy sake.

Verse 5. Example of chiefe men.

5 In the tenth month, that is, about the 28. of December as wee reckon, were the tops of the Mountaines seene, a good token and comfort of an end of that water-flood: we may apply it thus; The great men of this world, of a Kingdome, of a City, of a towne, are as mountaines and hils in comparison of the lower sort, and if once they were dry from such floods of evill, as many times they are over-flowed withall, it is a good signe, and yeeldeth great hope that the waters doe decrease, and a better state even shortly will ensue: but whilest they are over-flowed and covered, what hope of dry land in the valleys? such and so great to good or evill is the example of great ones.

In the 5. verse it is said, the waters were going and decreasing untill the tenth month, &c. Where if you list, saith one, to compare the time of their increasing and decreasing together, you shall find, that in shorter and quicker time they abated, than they had flowed: to shew even in such sort, that the Lord is more hasty unto mercy than unto judgement. Which by the Prophet Esay he notably sheweth, when he saith: A little while have I forsaken thee, but with great cõpassion will I gather thee. It is the answer also that is made by an ancient Father, why Christ should speake of the latter day to thoſe upon his right hand, before thoſe upon his left hand, even becauſe his ſweet diſpoſition is more prone to mercy and favours, than to wrath and anger, more to the ſentence that giveth joy, than to that which worketh ſo bitter woe. A comfortable conſideration for our fearing ſoules, if we often thinke of it, &c. Mat.25.34.

6 Then after forty dayes Noah opened the window of the Arke, and ſent forth ſome of the fowles. Where was his warrant thus to do? Surely expreſſed we ſee none, and yet is he not diſliked: why? becauſe though it were not preſcribed in the word that he ſhould doe ſo, yet was there no prohibition not to doe ſo: and being not contrary to any word, though it have no expreſſe word for it, it is not diſallowed: we are taught hereby, ſaith a learned man, where there is no need of expreſſe preſcription, as in things not of ſuch moment often there is not, holy men are left, ſuis conſiliis & conatibus, to their owne diſcretions, counſell and liberty, and if the like fall out to us; we may follow their examples. Verſe 6. Some things lawfull, without expreſſe words. Muſc. upon the words.

7 He ſent firſt a Raven which returned not againe, &c. By which fowle, ſome ſay, might be reſembled the teachers of the law, becauſe they never bring any good tiding, but death, death, for want of performance of the law, whoſe promiſe is annexed onely to fulfilling of the ſame, and not elſe. Others ſay, by the Raven might be noted ſuch men, as having minde of the dead carions, conſider not wherefore they were ſent, but plying their whole care about themſelves, and ſatisfying their devouring nature with ſuch carrion as they ſee before them, take their pleaſure therein, and make their abode, not returning any more to the Arke, with teſtimony of their courſe applied and imployed to that end whereabout they were ſent. Such foule Ravens no queſtion there are but too many. The Raven alſo, ſaith one, may ſignifie ſuch as frequent a mans owne houſe during their need, and whilſt they cannot tell how elſe to doe, but when the weather is better, that is, when they are better provided for, and have gotten ſomething about them, they flye away, and know their old lodgings no more. Such unthankfull gueſts too many have but too good experience of. Verſe 7. What the Raven might ſignifie.

When Noah ſaw no returne of the Raven, he tooke a Dove and ſent her forth the ſame day, to ſee if by her hee might perceive any fall of the Waters. And the Dove returned to him againe, not finding any reſt for her foot upon the earth as yet, whereby he knew the Waters were not abated. This Dove they ſay, may reſemble fitly the good Preachers of the Word, which are ſent forth by the true Noah Chriſt Jeſus into the world overflowed with all ſinne and wickedneſſe, as with a flood: but finding no reſt for their foote, that is, finding no acceptance of their labours, nor good to be done by them, mocked and ſcorned, derided and abuſed, rejected and contemned, they returne againe, bringing nothing with them; and yet to Noah welcome, who putteth forth his hand, & receiveth thē into the Arke: for wee are a ſweet ſavor, ſaith the Apoſtle, to the Lord, even in them that periſh: That is, the Miniſters of Gods word are deare unto him, and moſt ſweet in his noſtrils, if they do their diligence faithfully, albeit the profit follow not anſwerable to the ſame, but even all that notwithſtanding, men periſh & are caſt away: a great comfort. Verſe 8. The Doves reſemblance. 1 Cor.2.15.

9 When it is ſaid, the Dove found no reſt for the ſole of her foot, upon all the earth that ſhe ſaw, let us conſider the marvellous change now made from the eſtate before and very late, when thouſands of Doves, Men, Women, and Children, and all the creatures of the earth had reſt for their feete, yea, pleaſures and comforts above neceſſities many an one. Now no ſuch matter, all is gone, and there is not ſo much as reſt for one poore Dove. What ſhould it fitly admoniſh us of, but to the uttermoſt of our power received of God, to take heed, leſt with like ſin we procure like judgement againſt our ſelves. Our country, our townes, and private houſes, where now is many a comfort and many a pleaſure, men, women and children, not a few, have reſt for their feete, that is, all things neceſſary for their comfortable being, and live upon us and with us, and by us: we with them, and they with us, enjoy Gods mercies, bleſſings and benefits, to his great praiſe and our great good if wee can uſe them and be thankfull. Shall the day come that in that houſe where many a man hath found his reſt, being the ſeate of an honorable or worſhipfull perſonage, no reſt ſhall be found for a Dove, that is, for any creature any place, all being altred by the judgement of a grieved God at abuſe and unthankfulneſs, at ſin and iniquity? God forbid: and as wee feare God, let us thinke of it, for hee that ſo ſoone could alter in his anger the eſtate of the whole world, that of a place ſo ful of reſt for thouſands thouſands of creatures, now there ſhould be no reſt for the foote of one Dove, ſurely hee can change as quickly the ſeat of any Prince, or Noble, or Gentleman, or other man, that all the honor and comforts being wiped away in wrath, there ſhould not be reſt for any, but a fearefull ſight of horror and confuſion upon evill deſerts. Verſe 9. A fearefull change. Note.

10 The Arke to the Dove was like a priſon, a place of reſtraint, & not according to her kind, which was to fly abroad; yet finding no reſt, rather than ſhee will periſh, ſhee returneth to the ſame againe. It may teach us this, that better is a miſchiefe than an inconvenience. If wee cannot as wee would, wee muſt as wee can. I ſpeake it againſt all heathenish and unchriſtian-like impatience. The Heathens, rather than they would ſerve, they would kill themſelves. And many in theſe dayes, rather than they will ſuffer what God impoſeth, will doe what God deteſteth: let it not be ſo. If wee cannot be abroad and at liberty, becauſe Gods judgement againſt Verſe 9. Better a miſchiefe than an inconvenience.

ſinne hath taken away our footing in ſuch, or ſuch ſort, whilſt it ſhall pleaſe him, let us be content; returne as the Dove did to the place appointed, and thanke him for mercy even in that, that yet there we live, and are not deſtroyed as others have beene.

Verſe 10. The Dove with an Olive leafe what, Mat. 28.8.

11 Noah ſtayed upon this ſeven daies, and then ſent out the Dove againe, ſaith the text, which returned to him in the evening, bringing in her mouth an Olive leafe which ſhe had pluckt, whereby Noah knew the Waters were abated. This Dove may note the Preachers alſo of the Word againe, who bring in their mouths ſome good tidings to the Arke, that is, to the Church; and every good newes may be compared alſo to an Olive leafe, and the tellers to Doves. That good newes that the women brought to the Diſciples, that Chriſt was riſen, was like an Olive leafe in their mouthes, and they like this Dove in this place: ſo all others. Reade 2 King. 7. of the good newes of the Leapers, and 2 Sam. 18.27. he is a good man, ſaith David, and commeth with good tidings: ſo good men and women have words of comfort in their mouths, when others have the poyſon of Aſpes under their tongues; they have Olive leaves to cheere up Noah and his company withall, when others have wormewood & gall to make their hearts ake with the bitternes therof. Such doves God make us evermore, & if this be regarded of us, we wil endevor it.

Verſ. 12. The difference of a good ſervant and a bad

12 Then wayted he other ſeven daies and ſent her againe. When ſhe returned no more unto him. Firſt, marke the often ſending of the Dove, when the Raven goeth but once. It ſheweth the difference of a good ſervant and a bad. The firſt is often uſed, becauſe he is faithfull and true, the latter but once, becauſe then he is found to be a Raven, more heeding the carions that his nature regardeth, then performing his meſſage which his ſender deſireth. The praiſe of theſe two fowles how they differ in this place for their ſervice, we all ſee, and it ſhould thus profit us, as to prick us to the good, and afray us from the evill. In ſome place or other we are all ſervants as theſe fowles were, to God, to Prince, to Maſter, to ſome or other. Let us be Doves that they may often uſe us, let us not be Ravens that they may juſtly refuſe us. Secondly, in the Doves not returning any more, let us marke a type of the Saints of God, that having ſundry times diſcharged the truſt of their places, as the Dove did, at laſt have their departure out of the Arke, that is, out of this life and Church militant, and finding reſt for their foot in Gods bleſſed Kingdome, reture no more to the Arke againe, but there continue and abide for ever.

A type of the Godly.

Verſe 16. All affliction of the Godly hath his end.

13 At laſt came this comfortable word from God, Goe forth of the Arke, thou and thy wife, and thy ſonne and thy ſonnes wives, and all creatures with thee. So we ſee there is no affliction or triall that God impoſeth upon his children, but if they endure it quietly, truſt in his mercy firmely, and tarry his good pleaſure obediently, it hath his comfortable end. If God thinke it good to ſay to any man or woman enter into the Arke, that is, into this or that triall of thy faith and patience, into this priſon, into that indurance, into this reſtraint of liberty, that affliction and trouble, ſorrow and care, and inward nips or outward pinches, ſurely he hath alſo another word for them, which in due time he will likewiſe ſpeake unto them, and that is this: Go forth of the Arke now againe, thou and thy wife, and all thine, that is, let there be an end of whatſoever it was that tried thee: for I have ſeene that faith, patience, and hope, that hath pleaſed me. O our good God, how ſure are we of this, and how ſweet is it? what elſe but that which the Prophet David found moſt certaine, and teſtified to the world, ſaying:

Pſal. 30.

Though gripes of griefe and paines full ſore, ſhall lodge with us all night,
The Lord to joy ſhall us reſtore, before the day be light.

Confeſſing herein, that after ſowre commeth ſweet, after ſorrow joy, after reſtraint liberty, after want plenty, and to ſpeake with this place, after goe into the Arke, followeth certainly come forth againe.

Verſe 13. Every thing in his ſeaſon hath God for his child.

14 Yea, but when did God bid Noah come forth? ſurely not before the earth way dry, for ſo ſaith the text. Then there we ſee againe how wonderfully he diſpoſeth for his children times and ſeaſons, all for their good: when the earth is not for them, he hath an Arke upon the water; and when the earth is fitter than the Arke, he hath the earth againe, all in ſuch times as may be beſt for us, and how ſhould we thanke him?

Verſe 20. Thankfulneſs ever in the Godly.

15 When Noah was come forth, he buildeth an Altar, taketh his beaſts, and offereth ſacrifice: teaching us this, how moſt carefull we ſhould be whilſt life is in us, to be thankfull to God for his mercy towards us, either in delivering us out of danger, or any way ſhewing the light of his countenance towards us. A thankfull heart becommeth a Chriſtian and pleaſeth God, and the very divels of hell, if they were asked, muſt needs ſay the contrary is a fault.

Verſe 21. Good workes joyned to true faith, ſmell ſweetly.

16 Then ſaith the ſtory, God ſmelled a ſavour of reſt, that is, ſhewed himſelfe appeaſed and his anger at reſt: this piety was in Noahs heart before, but now it ſmelleth, when it breaketh into worke: ſo was Abraham for his faith noted of God before, but when that faith flamed out into a willingneſſe to ſacrifice his deare ſonne, then God cryed out, Now now I ſee Abraham thy love, &c. Surely that which powning and beating is to ſpice, workes be to faith in ſome reſemblance: the ſpice is ſweet before it be brayed, but when it is brayed, much more: ſo is faith in the heart accepted of God, before opportunity ſerve to worke; but when opportunity doth ſerve, and holy works come to a godly faith, then ſmelleth it marvailouſly, and the Lord favoreth a reſt to his owne good liking and our true comfort for ever and ever, let it teach us, let it ſchoole us, and prick us forward to holy life.

17 And what ſaid God, read the text, verſ. 21. hee will no more curſe the earth for mans corruption: he reſtoreth nature, Seed time and harveſt, cold and heate, winter and ſummer, day and night, and ſheweth us thereby that they are all his gifts, and onely his to take and give as pleaſeth him. This is ſome uſe of this 8. Chapter.

Verſ. 21. The Seaſons of the yeare Gods gift ſtill.

CHAP. IX.

ALL things being done as you read before, GOD bleſſed Noah and his family. So follow comforts after ſorrow, as we noted before: The mourning weed thou tookeſt me fro, and madeſt me to rejoyce, ſaith the Pſalme.

Verſe 1. Comfort after ſorrow. Pſal. 30.

2 The feare of you, and the dread of you, ſaith God, ſhall be upon every beaſt: providing thereby for mans ſafety, for by the vertue of this commandement beaſts rage not ſo much againſt man as they would, but many of them ſerve even to his uſe thereby. And ſhall all creatures, ſaith one, thus feare thee O man, and not thou thy God that worketh this regard of thee?

Verſ. 2. Beaſts how bridled to hurt no more than they doe.

3 In the third verſe their commiſſion is ſigned, yea ſigned and ſealed to kill and eate, not hearbes, as before, and no fleſh, but fleſh now alſo as well as hearbs. Many men thinking it was not ſo before.

Verſe 3. Fleſh allowed to eate.

4 But fleſh with the life thereof, that is, with the blood thereof might they not eate. God meaning hereby to bridle cruelty, which he ever hated.

Verſe 4. Cruelty forbidden.

5 And as before hee provided that man ſhould not be raged againſt by beaſts, ſo provideth he here alſo that man againſt man ſhould not be a deſtroier. For if he be, He that ſheddeth mans blood, by man ſhall his blood be ſhed againe: That is, in Juſtice ſhall either the Magiſtrate revenge ſuch iniquity upon him, or ſome other ſtirred up in the juſt wrath of God, ſhall meaſure to him as he hath meaſured to others, that is, kill him as he hath killed others, and leave his Wife a widow, and his children fatherleſſe, as he hath left others. Man is made, ſaith one, after Gods likeneſs, and therefore in killing and murdering man thou doſt as it were endevour to murder even the Lord himſelfe.

Verſe 6. Murder reſtrained.

6 Then God maketh his covenant with man and all fleſh that hee will never deſtroy the world any more by water, and becauſe man is ſo hard of beleefe, hee adjoyneth a ſigne to his word and promiſe, and ſetteth it in the heavens, even his bow which wee uſually call the Raine bow. By which ſo doing of the Lord, firſt we learne the antiquity of his mercy, in adding outward ſignes to confirme man by: Secondly, the uſe of them. The antiquity, if it had beene no more but from Noah it had beene much, but we ſee it was before, even in Paradiſe to Adam, there was the Tree of life, and the Tree of the knowledge of good and evill. The one aſſuring him if he obeyed he ſhould live, and the other, if he ſinned that he ſhould dye. A mercy ſo long continued to his children, ſhould be greatly regarded with hearty thankes for it. The uſe of ſuch outward ſignes is not to confirme God in his promiſe, who though he never added any ſeale, yet would be moſt true in his word, but to confirme us in the beleefe of that promiſe which of it ſelfe and in it ſelfe is moſt immoveable. For though he be true to performe, yet wee are weake to beleeve, and a gracious God he is that will ſo ſupport us. Againe, the Raine-bow is taken as a figure of Chriſt, and therefore wee are thereby taught, that when either the darke blackneſs of ugly ſinne, or the thick clouds of griefe and adverſity, doe threaten unto us any fearefull overthrow, wee ſhould clap our eyes upon our Rainbow Chriſt Jeſus, and bee aſſured that though that blackneſſe of ſinne bee never ſo great, yet in him, and by him it ſhall bee done away, and never have power to caſt us away: though thoſe miſts and fogs of adverſity be never ſo thicke, yet ſhall they by him as by a hot and ſtrong Sunne, bee diſperſed and never able to drowne us. The greateſt raine wee know ſhall end ere it come to ſuch a floud againe, and ſo ſhall theſe things before we fall.

Verſe 9.

Verſe 13. The Raineb ow why given.

An allegory of the Rainebow.

7 In the 20. verſe you ſee Noahs trade of life, he fell to Husbandry, an old, an ancient, a profitable, a godly and neceſſary vocation, as hath beene noted before. Then followeth in the next verſe his foule fall: when having planted a Vineyard, He dranke of the fruit and was drunke, and uncovered in his tent. Vinũ non pepercit ſuo authori; Wine, ſaith one, ſpared not his firſt inventer, therefore beware. Such fals in Gods children, though they be their ſhame, they yeeld us weake ones great comfort. For wee ſhould utterly deſpaire when wee ſee our ſelves, if ſuch blots and ſpots had not beene in ſuch great ones once by mans corruption. Now though we have no warrant by them to do the like, yet if humane frailty over-carry us ever, wee need not to deſpaire, for with God there is mercy to repentance and amendment, and greater men than we have had their wants.

Verſe 20.

Verſe 21. The fals of the godly how they profit.

8 Marke the filthineſſe of drunkenneſſe, it maketh him lie uncovered in his Tent, undecently, unſeemely, nay beaſtly, and rather like a beaſt than a man. And could it ſo diſfigure Noah, a man of

The filthy ſin of drunkennes.

of ſuch goodneſſe, ſo highly commended before, and not disfigure us that are a thouſand degrees behind him? ſhall once being ſo be ſuch a blot, and ſhall daily being ſo be no blot? Thinke of it, and if you ſhame in Noahs behalfe to thinke how vnſeemingly hee lay, take heed to your ſelfe. For foule ſights are ſeene both in men and women that are drunke.

Verſe 22. Publiſhers of other mens wants.

9 When Cham the eldeſt ſon of Noah ſaw his Fathers nakedneſſe, he mockingly went and told his brethren of it. In Cham then behold a true patterne of all ſuch vile ſpirits as joy in the publiſhing of other mens wants, whom yet for many graces they ought to reverence; mocking, flieering, and geering at them, with prophane hearts, conceits and cenſures like this Cham. Such hath this world had ever, but in theſe latter dayes, as though Satans kingdome were driven to this ſhift, he ſtirreth them up in every place moſt buſily, and ſeeketh their ſervice. They moſt unwarily not marking whom they ſerve and what they doe, are contented to be carried, tempted, and drawne to this curſed courſe moſt fully.

Verſ. 23. The good ſpirit of them that cover as they may their brethrens nakedneſſe.

10 But when Sem and Iapheth heard of it, they tooke a garment and put it upon both their ſhoulders and went backward, and covered the nakedneſs of their Father, with their faces backward, and ſo they ſaw not their Fathers nakedneſs. As notable a picture on the contrary ſide, of all ſuch milde, modeſt, loving, godly, and chriſtian-like ſpirits, which cover with love their fathers and brethrens imperfections, infirmities, wants, and weakneſs, charitably expounding whatſoever may bee taken, either ſpeaking the beſt or not the worſt, and wiſhing in their hearts all men were amended, and no man diſgraced if he will be amended. Such ſpirits are bleſſed when others are curſed, and ſhall ſtand as well liked before his face, who ſhall retribute to the other in due juſtice, the very blackeneſſe of darkeneſs for evermore.

Good men have evill children.

11 Marke it againe in this place diligently, that a good Father hath his children not all good, not all alike qualified, not of the ſame vertuous and honeſt conditions all, yet this is not the fathers fault. It grieveth him full ſore if Cham play ſo lewd a part that procureth a curſe and not a bleſſing. But ſo God pleaſeth to exerciſe his children ſometimes even with the undutifulneſs and untowardneſs of their owne fleſh, fruit and ſeed. Abraham had his bad Iſmael as well as his good Iſaac, Iſaac againe had his prophane Eſau as well as his godly Iacob, Iacob had his croſſes moe than one in his children if you marke them; Ruben defiled his bed, Simeon and Levi bloody and treacherous, Dina raviſhed by her gadding abroad, all of them unkind to Ioſeph in ſuch bad ſort as you know. David had his Abſolom, Amnon, Adoniah: and many others have thus beene croſſed that I name not now. Conſider it duly, and grieve not above that which is convenient if you know the like. Say with an obedient heart, Let the Lord doe whatſoever pleaſeth him, and let no man cenſure the Parents above their true proofe for childrens faults.

Verſe 24. Note.

Laſtly, the waking of Noah from his drunkenneſs, and finding what was done, teacheth us two things. Firſt, to doe well to every one as we can, knowing that though when wee doe it, they to whom we do it know it not, regard it not, eſteeme it not, nor us for it, as being drunke with anger, malice, youthfull temeritie, and ſuch like, yet a weakening time may come when they may doe otherwiſe, ſee the good and bleſſe us for it whilſt we live, and the very memory of us when we be dead. Secondly, as in figure it may tell us that the godly ſinne not to death, but though they ſleepe they awake againe, though they ſlip yea fall quite downe, yet they recover and riſe againe even ſeven times a day. A great comfort when I am downe, but no imboldning to fall downe.

CHAP. X.

Verſe 1.

THis Chapter wholly conſiſteth in a deſcription of the propagation of mankind by the poſterity of Noah, after they were now releaſed from the Flood wherein all fleſh but they was periſhed: which great increaſe in ſo ſhort a time, noteth unto us the wonderfull power of God, and diſcovereth alſo what moſt unkind forgetfulneſſe of the Lords goodneſſe to their fathers, but as it were yeſterday, was crept ſo quickly into ſome of them.

Gods power and mans forgetfulneſs.

In the Church good and bad.

2 With Sem and Iapheth is curſed Cham, telling us that this outward militant Church hath her blots and wrinckles in her: not onely in reſpect of the godly whoſe regeneration is not finiſhed till they dye, but in reſpect alſo of the evill that are mixed and mingled with the good: betwixt Sem and Iapheth two good men, Cham a Caytife hath a place in the world.

Truth elder than falſhood.

3 Cham was younger, and ſo ever is falſhood latter than truth, ſinne latter than innocency, and evill latter than good: Cain was old but Adam was elder, nay Adams ſinning was very ſoone, but yet Adams not ſinning was before, firſt good ſeed is ſowne, and then after Tares.

Oppreſſion how old.

4 Nimrod a tyrant ſtarteth up in this Chapter. When? when he waxed mighty. Ancient therefore is oppreſſion and cruelty, and the abuſe of Gods bleſſings: when God hath increaſed a man in power and wealth, then moſt hee is bound to ſerve him for it, but quite contrary it is, the mightier the worſe, and the richer the crueller to oppreſſe the weake ones, Reade the 2 *Chron.*26.16. and Deuteronomy 6.10. Conſider alſo the prayer of him that ſaid, Give me not too much, &c. Prov.30.8.

5 His tyranny is compared to Hunting, and the tyrant to a Hunter. Hunting hath ſnares, nets, dogges, and diggings of deepe ditches, ſpyings and pryings, watchings and wardings, and ever the death of the creature hunted is the game. Tyrannie and oppreſſion hath the like, if ye liſt to compare them, at leaſt in this they joyne full juſt, the party hunted muſt dye at laſt. But ſuch Nimrods, ſuch tyrants, ſuch hunters God ſeeth and ſuch hunters of the poore till they have their blood, God in his juſtice will repay. Verſ. 9. Tyranny compared to hunting.

6 In that it is ſaid Nimrod was ſuch an one before the Lord, It noteth the nature of ſinne and cuſtome, to wit, to gather ſtrength by continuance, and at laſt not to feare even the face of God, nor his holy eyes to looke upon it. Cuſtome of ſinning taketh away the feeling of ſinne, and therefore if we ſtay not to do evill before man, at laſt it will be ſaid of us as of Nimrod, that even before God we are become hunters, that is, we are growne to an impudency and boldneſs of ſinning. Sin groweth by cuſtome.

7 As Nettles than Roſes be of greater increaſe, and bad weeds multiply apace, ſo ſpread this iniquity further than vertue, and filled the world with ſuch fruit daily. To this day they fructifie in a full meaſure: and what Towne is that almoſt in the world that hath not a Nimrod one or two at the leaſt in it? That is, a hard, a cruell, a greedy, and covetous man, that grindeth the faces of his neighbours, till both skin and fleſh being off, the bare bones doe onely remaine. I ſay no more, yet thinke you more of it that reade it. In every towne a Nimrod great or little.

8 Though wee ſee here diviſions of Countries made amongſt them, and ſome dwelling here, ſome there as they liked, yet one blood remained amongſt them, as a knot ever to joyne them what diſtance of place ſoever ſevered them. And is it not ſo ſtill, though longer time and larger increaſe have ſpred it further? Surely it is ſo we cannot deny: and therefore this bond of blood, ſtocke, houſe, lineage and kindred in roote, though I ſay the degrees be farre, ſhould continue regard one of another, and love more than is: Likewiſe trading and traffiquing, helping and releeving with mutuall interchange of commodities one of another, deſire of travelling no leſſe one to finde out and know another, what diſtance of place ſoever doth ſeparate. For we be all as we ſee of one blood and parent. And ſhould a man placed in France ſay adieu for ever, and in all reſpect of affection, care, and love, to his houſe in England out of which he deſcended? Then might he juſtly be accounted unnaturall, curriſh and unkind above the courſe of a good man: ſurely even ſo in the other, and thus profit by it: for men are not to be thought of onely according to far or neare dwelling, but according to the roote from which they deſcended.

9 Againe when we reade this Chapter, remember Chams curſe by his father in the former Chapter, and then marke his worldly eſtate laid downe in this, and ſee how the one may agree with the other. There I ſay he was curſed, and here he ſeemeth more bleſſed than any of them: for his children are many, the place of his dwelling moſt fruitfull, pleaſant and fertile. Now he that hath ſo great a poſterity as eleven ſonnes, ſo ſweet a portion of the earth as he had, with all the circumſtances of theſe two worldly felicities, how is hee curſed? Surely even as the wicked uſually are curſed, not by deniall of outward bleſſings, but by a taking from them of heavenly favour: wherefore learne by it this ſecret ever, that in earth they flouriſh with earthly pleaſures many a time, whom God hath marked never to love but to carry his curſe for evermore. Feare not therefore though one be made rich, and the glory of his houſe be increaſed, for the favour of God conſiſteth not in theſe things, but for all them he may be a Cham, and his fathers curſe ſettled upon him and his ſeed. Bleſſed are the people (ſaith the Pſalme) that be in ſuch a caſe: having relation to outward bleſſings named before, but then followeth after as a correction of the former: yea rather bleſſed are they that have the Lord for their God: noting the former to be but bleſſings in reſpect, and the latter onely the true and certaine happineſſe of any fleſh. See alſo how even in thoſe dayes to judge of the eſtate of the wicked and godly, they had need to enter into the Sanctuary of God, for if they went by outward ſhew either of the one or of the other they ſhould be deceived, as alſo now. Earthly glory no true token of Gods favour Pſal. 49.

10 But why doth Moſes mention ſo carefully and preciſely the borders or limits of Canaan or of the Canaanites? Certainely it was by the guiding of Gods holy Spirit in reſpect of the Church and children of God, to whom after it ſhould be given, that they might know them the better. Where marke we the depth of Gods hidden and ſecret providence, in ſuch ſort as it peereth out and ſheweth it ſelfe unto us. Doe we not ſee how earthly things are given to the wicked, which even then when they enjoy them, by a wiſe God are appointed in his providence unto others whom he favoureth more, and for whom he uſeth but thoſe for a time to provide for them, and to make them readier to their hands? Adore we therefore this ſecret depth, and ſay we with the Apoſtle: O the deepeneſs of the riches both of the wiſedome and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgements, and his wayes paſt finding out? who hath knowne the mind of the Lord, The wicked often providers for others that ſhall be better than they. Rom. 11.33.

Lord, or who hath beene his counseller? &c. Many things moe might be noted in this Chapter, if the Genealogies should be stood upon, wherein with praise many have travelled, but I chuse rather with him that did so before me, to leave that diligence to them that have shewed it, and to content my selfe with these few notes at this time. Calvin.

CHAP. XI.

The heads of this Chapter especiall and principall are two.

{The confusion of tongues: from the 1. verse to the 10.
{The description of Sems off-spring: from the 10. to the end.

Verse 1. What language was first.

TOuching the first it is said, that the earth was all of one language: and question is made what that was, and whether it remained still or no after the confusion, and with whom. For the first it is answered, that although it be uncertaine, yet probably it is conjectured that it was the Hebrew. For so say the proper names of men and women, which remaine as yet and are Hebrew, being imposed then and not altered by Moses the relator into any language else. Of this judgement is Hierom upon the 3. of Sophon, when he calleth the Hebrew tongue the mother of all the rest. Aug. lib 9. c. 12. sup. Genes. ad literam. Augustine thought otherwise, writing thus: Vnam sane linguam primitus fuisse didicimus, antequam superbia turris illius post diluvium fabricatæ in diversos signorum sonos humanam societatem divideret. Quæ autem illa lingua fuerit, quid attinet quærere? That there was one tongue in the beginning we learne, before the pride of the Towre built after the Flood, had divided mans society into divers sounds of words: but what tongue that was, what need wee aske? To the second it is answered, that it did remaine, being as is supposed injoyed of us at this day. And to the third, that it was in the house and family of Sem, Arphaxad, Selah, and Eber, of whom it had denomination Hebrew. Philo thinketh the first tongue was the Chaldee, contrary to Hierom as was said before, and Hierom to him. But since Arphaxad was a Prince of the Chaldeans, what hindreth that rather the Chaldee and Hebrew should not be all one at first, though in processe of time some difference grew? The Chaldee tongue.

Verse 4. Hyperbole. Psal. 107.

2 When it is said to reach up to heaven, we may not thinke they were so mad as to imagine they could so doe, but we must know the manner of speech to be a figurative amplification often used of men without fault, and often used in Scripture it selfe. When David saith of them that saile on the seas, and are occupied in great waters, that they are carried up to the heavens and downe againe to the depths: he doth not meane as he speaketh, that they are carried up to the heavens indeed, but by the same figure he meaneth very high. So is the former, and so are many moe speeches in the word, which if Iulian could have seene, or other such like prophane spirits yet perceive, their carping impiety had had a fall.

Vnity of language.

3 Unity of language was a great mercy of God, by that meanes keeping them by a notable band knit together, whom farre distance of place had set asunder. And if this be a mercy that we speake, as it is a great one: surely farre greater it was that they all spake one speech, for so might they continue not onely in a most profitable interchange of any earthly commodities, but even also in a holy communion of all mercies whatsoever, one understanding from another, and of an other, what wonderfull good soever the Lord should shew. Now as a punishment of pride the case is altered, and we neither in the one nor other can do as then they might. But as a wonder it is at this day that speech being as it were the image of the mind, where minds agree, and thoughts do joyne, speech should differ as now it doth.

When the Towre was built.

4 The time of this Towre built and speech confounded, may bee asked, to which answer is uncertaine. There is a fragment under the name of Berosus (if it should not wrong him to say such trifles be his) and there it is said that an hundred and thirty yeares after the flood it was. Others better like to say, it was three hundred and forty yeares after: so as I said certainty there is none. I stand not upon conjectures to scan it out. Agreed it is that old father Noah was yet alive, to whom no question but it was a great griefe when he heard of it: But so pleased it God even in his old age to exercise his servant, that no continuall succession of woes should make us faint, if God so please to have them.

Bad counsell soone taken.

5 It must needs be that one man gave his counsell first, saying to the rest, Come let us build &c. But when once it was broached not one man allowed it, but even all full quickly yeelded to it. Whereby we see first the vilenesse of man, not onely to devise that which is naught, but to set it full greedily abroach when it is devised, and to labor to perswade others to imbrace and follow the same. Againe, to consent to that which is wickedly devised of others, and to make a particular conceit a generall judgement action, and worke at last. Great cause therefore that mens lewd devises should be restrained from being published, since both the devisers wish, and mans great corruption is so prone to yeeld a wicked consent, and following of the same.

Caiaphas

Caiaphas counſell when it once ſounded of Chriſts death, was quickly hearkned unto, and from that day forward conſultation had together, how they might accompliſh the ſame. Whoſoever broached it firſt that the people ſhould aske Barrabas and refuſe Ieſus, it was ſoone received, liked and followed of ſuch ignorant ſpirits and giddy heads. That a ſort ſhould combine together and kill the Apoſtle, had a beginner, and how quickly pleaſed the plot, ſuch other bloody mindes and ſpightfull hearts? How ſoone embraced Lots younger daughter the counſell of the elder to doe ſo vile a thing? That unbrotherly conſpiracy againſt Ioſeph was ſoone yeelded unto, when once it was uttered. Lie upon thy bed (ſaid Ionadab) and faine thy ſelfe ſicke, when thy father commeth to ſee thee, pray him that thy ſiſter Thamar may come and make thee ſome meate, &c. You know the counſell, you know the conſent to the ſame alſo, how ready it was, and how well liked. Achitophels device, that Abſolom ſhould enter in to his fathers concubines, left to keepe the houſe, though it were horrible; yet how it pleaſed, and was embraced, cannot be forgotten. A ſort of greene heads, Oratores novi, ſtulti adoleſcentuli, new Oratours, fooles, young councellers, laid a plot for Rehoboam Salomons ſonne to follow, he liked it, he followed it, and caſt away the counſell of the aged, experienced, learned and faithfull Councellers to his Father: but it coſt him the ſetting on, he bought it deare, and had I wiſt came, as ever it doth, when it was too late. Thus might we runne on a large and long courſe if I would. But it ſhall not need, one example moe ſhall ſuffice, and then an end of this note. Doe you remember the murmuring againſt Moſes and Aaron, in the Booke of Numbers? how began it? had it not a Captaine, then a ſecond, then a third, then a number? Once broached, that Moſes and Aaron tooke too much upon them, that others were equall with them, and therefore ſhould be in like authority, that the people were wronged, and ſo forth; ſoone was it liked, ſoon was it catched, ſoone was it proſecuted of proud mindes, that would bee aloft, and knew not to obey. But what was Moſes and Aaron that they ſhould be thus uſed of their brethren? Surely the Lords faithfull Miniſters, his choſen ſervants they were, whoſe cauſe (when hee had thus exerciſed them with a tryall) he tooke into his owne hands, his jealouſie on their behalfe began to burne, and till hee had ſhewed a judgement that ſhould make all eares to tingle that heare it, and all hearts not forſaken of God, to feare how they doe the like, he never left them. Conclude wee then upon all thoſe that ſinne, ſome be wicked to broach a wickedneſſe, and thouſands weake to follow the ſame when once they heare it, yea though it be to build a Towre againſt God. It never was, nor ever ſhall be, either godly policie or Chriſtian duty, to ſuffer mens braines to broach what they liſt, and others to follow unquiet devices, hatefull to God, and hurtfull to his Church in a high degree.

Chap. 16.

6 It followeth in the Text, That we may get a name: ſee the madneſſe of the world ever to neglect heaven, and ſeeke a name in earth, where nothing is firme, nothing continueth, but fadeth away, and periſheth as a thought. This madneſſe the Prophet David mentioneth in his 49. Pſalme, and laugheth at it, ſaying, They thinke their houſes and their habitations ſhall continue for ever, even from generation to generation, and call their lands by their owne names. This their way utereth their fooliſhneſs, yet their poſterity delight in their talk, &c. That ſaying of Iuvenal is known, Mors ſola fatetur quantula ſunt hominũ corpuſcula: only death acknowledgeth of what power mens bodies be, ſuch are our mindes, ſo greedy of a name, and ſo blinde in the true courſe to attaine the ſame, whereof we had ſpeech before. This ſinne of ambition and vaine-glory pricked the hearts of our firſt parents to the very death. It is not rooted out of their poſterity, nor ever will: but yet leſſe or more it pricketh, although all bee not evill in this reſpect alike. Would God this ungodly and untowardly regarding and deſiring of a name had not beene before, and were to this day a cauſe to make many reject the truth of God, which they ſhould embrace. For times paſt, what ſaid our Saviour in the 5. of Iohn: How can you beleeve which receive glory one of another, and doe not ſeeke that glory that is onely of God? For times preſent I content my ſelfe with that confeſſion openly at Paules Croſſe, that amongſt ſome other cauſes, which kept one in ſuch diſobedience to God and her Majeſty, this was one chiefe one, the tickling of vaine-glory. Which cauſe ſaid he, I am ſure doth detaine moſt of the contrary ſide (meaning Papiſts) in their perverſe obſtinacy, howſoever they bragge that they ſeeke nothing by their dealings, but the glory of God, &c. What I could ſay I doe not, let them that take bad courſes examine their owne hearts, why they doe it, and remember how deepe he that made the heart ſeeth into it. Yet let others alſo looke that bee no Papiſts, if this hidden conceit to get a name, doth not make them tread awry: and if ſecret thoughts doe give ſecret ſentence on my ſide againſt themſelves (becauſe conſcience will ſpeake true, though not alway aloud that others may heare) remember this ſaying that ſaid it well: Melius eſt de media via recurrere quam ſemper currere malè, Better it is to returne backe, when we have gone halfe way, then ſtill to goe on, and that ill.

feareth ſhall come upon him, ſaith the Spirit of God. As in example one for many beſide this place, Chriſt may not be ſuffered to live and goe on, leſt the Romanes came upon them, and tooke away both their place and their nation: But even this conſpiracy put in practiſe, brought that which they feared upon them moſt truly, juſtly, and heavily, to their utter overthrow and ſubverſion by Titus and Veſpaſian. There is no ſtrength, there is no counſell, wiſdome or policy againſt the Lord. If fleſh deviſe wayes to eſtabliſh it ſelfe without his feare, the folly of fleſh ſhall ſoone appeare, that very thing by that meanes being ſpeedily procured, which was intended by the ſame to be delivered and turned away. O how could I run this note to the admonition of them that ſeeke by ſuch Towres as this, not only to get a name, but to keep their poſterity from diſperſion, that is, to continue them in that Country, in that towne, in that houſe, &c. Never ſeeking the Lords favour and mercy to direct and make ſtrong their deſires, neither ever ſeeking to plant his feare in them that muſt enjoy thoſe things. But their iſſue is according: the Lord turneth all croſſe in his judgement, and for that very thing they are diſperſed and driven often to forſake, not onely the place, but the very land. I ſay no more, thinke what you know.

Wicked men never ſee the true cauſe of Gods judgements. Note.

8. If they thought by this Towre to prevent drowning when the like Flood came againe, as ſome thinke they did, though it be not probable (the reaſon being expreſſed before by themſelves for to get a name, &c.) then may it admoniſh us, how bad men never looke at the true cauſes of Gods judgements and plagues, but frame unto themſelves ſome other conceits, and run their courſe according to the ſame. The true cauſe of the Flood was ſin, and therefore they ſhould have ſaid, Let us ſinne no more, leſt a worſt thing happen unto us: And not let us build a Towre. For the cauſe being not taken away for which God ſmiteth, no Towres nor ſteeples, no tops nor top gallants, though they could reach as high as was ſaid, can ever deliver from his blowes. Let their folly be our inſtruction, and whilſt we live pray that we may, and indeavour when we have prayed, to ſee the true cauſe of Gods viſitation any way upon us or ours, that that being knowne, we may take a true courſe to turne his wrath away from us.

Verſe 5. Magiſtrates muſt looke for juſt cauſe before they ſmite. Iohn 7.

9. The Lord deſcendeth to ſee if their folly was ſo great. It is a figure, meaning that the Lord puniſhed not before there was true and due cauſe. And a good leſſon it giveth to all in authority, that they will looke before they judge, ſee, and be ſure of the deſert before they lay on the cenſure. So did not Putiphar, and it was his blame: Ioſeph is adjudged, and there is no cauſe. So did not the Phariſees when they ſent to apprehend Chriſt, without any matter of truth againſt him. So did not David, when upon flattering Ziba his report, hee condemned his faithfull ſervant Mephiboſheth, and gave away his living, being afterwards faine to reverſe his ſentence with ſhame when he knew the truth. So doe many at theſe dayes to their great diſcredit, firſt judge and then know, but follow we a better patterne in this place.

2 Sam.16.

Verſe 6. There is a bad unity to be avoided.

10. The people is one, ſaith the Lord, and behold we by it a bad unity, to the end a glorious name may not dazle our eyes, when the thing in nature anſwereth not the ſame. You reade of an unity in the ſecond Pſalme, But it was againſt the Lord and his annointed. A like unity againe in Ioſephs brethren to deale unjuſtly and unkindly with their brother. There was an unity in Sodome againſt Lot and his perſwaſion. And the whole world was one againſt Noah and his preaching. So it is here, and ſo it is often, the people are one, but not in truth, not in right, not in God: and what unity is that? Be we not then, as I ſaid, amazed at a name, wee know who cry unity, unity, but we ſee no proofe nor ever ſhall of verity. And we know the Fathers ſpeech who ſpake it truly, Vnitas ſine veritate proditio eſt: Unity without verity is but a conſpiracy.

Wicked men ſtedfaſt in their evill.

11. They have begun, ſaith God, and they will not give over. Marke how ſtedfaſt fleſh is in a wicked courſe. In a good thing I warrant you no ſuch thing, but juſt contrary. In the one wee will ſoone begin, and hardly or not at all give over: in the other either not begin, or moſt eaſily give over. Alas our corruption and our weakneſſe, waywardneſſe alſo if ye will: ſhall we thus ſee our nature deſcribed, and not conſider it, and not amend it as God inableth? I hope we will.

Feare not the heate of the wicked.

12. Yet overthrowne are they for all their ill will to deſiſt and give over. Feare not then with what might and maine ſoever the wicked goe about their wicked purpoſes, and that they will ſo hardly be perſwaded to give over: for the Lord is ſtronger than they, and will make them maugre their hearts to give over at his pleaſure: a great comfort to all that are oppreſſed and purſued. Their tongues are changed, and it hindred this earthly building, and can it further the ſpirituall to be ignorant what is ſaid? Such a place is Babel, ſaith the Lord himſelfe, that is, confuſion, and ſhall we ſay it is profitable? God forbid. And thus much of this Chapter, not ſtanding now upon Sem his Genealogie.

An unknowne tongue.

CHAP.

CHAP. XII.

The generall Heads of this Chapter, are chiefly three.

The calling of Abraham: from the 1. verse to the 4,
His obedience to that calling: from the 4. to the 8.
The crosses accompanying and following the same: from the 8. to the end.

IN the calling of Abraham, consider first who called, God: and thereby learne we that it is the Lords worke only, to gather him a Church, to appoint before all times whom he will call in time, and make a member of the same; what man doth in the gathering of the same, he doth but as a minister and servant under him, so far prevailing as he will blesse, and no further: The foundation of God standeth sure, and hath his seale, the Lord knoweth who are his, &c. And whom he predestinated, them he called, He, I say, He, for it is his worke.

God his worke to call.

2 Tim. 2. 19.

2. Consider whom he calls, Abraham the younger brother, and peradventure an Idolater, more like so than otherwise, though uncertaine. And see we by it, that Gods choise is free, not tyed to circumstances of age, of birth, of degree, or any quality in man whatsoever: But on whom he will have mercy, on them he will have mercy. Hee looketh not as man looketh, for man many times regardeth the elder brother before the yonger, and the outward gift of nature before inward graces of the Spirit, as Ishai offered his eldest son to Samuel, to be annointed King, and all the rest before he offered David, thinking least of him whom yet God appointed. And Ioseph would have had his Father laid his right hand upon his eldest son Manasses. But God doth not so, finding nothing in the best to deserve a calling, and therefore using his liberty without all respect of circumstances, as I said before.

God looketh not at merit in his calling.

Rom. 9.

3. Whence was he called? even out of his owne country, and from his fathers house. Teaching us first thereby, that neither Father, Mother, Country, or any thing may bee sticked unto above Gods commandement: for he that loveth any of these things more than mee, saith the Lord, is unworthy of me. In the Psalme it is said to the Church, and to every member of it, Hearken O daughter and consider, incline thine eare, forget also thine owne people, and thy fathers house. Secondly admonishing us what a perillous thing country impiety is, able to infect any man if hee tarry in it. And therefore God draweth Abraham away from them, because with them hee should hardly ever have been good.

All must bee forsaken to follow God.

Psal. 45. 11.

Country impiety perillous.

4. Whither did God call him? surely to no certaine place, but from his own to some strange place, which he would appoint unto him, thereby making tryall of his love so much the more, by how much he knew no certaine place whereunto to goe. It teacheth us above hope, under hope, to cleave unto God, and if once we have a generall commandement to leave particularities not yet so many, to his holy providence, and the further manifestation of the same in any good time.

Be not curious when God doth call.

5. To what end doth he call him? surely that he might make of him a mighty nation, that hee might blesse him, make his name great, and bring to passe that in his seed, that is, in Christ who should descend of him, that blessing might be recovered which was lost in Adam, and so all the Nations of the world be blessed. So see we plaine how Gods dealings shoot ever at the good, and to the good of them whom he loveth, and who obey him, and are ruled by him. Many a man hath he drawne from home, and out of his owne country, but to his great good both in body and minde. In body, by honours, preferments, and earthly blessings many, wherewith he hath inriched him in a strange place. In minde, by a true knowledge of his holy truth, there attained unto and got, which otherwise in likelihood had never beene. How preferred he Ioseph in a strange land, with many moe? &c. But mark how the Lord expresseth his favour further, when he saith, I will also blesse them that blesse thee, and I will curse them that curse thee, &c. Thereby shewing us what it is to have him our God, surely, to have a friend of him to our selves and to all that are friends unto us, and a foe to all false hearts, harbouring and hatching mischiefe against us. And what can we wish more.

God evet calleth us to our good if we follow him.

Verse 3.

6. How did God call him? By his word: and by this word at this day he calleth us, sending us his messengers early and late to speake unto us, and to entreate us, as the Apostle speaketh, in his Name, that we would be reconciled to him; not dye but live, and enjoy a place of eternall comfort for evermore, with Himselfe, his Son, his holy Spirit, one God of Majesty, glory and power, with Angels, Archangels, Saints and Martyrs, the spirits of just and perfect men. To day then, or any day when we heare his voice, harden we not our hearts, neither despise him that speaketh, Christ Jesus. For if they escaped not that refused him that spake on the earth, to wit, Moses, how much more shall we not escape, if we turne away from him that speaketh from heaven, whose voice then shooke the earth, and now hath declared, saying, yet once more will I shake, not the earth onely, but also the heaven, &c.

God calleth by his word.

Heb. 12. 25.

7. Having

Abrahams obedience.

Chap.11.8.

7. Having conſidered the Lords calling, in the next place we muſt conſider Abrahams obedience, which not onely appeareth in this text, but is honoured with a moſt notable remembrance alſo by the Apoſtle in his Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, for by faith (ſaith he) Abraham when he was called, obeyed God, to goe out into a place which he ſhould afterward receive for an inheritance, and he went out not knowing whither he went, &c. A great obedience to leave houſe and home, country and friends where he was brought up; and ſuch an obedience as thouſands of us cannot brooke in theſe dayes, though it were to glorifie God, or ſerve our Prince and country in great meaſure: but a farre greater to goe he knew not whither. For what adoe would ſome of us have made at ſuch a motion? what folly, what madneſſe would we have accounted it to leave a place we knew and ever had lived in, to goe we could not tell whither? But ſo did not Abraham, he obeyed to goe and to leave all, yea, he obeyed to leave all and goe he knew not whither: Marke therefore I pray you the nature of true faith, and the meaſure of it in Abraham: it wreſtleth, it ſtriveth, it overcommeth at laſt all objections of fleſh and blood, and yeeldeth a holy and ſweet obedience to the commandement, will and pleaſure of Almighty God: ſuch faith ſhall honour us as it honoured Abraham, if being in us for our meaſure, there ſhall flow from it ſuch dutifull obedience to our God, as occaſion ſhall be offered, and we called to now; wherefore let us ever thinke of it.

Monkiſh practiſe nothing helped by Abrahams leaving all, &c.

8. But when we ſpeake of this obedience of Abraham in departing, I pray you let us remember ever that it was upon a word, commanding him and calling him as hath beene ſaid, and not upon his owne head. The fourth verſe ſaith, he departed, but how? as the Lord ſpake unto him, ſaith the text, &c. Cutting thereby and therein the combes of all ſuch momiſh Monkes that apply his example to their bad doings, and their leaving of friends as they ſay, and fathers houſe, to his example. For Abraham was commanded, they not. Abraham had cauſe, leſt he ſhould be ſeduced by his Idolatrous kindred and country, they not. Abraham knew not whither hee went, they full well. Abraham caried his wife with him, and left her not, they not ſo in any caſe. Therefore you ſee how well this example fitteth them, and how juſtly they reſemble it.

Verſe 4. Abraham patiently tarrieth God his leiſure.

9. If we note Abrahams age when he thus obeyed, he was as is thought 75. yeares. He lived 175. in all. And ſo it appeareth that a whole hundred yeares he was a traveller, and poſſeſt not the bredth of a foote, as Steven ſaith, of all that was promiſed to him, and yet his faith failed not, but by the ſame he abode ſaith the Apoſtle in the land of promiſe, as in a ſtrange Countrey, &c. When we farre unlike him faint, and are grieved with every little delay in the Lords doings.

Verſe 5. The obedience of a faithfull wife.

10. That Sara went with him we may ſee the obedience of a faithfull wife. Not one grudging of her is mentioned, not one objection carnall and worldly, either to excuſe her ſelfe, or to hinder him from that whereunto the Lord had called him. But ſhe truſſeth up and away with him whither God ſhould appoint, knowing his lot to be her lot in well or woe: taking her ſelfe called when her husband is called, as if ſhe had by name been expreſſed, becauſe God is no ſeparater of man and wife whom himſelfe hath joyned till death depart.

O honourable Sara for this obedience, without croſſing, gaine-ſaying, contrarying, repining and murmuring, being a comfort and incouragement to her husband to obey his calling, and no daſher, no cooler, no pul-back, no hindrance, no carnall perſwader to the contrary, nor yet any pidling Lots wife either all day ere ſhe can ſet out, or yet looking back when ſhe is in her journey. What a praiſe is this for all faithfull wives to ayme at whilſt they live.

Verſe 8.10. 11. &c. The croſſes of this good couple.

11. Thus having conſidered both Gods calling, and Abrahams obedience, thinke we in the third place of the croſſes that accompanied this faithfull couple, Abraham and Sara in their journey. Their Removes are divers, which carry ever ſome griefes. There ariſeth a Famine, a double triall in a ſtrange place from that it is at home, where a man being known and friended hath many helps. Then ſmiteth a feare in the heart of Abraham, that for his wife he ſhould be killed amongſt ungodly men that feared not God: a great croſſe. This feare drove him to a ſhift that was a greater croſſe, to endanger his wife and her vertue for the ſafety of him, which even that way alſo could be but uncertaine. The conceit was accompliſhed, and his wife was taken from him to be Pharaohs wife, a helliſh wound to the hearts of both Abraham and Sara. And what ſhall we note in all this, but firſt the lot of the godly through many feares, many troubles, many tryals, many gripes and griefes to paſſe along this life toward the kingdome of reſt and joy, with him, whoſe ſervants we are, to abide whatſoever it ſhall pleaſe him to exerciſe us withall: true obedience to Almighty God in any thing, wanting no croſſes more or leſſe in this world ever to wait upon it. Secondly, wee may note againe the weakneſſe of Gods choſen many times, not of the ſmalleſt faith and place in Gods Church, but even of the greateſt account and ſervice. For in our great Father Abraham what a blot was this to cauſe his wife to make a lie to deny her mariage, and to caſt her ſelfe into ſuch danger, and himſelfe into ſuch griefe, as that courſe did? but this is our mould and metall, and theſe are the wants of great ones oftentimes. Glory we not therefore of fleſh ever, for it is too full of imperfection, neither commit wee the like folly ever for any feare.

The lot of the godly.

The weakneſſe of chiefe pillars in Gods Chur.

12. But

12. But was Sarah wronged by this wicked King? No, but when mans ſtrength failed, and both Abraham and Sarah were even at the pits brinke of great ſhame and violence, God ſteppeth in, and taketh the defence of thoſe poore ſtrangers upon him againſt a mighty King, and ſaveth Sarah from all hurt. He plagued Pharaoh and his houſe with great plagues till ſhe was reſtored to her husband againe. Shewing thereby that he never faileth to conſider the croſſes, griefes, wrongs and injuries of his children, but ever watcheth over them, and for them ever provideth, and careth to deliver them, ſo farre forth as ſhall be good for them, to the great incouragement of all us that ſee it and marke it, to truſt in him, and ever to ſerve him.

17. God ſteppeth in to ſave Sarah.

13 Paſſe we not over the judgement of this heathen King concerning adultery when hee knew the truth. Why didſt thou not tell me, ſaith he, that ſhe was thy wife? why ſaidſt thou, ſhe is my ſiſter, that I thereby might have beene deceived, and done thee wrong, taking her to be my wife? Inſinuating by theſe words how he abhorred to thinke of taking another mans wife, and committing iniquity with her. And when was this? Before the Law, when the light of nature onely raigned and taught them. Who was it that made this conſcience? Surely, Pharaoh, and Pharaoh of Ægypt, a Heathen King, a prophane King, an ungodly King otherwiſe, without knowledge, without care or love of the truth. Shall it not ſhrieke ſhrill in the Lords eares, and give a mighty witneſſe againſt brighter dayes, againſt other times, when knowing, profeſſing and holding the truth, called, eſteemed, and taken for Chriſtians both of our ſelves and others, yet wilfully, wittingly, careleſly and preſumptuouſly we doe the contrary, abhorring as much any ſcruple one way, as hee made conſcience another way. No doubt, no doubt but this very Pharaoh of Ægypt will riſe in judgement, and condemne many.

18. How odious adultery to an heathen.

Note.

14 Conclude we then quickly, and marke the end. When hee knew the truth, that ſhee was his wife, Behold thy wife, ſaith he, take her and goe thy way. And he gave commandement, in his Court, concerning them, ſo that they were conveyed forth, both Abraham, and his wife, and all that they had, in peace. So ſhall the man be bleſſed that feared the Lord, that obeyeth his Word, and followeth his Commandement, calling him whither it pleaſeth him. All his troubles ſhall by Gods providence be ended and turned to his good, God ſhall bee for him in the middeſt of his enemies as a ſure refuge. And what ſhould we ſay, or what can we ſay more truely and fitly in this place, then as the Prophet David ſaid? Many are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of all. Bleſſed be that Lord for ever and ever.

Verſ. 19. The griefes of the godly have a good end.

Pſal. 34.

15 Here might we end, if I thought it not good to tell you how ſome have made this ſtory of Abraham and Sarah a figure of that which befell their ſeed after them. Abraham and Sarah goe into Ægypt, ſo did their ſeed in the time appointed. Sarah is taken to be wronged and injuried, ſo was their ſeed moſt cruelly oppreſſed in their time. Abraham is favoured for Sarahs ſake, ſo were Iacob and his family for Ioſephs ſake. Pharaoh is plagued till he delivered Sarah, ſo was both King and Countrey afterward till the Iſraelites were let goe. Abraham and Sarah are delivered and ſent away, ſo was their ſeed out of Ægypt in their times. They had gifts given, which they tooke away, ſo had their ſeed when they departed, jewels of gold, and jewels of ſilver, and many things. Very fitly thus doe they reſemble this to that, and we may obſerve it. Still I muſt ſay, or might ſay, in every Chapter I leave out more than I note, and I follow no further than thus that which I note, becauſe my purpoſe was but to try, by a little taſte, if this courſe might profit, and if it might, then further hereafter to inlarge the ſame, and in ſuch ſort, as then ſhould be judged better, when my drift was ſeene.

A figure in Abraham and Sarah.

CHAP. XIII.

The eſpeciall heads of this Chapter are theſe:

The wealth of theſe two men, Abraham and Lot : from the 1. verſe to the 7.
The diſſention betwixt them : from the 7. to the 14.
The iteration of Gods promiſe : from the 14. to the end.

THE wealth of them ſheweth, that riches alſo ſometimes are beſtowed upon the godly, ſuch as ſhall be heires and inheritors of the peerleſſe joyes of everlaſting life. And therefore, though it be hard for a rich man to enter into the Kingdome of God, and even eaſier for a Cammell to goe through the eye of a needle, yet it is not impoſſible, but God with whom all things are poſſible can bring it to paſſe.

Verſ 2. Riches given to the godly.

2 It teacheth us, that even with wealth a man may be godly, and follow his vocation, to the good liking of Almighty God, and the diſcharge of himſelfe, in ſuch meaſure as humane frailty permitteth: for neither Abraham nor Lot are hindred hereby from pleaſing God. Needleſſe therefore it was, and but a Phyloſophicall folly or pang, that Crates caſt his money into the Sea, and ſaid, Ego te mergam, ne mergar à te; I will drowne thee, leſt I be drowned of thee: for with money and many worldly bleſſings more a man may ſerve God, as here Abraham and Lot did. Or that our holy Monkes thought (at leaſt made the common people thinke) that the touching of money would defile them, and the not touching or dealing with it was great purity and holineſſe. There is no ſuch matter we ſee by theſe two great ſervants of God. But there is a rule which we may farre better follow, and indeed ought to follow, laid down by the Spirit of God in the Prophet David, to wit, If riches encreaſe, ſet not thy heart upon them, &c. Uſe them we may, but love them we cannot without a fault. That which is ſaid in the Goſpell, Sell all, and give to the poore, is underſtood of a heart willing if need be, not of a deed when cauſe concurreth not, Liber ſi ſis ab avaritia, omnia vendis licet nihil vendas, ſin minus nihil vendis, licet omnia vendas; If thou be free from covetouſneſſe, thou ſelleſt all things though thou ſhouldſt ſell nothing, otherwiſe thou ſelleſt nothing, though thou ſhouldeſt ſell all things.

Verſe 7.
Wealth cauſe of contention ſometime.

3. The contention betwixt them ſheweth an accident of wealth through our corruption, now and then to make ſtrife and diſagreement, even where a bond of nature is to the contrary: ſo it did here, they were both ſo wealthy, that the land could not beare them, that they might dwell together.

Servants ſet maſters at variance.

4. But where began the contention? amongſt their ſervants, their heardmen could not agree together: and brawles amongſt ſervants at laſt reach to their maſters, they many times hearkning to the ſame more partially than they ſhould: too true this is by daily experience found in every coaſt and country, would God either this example, or thouſands of evils that grow thereby, might make them amend that yeeld too much to this miſchiefe. It is neither pitty nor charity to beleeve all reports, much leſſe the reports of a man grieved againſt the party who hath grieved him, leaſt of all againſt him, who having nothing at all offended, the maſter I meane, is onely abuſed, becauſe his ſervant hath done what his Maſter neither wiſhed nor liked. Let not Lot and Abraham ſo cruelly jarre and ſtomacke one another, becauſe their ſervants cannot agree together: and what ſervants? their heardmen, their dog-keepers, or horſe-keepers, or the baſeſt they have. Where ſhould wiſdome appeare if not in this? to diſcerne perſons, cauſes, times, and occaſions, and never for a baſer to loſe a better, for a ſtranger, a neighbour, for a ſervant and cauſe of no account, a gentleman and love of moſt great account.

Maſters excuſes to deale in their ſervants quarrels.

5. I but what ſhall a man doe? his ſervant is abuſed, other mens ſervants ſeeke to crow over them, and to rule the roſt as they liſt. This is an injury to the Maſter, and a ſhame to ſuffer it. So a man may be made a foole, and counted a wretch and a daſtard of no reputation, and never a man care to ſerve him that will no better ſticke to his men than ſo. Well ſaid fleſh and blood, and old Adams corruption, I know this is the ſong thereof, and much more than this to this end. But either we be Chriſtians or none. If we be Chriſtians and care for his Word, we have here a direction what to doe, ſurely even as godly Abraham did at this time. He conſidered all circumſtances, loved concord, regarded peace, ſought it, and inſued after it. Thought it would be farre more credit for him to have unity and good love, then the bitter effects of the contrary. Therefore he heartneth not his ſervants and ſetteth them on, hee taketh not their tales into his boſome, to worke diſlike of Lot his Coſen, hee looketh not bigge upon Lot, biddeth him not away from him, &c. But he talketh with him of the matter, and that not hotly, but kindely, and friendly, with great meekneſſe and love, knowing in wiſdome that ſpeech ſomewhat, but kinde and ſoft ſpeech much more cooleth a heare that beginneth to riſe, and doth out a fire that beganne to flame. Hee is Lots elder and uncle, his better in that reſpect and all other, yet he ſtandeth not upon that, looking when Lot ſhould come unto him, and ſtoope to him, but as in yeeres and every way he did excell him, ſo in wiſdome and mildneſſe, in humility and temperance of affections he far paſſeth him. Over-ruling himſelfe by that vertue thus farre, that he goeth to him, and urging him with that which Lot not ſo well conſidered, to wit, that they were brethren, neighbours, friends, kins-folks, &c. moveth him thereby, as by ſome ſtrong reaſons, and mighty bands, that love and peace might remaine betwixt them, and contention and brawles be farre away, both from themſelves, and from their people: I pray thee ſaith hee, I pray thee, let it not be thus, but ſo, and ſo forth. Hee gave him his choice to goe which way he would, and would accept what he refuſed. O patterne of wiſdome and all vertues for all Noblemen, Gentlemen, and whoſoever may ſay they be brethren, either in nature, or in Chriſt and Religion! Shall we not obſerve it and follow it? Are we aſhamed to be Abrahams? ſo wiſe, ſo meeke, ſuch lovers of concord and unity? Take heed that the God of Abraham bee not then aſhamed of us, both here, and in his kingdome for ever. Yet was Abraham a man I warrant you, and had a ſort of tall fellowes that would ſtrike, if he bade: As you ſee when he went to reſcue Lot from the furies of them that had taken him priſoner. But Abraham will never ſhew his man-hood and might againſt his brother, his neighbour, his kinſman. Hee defieth that manhood and ſtomack, he thinketh nothing can be more reproachfull to him, than to breake ſuch bands of love, and to jarre with ſuch a perſon as is ſo neere unto him. Would God we would marke it, and remember ever that the bond of one God, one Faith, one Baptiſme, and ſo forth, is as farre above the bond of one father, one mother, and ſuch like, as God is above man, ſpirituall things things above carnall, and the Spirit above the flesh. Amplifie it further your selfe in your meditation. I may not be long.

6 Marke the estate of these two men now. Remember the famine mentioned in the Chapter before, a cause why these men removed hither. Have they now any want? Doe you see any misery upon them? Nay, doe they not abound with all store, comfort and plenty? Never then can that man or woman perish for want, that want not a heart to serve and trust in the Lord: The Lyons doe lacke and suffer hunger, but a man or woman that feareth God, shall want nothing that is good. Gaine is not godlinesse, but godlinesse is great gaine, if we bee content with that which wee have, and it hath the promise both of this life, and that to come.

Vers. 10. Piety never bringeth losse in the end. Psal. 34. 2 Tim. 6. 1 Tim 4.

7 Let us marke also Lots yeelding to reason when it is laid before him, and acceptance of kindnesse when it is offered him, without any wayward wilfulnesse in his owne conceits, and dealings. So should all good men doe, hating to be of the number of them, whom nothing can please, who have made Will their God, and wilfull waywardnesse their plot for ever: yeelding to nothing, accepting of nothing, caring for nothing, but what their owne wits devise, and their owne tongues motion, yea many times going even from that also, if it bee consented unto.

Verse 10. Good men yeeld to reason.

8 Lot chose the plaine of Iordan for his place, because it was most pleasant both for water and all commodities; even as the Garden of Eden. But see and marke, when he thought he had got Paradise, he got hell. Sodom and Gomorrha proved filthy places, and all his pleasures were sowsed with sowre fruits of cursed inhabitants. Sped never man thus but Lot! gaping for pleasure, hath gotten paine; parting from Abraham, a faithfull friend, because they were wanton and over wealthy, have none light of Sodomites and filthy Gomorrheans, God being just, and so quitting their folly? Go we not alwayes then by shew and pleasures, when we chuse a place to abide in; but looke we rather at vertue and honesty of our neighbours that shall bee, for feare of a griefe as great as Lot had by these filthy followers of all vice and wickednesse. Better is a place with fewer pleasures amongst good livers, than many moe delights, with an ungodly neighbourhood. It is a great griefe that is a daily griefe, yea an hourely griefe, and that at home too, where a man would faine finde comfort, to oppose to forren woes and troubles.

Verse 11. Men gaping for pleasure, get paine.

9 In the repetion of his promise which it pleased God to make Verse 14. we may first observe the weakenesse of all mens faith, and what need there is that with often helpes it should be propped and strengthened. The Lord useth no meanes without a cause, and therefore using here the meanes to comfort Abraham, his wisedome saw what was needfull, wee are assured. If Abraham needed, how much more other men, so farre inferiour in strength of faith to Abraham.

Verse 14. The continuall weakenesse of man needeth continuall comforts from God.

10 Againe, we may see the sweet goodnesse of God watching opportunities, and even then comforting Abraham, by repetition of his promise, when Lot was gone from him, and hee by reason thereof might have beene sad and dismayed. So is the eye of our gracious God ever upon us, to spie our distresses, and to helpe us, when we have most need.

Gods comforts ever in fit times

11 Abrahams obedience, an argument of his faith, you also see, here removing when God commanded, without ever any grudging or carnall gain-sayings, as before hath beene noted.

Obedience.

Lastly, let his building of the Altar shew us his thankfulnesse for Gods mercies, to quicken our dulnesse, and teach us his open professing of the Religion hee truely embraced, against all close dissemblers of their consciences, yea let it make us remember alwayes, that it sufficeth not any man to beleeve with the heart unto righteousnesse, unlesse also, as occasion shall serve, he confesse with the mouth unto salvation.

Thanfulnesse.

CHAP. XIIII.

The heads of this Chapter are chiefly these two.

{ The warre betwixt the Kings: from the 1 verse to the 13.
{ The victory of Abraham: from the 13. to the end.

1 THe cause of this warre you see in the Text, that by this meanes they might shake off the yoke that they endured twelve yeares, I meane the one part, for twelve yeares, saith the Text, were they subject to Chedor Laomer, but in the thirteenth they rebelled, a bad course to get liberty, where subjection is due. For Rebellion God never loved, never prospered, but ever plagued. The issue in this place saith as much. The fearefull destruction of Corah and his company, Absalon and his company, and in our owne stories of many an one saith as much. Papists charge us that we are no good friends to Princes and Rulers, and it is no newes to heare it of them. Elias had such measure measured unto him by the wicked King, when he was called a troubler of Israel. Micheas the true Prophet, Ieremy and Amos as true as hee, all of them faithfaithfull to Princes ever, were ſo accuſed, and with venomous words if you reade the places, but all moſt falſly and injurioufly. We ſay, the doctrine of Rome is no friend to Princes, and judge you how truly. Sanders Monarchy freeing ſubjects from their oathes to their naturall Princes; The Bull of Pius the fifth; The anſwers of them that were examined, whether if the Pope invaded; they would take the Princes part or His; The Oration that Cardinall Poole made to the Emperour; The many moſt fearfull, moſt wicked, moſt unnaturall and damnable conſpiracies entred into by them, their rebellions, let them bee your lights to leade you to a true verdit and ſentence. They that rebelled in King Henry the eight his dayes, in King Edward his ſonnes dayes, in her Majeſties moſt happy dayes, that wee have now long enjoyed in the great mercy of our moſt gracious God, and long that we may yet enjoy, beſeech his goodneſſe: were they Papiſts or Proteſtants, men favouring the Goſpell, or addicted to, and drowned in the dregs of Popery and Superſtition? They repented that they were ſo buſie in Queene Maries dayes, in cutting off the boughes, and ſtill let the ſtock remaine, which above all rather ſhould have beene hewed downe, meaning her ſacred Majeſty: what were they? men holding out the light of Gods holy Goſpell, or fighting for his triple Crowne of Rome, that ſhall never be able to ſave their ſoules from due deſert of ſuch diſloyall thought, and moſt undutifull ſpeech? Shew the Princes the Goſpell hath depoſed? Shew the Princes that Popery hath not wronged? It is our doctrine that we firmely hold, and that they fully defie; That he that taketh the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword: that is, he that taketh it without the bonds of a calling warranting him, as all Rebels ever doe: That he which reſiſteth the Superior powers, reſiſteth the Ordinance of God, and to his owne damnation: That we ought to obey and be ſubject, not for feare, but for conſcience ſake: That the weapons of ſubjects be but prayers, and teares, and ſo forth. See then whether Popery, or Gods holy Goſpell which we hold, ſtand better with the ſafety of Princes, and flouriſhing eſtate of Kingdomes.

2 To the men of Sodom this was further the revenging hand of God for their ſinnes. Long did he ſpare, but at laſt they had this touch by the ſword of theſe Kings againſt them, and when that would not ſerve, a finall deſtruction from heaven by fire and brimſtone. Inde applyeth it thus, that if God ſpared not them, certainly he will not ſpare us, and let us thinke of it.

3 Lot is taken priſoner by this occaſion, and carried away, ſuch good is gotten by dwelling among the wicked, even to partake in thoſe plagues that the Lord juſtly ſcourgeth their ſinnes withall. Therefore little joy we for any commodities in ſuch cauſes of greater woe, when once it commeth, then all our profits can countervaile. Avoid them as we can, and avoid with them the wrath of God that ever followeth them. But ever remember, that our calling permitteth, and let us not under ſhew of this godly care, prove peeviſh Anabaptiſts, without conſciences.

Verſe 13. The Lords care for his.

4 In the 13. verſe it is ſaid, that one eſcaped to tell Abraham; where ſee the providence of God for ever: No ſooner is Lot in danger, but one is prepared to procure him reſcue. So ſhall it ever bee with Gods faithfull ſervants, wee may bee aſſured, one or other ſhall eſcape by this careſull goodneſſe of God, that ſhall work their help ſo farre as God will have for his glory and their good. For he is not Lots God alone, neither any partiall regarder of any, with neglect of others that truſt in his mercy.

Verſe 14. In diſtreſſe of a friend, forget all former faults, and help.

5 When by this meſſenger Abraham heard it, ſtraight he addreſſed himſelfe to ſuccour him. Where note the nature of one truly godly. You ſaw the jarre betwixt Abraham and Lot before, and how they parted by that meanes the one from the other. Many a crooked nature would have thought of this now, and have let Lot taſte of that which his departure in ſome ſort had procured. But doth Abraham ſo? No, but in his friends diſtreſſe all former faults are forgotten, and willing offer of him and his into danger, with al ſpeed made to relieve and releaſe him from his oppreſſion and danger. This is love that God loveth, and this is love that well beſeemeth all friends that would be accounted truely friends.

Our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe fled, and in the night alſo, who yet could have beene ſafe from all tyrants he would, without ſuch meanes: Ioſhua came upon them unawares: and Paul was let downe in a Basket by the window.

For godlineſſe is loving and comfortable, both by words and deeds, ungodlineſſe is crurliſh and hard, parting with nothing, as you ſee in Nabal.

9 This

9 This place is abuſed by the Papiſts, as many moe be, to prove their Maſſe. But they ſhew their wickedneſſe, and want their purpoſe. Behold (ſay they) a type and figure of the unbloody Sacrifice that Chriſt offered at his laſt Supper. This the figure, that the fulfilling of it in truth, and he remaining for ever a Prieſt after the order of this Melchiſedech, the truth of this figure, that is, an unbloody Sacrifice, under the ſignes of bread and wine, muſt alſo ever remaine, &c. Wee anſwer them firſt, that for as much as the Apoſtle, ſo fully diſcuſſing this compariſon betwixt Chriſt and Melchiſedech, maketh no mention of any ſuch Sacrifice, it being yet, as themſelves ſay, the chiefeſt point of the compariſon. Too much to blame are they, that they ſhame not to obtrude unto the Apoſtle ſuch an unknowne myſterie, and to ſupply of their owne, what he (directed by the Spirit of God) quite left out, and never mentioned. If they deny this conſequence, to wit, from the Apoſtles ſilence or omiſſion to the nullity of the thing; we tell them it is moſt ſtrong, by vertue of a rule in Divinitie; which they ſhall never improve whileſt they live. The rule is this. Of types and figures of the old Teſtament, ſo farre onely; and never further, may a doctrine be eſtabliſhed, as the ſame types and figures, by expreſſe and plaine words of the Apoſtles, ſhall be expounded and interpreted. For if every man might expound them as hee thought good, variety of allegories, moſt uncertaine and doubtfull, ſhould overthrow all truth amongſt us. If therefore any reliefe for the Maſſe muſt bee had from this fact of Melchiſedech, needs of neceſſity they muſt bring ſome place of the new Teſtament; where it is ſo expounded: otherwiſe they play but with Allegories of their owne making, and their ſpeech may he termed allegoricall, and not theologicall. For that fulneſſe of perſwaſion and plerophoria, that is in Divinity, ſtayeth not upon allegoricall devices, except they bee warranted from God himſelfe.

Melchiſedechs fact no figure of Popiſh Maſſe.

A rule touching types and figures.

2 Secondly, whereas they ſay, Melchiſedech offered here bread and wine to God, wee utterly deny it, and referre our ſelves to the words of Moſes, wherein is not any ſuch matter. The Text is protulit, not obtulit, He brought forth bread and wine, not he offered bread and wine: Except to bring forth, were to offer and ſacrifice, which it cannot be. And that knew even that old Tranſlator,, whom they make ſuch account of, and thereupon tranſlated the Hebrew word, to bring forth, not to offer.

3 Thirdly, if we ſhould grant all they ſeeke, to wit, that he offered bread and wine (as God forbid we ſhould ſo belie the Text) yet would it not follow what they deſire: For how hang theſe together, Melchiſedech was a figure of Chriſt, and offered bread and wine to God. Therefore Chriſt in his holy Supper, offered himſelfe unbloodily to God the Father for us, which alſo is done ſtill in the Maſſe. Conſider of it, Is there any ſequell in the world in it? May wee not as well conclude, that Chriſt ought to be offered daily under the ſignes of Lambes, of Turtle-Doves, young Pigeons, Goats and Calves, and many ſuch things, becauſe once theſe things were offered; as they, that he muſt be offered under bread and wine, becauſe bread and wine were offered by Melchiſedech? Surely, thoſe burnt-offering of the Law, did farre more lively reſemble and expreſſe the future Sacrifice of Chriſt, than the offerings of any bread could: for in them was ſuffering, dying, ſhedding of blood, and a being ſlaine and killed, which is not in bread, and therefore if any ſhould remaine to ſuch an end, as the Papiſts would, rather they ſhould remaine than the ſignes of bread and wine.

4 Againe, if this offering of Melchiſedech were a figure of Chriſt, either Chriſt hath fulfilled it or not: if he have not, then was not all finiſhed, as he ſaid, which God forbid: and if he have, then being fulfilled, why ſhould it not ceaſe, as all other figures doe of the old Teſtament? ſhall the figure and the truth ſtand both at once? It is ſtrange Divinitie: nay, the contrary is true, and ſound Divinity, to wit, that Chriſt having, upon the Croſſe, with his owne oblation of himſelfe, ended and determined all figures uſed to ſhew his comming; this alſo, if as they take it, a figure of him, ended likewiſe and finiſhed, and is taken away.

Yet further, let theſe men conſider their abſurdities againſt themſelves: for if their Maſſe leane upon this fact of Melchiſedech, their Tranſubſtantiation is quite gone; for that which Melchiſedech offered (if he offered as they ſay) was not any figure or bare ſhew, and accidents of bread and wine, but bread indeed, and wine indeed, the ſubſtance there as well as the accidents; and therefore if that was any figure of the Sacrifice of the Maſſe, then muſt that Sacrifice be bread and wine indeed, as that was. Againe, if Melchiſedech offered an offering, it was an offering of thankſgiving, whereupon his words proceeded, Bleſſed be the Lord, that hath delivered thy enemies into thy hands. But they will not have their Maſſe-offering ſo, but a propitiatorie ſacrifice, how then agree theſe together? Conclude we then in a better ſort than theſe men doe, that in truth, Chriſt is a Prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchiſedech, as the Pſalme ſaith, but this order conſiſteth not in any reall offering of himſelfe daily for the ſinnes of men; (for with one oblation, ſaith the Apoſtle, hath he conſecrated for ever them that are ſanctified) but this order conſiſteth in the things: Firſt, Melchiſedech was both a King and a Prieſt: ſo was our Saviour Chriſt. Secondly, he was by interpretation, ſaith the Apoſtle, King of Righteouſneſſe, and King of Salem, that is, of Peace: ſo is our Saviour Chriſt truely and verily, King of Righteouſneſſe

Heb. 10. 14. The compariſon how it ſtandeth. Heb. 7 1. Verſ. 2.

Heb.7.3,4,&c.

neſſe and peace, yea of all righteouſneſſe and peace. Thirdly, Melchiſedech was without father, without mother, without kindred, and had neither beginning of his dayes, nor end of his life: that is, none of theſe were left in the Scripture to our knowledge, but hee is propounded to us as eternall, ſo is our Saviour Chriſt eternall indeed, and without all theſe, in reſpect of the one or the other nature, his Prieſthood endeth not, as Aarons did, but is for ever. Laſtly, Melchiſedech was in this above Abraham, and all the Levites of Abraham after deſcended, that he received tythes of him and them, he paying tythes unto him, and they alſo, as the Apoſtle ſaith, becauſe they were in his loynes: and he bleſſing Abraham, the leſſer being bleſſed of the greater: So was our Saviour Chriſt, above Abraham, and above all the Leviticall Prieſts of the Law, that deſcended of Abraham. This reſemblance hath warrant as you ſee in the Scripture, and therefore is found thus farre. But if wee will goe further, to ſay, Melchiſedech offered Bread and Wine, therefore Chriſts body muſt bee offered of Prieſts in the Maſſe daily, unbloody, under the accidents of Bread and Wine, for the ſinnes of the quick and the dead, we adde that which the Apoſtle addeth not, which yet hee would never have omitted, if it had beene to be added; we goe beyond our warrant, and we muſt vaniſh with our vanity, that hath no ſurer ſtay than our owne device and fancy. And thus much of this matter.

Verſe 23. Care of the credit of a profeſſor of truth.

10 The care laſtly that Abraham had to keep both the credit of himſelfe a profeſſor, and the Lords honour whom he ſerved, appeareth in this Chapter: For hee will not have ſo much as a threed of him, leſt he ſhould thereupon ſpeake evill of him, his God and Religion: ſuch a remembrance ſhould we ever have by his example, of the Maſter we ſerve, of the office we beare, and of the parties we deale with, abhorring bribes that robbe both us, and our God, of good report, and ſet open the mouthes of the wicked againſt the truth, whereof we are profeſſors. Abraham would not, that this wicked King ſhould ſay, He had made Abraham rich, and wee care not that any man ſay it of us: We can be content to be fed of Papiſts, that they may freely diſhonour the Majeſtie of God; of Theeves, that they may eſcape and ſteale againe; of adulterers and filthy livers, that they may ſtill tranſgreſſe, and never think what may be ſaid by them, or by others, upon this occaſion, of the Lord, whoſe name we profeſſe, of his truth which wee ſay we hold, or of our ſelves, whom yet we gladly would have men thinke well of. This is now farre you ſee from Abrahams example in this place, and therefore except wee learne of him hereafter to amend this courſe, it may juſtly be feared, wee ſhall never come where Abraham now is.

CHAP. XV.

The heads of this Chapter.

1 In this Chapter there is the promiſe renewed againe, the faith and juſtification of Abraham: from the 1. verſe to the 9.

2 The confirmation of him by an outward ſigne: from the 9. to the end. Particulars, as in other Chapters many.

Verſe 6.

1 IN that it is ſaid, The Word of the Lord came to Abraham in a viſion: note we the manner of Gods revealing himſelfe in thoſe dayes. In the twelfth of Numbers it is thus ſaid: If there be a Prophet of the Lord amongſt you, I will be knowne to him by a viſion, and will ſpeake unto him by a dreame. Noting the two ordinary meanes in thoſe dayes, Viſion and Dreame. Here it was by Viſion, of which Saint Auguſtine maketh three kindes, Corporalem, Spiritualem, Mentalem, Corporall, Spirituall, and Mentall, if I may ſo ſpeake. The Corporall viſion is, when corporall things to our corporall eyes appeare and are ſeene. The Spirituall, when the likeneſſe of things are ſeene in ſpirit, in dreame, or in an extaſie. The Mentall, as we terme it, is when underſtanding is given to know the meaning of ſuch likeneſſes and formes, when they are ſeene. As for example, Pharaoh ſaw the fat Kine and leane Kine, but knew not what they meant, Ioſeph knew what they meant, and yet ſaw them not: Pharaoh therefore had a ſpirituall viſion, and Ioſeph a mentall. Another example: The two ſervants of Pharaoh, the Butler and the Baker, had their ſpirituall viſions, but knew not againe what they pretended; Ioſeph did, which had no ſuch appearance made unto him, and that was a mentall viſion. Nabuchadnezar againe had the ſpirituall viſion, Dan. 2. Daniel both the ſpirituall and the mentall. This viſion of Abraham was a corporall viſion, as is thought, and proofe thereof alledged out of the fift verſe.

Chap. 40.

2 Obſerve we the opprtunity of this Viſion, when it was. Surely when Abraham was returned from the reſcue of Lot, and was now in a great feare what might befall him by thoſe Kings, whom he had ſo purſued, conquered and delivered his friend from: he was a ſtranger and they at home, he but a few, they of great power, alliance and kindred, how ſhould it be but they would would combine together to deſtroy him, and never put up and digeſt what hee had done to them. This multiplyed in Abrahams minde, as all feare will, and gave him many a ſecret gripe, that all the world felt not ſo well as he. But behold a gracious God, a deare and tender Father, that never ſlumbreth nor ſleepeth when his be in agonies and perplexities. In this opportunity of time he appeareth to his ſervant, renueth his promiſe to his great comfort, and daſheth in ſunder, with words of ſweet mercy, the bones of all ſuch troubled thoughts, and fearfull conceits. Could Abrahams heart have wiſhed his comfort in any more fit time? Did he not thus againe before, when Lot was departed from him? Let it ever be one of our notes, in reading the Word, how fitly, in reſpect of time and need, God comforteth his, and let us know, that hee is one and the ſame for ever, to all that put their truſt in him. He ſeeth what Abraham wanteth, and when he wanteth; and ſeeth he not us? He gave Abraham what he wanted, and when hee wanted it; and is he onely his God? Stirre we then up the faith within us, ever to truſt in him, to depend on him, and to expect from him our wanted helps, even in the very time they may beſt ſtead us.

3 Let us marke the manner of comfort, and the words themſelves: Feare not Abraham, (ſaith he) I am thy buckler, and thine exceeding great reward. He telleth him not that his enemies be wicked, and he juſt, or that they ſhall be weake, and he ſtrong, or any ſuch matter, but this he ſaith onely, I am thy ſhield. Teaching us, that this is enough againſt all the threats of foes, and terrors of the whole world, if God care for us, and take upon him to be our ſhield againſt them. Earthly hearts doe not conceive this, but they crie, give me friends and favour with men, with Princes, with Noblmen, with Magiſtrates and Gentlemen, give mee gold and ſilver, give mee alliance and kindred, and ſuch like, and then let me alone; but if wee want all theſe, or ſome, woe bee to us, we cannot live, we ſhall be ſo croſſed, ſo ſnubbed, ſo brow-beaten, ſo pinched a thouſand wayes, that death were better a great deale, than ſuch a life. But O carnall wretches, and carnall comforts! is God nothing, and man all? is the Creator ſo weake, and the creature ſo ſtrong? where are our eyes? If theſe things be had with Gods favour, they are good meanes, and may be our comfort; but if theſe want, and God love, is he all too weake to ſhield us? God forbid. Nay onely his love is life and liberty, though all the world with his power were ſet againſt us. Verſ. 1. How God comforteth.

And this is that, which in this place God would have Abraham to ſee. That hee might not thinke, alas, I am a ſtranger, weake and without friends; great men malice me, and how ſhall I doe, how can I eſcape their hands? &c. Away (ſaith God) Abraham with ſuch conceits, I am thy buckler, and I tell thee, that is enough againſt all thy foes, were they never ſo many and mighty. Truth Lord, truth, and farre be it from us ever to thinke otherwiſe. If thou be with us, who can be againſt us, to hurt us. If I walke in the middeſt of the ſhadow of death, ſaith the Prophet David, I will not feare any evill; and why? Quia tu mecum es, Becauſe thou art with me, and O Lord, it is our ſong alſo, increaſe our faith for thy mercy ſake. Rom. 8. Pſa. 23.

4 In that hee ſaith, he is his reward, and not onely ſo, but his exceeding great reward, we doe well ſee there is no loſſe in ſerving God, as the wicked doe complaine in the Prophet Malachy, that there is, but on the contrary ſide, this is profitable, and moſt profitable, yea this is riches, and exceeding great riches. For what hath Heaven or Earth that is not ours? God himſelfe is ours, and we are his, and unto God what may be added for more perfection? David ſaith, The Lord is his Shepheard, and therefore he ſhall want nothing. And may not we ſay, the Lord is our God, our Father, our ſhield and buckler, yea our reward, and exceeding great reward, therefore we are rich, and loſe not by his ſervice? Moſt truely may we ſay it evermore, and moſt ſweetly ſhould we taſte it when we are tempted. It is wealth to have Corne, and Wine, and Oyle, increaſed; but ſure farre greater wealth, to have the light of Gods countenance lifted up upon us, in the Prophets judgement. It is gaine, To have our Garners filled with all manner of ſtore, to have our Oxen ſtrong to labour, no leading into captivity, nor any complaining in our ſtreets; and the people be happy that be in ſuch a caſe: but ſurely, yet farre greater gaine it is, to have the Lord for our God, and rather, rather happy be they, that enjoy that mercy, than all the former. No leſſe in ſerving God. Mal. 3. 14. Pſal. 23. Pſ. 4. Pſ. 144.

5 When Abraham ſaith to God, yea, but O Lord, what wilt thou give me, ſeeing I goe childleſſe? &c. We may ſee the weakneſſe of Gods children, even his deare ones and chiefe ones, if things anſwer not their deſires: They are a little impatient, and thinke leſſe of many mercies, that both they have, and are promiſed often to have, becauſe they want ſome one thing that they wouldly gladly have. So was Abraham here for want of a childe: as if he would have ſaid, O Lord, what is all thou promiſeſt whileſt this wanteth, that I have no iſſue. This is a great corruption in us, and we muſt beware. For if God were not mercifull, it were the way to rob us of all, to thinke light of any, for want of ſome. Let us not thinke it is denyed that is deferred. God hath his times for all things, and bound are we to his Majeſtie for what we have, till more come, and though never more come. Verſ. 2.

6 When Abraham thus uttered his griefe for want of ſeed, God telleth him in great goodneſſe, he ſhould have ſeed according to his deſire, yea, farre and farre above that which he could imagine imagine or aske. For, as the ſtarres of heaven, ſo ſhould his ſeed be, for number. A gracious promiſe to a grieved minde, for that ſame thing. But when or wherein will not God bee good to thoſe that truely ſerve him? This promiſe Abraham beleeved, (ſaith the text) and it was counted unto him for righteouſneſſe. By faith then was Abraham juſtified, we plainly ſee, and is there another way for other men? this were madneſſe to thinke, and therefore chuſe we with him to beleeve, that by faith, as he was, we may be juſtified. For it is written for him onely, that it was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe (ſaith the Apoſtle) but alſo for us, to whom it ſhall bee imputed for righteouſneſſe, which beleeve in him, that raiſed up Ieſus our Lord from the dead. Againe, I count all things loſſe, and doe judge them dung, that I might win Chriſt, and might be found in him; that is, not having mine owne righteouſneſſe, which is of the Law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, even the righteouſneſſe which is of God through faith, &c. With many ſuch places, if it were not needleſſe in many words to follow this doctrine now. Away therefore with whatſoever yeeldeth man to boaſt in, and know that the thing that God regardeth in us, is faith: Firſt, becauſe of his eternall purpoſe onely to ſave beleevers: and ſecondly, becauſe faith ever aſcribeth to him the glory, both of truth and power.

Verſ. 8. A ſigne asked.

7 But it is laid downe here, that Abraham asked a ſigne: How could that ſtand with a right faith? May a man beleeve, and yet aske a ſigne to confirme doubting? Anſwer may bee made, that God promiſed two things; a Seed, and the inheritance of the Land of Canaan: Abraham beleeved the firſt, and was juſtified; but ſomewhat wavered in the ſecond, becauſe hee could not conceive, how he, ſo old a man, ſhould ever be Maſter of that Land. And that a man may have true faith, though not all faith, it is manifeſt in all Gods children. Moſes himſelfe, that was ſo faithfull in Gods Houſe, and to whom God ſhewed himſelfe ſo marvellouſly, and ſpake ſo familiarly, yet had not all faith; but doubted of water to come out of the rocke, and ſo grieved God. Truth is ſufficient, and perfection falleth not into this life. Looke what your note ſaith in the margine.

Numb. 6.

God accepteth an imperfect faith.

8 In giving him a ſigne, we ſee the great mercy and goodneſſe of God, ever ready to ſupport mans weakneſſe, and never ſnubbing any childe of his for imperfection of faith, in whom there is the truth of faith, a great comfort. And in the diviſion and placing of theſe beaſts, wee ſee the old manner of making covenants in thoſe dayes: They firſt divided them: to ſhew, that ſuch love and liking ſhould thenceforth be betwixt them two, that made that covenant as that they could finde in their heart to divide any commodities or pleaſures mutually and equally either to other. Secondly, to ſhew, that they wiſhed even their owne bodies ſo divided and cut aſunder, if they ſhould breake that covenant. Reade the firſt of Samuel 11. 7. Then they laid one part anſwering to another, to ſhew the anſwering and agreement, and conſent that ſhould be in their two hearts either to other. Laſtly, The Birds were not divided, to ſhew, that though all externall matters might be parted, yet their mindes and wils not. Reade the marginall note againe in your Bible.

Verſ. 11. An Allegory.

9 The lighting of the fowles upon the carkeiſes to eate them, if they might have beene ſuffered, ſhewed Abraham in ſuch ſort, how both his Seed, according to the fleſh, and according to promiſe, ſhould of the prophane Gentiles and wicked worldlings be moleſted. But as Abraham drove them away, ſo ſhould his Seed by Gods helpe, conquer and overcome their cruell enemies. Yea, God for his promiſe ſake, would drive them away from devouring his choſen, as Abraham did theſe from eating the carkeiſes. Gregory noteth herein to be figured, how flying cogitations light upon us, when wee are about to offer the ſacrifice of prayer, and trouble us, ſeeking even to eate up that holy ſacrifice, if we drive them not away in the zeale of Gods Spirit and grace, vouchſafed to us. And who hath not felt this trouble and malice of Satan in his prayer.

Verſe 13. Firſt ſowre, and then ſweet.

10 That it pleaſed the Lord, thus long, to let them be ſtrangers in a forraine Land, even foure hundred yeares, to ſerve a cruell people, and to be evill entreated of them, wee may note the manner many times of the Lords dealing with ſuch as he meaneth to doe much for. Surely, then hee uſed, and now he uſeth, not to make any man rule before he hath ſerved, not to give freedome, but after a taſte firſt of bondage. Firſt, muſt come ſowre, and then ſweet; firſt paine, and then pleaſure; firſt travell, and then reſt: So know we better what the benefit is, by former experience of the want, and we become more thankfull for it. Ioſeph found it thus, David, Daniel, and many moe.

to the Prophet, Bauld head, bauld head. True it is, that God ſpareth long ſometime, but as true againe it is, that he payeth home againe at laſt, and as true as either of theſe, that the ſharpeneſſe of his wrath when it lighteth, recompenceth the long ſtay of it before it light. 2 Kings 2.

Others againe have noted here, that although God foretold Abraham the future captivity of his ſeed, yet he did not tell him in what place, nor under whom they ſhould be thus detained, leſt it ſhould worke in him an hatred and deteſtation of that place and people, and ſo to offend. Which teacheth us how good alſo it is for us, to be ignorant of the cauſers often of our woe, who are much more prone to offend this way, then Abraham was. In the Goſpell it is ſaid, that the Father enquired diligently about what time his ſon began to amend, for whom hee had been with Chriſt for help, and finding that it was even at the ſame time that Chriſt ſpake unto him, and ſaid, Thy ſonne liveth, he beleeved and all his houſhold. To know then from whence any good commeth unto us, is profitable, that we may be thankfull, as this man was. But not ſo in evill. To which they have applyed the covering of Chriſt his eyes, when he was ſtriken and abuſed by the Jewes in the High-Prieſts Hall, ſaying, that even ſo it is good for man to have his eyes covered when injury is done him, whoſe corruption reacheth not to that moderation of affections, when he knoweth who abuſeth him, as was in our Lord and Maſter Jeſus Chriſt. Certainly our frailty herein is great, either to hate if we know, becauſe we know, or to ſuſpect if we know not, and even ſo to hate. But God is the giver of all good gifts, and by name of this to be patient againſt an evill, although we know the cauſer of it. And in his mercy he grant it to us as may be beſt. Iohn 4.46. Luke 22.64.

12. In that God ſaith, yet they ſhall come out, and nameth a time, we get this comfort, ſweeter then honey: that we may be aſſured whatſoever is our caſe, Egrediemur tandem, we ſhall at laſt come out, and not loſe by our patience, if we have performed any. The time is knowne to the Lord, as this was, and appointed, and ſhall never breake, though not expreſſed as this was. Sorrow hath an end. Reade Ierem. 25.12. and Pſal. 105 19.

13. With great ſubſtance, ſaith the Text, and ſo it was, we know Jewels of ſilver and Jewels of gold they had of the Ægyptians at their departure, beſides their owne, which was alſo great. See and conſider the end of the troubles of the godly, when God will; not onely liberty, but great ſubſtance is given to them: So every thing worketh for the good of them that love God, ſaith the Apoſtle truly. Ioſeph had honour, and great wealth, as well as liberty, when Gods time was come; ſo had David a Kingdome after many troubles that he firſt endured; ſo had Daniel and others many, if you will remember them. Feare not the iſſue then of your woe, whatſoever it is, if you cleave to God, and hold you faſt by the word of his promiſe. And often unto wealth. Rom. 8.28.

14. But thou ſhalt goe to thy Fathers in peace, and ſhalt be buried in a good age, ſaith God to Abraham. Noting unto us in the very phraſe, the comfort to be conceived in the death of the godly. It is no periſhing nor departing to woe, but a ſweet going to our Fathers before us in laſting bliſſe. It is a walking with God, as another place ſaith, a gathering of us to our owne people, a ſleepe, a reſt, yea a reſting of the fleſh in hope, the way of all fleſh, and ſo forth: therefore not to be feared: It includeth felicity, it excludeth miſery, finiſheth the toyles of age, preventeth the perils of youth, Multis remedium, non nullis votum, omnibus finis; To many a remedy, to ſome a wiſhed thing, to all an end: It deſerveth better of none, than of them to whom it commeth before calling. Heathens have been ſtrong, and ſhall we be weake? The Swans doe ſing, and ſhall we weepe to thinke of death? Mors nomen tantum fidelibus, ſaith the Father; Death to the godly is only a name, and no worſe is in it. Surely to die no man feareth, but he that deſpaireth of life after death; yet haſten not the time by thy deſire, for that is a fault as farre the other way. It is the part of an unthankfull man, either to will a good longer, or to be weary of it ſooner than the giver and lender of the ſame doth limit, and is contented. No man may break the priſon, and let the ſoule out, but he that incloſed it in the ſame. Let all theſe comfort us, and let all theſe ſtay us. Feare not when it commeth ſent of God, and procure it not till it come, for any diſlike or diſcontent of a weake minde. Verſ. 15. The death of the godly full of comfort. Gen. 5. Gen. 19. Chryſoſt. Gen. Hom. 29.

In a good age, doth the Lord adde, and who maketh olde, but even himſelfe? The hoary haires are his gracious gift, and the timely death is alſo his, to eſcape the woes to come.

15. For the wickedneſſe of the Amorites is not yet full, ſaith the 16. verſe: Then God ſpareth many times, till iniquity be ripe and at an height. Moſt true it is, and let us marke it: It may well daunt thoſe curſed ſpirits, and ſtop the ſtreame of thoſe wicked hearts, that flatter themſelves, becauſe God yet ſuffereth. What, ſay they, needs all this threatning of the Preachers againſt mens doings? I wis, God is not ſo haſty as they make him, nor yet ſo ready to ſmite as they report him: For my ſelfe have hitherto found him favourable, albeit I trod awry, &c. But take heed ſaith the Wiſeman, and ſay not, I have ſinned, and what evill hath come unto me? For the Almighty is a patient rewarder, but he will not leave thee unpuniſhed. Becauſe thy ſin is forgiven, be not without feare, to heape ſin upon ſinne. And ſay not, the mercy of God is great, he will forgive my manifold ſinnes, for mercy and wrath come from him, and his indignation commeth forth upon ſinners. Make no tarrying to turne unto the Lord, and put not off from day to day, for ſuddenly ſhall the wrath of the Lord breake forth, and in thy ſecurity thou ſhalt be deſtroyed, and thou ſhalt periſh in time Verſe 16. God ſpareth till ſin be ripe. Syrach. 5.4.

of vengeance. In this place we ſee, that God often ſpareth the wicked, the wicked nation, and wicked perſon, man or woman, not becauſe he will not ſmite, but becauſe they have a mighty paiment and fearefull vengeance, together, when their ſin is full, that at once he may deſtroy them for ever in his great juſtice. Know you then your ſelfe to tread awry, and doth God ſtill ſuffer? Stand in awe, and goe not on. Make not your ſinne full, by continuing of it. For if you doe, your death is determined. Many things moe yet hath this Chapter, but let theſe ſuffice now.

CHAP. XVI.

The principall heads of this Chapter are theſe.

The double mariage of Abraham: to the fourth verſe.
The deſpiſing of Sarah by Hagar: to the ſeventh verſe.
Her flight and returne: to the end.

Verſe 2. Good ſpirits in men or women blame themſelves before others.

1. CONcerning the firſt, the occaſion of it is noted, when it is ſaid, Sarah was barren, and bare no children to Abraham. Her barrenneſſe ſheweth the power of God, in after giving her a childe, and is noted to that end.

2. In that ſhe layeth the fault upon her ſelfe, and not upon her husband, ſaying, The Lord had reſtrained her, &c. It ſheweth her ſpirit modeſt and godly, and teacheth us the better to diſcerne them, that had rather blame any than themſelves, and that in a thouſand things, than themſelves in one. Such ſpirits be proud and arrogant, ſwelling with vaine conceits of themſelves, and poyſoned with ſpite againſt others. And if they be women, they are no Sarahs we well know, by this good marke of a good Sarah in this place.

3. The Lord reſtraineth honeſt women from child-bearing, and none but he; but filthes reſtraine themſelves, leſt their ſecret whoredomes ſhould appeare.

4. If Sarah thought ſhe was finally reſtrained, becauſe of age, it was a want in a good woman, and a little ſpot in a faire face: For God is not to be tyed to time, to age and yeares. But is as able when yeares be many, as when they be fewer: Yea age and youth to him are one, if his pleaſure be to have it ſo.

Reade Mal.2. ver.15.

5. Her giving her Maide to her husband, noteth the corruption of that time: from the beginning it was not ſo, for male and female God created them firſt, one for one, and not moe for either at once.

6. Abraham obeyed his wife, and tooke her maide, ſaith the text, and this alſo was a blemiſh, though then endured, as we know. He ſhould have ſaid no, I will not doe it, we will truſt to Gods promiſe, who is able to give us children, though we be old, when it pleaſeth him, and we will tarry his time. But whom hath not a woman deceived, if ſhee were hearkened unto at all times?

Verſe 4.

7. When Agar ſaw ſhe had conceived, her Miſtreſſe was deſpiſed in her eyes: and ſo truly verified we ſee the proverbe;

Aſperius nihil eſt humili cum ſurgit in altum,
Pungitur in celſa ſimia ſede ſedens.

Nothing more proud than a beggar ſet on horſe-backe, and a very Ape, if you place him up aloft, begins to bridle the matter, and take upon him marvellouſly. Secondly, it teacheth, that adverſity is better borne than proſperity, of many one. Thirdly, it ſheweth the end of evill counſell, Sarah is beaten with her owne rod.

Verſe 5.

8. But doth ſhe ſo apply it? No: but in a rage ſhe flyeth upon Abraham, and chideth him, becauſe her maide abuſed her. An angry minde will lay the fault where it is not, and eſpecially an angry woman. Thou doſt me wrong, ſaith ſhee, or mine injury is upon thee. Words that more fitly may be ſaid to many others in the world, namely, to Rulers and Magiſtrates, Judges and Juſtices, whoſe office being, and authority reaching to containe men in their duties, that they injury none, yet doe it not, but give moſt juſt occaſion of this complaint of Sarahs, to bee made againſt them, you doe us wrong, and our injury is upon you: Which being in a godly care and due feeling, better thought of, may worke to their further care, to ſee to their offices, and ſo be a benefit to many thouſands. The words that follow from this angry woman, to wit, The Lord judge betweene thee and me: may tell us and teach us that it is a fearefull thing to give true matter of griefe, to ſuch an one as is not able to make his part good with us, leaveth his cauſe to the juſt revenge of God, that ſeeth and knoweth his wrong, for it is a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of God. Yet many eſteeme this for a gain, when they meet with ſuch weak ones, ones, and never trouble their heads or hearts with the feare of Gods juſtice, to whom thoſe weake ones appeale. But let ſuch remember how, when Moſes held his peace at this unkinde murmuring of Aaron and Miriam, the Lord tooke the wrong in hand and ſhewed his juſtice. Mary in the Goſpell was wronged twice, by two ſeverall perſons, once by her Siſter, and another time by the Phariſie, ſhe anſwered not for her ſelfe, but the Lord at both times tooke her part. Now judge your ſelf, if the Lord doe thus for theſe, whether he will be deafe at the ſighs and grones of ſuch as in no ſort are able to contend, and ſuffer indeed extreame oppreſſion. But I goe no further, onely this for an occaſion to you, further to conſider and meditate with your ſelfe of this matter. Numb. 12.

9. Abraham anſwereth his angry wife with meekneſſe, a vertue in him, and beſt for her to appeaſe her wrath, for fire never quencheth fire, as we all know: But a ſoft anſwer breaketh anger, ſaith the Wiſeman. Verſe 6.

10. Sarah handled her roughly, after Abraham had anſwered, and behold by it the certainty of womens affections: Before ſhe promoted her, and now ſhe plagueth her: before ſhe deſired fruit of her, and now when ſhe ſeeth the hope of it, it will not ſerve. To bee wonne with the egge, and loſt with the ſhell, is a great inconſtancy. Sarahs cauſe was better, but yet her hardneſſe more than happily anſwered the cauſe as it was.

11. Agar runneth away, when ſhe ſhould have mended her fault, and ſubmitted her ſelfe to her Miſtreſſe: ſo take we the courſe in the crookedneſſe of our nature, that wee ſhould avoide many times. Stubborn ſtomacks had rather breake than bowe, but we muſt beware of it.

12. When ſhe was thus fled, the Lord yet rewarded not what ſhe deſerved: but by the Angell admoniſhed her in the wilderneſſe to returne againe: ſo good is hee, that hee regardeth all ſorts, and contemneth not the poore eſtate of a ſervant. Verſe 7.

13. When the Angell asked her whence ſhe came, and whither ſhe would? Shee plainly anſwered and lyed not, that ſhe fled from her Dame. Such truth is an ornament, where it is found in man or woman, and ſuch truth in a ſervant in theſe wicked dayes wherein wee live, O how rare! Verſe 8. Reade Job 31. 15.

14. This counſell to returne, was not given her by and by, neither this finding of her in the wilderneſſe, but after ſhe had taſted a little ſmart, then was it ſaid unto her: teaching us that then is the beſt time for good counſell, when our owne rod hath beaten us, and not before, with many natures. Verſe 9.

15. When he biddeth her humble her ſelfe to her Dame, we ſee the duty of ſervants plainly, and the duty alſo of Dames, truly to be content, and accept to bee appeaſed and pacified with the ſubmiſſion of a ſervant that hath offended, which ſome will never, ſo fierce is their nature, and ſo void of remembrance, that even their Maſter is alſo in heaven; reade the Epiſtle to Philemon, for his ſervant to be received againe, that had gone away. Very fitly alſo we may learne here, not to animate grieved ſervants againſt their maſters, but to counſell them to returne, and be obedient, &c. A note not unfit in theſe dangerous dayes.

16. In the 13. verſe, behold her thankfulneſſe, when ſhe was thus uſed of the Lord; Shee called the name of the Lord that ſpake to her (for this Angell was Chriſt) Thou God lookeſt on me, and ſo forth; a good bringing up in a good houſe, maketh ſome ſhew in her manners, more than at theſe dayes it will doe in many.

Laſtly, ſee how affliction and good counſell will make Hagar come home againe to a good place, and learne to performe more duty where it is due. So ſhould it make others as well as her, but that grace is wanting which was in her.

CHAP. XVII.

The generall Heads in this Chapter, are theſe.

The change of Abrahams name: from the firſt verſe to the ſeventh.
The inſtitution of Circumciſion: from the ſeventh verſe to the fifteenth.
The promiſe of a childe to Sarah: from the fifteenth verſe to the end.

PArticular things worthy our noting may be theſe, and ſuch others. Firſt, the mentioning of his age, wherefore it was: Surely to teach two things: Firſt, that the ſeed which God gave him, was not by ſtrength of nature, but by extraordinary grace, for Sarah and hee both were of theſe great yeeres. Verſe 1. Their age noted for two cauſes.

Secondly, to ſhew how long in patience and faith Abraham expected that gracious promiſe, not doubting, as the Apoſtle ſaith, of the ſame, but ſtrengthned in the faith, giving glory to God, and being fully aſſured, that he which had promiſed was able to doe it. Rom. 4. 19.

2. The words, I am God all-ſufficient, have beene obſerved before, to containe a moſt ſtrong Verſe 1.

A comfort by Gods omnipotency.

stay to a Christian heart in all perplexities and distresses: for if his promises be great, this power of his assureth us he is able to pay and performe them. If we pray and aske any thing, be it never so hard in flesh and bloods conceit, this assureth us we shall obtaine it, if it be good for us. For what cannot he give that is all-sufficient, if it be his good pleasure to doe it? And so in all things (as I say) it is a marvellous fortresse to shield a mans faith from the battring shot of Satans assaulting feares and doubts: In journeying on the way, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils in our owne country, in perils in forren countries, in perils in City, in perils in the wildernesse, and every way it is a stay to us, that God will either deliver out of them, or in them, as shall be best, for he is all-sufficient.

1 Cor. 12. 26.

Verse 1.

3. Observe we the covenant betwixt God and Abraham, how it containeth first a condition of Abraham to be performed, and then a promise of God upon that condition to bee expected. The condition that Abraham must performe, is this, walke before me, and be thou perfect or upright. Gods promise is this, I will be God to thee, and to thy seed after thee, verse 7. This covenant standeth still to all the seed of Abraham after the spirit, that is, to all those that are ingrafted into Christ by a true faith. And therefore as then he and all his seed according to the flesh, (if they would enjoy the promise,) were to performe the condition, so still it is with us, and shall be with all Gods children to the end of the world. True religion in the heart of man or woman shall ever finde God a gracious guide, staffe and stay: and want of the same a just neglecter of us, because we have broken the condition. For this cause it is said by the blessed Apostle, that gaine is not godlinesse, but godlinesse is great gaine, and profitable to all things, as that which hath promise both of this life, and that to come. For this cause was God ever so carefull by his Prophets and Preachers, to call upon the people for sincerity in worship and holy obedience, that they performing their part, he might performe his, to be their God, and their childrens after them for ever. And for this cause againe, were all those exhortations made by good Fathers to their children, and charge, that we reade of in Scripture, that they should feare God, know God, and serve God. That they seeking him, he might be found of them; they loving him, hee might love them; they serving him, he might serve them with his mercy and favour, with his providence and blessings needfull to this life, and with his kingdome and comforts for ever and ever when this life is ended. Marvell not then if either your selfe, your seede, or others and their seede, whom you know be rejected of God, and taste of his wrath by sundry judgements, if you know that you and they doe not walk before him, as here he commandeth Abraham, nor performe the condition with care, whereunto you see God maketh his promise in this place. Then it is said Abram fell on his face: and behold more thankfulnesse for a promise, than is in us after performance.

Godlinesse gaineth God to us and our children, ungodlinesse loseth him to both.

1 Tim. 4. & 6.

Verse 5. His name why changed.

4. The change of Abrams name, was for confirmation of his faith touching the promise, that in all hope and assurance he might expect, and reckon of, what in all truth and certainty would be performed on Gods part, if he beleeved, yea even as surely and verily as now he was called Abraham of Abram, and Sarah of Sarai: So carefull was God ever to underprop the faith of his children by all good helps, that it might abide.

Verse. 7. Circumcision what, and why there, &c.

5. Concerning Circumcision, which is the second head in this Chapter, note what it was, a cutting away of the fore-skin of the flesh of every male childe. Consider why in that part of the body, to shew, that whatsoever is begotten and proceedeth of the seed of man, issuing from that part, is corrupt and sinfull, utterly uncapable of grace and life, except it be renued and borne againe by the Spirit of God, through a gracious receiving it into a gracious covenant, freely made with man and his seed, by a gracious God, that would not the death of a sinner, but that he should know him, serve him, love him, and live for ever. Consider how long it endured, but untill Christ, and no longer of necessity. What was afterwards done, was in regard of weaknesse in the Jews, till the truth of Christ, and the effect of his comming might be better known. For what end? to confirme this promise that now you have seene, that if they walked before God, and were upright, verily and verily, yea even so verily, as that signe was in their flesh, would God be their God, and the God of their seed after them.

Verse. 10. The signe hath the name of the thing signified. Exod. 12. 1 Cor. 10. Luke 8. 11. Titus 3.

6. Note how the signe is called by the name of the thing signified. This cut in the flesh is called Gods covenant, when it was but the signe? and the covenant as you have seene, this, I will be thy God, &c. This is no new kinde of speaking with God, but usuall ever in his Sacraments: here you see it in the Circumcision: afterward in Exodus, when he commeth to the Passeover, he calleth the Lambe the Passeover, which was but the signe of the Angels passing over all those houses that were stricken with the blood upon the doore cheeks. In the new Testament the rock is called Christ, the seed is called the Word, and the water is called the washing of the new birth: And yet may not God be allowed by some men, in the Sacrament of his last Supper, to speake as ever he did in all Sacraments? But because there he saith the bread is his body, &c. therefore it must be so really, carnally, substantially and grossely by Transubstantiation devised of themselves. But by these examples of like speech and phrase, you well see that their assertion is a reall lie, a carnall lie, a substantiall lie, and a grosse lie: and truly said the Father, if they would would regard him, Chriſtus non dubitavit dicere hoc eſt corpus meum, cum ſignum daret corporis ſui. Chriſt doubted not to ſay this is my body, when he delivered but a ſigne of his body.

7. That the childe was not circumciſed before the eighth day, it teacheth us that God hath not tyed ſalvation to the ſacrament, for it had been a hard thing in the Lord to deferre it an houre if the childe had periſhed without it. This anſwereth the feare of ſome good ones, and the falſe boldneſſe of ſome bad ones in theſe dayes touching children that die without Baptiſme, for God is not worſe to us under the Goſpell, than he was to them under the Law, neither leſſe able to ſave now without Baptiſm, then in thoſe dayes he was without circumciſion, the ſeed of the faithfull. This grace was not than free and now bound, then more and now leſſe, then ſtronger, and now weaker; far be it from us ſo to dreame. Davids childe when it dyed before the eighth day, he yet for all that judged it not damned, neither cryed out for it as he did for Abſolon that was circumciſed, but ſaid that he ſhould goe to it, refreſhed himſelfe, cheered his wife, and made his ſervants to wonder at his comfort. And when hee ſaid, hee ſhould goe to it, wee know that he meant not that it was in Hell, or any helliſh Limbus, and that thither himſelfe looked to goe to it, but rather comfortably he conceived it was with the Lord, becauſe the promiſe extended it ſelfe both to the godly and to their ſeed: if further we deſire to thinke of this matter, conſider we this and the like reaſons. No elect can be damned, we know it a principle, whatſoever fooliſh men doe prattle: but ſome unbaptiſed are elect (a thing that no man will deny) therefore ſome unbaptized cannot be damned: which if it be true, then ſee you plainly that ſalvation is not tyed to baptiſme, as ſome imagine. Againe, he that heareth my word, ſaith Chriſt, and beleeveth in him that ſent me, ſhall be ſaved, cannot be damned, Iohn 5.24. but this may one do before he be baptiſed, therefore before a man be baptiſed, he may ſtand in the ſtate of ſalvation, and out of all danger of damnation. The aſſumption is evident in the Eunuch, Acts 8. and others. Forty yeeres it was omitted in the wilderneſſe, and yet hard to ſay that whoſoever ſo dyed was damned, ſince God in that omiſſion intended no cruelty, but mercy and pitty to his people. How doe not theſe men conſider that they put life and death, ſalvation and damnation in the hand of a mortall man, yea of any Miniſter, that if he be diſpoſed for malice to the parents to hurt the childe, may by abſenting himſelfe, and ſeeking delayes in the weakneſſe of the child, ſo far hurt it, as to damne it for ever out of the kingdome of God, and company of all faithfull. O fearefull doctrine! fearefull to all good parents, injurious to thouſands of poore infants, and blaſphemous againſt the bottomeleſſe mercy of a ſweet and tender father, who hath ſaid, I will be thy God, and thy Childes, not adding any condition of Baptiſme, if it cannot be had as it ought; how much ſweeter is it that Luther obſerved, and long before him Bernard Epiſt. 77. in the words of our Saviour: He that beleeveth and is baptiſed, ſhall be ſaved, and hee that beleeveth not ſhall be damned. Marke ſaith Luther, how in the affirmative he mentioneth Baptiſme, but not in the negative. For he doth not ſay, he that is not baptized ſhall be damned, but he that beleeveth not ſhall be damned. Are covenants made by Sacraments, or only ſealed by them? Did not the Primitive Church examine thoſe of yeeres in the faith before they baptiſed them? Why ſo I pray you, but that they might ſhew it was the covenant, not the ſeale; their faith, and not the Sacrament, which chiefly was to be regarded, though the ſeale alſo in no caſe to bee neglected, much leſſe contemned. How many in times paſt deferred their Baptiſme for many yeeres, as Conſtantine, Nazianzene, &c. not therein doing ſo well as they ought, but yet evidently ſhewing the faith of the Church then, that God without baptiſme is able to ſave, and hath not tyed his grace to any ſigne. If he can ſave men of yeares, why not infants? but I will goe no further, onely this I will ſay, that if ſalvation depended upon the Sacrament, it were not onely fit that women who are neereſt in time of weakneſſe, ſhould baptiſe (who yet are forbidden by God and well ordred Churches) but alſo that all ſorts of perſons, and not onely Miniſters, ſhould diſpenſe that holy myſtery, to the end that no poore creature might be caſt away for want of it. But bleſſed be God that hath neither thus inthralled his grace, nor taught his Church in his word, but quite contrary as we ſee in this place, both by telling Abraham his covenant reacheth to his ſeed, and by deferring the ſeale of the ſame, to wit, circumciſion to the eighth day, which he would never have done, if the want of it ſimply had beene damnation. Conclude we therefore with Auſten, Inviſibilis ſanctificatio ſine viſibili ſigno eſſe poteſt, the inviſible ſanctification may be without the viſible ſigne: with Ambroſe, who comfortably ſpeaking of Valentinian dead without Baptiſme: with Bernard, that not want, but contempt of Baptiſme hurteth: and even with Lombard himſelfe, Gratia Dei non eſt alligata ſacramentis. The grace of God is not tyed to the ſacrament, beſide many others that I omit.

8. In your generations, ſaith the Text: and why ſo? Surely to ſhew the uſe of the ſacrament to be, not to take ſin away quite, that it bee no more in the party circumciſed, but onely the imputation of it, that though the venome of it remaine ſo rooted in our nature, that but by death it cannot quite be rooted out, yet laid to our charge it is not for Chriſt his ſake. As therefore you ſee the corne cleane winnowed from his chaffe, yet hath it in nature to yeeld chaffe againe to that which groweth of it when it is ſowen: So doth this nature of ours to thoſe that ſpring of us yeeld corruption and originall ſin, though wee our ſelves were circumciſed or baptiſed and ſo purged thereby from it. Becauſe that purgation is ever to bee underſtood thus, Non ut non ſit in nobis peccatum, ſed ut non imputetur; Not that wee are cleared from the being of any evill in us, but from the imputation of it to us. Therefore then in your generation, ſaith the text, ſhall this ſigne and ſacrament of circumciſion be continued, that is, from the father to the ſon, and then to his ſon againe, and ſo to every male, for as much as in ſin like chaffe being propagated from the father to the ſon, the chaffe of that is now ſprung up muſt be fanned away, as well as his was of whom this blade ſprung up.

Verſe 14. Contempt of Sacraments.

9. Marke in the fourteenth verſe, the puniſhment of them that ſhould contemne this ordinance of God, and remember how God never could abide the contempt of his Sacraments, and that he taketh the wrong done to the outward ſigne as if it were done unto the thing it ſelfe ſignified by it. Becauſe (ſaith he) ſuch an one hath broken my covenant: when he had but neglected the ſigne of his covenant. This may leade us both to the conſideration of that Popiſh folly, and alſo to a true anſwer unto it, that concludeth out of the eleventh Chapter of the firſt Epiſtle of Paul to the Corinthians, that becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, they that eate and drinke unworthily are guilty of the body and blood of Chriſt, &c. Therefore needs it muſt be, that the wicked eate the body and drinke the blood of Chriſt, which they could not doe except they were there really, for by faith they cannot eate that are void of faith. Therefore there is a reall preſence by tranſubſtantiation. When all this in very deed proveth no more thau evidently we ſee in this place, namely, that God attributeth the abuſe of the ſigne to the thing ſignified, ſaying, that becauſe the wicked come unreverently and unpreparedly to thoſe holy ſignes, and receive them ungodlily without faith, therefore they ſhall be guilty even of the body and blood it ſelfe, that is, even as guilty by abuſing the ſigne, as if they had abuſed the thing ſignified it ſelfe: for the contempt of the one redoundeth unto the other. Circumciſion was a ſigne of his covenant, and here hee ſaith, he that contemneth that being the ſigne, is guilty, and ſhall be guilty of the breach of his covenant, which was the thing ſignified: ſo are bread and wine the ſignes of the Lords body and blood, and therefore ſaith the Apoſtle by the ſame manner of ſpeaking, he that abuſeth them by eating and drinking unworthily of them, he ſhall be guilty even of abuſe done unto the thing it ſelfe, the true body and blood of Chriſt. No more proving hereby that the ſignes are changed and become really the thing it ſelfe, than here it is to bee proved that circumciſion was really the covenant it ſelfe, becauſe it is ſaid, he that omitteth the one, breaketh the other. Weake props therefore you ſee Popery hath, if they be with a godly indifferency examined and conſidered, caſting away that moſt wicked wilfulneſſe and prejudice that hurteth ſo many, and will let them ſee nothing.

Verſ. 15. Why Sarai her name was alſo changed.

10. In the fifteenth verſe you ſee God changeth alſo the name of Sarai as well as he had done to Abraham, and ſaith her name ſhall bee no more Sarai, but Sarah, and hee will bleſſe her, &c. Where we may note, how it being a great honour to Abraham, ſo to have his name changed by God, he would have his wife alſo partaker of the ſame with him, as teaching thereby that what befalleth the husband, either to weale or woe, reacheth it ſelfe alſo in ſome ſort to the wife as a partaker with him in the ſame. No queſtion but ſome part of this doctrine ſoundeth well to women, and they readily catch at it, but I doubt twice, whether all of it doe ſo or no. My meaning is, they moſt gladly heare that any honour of their husbands ſhould reach unto them, and exalt them alſo: but to partake with their husbands in affliction and croſſes, in ſorrowes and cares, in reproaches and ignominy cauſeleſſe, in bitterneſſe and unthankfulneſſe of an unkinde world, is it as ſweet a doctrine to them? I doe but move the queſtion, let all women anſwer it in their hearts to themſelves inſtead of me.

Women thinke of this.

Verſe 18. Fathers affection to children, and childrens to Fathers. Note.

11. In the 18. verſe, but O that Iſmael might live in thy ſight, ſaith this great Patriarke. See and ſee the heart of a father to his childe. Though God here promiſed more ſeed unto him, and that he ſhould be a father even of many Nations, and his progeny like the Stars of heaven for number, yet all that removeth not his affection from that one that he had already, to wit, Iſmael, but ſtill his heart is to him, and O that he may live alſo. So are Fathers, but God knoweth ſo are not ever children to them againe. The parent cryeth for life to the childe, and the childe for death to the parent. O that Iſmael may live ſaith Abraham, that I may enjoy my childe: but O that Abraham may die doth Iſmael ſay, that I might inherit his land and goods, and bee a yong maſter or miſtreſſe, and ruffle it out: yea, when will this old father and mother of mine be gone? I thinke they will live ever. Too true this is, and let it teach parents wiſdome to moderate affections, though they retaine nature, to doe what ſhall be neceſſary and fit for their children.

Verſe 23. Great obedience.

12. We have heard the commandement of God touching Circumciſion: now in the 23. verſe marke wee the obedience of Abraham to the ſame, how much ſoever fleſh and blood might ſtartle and ſtagger at it, marvelling why God ſhould enjoyne ſuch a thing, and in ſuch a part of the body, &c. Abraham I ſay caſteth no ſtops, neither admitteth of any humane objections, but obediently circumciſeth both himſelfe and his ſonne, and all that were in his houſe, yea even

even the ſame day did he it that God commanded him, where we thinke it great readineſſe, if after many and many biddings, admonitions and warnings, wee be brought to doe ſomething that God biddeth us doe. Againe, ſomewhat conſider we here of the conditions of Abrahams family, that ſo willingly ſuffered their maſter to circumciſe them, without either reſiſtance or imagination that their Maſter was madd to ſeeke ſuch a thing at their hands, as to uncover all their ſhames, and to cut them there, as ſome others would have thought. Surely it is a notable token of that inſtruction and diſcipline that was in Abrahams family, for had they not beene well trained in the way of godlineſſe, they would ſooner have mocked, than obey their Maſter.

A godly family.

Laſtly, but alas, why ſpared he not his owne ſonne, and his onely ſonne, in this hard action of cutting? ſurely, becauſe the commandement reached to all males, and therefore to him as well as others. Learne then parents that in obedience to God you muſt bee no more partiall to your owne children than to others, but as ſtraitly require duty of them, as of any others, yea rather, though many doe it leſſe. But I ſay no more.

Duties to God binde all.

CHAP. XVIII.

The generall heads of this Chapter.

The hoſpitality of Abraham: from the 1. to the 9. verſe.
A confirmation of the promiſe: from the 9. to the 16.
Gods wrath againſt the Sodomites: to the end.

PArticulars many, as firſt that hee ſaith the Lord appeared, and then by and by ſaith upon it, three men, noting thereby unto us, that as we heare him, ſo we muſt ſee him: but we heare him onely by his meſſengers, and ſo we ſee him not in nature or eſſence, but in ſuch teſtimonies of his preſence as it pleaſeth him to give. Abraham alſo, ſaith the Text, ſat in his doore in the heate of the day; we many times in theſe dayes are not to be ſeene, neither in heate nor cold, if wee ſee any that needs refreſhing, we hide our ſelves, and ſave an almes. Of Chriſt it is ſaid, Iohn 9. that as he paſſed he ſaw a blinde man, &c. He by paſſing ſaw, and wee by ſeeing paſſe all pittileſſe and comfortleſſe to the diſtreſſed. Thinke we of it, &c.

Verſ. 1. Verſ. 2. How we ſee and heare God.

2 In that hee calleth them men, being indeed Angels, and no men, wee note that cuſtome of the Scripture, that a name doth not ever conſtitute a nature. Circumciſion is called the covenant as you heard before, the Lambe the Paſſeover, the ſeed the word, the divell is called Samuel, and many ſuch.

Verſe 2.

3 For their eating, wee know it was but diſpenſation for the time, not for any neceſſity of nature. And if you aske what became of the meate which they did eate, the Schoolemen will readily anſwer you, that it did vaniſh in the chawing, as water doth in boyling. Wiſer men aske no ſuch queſtions, and therefore need no ſuch anſwer. In the extraordinary dealings of God, what need wee to ſift his ſecrets, and to be wiſe above ſobriety?

How the Angels did eate.

4 Touching his hoſpitality, you ſee here how earneſtly he inviteth them, he ran to meet them, ſaith the Text: how reverently he uſeth them being but ſtrangers to him, he bowed down to them: and ſpeaking to one of them, in whom appeared to be moſt Majeſty, hee giveth him the title of Lord: he accounteth it favour to him if they turne in to him, and take ſuch as God hath ſent: hee termeth himſelfe their ſervant, and in a word hee prayeth them not to goe from him in any caſe; all teſtimonies of a courteous and bountifull good houſe-keepers nature, and true tokens of hearty welcome if they came. It is an old ſaying, Frænum & veſtes veniendi ſunt tibi teſtes; When a man catcheth a man by his horſe bridle, or by his owne clothes, and will not part with his hold till he have his petition, they bee tokens of no words of courſe, but inward truth and loving welcome if a man come, where as twenty fine phraſes with them, and if, and will you, and ſuch like, be but Court holy water as the Proverb is: a very hearty houſe-holder therefore was Abraham, and that would the Lord have noted in theſe words and geſtures in this place to theſe ſtrangers. One thinking of theſe words of Abrahams, more ſeriouſly (If I have found favour, &c.) noteth by them, that when one commeth to us to whom we may doe good, we rather than he, receive a benefit, for the poore man peradventure receiveth of us a penny, and we of the Lord an hundred-fold, and eternall life alſo. Whether had Elias the better that received a Cake, or the Widow that by him received ſuch comfort? How then may the true conſideration hereof quicken us in all charitable and mercifull actions towards our Brethren diſtreſſed, and needing our pitty and comfort?

A hearty houſholder loved of God.

5 In that he nameth a morſell of Bread, and yet performed better, we ſee the antiquity of this modeſty, that of a mans owne things he ſhould ſpeake with the leaſt. So uſe we to invite men to a pittance, or to ſome particular morſell, when yet wee intend ſomewhat better. But whatſoever Abraham made ready, was all but moderate, in compariſon of that ungodly exceſſe that ſome Verſe 5. True welcome wherein it conſiſteth.

ſome now uſe, rather to ſhew their owne pride, than to welcome the gueſt. True welcome never conſiſted in meates and drinkes, and multitude of diſhes, but in that affection of an inward heart, which truly hath appeared in a cup of water, where better ability wanted, and which paſſeth all diſhes and meats under the Sunne.

Verſe 5.

6 In their anſwer, doe as thou ſayeſt, we ſee firſt how they are content to conceale a truth for a time, to wit, that they were Angels and not men. Secondly, how they admit of his kinde of offer, without either proud contempt, or ſteme frowardneſſe.

Verſ. 6. Women ſhould have rule in their owne houſes, and how.

7 Abraham made haſte, ſaith the ſixt verſe, another token of a good and through heart, and went to his wife to tell her that ſhe might doe her part, to his wife againe, I ſay, Sarah, and let them marke it that acquaint rather every Droy in the houſe, yea the kitching maid rather with any intertainment to be given in their houſe, than their Wives: their Wives muſt bee Cyphers to fill up a place, and make the number thus, or ſo, but have any rule, diſpoſition or government of ſuch things, as yet properly belong to their place and ſexe, or to bee acquainted with their Husbands purpoſes, ſtrangers, cheere, or any thing, they may not. Well, good Abraham went here to his wife, when he was to have gueſts to meet with him, and hath left behinde him an order of good rule in every houſe in ſo doing, and chalked out ſuch Hen-huſwives, or ſuch ſowre grubs as will not follow him in the like, ever I ſpeake of ſuch, as whoſe callings are not contrary to this order, by height of eſtate in the Common-wealth.

Women keepe in, &c.

8 But where found he Sarah his wife? that alſo in this place may we marke, ſurely in her Tent: within doores (I warrant you) and not abroad, not in the Market place, not in the Taverne, not in the Fields, not in any place but where ſhee ſhould bee, and where good women for the moſt part are, in her owne Tent. You know what the Apoſtle writeth of ſome women, to wit, that they are idle, and being idle, they learne to goe about from houſe to houſe, yea, they are not onely idle, but alſo pratlers and buſie bodies, ſpeaking things which are not comely, &c. Let all good women marke it, and take heed of it. Sarah did not ſo, but was within her Tent, and there her husband ſeeketh and findeth her.

Verſ. 6, 7.

9 Sarah muſt make ready the flowre, and he goeth to the folds. Mulieres muliebria curant, & viri mulieribus muliebria committunt. Women regard womens matters, and men commit ſuch things unto them, as I noted before: he doth what is fit for him, and not ſo fit for the woman, and good women uſurpe no more upon the mans office, than they would have the man to doe upon theirs. The Text ſaith, He haſted, Sarah haſted, the Roy haſteth, and all this teacheth truly the cheerfulneſſe of their hearts in that they did, and how kindly and wiſely they conſidered circumſtances, that their ſtrangers might be weary, and peradventure want ſome refreſhing quickly; that they were travellers, and to paſſe on their journey, not to be ſtayed over long, in curioſity to be fine, or prodigality to be pompous. Altogether confirming the common proverbe, Optimum condimentum beneficii celeritas, & bis dat qui cito dat. The beſt ſawce to a good turne, is to doe it quickly, and who giveth ſo, giveth twice.

Laſtly, he ſtood himſelfe by them; noting his care to ſee all well, and to have them tended, and warranting our like cuſtome in ſome ſort either to attend (if ſo there be need) in our own houſes, or to ſit the loweſt and laſt downe. Their eating was touched before, yet here being mentioned ſo expreſſly, that they did eate, your marginall note anſwereth, that as God gave them bodies for a time, ſo gave he them the faculties of the ſame bodies, as to walk, to eate and drink, and ſuch like. And thus much in the firſt part of this Chapter ſhall ſuffice to have noted.

The ſecond part of the Chapter.

Verſ. 9.

THe ſecond part of the Chapter I told you was a renewing, or a repetition of the promiſe touching a childe to be given to Abraham, and in this alſo ſome things to be noted, as that theſe ſtrangers asked for Sarah, ſaying, Where is Sarah thy wife? Some men thinke, that in thoſe dayes women came not ſo uſually abroad to the Tables, as now they doe amongſt us.

Miniſters.

Others marke how after a while theſe Angels are bolder and more familiar than at firſt, and ſo ſay they, ought the Miniſters and Meſſengers of God, by little and little, more and more, to acquaint themſelves with them to whom they are ſent, and to be familiar.

Verſe 10.

2 In that he ſaith he will returne, being but a ſtranger, and not requeſted, wee ſee the honeſt ſimplicity and plaine friendſhip that then was uſuall, farre from our nice curioſity in theſe dayes, as alſo the bleſſing of hoſpitality, he that once receiveth an Angel, and uſeth him well, ſhall have him againe.

Verſe 10. Women deſirous to heare and know every thing.

3 Sarah heard in the Tent doore which was behinde him, a patterne of that curious nature that eſpecially ſwayeth in women, they muſt heare and know every thing, or elſe they are not quiet many of them, and to that end, if in preſence they cannot be, often they are harkening behinde doores and wals, where they may heare and not be ſeene, as here Sarah was, a fault many times in good a woman otherwiſe, that her eare itcheth too much. It is not true in all, but in too many, for ſome be ſad and diſcreet, both to governe what they know, and to bee content with ignorance of that which they ſhould not know, the number of them I wiſh farre more, and the number of the other farre leſſe.

4 She laughed, and it noteth her incredulity, wherein ſhe reſpecteth rather the order of nature, than beleeved the promiſe of God: yea a ſhrewd meaſure of unbeliefe it noteth, for laughing is more than not beleeving, and had ſhe not beleeved, it had beene her fault, but both to give no credit and to laugh too, was a more fault. Verſe 12.

5 But ſhe laughed within her ſelfe, ſaith the text, and it may againe in her praiſe teach us, that modeſt men and women laugh ſometimes, but modeſtly, and as may become their places well; not as the foole of whom Ieſus Syrach ſpeaketh, when he ſaith, A foole lifteth up his voyce with laughter, but a wiſe man doth ſcarce ſmile ſecretly. Not unlike to which is that alſo in the nineteenth Chapter, A man may be knowne by his looke, and one that hath underſtanding, may bee perceived by the marking of his countenance. A mans garment, and his exceſſive laughter and going, declare what man he is. How wiſe men and fooles laugh. Chap. 18. 10. Verſ. 28. 27.

6 After I am old ſhall I luſt? ſaith ſhe, &c. Shewing thereby that ſhee conſidered what is fit for all perſons to conſider, namely, what is agreeable or not agreeable with their yeares, age, and time: for that becommeth younger which will not become elder; and contrariwiſe againe. A good thought then in every age, Since I am thus or thus, doth this or that become mee? The like might be ſaid of divers eſtates and callings.

7 In calling him Lord, not I, but the Apoſtle Peter noteth her reverence and obedience to her Husband in an humble woman-hood: and hee willeth all wives to learne of her what ſhall be their great praiſe as was hers if they doe it. If the Argument follow, that becauſe ſhe called him Lord, ſhe obeyed him, and regarded him in his place, how ſhould it alſo follow, that whom ſo often wee call Lord, Lord, our true Lord and GOD, him wee ſhould obey, regard and reverence.

8 The Lord that knoweth all our ſecrets, knew that ſhe laughed behinde the doore, and asked why ſhe did ſo, adding theſe words, Shall any thing be hard to the Lord? By which words we may remember that uſuall diviſion of the things wherein our faith uſeth to ſlip, that they are either matters touching Gods will, Gods conſtancy, or Gods power: as alſo what godly device teacheth us to oppoſe againſt them; namely, theſe three, his goodneſſe, his truth, and his power: to a doubt of his will, the firſt; to a doubt of his ſtedfaſtneſſe in his promiſe, the ſecond; and to all doubt of his power, his might and omnipotency, the third. Sarah reſpecting too much the courſe of Nature, doubted of the laſt, and you ſee how the Angell anſwereth by his mighty omnipotency, Shall any thing be hard to the Lord? No. Now becauſe this place is abuſed by Papiſts, judge I pray you how this argument followeth: He is able to give a Childe, which he in good will hath promiſed, therefore hee hath and doth in the Sacrament make Bread his body really; which he never willed, meant or promiſed. He will doe it, ergo he can doe it, is ever true: but hee can doe it, therefore he will doe it, doth not ever follow. I ſpeake not what God cannot doe, and yet no want of power in him, but a more perfect power, as it ſhould be a weakneſſe in him, and not a power if he could doe them. But this I ſay, if an Argument from his power to his will doe not follow, then much leſſe for want of both power and will to his deed doth any ſequell lie. I call that power now, which indeed, as I ſaid, were no power but weakneſſe, if God could doe, his word or his nature being to the contrary. But what doe they conſider, that bring doctrines to the Word, and would have the Word confirme them, not learning all doctrines from the Word as they ſhould. Verſe 14. Privy mockers marke it, A poſſe ad eſſe.

The third part of the Chapter.

THe third part of the Chapter beginneth at the 10. verſe, where wee reade that Abraham went to bring them on the way, noted no doubt by the Lord, to tell how every way Abraham uſed his gueſts with his beſt kindneſſe. Alacriter invitare, to invite heartily, Liberaliter tractare, to feaſt cheerfully, comiter dimittere, and to ſend away friendly and kindly a ſtranger or Gueſt, it is perfect hoſpitalitie, and very true and commendable curteſie. And this we ſee here was in Abraham, who unto the former added this, that at parting he brought them on the way. Surely this mention made of theſe things by the Lord, is a very great teſtimony of his great good liking of them. Verſe 16. Perfit curteſie

2 Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I doe? See the love of God to his faithfull children and ſervants, love concealeth nothing. The Lord loveth Abraham, and therefore hee cannot hide from him what he is about to doe. A friend will impart his minde to his friend, and whoſoever regard what God commandeth, as Abraham did, God calleth them his friends; ſaying, Ye are my friends, if ye doe whatſoever I command you. Verſe 17. Iohn 15. 14.

3 Wee may marke in it, how the judgements of God are revealed to the godly now and the, with their intents and meanings, when wicked men enjoy no ſuch bleſſing: Surely (ſaith the Prophet) the Lord God will doe nothing, but he revealeth his ſecret unto his ſervants the Prophets, Amos 3. 7.

not

not meaning ever in all things, but ſometimes and in ſome things, eſpecially in his judgements toward that people of the Iſraelites. So would God here impart his purpoſe to Abraham his Prophet and Servant.

Verſe 18. The Lord will be good, becauſe he hath beene ſo. O ſweet!

4 Seeing he ſhall be a great Nation, &c. And who ſhall make him ſo great a Nation? Surely the Lord, who had now already promiſed and determined it. Why then becauſe the Lord hath beene good, he will be good, and adde mercy to mercy? Indeed it is ſo, and what a comfort is this? Can any tongue expreſſe, or heart conceive this goodneſſe of the Lord? To draw an argument from his firſt mercy to a ſecond, and from a ſecond to a third, and ſo ever on from mercy to mercy. O ſweetneſſe and goodneſſe! This knew David well, and therefore in every Pſalme almoſt he prayed him to be good to him, becauſe hee hath beene good to him before: Thou haſt ſet me at libertie when I was in trouble, therefore ſtill have pitty upon me, and regard me, &c. In the Epiſtle to the Romanes the Apoſtle thus reaſoneth alſo, concluding that ſince God had not ſpared his owne Sonne, but gave him for us to death, therefore it could not be but with him he ſhould give us all things alſo. Man uſeth to reaſon thus, I have beene good, therefore hee may not grate upon me any more; and I have done a very great good unto him, therefore in all equity and reaſon I am not further to be urged. But our ſweet and gracious God quite contrary: I have beene good, and therefore I will be ſtill and ever good; and the greater benefits I have ſhewed, the more ſure it is I will not ſtand at the leſſer, but from the more to the leſſe with me ſhall be ever a ſure ſequell. And if I have beſtowed mine owne Sonne upon man, even to death, how ſhould it be thought, that with him I will not give farre leſſer things alſo? O ſweet againe, I muſt needs ſay, for what man or woman hath not thouſands of mercies from the Lord, and therein even ſo many comforts to his heart, that hee will never forſake him? but I may boldly and with a cheerfull heart, ſay, O Lord bee mercifull unto mee, not becauſe I have beene a good Servant to thee, but becauſe thou haſt beene a good God to me. If my obedience were to be the Argument why thou ſhouldeſt ſhew me favour, my heart were gone, for I know mine owne wickedneſſe, and my ſinne is ever before me. But ſince thy former goodneſſe in thy ſweet mercy, are arguments to thee of more goodneſſe to be ſhewed by thee to the former, O Lord, I abound with ſuch arguments to move thy Majeſty (bleſſed bee thy name for them) and I pray thee, my God and my comfort, ſo gracious and kinde, to adde mercy to mercy, favour to favour, and helpe to helpe in this need of mine, that I owing thee now my ſelfe, for ſo many mercies, I may for more owe thee more than my ſelfe, or my ſelfe many and many times to love thee, to feare thee, to ſerve thee, to praiſe thee, whileſt I have a day to live. Thus may we chaw this comfort in our mindes, and taſte the ſweet of it.

5 Yet if we have any care of the Lords glory, ſurely the Lord hath a quick eye to ſee it, and even for that alſo in mercy he will doe for us and to us, for behold what followeth here as a ſecond reaſon why the Lord will reveale his purpoſe to Abraham, and hide nothing from him: For I know him, ſaith he, that he will command his Sonnes, &c. A good thing to move us all to obedience generally, which the Lord ever ſeeth; and to this particularly, of teaching and inſtructing our families and companies, which the Lord hereby (to ſet an obſervation of it) moſt greatly commendeth. Abraham did it, and God highly extolleth it: we cannot abide it, and ſhall he likewiſe praiſe us? Abraham did it ſo many hundred yeares agoe, and is it now but a new device, that is not needfull? Surely conclude thus, and it is moſt true, hee inſtructed his family that they might know as he knew, and religion, and the ſervice of God, live in them to the glory of God, when he was gone; and for this God will hide nothing from ſo careſull a Servant: we will not doe it, but are both ignorant our ſelves, and let others be alſo, caring not what becommeth of Gods glory, either in our life, or after our death, and therefore from ſo careleſſe wretches he will hide all his ſecrets, all his counſels, yea all his comforts, and the light of his countenance for ever. Beware, beware then, whileſt we have time to amend and reforme this fault.

Inſtruction of our families, how highly God liketh.

Verſe 20. The horror of ſinne.

6 When the Lord ſaith, The cry of Sodome, &c. He would give us thereby to conſider well the horror of ſinne. So great and ſo ugly, ſo foule and grievous, that it even cryeth and ſhriketh in the eares of the Lord for vengeance: Cain, thy brothers blood cryeth to mee out of the earth, &c.

Shall we then nouriſh and foſter that with ſuch pleaſure, that day nor night ceaſeth to ſolicite the Lord againſt us, yea, to cry in his eare, that he would awake and plague us? Surely, that man that would crie ſtill againſt us but to man, wee would abhorre and hate, and that which cryeth louder than all the men in the world can, and that to God himſelfe, and for greater puniſhment than any man can inflict, we are ſo farre from hating, that wee hate him that perſwadeth us to hate it.

This is ſtrange madneſſe, if we would conſider it. The Drunkards drunkenneſſe cryeth againſt him, and will not ſuffer the Lord to reſt till he puniſh it, and yet he loveth it, ſo doth the Swearer, Adulterer, and ſuch like, their ſinnes cry againſt them, &c.

Verſe 20.

7 When the Lord ſaith, Their ſinne is exceeding grievous, wee may rightly note the wonderfull derfull patience, and long ſuffering of the Lord, who beareth and forbeareth, ſpareth and ſuffereth, holdeth and ſtayeth, expecting amendment, till many times the ſinnes bee horrible and exceeding grievous, as now they were in Sodome. Now hath hee this ſlowneſſe toward ſinners that will not amend, and is he void of affection towards broken hearts, that would doe better if they could, and daily doe better as they can?

Gods great patience. Note this, and be of good comfort.

Farre bee ſuch ſowre conceits from us: and no leſſe farre to preſume to ſinne, becauſe hee is patient. For we ſee here, though hee ſtay long, yet he commeth at laſt; ſurely, and truely, yea dreadfully and terribly, with ſtreames of fire and brimſtone from heaven, upon ſuch as preſumed to goe on in their wickedneſſe: notwithſtanding any admonition to the contrary, till their ſinnes were exceeding grievous.

8 But the Lords phraſe is, that He will goe ſee if all be true or no. Not therein implying any want of knowledge in himſelfe, how all was, who cannot be deceived or ignorant of any thing; but by an humane ſpeech, after our manner, giving us to note, how ever in juſtice, knowledge of a fault ſhould goe before puniſhment of the ſame. And credulity avoided, to beleeve the worſt, as a horrible vice. It blotted Putiphar, it blotted David, and it blotteth and blacketh whoſoever is ſpotted with it.

Verſe 21. Knowledge before puniſhment. Overmuch credulity a blot. Reade upon Gen. 11. 5.

9 When Abraham heard the Lords judgements againſt Sodome, what doth he? As wee doe in theſe dayes? Care not who ſink, if we ſwimme, paſſe not who periſh, if we be ſafe? No, no, ſuch ſinfull unfeelingneſſe is farre from the heart of ſo good a man. And the Text telleth us, He ſtood yet before the Lord, and entreth into a zealous and carefull conſideration, both of the Lords glory and juſtice, as alſo of the good of as many faithfull as might be found in Sodome, and with all humility pleadeth for them both: his words you ſee, and marke them very well.

A true touched heart with regard of God and his brethren.

O this heart! where is it now amongſt us, either to tender what prophane tongues may ſpeake of our God, or to pitie and pray againſt the intended puniſhments of our Brethren? Alas! (as I ſaid) we care not for any mans woe but our owne, and this true love to God and man is decayed amongſt us.

We will ſcarce pray for our neare neighbours that live daily amongſt us. Much leſſe doe the eſtates of many righteous people in forren Countries affect us. But learne wee in the feare of God, from our Father Abraham, here to have a better heart, whoſe true touch and hearty ſpeeches in this place, ſhall witneſſe againſt us, if wee doe not.

10 But why did Abraham dreame of any righteous in ſo vile a place? Surely, becauſe he was a good man, and hoped the beſt of all places, ſo teaching us to leave that judging veine, and condemning braine, that we love too much. A good heart hopeth God hath his portion, and all be not bad.

Good men hope the beſt.

11 If fifty, if forty, if thirty, if twenty, if ten righteous had beene found, a promiſe from the Lord we ſee here, that He would ſpare the whole City for their ſakes; And ſhall wee not ſee in it the price of his Children with him, whatſoever the World thinketh of them, as alſo what good commeth many times to the wicked, by, and for them? The world hateth and maliceth, mocketh and contemneth the godly, making more account of one prophane Eſau, than of twenty true-hearted Iacobs: but the Lord, whoſe love is life, and worthy regard indeed, more eſteemeth one Iacob, one true Iſraelite, one faithfull Servant of his, than hee doth ten thouſand of worldlings, of uncircumciſed hearts and eares, yea ten of them ſhall ſtand before him, even to turne and alter him, as I may ſay, from anger to mercy, when hee ſhall vouchſafe, but for their ſakes to reſpect ten thouſand thouſands of ſuch as the world hath honoured for magnificoes, and men and women of great account. O ever then may my ſoule and yours, ſeeke and ſue for the Lords love, rather than the worlds liking, and ſay with the ſweet Singer of Iſrael:

Of what price Gods children are with him.

The greater ſort crave worldly goods, and riches doe imbrace,
But Lord grant us thy countenance, thy favour and thy grace:
For thou thereby ſhalt make our hearts more joyfull and more glad,
Than they that of their Corne and Wine full great increaſe have had.

And let theſe Dogges and Swine of Sodome behold, whether good or evill commeth to a Land, a City, a Houſe, by ſuch as feare God. For tens ſake they all ſhould have found mercy, and have eſcaped this fearfull plague of fire and brimſtone from heaven; and are theſe then the hurts of a place, the woes of a Common-wealth, ſuch as muſt be not onely weeded out, but digged and rooted out, or elſe we ſhall not be well? O price with God, and profit to men, of ſuch men and women whereſoever they are, more than we thinke of, and let us ever hereafter conſider it better.

12 In that he calleth them righteous, in hope ſome were ſo, who yet were not circumciſed, plainly it ſheweth, that in thoſe dayes this popiſh doctrine was not hatched, that ſalvation is tyed to the Sacrament. If Righteouſneſſe then might conſiſt without circumciſion, why may not children now be ſaved without Baptiſme, which is in the place of Circumciſion, ſo long as no contempt contempt, but Gods ſpeedy viſitation by death is the cauſe. This is a new doctrine you ſee then, and not ours, which was embraced and held of Father Abraham ſo many hundred yeares agoe. And I warrant you, this Angell, which was Chriſt, controlleth not his ſpeech as untrue, but letteth it paſſe as very right. And as he tyeth not righteouſneſſe and ſalvation to the Sacrament, ſo neither doth he it to his owne line, but even then he knew it true that Peter long after preached, that though God choſe him and his for his peculiar people, yet in all other Nations alſo he might have (if it pleaſed him) ſome.

Acts 10.

13 When hee asketh whether the Iudge of all the world ſhould not doe right, he reaſoneth from the Lords office, and teacheth us, that with humble boldneſſe we may doe ſo in our earneſt deſires: as ſhall not the father pitie his childe, and helpe him, &c. Lord thou art my Father then, for thy place ſake, pitie mee, helpe mee, ſave mee, and keepe mee, I beſeech thee, and pray thee, &c.

With what humility God is to be prayed unto.

14 In this Title of Duſt and Aſhes, ſo often applyed to himſelfe, we ſee all of us, both the humble conceit that this great Patriarch had of himſelfe, as alſo the reverent humility he ſpake to his God withall. Two ſpeciall things for our uſe in theſe dayes, wherein we are puffed up, and ſwell with filthy pride and forgetfulneſſe of our ſelves, as though we were made of ſome farre more precious matter than Duſt and Aſhes, and wherein we ſpeake to our God as unreverently and raſhly, as ever did any prophane minde; for many of us, without any ſuch ſpirit of lowlineſſe and dread, as here was in Abraham, not conſidering what we are, and what God is, how unworthy wee are to ſpeake or breathe before him; wee ſwap us downe in our places moſt unreverently, and then wee ſtare and looke, and yawne, and huddle and tumble up ſome unliked prayers of the Lord, not onely without any profit to us, but to our great harme, for ſo undutifull uſing the name of God. Well thinke hereafter of this example of Abraham better, and amend both theſe faults.

15 It is worthy marking againe, how Abraham iterateth his requeſts one after another, from fifty to ten, and yet the Lord is not angry, but heareth him patiently, and kindly maketh anſwer to every one, He will not doe it for ſo many ſake. And is he changed for this kindneſs now, if I doe the like upon occaſion? No, no, our God is one for ever, not ſubject to change, and therefore boldly and comfortably doe as your need conſtraineth, hee will abide you, and anſwer you as ſhall be fit.

O Comfort.

Laſtly, marke it, and forget it never, Abraham maketh an end of entreating, before God, of hearing him. O ſweet, O deare and gracious God! What joy is this? can my ſoule wiſh a greater mercy, than that I may ſpeake on, and he will heare, yea, and that I ſhall give over firſt, and not hee, when once I ſue unto his Majeſty? Lord make us profitable uſers of this mercy.

CHAP. XIX.

The chiefe heads be three:

The care of God for the ſafety of his faithfull: to the 24. verſe.
A fearfull example of his wrath againſt ſinne: to the 29. verſe.
The fall and fault of Lot: from thence to the end.

Verſ. 1. One place of Scripture expoundeth another.

PArticular things in this Chapter, obſerve we may many, as in the former.

1 Hee calleth them Angels, who before were called Men, and therein wee may note the manner of the Scriptures and Word of God, how it uſeth by one place to lighten and expound another, expreſſing more plainly to avoid doubt, what before was more obſcure, and might cauſe doubt. Againe, in ſo expreſly ſaying they were Angels, that fooliſh conceit is overthrowne, that they were theſe three, the three Perſons in Trinity, as alſo that moſt wicked blaſphemie of ſome Heatheniſh ſpirits, that Sodome was deſtroyed by Negromancy, to wit, by fire procured by that Art: when the Lord, as hee uſeth, executed his wrath by his Angels.

Verſe 4.

2 When it is ſaid in the fourth verſe, from the young to the old, even all the people from all quarters. You ſee the ſtate of that City, how generall the evill was, and how fearfully it had ſpread it ſelfe, thorow all the veines and members of that place, that there was none good; but the Spirit of God ſaith, all, all. A lamentable eſtate of any place whatſoever, when iniquity ſhall overflow all, and would God wee drew not toward ſuch fearfull meaſure now under the Goſpell, when it may bee obſerved to a May-game, a Beare-bayting, a prophane Stage-play upon the Lords day, and many ſuch things, how we compaſſe the place round about, as here is ſaid theſe Sodomites did, from the young to the old, even all the people from all quarters. Verily the words of the Holy Ghoſt doe jumpe upon us, and may very truely be ſaid of us, and the Lord prevent by mercy

mercy and favour, in changing us from ſuch lewd likings, that ſuch judgement and wrath doe not jumpe alſo upon us, as it did upon theſe men. Marke againe you may, when hee ſaith, All were ſuch, the nature of ſinne how it ſpreadeth and infecteth; firſt one, and then another, till it have gone over all. It is the devils leaven, which ſtayeth not, till it have levened the whole lumpe, and therefore happy is the place where it beginneth not: for it ſpreadeth quickly, and largely, and dangerouſly.

Verſe 5. Cuſtome of ſin

3 Their ſhameleſſe ſpeech to have the men brought out that they might know them, very notably diſcovereth unto us, the impudency that ſinne effecteth in time, when it once getteth rule. Surely it taketh all modeſty, and ſhame, and honeſty away, and proveth the ſaying to be moſt true: Conſuetudo peccandi tollit ſenſum peccati; The cuſtome of ſinne taketh away all ſenſe and feeling of ſinne. At the beginning men ſhame to have it knowne what they doe, though they feare not to doe it, and they will uſe all cloaks and covers that poſſible they can, to hide their wickedneſſe. But at laſt they grow bold and impudent, as theſe men did, even to ſay what care wee. And why? Certainly, becauſe this is the courſe of ſinne, in Gods judgement, that it ſhall benum and harden the heart wherein it is ſuffered, and ſo ſeare up the conſcience, and conceit in time, that there ſhall bee no ſhame left, but ſuch a thick Vizard pulled over the face, that it can bluſh at nothing, either to ſay it or doe it. Behold theſe brazen browed wretches here, who after long uſe of ſinne, (no doubt at firſt more ſecret) are now come to require theſe men openly, and to tell the cauſe, that they might know them, without all ſhame or ſparke of ſhame, in, and at ſo horrible abomination. Marvell not then any more, that the Adulterer bluſheth not, the Drunkard ſhameth not, nor the blaſpheming Swearer hideth not his face. You ſee the reaſon, cuſtome to doe evill in that kind, hath utterly bereaved him of feeling and ſhame, as it did theſe Sodomites. A heavy and fearfull caſe, for Gods plague is even at the doore of ſuch people, as you ſee it was here for theſe Sodomites. It was well ſaid of him that ſaid it, if God take from a man his bodily eye that he cannot ſee, or his bodily eare that he cannot heare, every man ſeeth the judgement and perceiveth the loſſe: but when God in wrath taketh away the inward eye and eare of the minde and heart, that what ſinne ſoever hee commiteth, hee neither ſeeth, nor heareth, nor feeleth, no man thinketh this a plague, or any rod of GOD. But O fearefull plague! &c.

Verſe 7. Mild ſpeech.

4 In Lots going out to them, ſhutting the doore after him, and calling them Brethren, wee may note a godly diſcretion and wiſedome in dealing, to pacifie outragious beaſts. Fire quencheth not fire, but milder and ſofter ſpeeches, many times, and moſt times appeaſeth diſorder, though here it could not, for the ſtrength of ſinne that had ſo mightily poſſeſſed them. The bruit beaſts are overcome with faire ſpeeches, and become tame: a ſoft anſwer breaketh anger, when a cutting tongue ſtirreth up wrath. Full of grace is that man or woman, that can be milde and ſweet to effect goodneſſe.

Verſe 8. Evill meanes.

5 The offer of his Daughter to them, is no example to be followed of us, or liked in him. It ſheweth his praiſe, in being carefull for his gueſts, but it publiſheth his ſhame, in ſeeking evill meanes. It ſheweth how greatly Lot hated that ſinne, which then ruled amongſt them, and how carefully he looked to his children, who in that lewd place, being young women, remained yet ſpotleſſe.

Verſe 8. Love, care, and curteſie to ſtrangers.

6 When he ſaith, For this cauſe came they under my roofe, meaning defence and ſafety from injury and wrong: learne to love ſtrangers within your gates, in your Houſes or Commonwealth, and be Lots to ſave them and ſuccour them, not filthy Sodomites to abuſe and hurt them.

Now are they the dayes of peace upon this Land and Kingdome: Mercy and Truth are met together, Righteouſneſſe and Peace have kiſſed each other, to our great comfort, within the wals of her Majeſties gracious government. By occaſion whereof, and the want of like mercy in their owne Countries, many poore exiles of the houſhold of faith, have entred under our roofe, that is, into our Countrey, into our Cities and houſes, and how uſe we them? Would God we thought as Lot did? or did as hee did? Alas! wee doe not, but we grudge and repine at them, wee wring and wrong them, wee oppreſſe and hurt them, who are come under our roofe for our Chriſtian and charitable ſuccour, and wee are no Lots. But amend by this example. Againe, apply this to your Neighbours, and ſay thus with your ſelves, yee greedy Cormorants, that would dwell alone upon the earth: Why came this man into my neighbourhood, and why hath Gods providence ſeated him ſo neare mee? that I ſhould devour him, and eate him up, that I ſhould robbe him, and bereave him of all that hee hath by practiſes and policies, by hampering bargaines, and ſweet poyſons? No, no, the caſe is otherwiſe: for ſafety came he hither, as theſe men did to Lot, and therefore I muſt care for him, as Lot did for his, to defend him, and ſhield him to my beſt power, from any injuries offered by others, and much leſſe offer any my ſelfe, and ſo I will. This is a good profit by this example, and I pray you let us follow it, that with GOD and Men wee may bee accepted, and leave no worſe a name behinde us for this thing, than Lot hath done, for this care of Strangers that were come under his roofe in this place. Our friends ſhall rejoyce, and our foes ſhall be puniſhed with it, if the ſavour we leave behinde us touching this thing be ſweet and good.

Note.

Verſe 9. The wicked hate to be admoniſhed.

7. In the ninth verſe you ſee their anſwer to Lot, and obſerve therein the impatiency that is ever in the wicked, to heare an admonition to leave their wickednesſe, as alſo how ancient a thing it is for a man therefore to be contemned, and his good counſell rejected becauſe hee is a Stranger. O power of Satan and ſinne, cleaving to our fleſh! and how hardly are wee ſaved? For if we know the man that exhorteth us, and his friends, and bringing up, then we ſay, Is not this the Carpenters Sonne? Is not his Mother called Mary, and his brethren Iames and Ioſes, Simon and Iudas? Are not his ſiſters all with us? Whence then hath he all theſe things? Shall he teach us? So we are offended with him. If he be a Stranger, and not borne amongſt us, then we ſet up the briſtles as theſe Sodomites did, and we thunder it out as they did, He came to ſojourne amongſt us, and will he now rule? We will deale worſe with him than with another, &c. So every way we put ſtumbling blockes in our wayes, that when God calleth, we may not obey, and ſo ſtubbornly and maliciouſly caſt away our ſelves. But beware by this if God be in us.

Mat.13.55.

Verſe 10. When the wicked rage moſt, then God helpeth his, and ſmiteth them. Pſal.46.1.

8. Then the men (ſaith the Text) put forth their hand, and pulled Lot into the houſe to them, and ſhut the doore. What were theſe men? Angels, as you heard before, though as yet they revealed not themſelves. And when did they thus reſcue Lot, and give him the hand to pull him in? The verſe before ſheweth it, when they threatned him to deale worſe with him, than with the ſtrangers. Preſſed upon him and that ſore, and came even to breake the doore then, and in this top of their villany, and Lots danger, did the Angels help, and plucke in Lot. What ſhould we ſee and ever remember by this, but what a God we have and ſerve? Surely even ſuch an one as hath his hand ready by ſuch Miniſters as he will appoint, and meanes whenſoever wee need, to helpe us, to deliver us, and to pull us in. So impoſſible is it, that wee ſhould miſcary, if wee truely cleave to him: he ſuffereth and beareth, and letteth us alone, perſwading with the wicked: and the wicked threatning us, and preſſing nearer and nearer, ſorer and ſorer upon us; but hee knoweth his time, when hee muſt helpe or elſe wee ſinke, and I warrant you then hee ſtayeth not, but out goeth his hand, that is, his help by ſome meanes or other, to ſuch reliefe of ours as ſhall be for his glory and our good. And to the increaſe of much faith in us, let us ever thinke of it. He is God, and he will not faile. The time, the moment of time, when our need is, hee knoweth ever.

Verſe 11. The many meanes God is able to puniſh the wicked by. 1 Kings 12.4. 2 King.6.18.

9. Then they ſmote them with blindneſſe, that they could not finde the doore, and conſider by it the mighty power of our loving God over all his enemies, and what manifold wayes his Majeſty hath to help his choſen by, and to ſave them harmeleſſe. He can ſmite Ieroboams arme, if he ſtretch it out againſt his Prophet, that he ſhall not be able to bring it backe againe, till the Prophet pray for him. He can ſmite the Syrians in judgement, if they come againſt Eliſha. He can ſmite theſe Sodomites eyes: And every thing ſerveth to his will. As for any attempts of the wicked againſt us, if we ſerve God, let us be aſſured it ſhall be but a needleſſe ſeeking of the doore, with theſe Sodomites, further than God thinketh it good for us to let it prevaile.

Verſe 12. Gods mercy to others for his childrens ſake.

10. They asked Lot what friends he hath there in the City, &c. Wherein firſt we may note the kinde nature of our deare God, who thinketh it not enough to be good to us, but hee will alſo be good to ours, and extend his mercies with us to our Friends and Kindred, that our joy may be more and more upon us. Secondly, the world may ſee what commeth by alliance and acquaintance, and friendſhip with them whom God loveth: ſurely even this great good, that many times for their ſakes, men ſo linked in affinity with them, reape mercy and favour with God, that otherwiſe were they not ſo linked, they ſhould haply never have had. They are not then ſo little to be eſteemed, as they are, whom God ſo highly eſteemeth and loveth. But of this before.

Verſe 14. The reprobate mocke when God warneth. Ezech.12.9.

11. But when Lot ſpake to his friends (ſaith the text) he ſeemed to them as one that mocked, and told them ſome merry tale, he knew not what. O the ſignes of a reprobate heart fearefull and great! When God threatneth, they laugh; and when danger is at the doore, they are nothing afraid. If God ſtirre up his Prophets to offer them favour, and to tell them what is comming, thoſe Prophets dreame, and are troubled with ſome melancholy paſſions, it is neither ſo nor ſo. Thus graceleſſe hearts doe fleere, when they ſhould feare: and thus graceleſſe a token is it, to deſpiſe faire warnings and advice in God, given to our good. Againe conſider it, that if Lot with his alliance and his owne friends, found but ſuch entertainment; what marvell if Miniſters, ſtrangers amongſt ſtrangers, be twenty times frumped and flouted, for ſaying either Niniveh ſhall be deſtroyed, or Sodome periſh? It is a good example to hearten us all withall, when for well ſpeaking and well wiſhing, we are but jeſted and mocked at: It may not grieve us too much.

A comfort for Miniſters.

Verſe 15.

12. Then they haſted Lot, &c. and ſo muſt all Miniſters, the nearer we thinke Gods wrath to be, the more urge and enforce our exhortations, and by them, even haſten as many, as God ſhall bleſſe our labours unto, to depart from evill, and to accept the good, 2 *Tim.*4. reade it.

13. Take thy wife, ſay they, &c. and get thee gone. And muſt he leave all his friends behinde him?

him? Yea ſurely, if we cannot get out of Sodome all that we would, we muſt away with as many as wee can, and beware of too much lothneſs to forſake old friends, for feare Gods wrath catch us ſhort for our earthly delaying.

If not as we would, yet as we can, let us away from Sodome.

14 Yet for all their haſting, the 16. verſe ſaith, Lot prolonged the time. And, O lively patterne of our corrupt nature! Do you not ſee what a hard matter it is to get out of Sodome when a man is once in? Yea, even for Lot ſo righteous and good a man. Surely, ſurely, if Lot can ſo hardly part company, and get away, what we, that be farre from Lots? Againe, and againe, pray wee, that wee never fall into bad company, into a bad towne, into a bad aliance, into acquaintance with earthly and ungodly minded men, for ſure if we do, though an Angell, yea two Angels bid us away with haſt, yet we will prolong the time, &c.

Verſe 16. Hardly is bad company left.

15 But, O what followeth in the next words! as he prolonged the time, they caught him by the hand and brought him out. So, ſo it is a thouſand times needfull, that we ſhould be drawne violently, when wee will not come willingly. And then ſee here a ſecret, and lay it to your heart. Your riches, your honors, your friends, pleaſures, wife, children, and ſuch like, are taken from you in part or in all. You marvell at it, and thinke peradventure, you are quite out of the Lords favour, for elſe this great change in your eſtate would not be. But feare not, rather remember what you reade here: Lot prolonged to do what he ſhould, as his caſe was, and the Lord caught him by the hand and brought him out. Haply as your caſe hath beene, you have prolonged to doe what the Lord willed you, and theſe things that you have loſt, were ſome let unto you to hold you backe, the Lord carefull that you ſhould not periſh, hath in this your change, done no other to you than he did to Lot when he caught him by the hand. Verily he hath even ſo caught you to bring you by this meanes, from what and whence he would have you come, becauſe whilſt you enjoyed theſe, you forgot your ſelfe, prolonged and trifled the time, and danger grew on, that it muſt bee otherwiſe with you, or elſe the Lords judgement light upon you, amongſt others whom his juſtice would puniſh, and that God would not, and therefore hath rid you thus away: even thus I ſay, drawne you more forcibly by the want of theſe benefits, becauſe as long as you enioyed them, words would not worke with you. Be not afraid then of adverſity, but be ſchooled by it, to get you out of Sodome, and to obey the Lords will and bidding: for to this end hath he caught you by the hand, effectually, though not bodily, if you be his. And when once you are out, you ſhall finde him ſlacke his force againe moſt certainly, and comfort you as ſhall be good, with riches, honors, friends, pleaſures, wife, children, and every needfull bleſſing. Then ſhall you finde it true, what the Prophet David aſſureth you, No good thing verily ſhall bee withold from them that live a godly life.

Verſe 16. Afflictions are Gods, taking us by the hand to rid us away from ſome evil. Note well.

Pſal. 84.

16. Yet it is further ſaid in the Text, that this was done the Lord being merciſull unto him. Very notably to overthrow the conceit of fleſh and blood, that judgeth this hard and ſowre, when we are thus caught and drawne away from our delayes. But this is mercy ſaith the Text, and herein the Lord is neither hard nor ſowre, but merciſull to you; and therefore neither thinke amiſſe, nor ſpeake amiſſe of it. To be exhorted to goe out of Sodome, is mercy, to bee haſted away, is more mercy; and to be caught and thruſt out, if we prolong the time, is moſt mercy, be it by what ſchooling croſſes ſoever it pleaſeth God to ſend. And marke againe, how though the Angell caught him, yet it is ſaid The Lord being merciſull, and not the Angell being merciſull, leſt we ſhould aſcribe the goodneſſe of God to his inſtruments and miniſters onely, and truſt in creatures.

Verſe 16. The croſſe is mercy, & loſſe is gaine oftentimes.

17. Laſtly, for I can doe nothing till thou art gone, ſaith the text: O mercy marvellous of our good God! Doe we ſtay him from ſtriking, who deſerve to be ſtriken our ſelves a thouſand times? How ſhould wee love him, for this love of us? And conſider againe with a mighty comfort, that if his favour and want of will to hurt us, ſtay himſelfe and his good Angels, whom he ſendeth to execute juſtice upon ſinners while we be in place: Can the devill, or all his angels and impes in earth or hell, hurt us when his pleaſure is not? No, no, it is true, and ſhall never faile, If God be on our ſide, who or what ſhall be againſt us? and it is ſweet.

Verſe 22. A ſweet comfort.

Rom. 8. 13.

The ſecond part of the Chapter, verſe 24.

IT containeth, as was ſaid, a dreadfull example of Gods wrath againſt ſin, and the firſt thing I note, is the time which is expreſſed here, when this fearefull ſight began. When the Sunne did riſe upon the earth. And when was it that the Sodomites compaſſed Lot his houſe, and would have had the men out? In the night, ſaid the fourth verſe before. Then you ſee what was done in the night, is plagued in the day, and let it teach us, and feare us. It may be ſo with us, for any thing we know: If we ſin in the darke, we may ſmart in the light; and if we offend when the Sun is ſet, the Lord may doe juſtice upon us when the Sun is riſen, and therefore preſume never upon ſecreſie of time, or by time, for ſurely day plagues ſhall diſcover night ſins, if wee doe: Reade the 2. of Sam. 12. verſe 12.

Verſe 23. Preſume not of ſecreſie bytime, for night ſins have day plagues.

2. But before this wrath beganne, Lot was entred into Zoar, ſaith the ſtory, that we may ſee

The care of God for his before his blowes come upon the wicked.
Great sinnes have great plagues.
Plenty of sinne, plenty of plagues.

the faithfulnesse, truth, and goodnesse of the Lord our God, who will have his children first provided for, and in safe security, before ever he goe about to destroy the wicked. A nature if we savour any thing but earth, able to move us to love him and serve him.

3. I note the punishment, which is Fire and Brimstone, and it teacheth us thus much, that monstrous and grievous was that sinne, which by so fearefull a judgement must bee revenged; Gravitas enim supplicii gravitatem peccati denotat, quia justus est Deus: The grievousnesse of punishment noteth the greatnesse of sin, because God is just.

4. The Lord rained this fire upon them, and not kindled a little, or sprinkled a little amongst them: and learne by it, that abundance of sin must have abundance of plague, unlesse the Lord touch betimes with repentance. He shall even raine plagues upon body, soule, family, friends, goods and all, if we provoke him still, and turne not away from our filthy wayes.

Reade Psal. 11. 6.

5. But who rained doth the text say? Dominus, the Lord rained. Then not man, not devill, not Necromancy, not by any naturall cause whatsoever befell this to Sodome, but it was the very power and wrath of a displeased God, at so great abomination as there was committed. And doe we thinke it was fearefull both in respect of it selfe, so dreadfull a plague, and in respect of Gods anger from whence it proceeded? would we have been loth to have beene in Sodome when this raine fell? O Lord how should we shake and shrinke, quake and quiver, to thinke how like we are to taste a farre greater, if we looke not better to it? Alas, say you, how? God forbid. Remember I pray you what Christ saith in the Gospell. If the word be preached and we receive it not, Sodome and Gomorha never sinned as we sin, nor Sodome and Gomorha were ever plagued as we shall be: For it shall be easier for them, saith the Lord Jesus, than for such people as doe thus. Reade the place, consider it better, feare the speech, and remember ever, that no man receiveth the word indeed, but he that reformeth himselfe to it. Comming to the Church, nor sitting in the Church, nor outward hearing, will serve the turne if we goe no further. That the text saith, all were destroyed, not excepting the Children which had not sinned, as the elder had, we must say with Austen: Occulta judicia Dei interdum sunt, semper justa: The judgements of God are sometimes secret, but ever just.

Verse 24. Contempt of the word how fearefull. Mat. 10. 14.

Verse 26. Lookers back to old sinnes how punished.

6. In the 26. verse we reade Lots wife looked back, and was turned into a pillar of salt, standing there so to this day. A very notable example what shall befall all those that revolt and looke backe after their old covetousnesse, old company, swearing, drunkennesse, uncleane life, or whatsoever from which they have beene called and brought away by some good meanes that the Lord hath vouchsafed them: for this is, with Lots wife, to looke backe toward filthy Sodome againe, and it cannot escape a judgement, and that a great one: For it had beene better never to have knowne the way of truth, than to forsake it, and looke backe. What made this woman to looke back, I scan not curiously, happily she beleeved not the Angels that Sodome should be destroyed: happily she had that usuall fault of most women, she was curious and lusting to see and know: happily she had over-earthly affections towards her friends, that would not come out with her, or towards her trash of household that she had left behinde her, or such like. Thus much I will be bold to say, and you know it true as well as I, that in our dayes many looke backe to this filthy Sodome of the world, and sin because they beleeve not the Angels, that Sodome should be destroyed: that is, they credit not those things which the Preachers tell them shall befall to the world, and workes of evill, but thinke all shall be better, and the Preachers doe but mocke. Some doe it for love of Kindred, Children and friends, as he did, that being called to follow Christ, prayed him that he might first goe bid them farewell that were at his house, to whom Christ quickly answered, that no man which putteth his hand to the plough, and looked backe, was apt to the Kingdome of God. Another prayed him that he might first go bury his Father: both of them shewing too great a regard of earthly friends, when they should have followed Christ zealously and readily. Some doe it for the love and lust to sin, from which it is a paine to refraine: of such is that meant, The Dog is returned to the vomit, and the Sowe to the mire: some by a fearefull setled wickednesse of heart, wherein they make a defection from God, and are weary of well doing. All which bewray and shew that they were never in heart soundly reformed, how glorious soever their outward shew was for a time. Feare we then ever to looke back with Lots wife. Feare we to returne to those old vices, and sinfull corruptions wherewith wee have been stayed. Feare we to frequent that company, to lust or long for those poysoned pleasures which heretofore have given us a fall, or at least indangered us, for as the Lord liveth that smote this woman (Lots wife) we shall be smitten first or last, and stand as spectacles of his wrath for evermore. Now as you have heard what she did, so heare I pray you what shee suffered. Shee looked backe, and the Lord turned her into a pillar of salt. There is in this something that concerneth her, something that concerneth others, and something that respecteth the punishment it selfe, all of them worthy to be well considered of us. It concerneth her selfe that shee perisheth, that shee is smitten, that thus strangely and fearefully is changed, for shee smarteth, and tasteth the fruit of her disobedience: so shall it be with all wicked ones: so I say in the generall, though nothing so, but otherwise in the particular. Perish they shall, as she, in their appointed appointed times, and he that ſuffered not her, ſhall not ſuffer them. But the meanes may be divers, by fire, by water, by ſword, by famine, by plague, by thunder and lightning, and a thouſand wayes: what way ſoever it is, to the party himſelfe it is a periſhing. And there is a great difference to whom I die, when I die. If I die for my wickedneſſe, I die to my ſelfe, but if I die fearing God, I die not to my ſelfe though I doe die, but I die to the Lord as I lived to him, and not to my ſelfe if I ſerved him. The Apoſtles ſpeech you remember to the Romanes: None of us (of us I ſay, to wit, beleevers and faithfull ones) liveth to himſelfe, or dyeth to himſelfe, but whether we live, we live to the Lord, or whether we die, we die to the Lord, and ſo whether wee live or die, we are the Lords. A great bleſſing therefore it is which we muſt much pray for, ſo to live, and ſo to die, that whether we live or die, we cannot periſh to our ſelves. It concerneth others that this woman was not deſtroyed with fire, and conſumed to nothing as the Sodomites were, but converted by the powerfull wrath of a mighty God into a ſpectacle for all beholders that ſhould paſſe that way till the worlds end, to preach and proclaime to them, to cry and to crave of them that they would beware by her example, that they would not looke backe to wicked Sodome when once God had ſet their feet in a large roome out of it, but conſtantly deteſt what the Lord will puniſh, and ſo continue: that they would not neglect their great ſalvation when it is offered: that they would not deſpiſe very true and good admonitions when they be given: for as Peter ſpeaketh of the Cities, that God turned them into aſhes, condemned them, and overthrew them, and made them an example unto them that after ſhould live ungodly, ſo may it be ſaid of her; and ſo to die as by death a man is made a ſpectacle, a gazing ſtock, and a publike warning in the Lords wrath and judgement to all others, is a fearefull thing. That which reſpecteth the puniſhment it ſelfe is, that it was juſt and moſt due to her. For firſt, ſhe was delivered with her husband and daughters out of Sodome, and brought forth by the Angels owne hands. Then ſhe was warned that ſhe ſhould not looke backe, nor abide in all the plaine, leſt ſhee periſhed, which was a faire warning. Thirdly, even hard by as it were there was appointed a City to them whither they might eaſily goe, and ſhould be moſt ſafe. Fourthly, ſhee had going with her, her husband and children, whom both for wives affection and mothers ſhe ſhould joyfully have accompanied. But all this ſhe neglecteth, and therefore juſtly periſheth. This biddeth us to day beware, and hearing the word of the Lord, not to harden our hearts. If the Lord may ſay as he might to this woman, to Sodome, to Ieruſalem, and to many others, to wit, that we have beene warned, that we have had good Lot amongſt us reſident and dwelling, yet never the better for him, that we have had our husbands, or children, or friends, to be good companions of obedience, if we would have gone with them: that in a word many and many times the Lord hath ſought as a hen her chickens, to gather us to him and we would not. Without doubt if we periſh, we periſh juſtly, and it is not the Lords blame, but our owne fault that it is ſo. Remember Lots wife ſaith our Saviour Chriſt in Luke, and let him that is in the field not turne backe to that he left behinde: and remember Lots wife ſay I to you, to continue in ſafety without revolting, and the Lord grant that her ſalt may ſeaſon our lives for ever.

Luke 17.32.

7. Abraham getteth up in the morning, and looketh toward Sodome, giving us to ſee in him the conſtant carefulneſſe that is ever in godly mindes of other mens well doing: the conſtant I ſay and not the fickle, ſoone hot and ſoone cold, to day carefull, to morrow nothing ſo, if not quite forgotten.

Verſe 27. Conſtant love of others.

8. And Abraham ſaw the ſmoke of the land aſcend as the ſmoke of a furnace. Remember what was ſaid before that the ſins of Sodome cryed unto the Lord, and now ſee what is done, the fire deſcendeth, and the ſmoke aſcendeth, ſo ſhall it be, as we live, unto us unleſſe we prevent it. And therefore let us learne, that if we neither would have the fire nor the ſmoke to be ſeene, we muſt ſtop the cry of our ſin by a true reformation of our ſelves.

Verſ. 28. Stay ſin if you will ſee no fire.

9. Let us conſider well theſe miſerable Cities now, but once ſo brave, ſo wealthy, and proud, as who but they. Where is their gold and ſilver now, where is their plate and ſtately places now become, where is learning and honour, Magiſtracy and power, wiſdome and policy, beauty and bravery, youth and ſtrength, or any thing elſe whatſoever that man thinkes notable? What? can nothing helpe, can nothing deliver, can nothing quench this fire that now ſo flameth? No, ſaith the text, but the ſmoke aſcendeth as the ſmoke of a fornace, and all theſe glories are but as ſmoke when the Lord is angry. Bleſſed is the heart that heareth and conſidereth, and provoketh not the Lord.

No pompe ſaveth when God will ſtrike.

Laſtly, The Lord remembred Abraham, ſaith the ſtory. And what did Abraham? pray for Sodome. Why now our caſe is far better, we have not Abraham to pray for us, but we have his deare ſon Chriſt Jeſus. Was Abrahams prayer remembred, and ſhall Chriſt faile? how can it be?

Verſ. 29. A comfort in prayer.

The third part of the Chapter.

Refuſing of the place appointed by God how perillous.

HOw Lot was delivered we heard, and now how ſtrangely Lot offended and fell wee muſt heare. Lot neither was content with the place which the Angell offered, nor with the place which himſelf choſe, but removed from Zoar and dwelt in the mountains with his two daughters, and there he fell. Giving us this note to begin withall, which we all know true, that when we will be our owne carvers, and plant and place our ſelves upon our owne heads, refuſing the places that God appointed, many times, our owne wayes turne to our owne woes, and we there want the good hand of God to guide us, as a juſt puniſhment of our ſelfe will.

Verſe 30. By other mens harmes learne to feare.

2. It is ſaid, Lot feared to dwell in Zoar. If leſt himſelf ſhould periſh, then it was great weakneſſe of his faith, having had ſuch mercy ſhewed before. If it were leſt the City ſhould periſh where he was, this alſo was infirmity, for God had ſaid he would ſpare it: onely therefore well it could be, upon ſight of other mens judgements to be affected, yet with faith, which were to be wiſhed were in us. But God knowes though all men and Countries be viſited about us, yet feare we not with Lot, but ſleep in deep ſecurity.

Verſe 30. Childrens duty to parents. Ruth. 1. 16.

3. That Lots daughters forſake not their Father for any thing, but ſtill goe with him from place to place, it well deſcribeth the duty of all children, never to leave them in diſtreſſe, comfortleſſe and companileſſe, who to them were both company and comfort, ſuccour and ſupport, in age unable to help themſelves. Ruth would not be intreated to forſake her Mother in law, and it was her great praiſe, how much leſſe in duty can we forſake our owne Parents? but O naturall affection! how dyeth it in many children?

Verſe 33. The filthineſſe of drunkenneſs.

4. The fall of Lot is drunkenneſſe, by the wicked wronging of his daughters, a horrible ſin in ſo good a man. But what is fleſh, if God aſſiſt not? In his drunkenneſſe, marke I pray you the monſtrous poyſon of that ſinne. He forgets he is a Father, he forgets his wife is dead, he forgets there are no women with him but his daughters, God and nature and all is forgotten, and that is done in the drunken pang that Heaven and earth were aſhamed of when it was done, and which to this day liveth to his great rebuke. It is a good ſaying of the Father Ambroſe, Patres nos inſtruunt & docentes, & errantes, the Fathers and Patriarkes teach us both by their doctrine and their errors: meaning, we ſhould learne by their errors and fals to avoid the like. Would God it might be true in this example, that the foulneſſe of it make all men and women that carry Chriſt in their foreheads, beware the like. Some doe play with ſuch blacke ſpots as theſe are, and make queſtion whether things committed in drunken fits be to be imputed to the party or no. To whom Divinity is too good to anſwer, let the prophane Philoſopher Ariſtotle ſerve them with his light of nature, who boldly therein avoweth this, Digni ſunt pœna & propter ebrietatem, & propter crimina: they are worthy puniſhment both for their drunkenneſſe, and faults through the ſame committed.

Verſe 33. Evill ſoone learned in evill places.

5. We may marke againe how Lots daughters were acquainted with the force of wine, and how to provoke and ſtir up luſt, more I wis than became the modeſty of Maides. But I pray you ſee if it be not hard for one to come from Sodome, and not taſte of the ſap of ſuch a ſoyle, and bewray too plainly where they have dwelt. Hard it is to dwell and tarry in the hot Sunne, and not to be blacked and burned with it. A bleſſing it is to dwell in good places.

Children by ſinfull bed given, when by lawfull matrimony not, why

6. They both lay with their Father, and both conceived. So pleaſeth it God oftentimes, that the fruit of ſin ſhould appeare to put them to ſhame, with their grievous offence that ſo have ſinned, when to his deere children in lawfull Matrimony he giveth no iſſue. But ſo far are our curſed times from true piety, that we glory in the ſight that ſhould ſtrike us dead, and take even encouragement to ſin by that which is given of God for a puniſhment: Reade the fourth of Wiſedome, the 3. verſe, &c. Marke alſo how Lot is delivered out of Sodome and not from inceſt. Pray, pray, and remember Gregories ſpeech, Non eſt domus ubi tutus eſſe poſſis niſi in Deo: This is no houſe nor place where a man may be ſafe, but in God. He that falleth not in Sodome, may fall in a place where more hope of ſtanding is, &c.

Laſt of all, Moſes ſpeaketh no more of Lot, what became of the reſt of his life, but even breaketh off with his foule fall.

What the cauſe was we know not, but ſurely of our ſelves wee may well thinke that if wee commit ſuch things, we deſerve but a ſhort ſtory. And thus may we profit by this Chapter.

CHAP.

CHAP. XX.

The chiefe heads of this Chapter are likewiſe three: to wit, theſe.

Abrahams remove, and his lie.
Abimelech his fact.
His amendment of his fact.

Verſe 1. The condition of the godly in this life often. Heb.13.14.

Abrahams remove doth put us in minde what may be, and indeed often is the condition of Gods choſen and beloved in this world, namely, to be toſſed up and downe, to remove often from place to place, and as it were by this meanes, to ſhew that we have not in this world an abiding City. The wicked many times have faſter hold and firmer footing, becauſe it is their portion, and all they ſhall have.

Verſe 1.

2 In this his remove againe, if we conſider, it was from about Sodome, we may ſee the care and conſcience that true hearted men to God have not onely not to dwell in wicked places, if poſſible they can chuſe, but not neare them: for certainly it is as true in the evill, as in the good: aliquid mali propter vicinum malum; Some evill it is to have evill neare, as ſome good doth accrew by goodneſſe at hand.

Verſ.2. The very godly are often worſe for impunity. An example of the ſame ſinne after repentance.

3 That Abraham ſaid of his wife ſhe was his ſiſter, it was the ſame that hee had once faulted in before in the 12. Chapter, and becauſe there it ſteaded him, and God puniſhed it not as ſharply as he could, behold now againe he committeth the ſame: thus are the very deare children of God the worſe for impunity often, and thus dangerous a thing it is to have any good ſucceſſe in evill ever. Shall we thinke that Abraham had not repented till this day his former fault in this kinde? If he did, then is here an example of the ſame ſinne committed againe after repentance, and yet the committer a childe of God, not to imbolden any to doe ſo, but to comfort the trembling heart of thoſe whoſe frailty hath beene too great the ſecond time in the ſame thing.

The ſecond part.

Verſe 3. The horror of adultery.

TOuching Abimelech his fault, God comming to him in a dreame, as uſually hee did in thoſe dayes by viſions or dreames, he telleth him he muſt die, but by and by he ſheweth the cauſe, becauſe he had taken another mans wife. Firſt, let it teach all juſt Magiſtrates, that will puniſh others, a true courſe, to wit, to be as able and ready to ſhew a true cauſe, as to give due puniſhment, for ſo doth God, and we cannot follow a better example. Secondly let it teach us the horror of adultery in thoſe dayes, when no leſſe than death is threatned by the Lord moſt juſt, to a King for it. Joyne unto it the 38. of this book, the 14. verſe, & lament the looſe dayes we live in.

Verſe 4. Gods mercy yeeldeth not due deſerts to ſinners.

2 Moſt carefully by the Spirit of God is it alſo here avouched, that Sarah was not touched by Abimelech: and it mightily ſerveth to the praiſe of the Lords goodneſſe, in not yeelding to eyther Abraham or Sarah, what they both juſtly deſerved, but quite contrariwiſe, ſaving them both from iniquity and ſhame. Let us care for his honour, if there be any feeling in us, that will ever care for our poore credits in our greateſt diſtreſſes.

Verſe 4.

3 Abimelech acknowledged God both Lord and juſt, which is worthy marking in an Heathen: and yet more is this, that he comforteth himſelfe with the conſideration of his juſtice, aſſuring himſelfe that hee would not puniſh one that had not offended. Shall Abimelech bee cheerfull that his hand is cleane, and aſſure his heart that God both ſeeth it, and regardeth it; and ſhall not we that know more, delight in innocency, and be bold in the comfort of a cleare conſcience, eſpecially when our juſt God muſt be Judge? If Abimelech, an Heathen, beleeved God would not ſmite a faultleſſe man, will our deare Father ſmite his choſen children, when they be guiltleſſe? O ever then let it be our joy, to have cleane boſomes; and our comfort ſtrong upon that againe, God will regard it.

Comfort in innocency how great.

Verſe 5. No prerogative hath any calling to ſinne.

4 Even a thouſand times conſider the manner of his anſwer here, how hee doth not plead any preheminence of a King, or any authority to deale with ſuch as were in his countrey, as hee liſted, but onely pleadeth innocency, and a true meaning. And ſhall Pagans goe before us in underſtanding? Shall we which know ſo much, be of opinion, that the figge-leaves, and poore covers of our Gentry, of our Authority, of any thing in our ſelves, or our friends, may make our ſinnes now a dayes to be no ſins? Can wee daſh the Lord out of his juſtice with ſuch cardes and colours? O learne of Abimelech another leſſon, that ſinne is ſinne, as foule, as black, as ugly, as damnable in great ones, yea, even in Kings, as in other! And as hot, or hotter ſhall the Lords wrath be againſt us, happily much more, for mighty ones ſhall be puniſhed mightily.

Read the 1.Sam.22.15.

5 We may alſo ſee in this King Abimelech the comfort of a cleare conſcience. Hee doth not hide himſelfe as Adam did, but boldly reaſoneth with the Lord, and ſaith, Did not hee ſay, ſhee was my Siſter? Have I done any thing but with an upright minde? Great therefore cerrtainly certainly is the boldneſſe of peace of a guiltleſſe minde, when one is wrongfully accuſed.

Verſe 6.

6 God knew the integrity of Abimelech, and doth here acknowledge it, and will hee not the like by us, if our innocency be as good? Surely we may be certaine he will, to our great joy, and even with his owne good liking. This example telleth us ſo, and it is very comfortable if we marke it.

Verſe 5. God keepeth from ſinne a Heathen, and will he not us if we ſeeke it?

1 Sam. 25. 34.

7 Yea ſaith God further to him, I have kept thee, leſt thou ſhouldeſt ſinne againſt mee. O heavenly goodneſſe of our God thus to care for one that profeſſed not his name! Can this God ſuffer us, or will he ſuffer us, to whom he hath vouchſafed the blood of his owne Sonne, to runne headlong into ſinne, if we had hearts to begge ſtrength to the contrary, and to bee afraid and loath to fall into ſo diſliked a courſe of his Majeſty? Never, never. And therefore by this occaſion let us conſider the ſame, as alſo whether the world, the fleſh, the devill, and all ſinne haleth us, and with true heate, with fervent ſpirits let us crave his defence; be aſſured, that he which kept thus Abimelech an heathen man from ſinning againſt Abraham and his wife, hee will never caſt our petition away, ſo good, ſo honeſt, ſo liked of his Majeſty; but will make us ſtrong againſt all frailties of our nature, yea able to refraine and ſtand ſound, though ſinne be even preſent as it were, and the opportunity very great. If wee love holineſſe and purity wee will aske, having ſuch a comfort as this to move us; and if we love to fall, wee ſhall bee left, hee will not keep us, and woe be to us one day.

Ignorance excuſeth not from ſinne, but from leſſe or more.

Sinne aganſt man, is ſinne againſt God.

O Note.

8 Leſt thou ſhouldeſt ſinne, ſaith he, and that againſt me. In the firſt, remember, that if he had wronged the woman, he had not knowne it was any mans wife, but tooke her as ſhe ſaid, that ſhe was his ſiſter; yet ſinne, ſaith the Lord, had it beene, and thou haddeſt ſinned againſt mee in doing it. A good caveat for thoſe that thinke ignorance ſhall ſalve ſoares, &c. Surely they are farre wide. Ignorance may excuſe à tanto, but never à toto. Ignorance may leſſen faults, but not change their natures. Sinne ſhall be ſinne, though I doe it ignorantly. The latter teacheth us, that all ſinnes againſt the ſecond Table, and our duty towards our neighbours, redound to the breach of the firſt Table alſo, and are challenged by the Lord, as offences againſt his Majeſty. Againſt me, againſt me, ſaith the Lord. By name, this ſinne of adultery and whoredome, it reacheth to the Lord, and ſtayeth not at the womans husband, or the mans wife, and the Lord will be revenged of it. Thinke of it yee adulterers and adultereſſes, and know it betimes: though yee may deceive man, and bleare his eyes with a thouſand devices, of love, of ſervice, and profit by you, whileſt in the mid-way hee loſeth by you what no gold can redeeme, yet never can you blinde the Lord. The ſinne is againſt him as well as againſt the man, and no gifts, no bribes, no cunning, can ſtop him nor ſtay him: as he is God, hee will have vengeance, for his part, and thou muſt have as ſowre ſawce, to thy ſweet meate, as his dreadfull juſtice can give thee.

Let knowledge reforme what ignorance offended in.

9 Then ſaith the Story, Abimelech reſtored the woman to her huſband. A true teſtimony, and indeed the onely teſtimony of a touched heart, when knowledge reformeth what ignorance committed. As ſoone as hee knew, he reſtored her. Contrariwiſe, when we perſiſt in that after knowledge, which want of knowledge let us fall into, what touch is there, what token or teſtimony of God his working ſpirit? Surely, all is dead there, and the veines of ſpirituall life frozen up: that man or womans end ſhall bee worſe than their beginning, thoſe later ſinnes are more ugly than the former, and hell and damnation have even ſeaſed and taken poſſeſſion of ſuch ſoules to eternall woe.

Verſe 7.

10 When God ſaith Abraham ſhould pray for Abimelech: Marke the high price that God maketh of the prayers of ſuch good men if they may bee gained and gotten. Secondly, that ſinnes done in ignorance, and for want of knowledge, yet, need prayer. Thirdly, how by this meanes God deriveth both honour and ſafety to Abraham, a moſt gracious providence and comfort to all that marke it. And laſtly, even chiefly obſerve and note it, how acceptable to God, that the party offended and hurt, ſhould pray for him, that did him the wrong. O what an hard caſe is this, and what one amongſt us may be drawne unto it! yet even thus milde and ſweet will the Lord have us if we pleaſe him.

Verſe 7. Offence after knowledge. Iob 31. 9.

Verſ. 11. Verſe 12.

Heb. 13.

11 Thou and thy whole houſe ſhall die, ſaith the Lord to this man, and yet hee knew not that ſhe was another mans wife. O Lord, how aſſuredly then doe they overthrow themſelves and theirs, that know, and yet offend even in deſpight of knowledge, of conſcience, of God, and grace, and what motions ſo ever they have to the contrary. Will you remember what Iob ſaith? If my heart have beene deceived by a woman, or if I have laid waite at the doore of my neighbour, then let my wife grind unto another man, and let other men bowe downe upon her. And why, and why? marke what followeth: for this a wickedneſſe and iniquity to be condemned (ſaith hee) Yea this is a fire that ſhall devour to deſtruction, and which ſhall root out all my encreaſe. O ſmarting wrath, how ſhould it feare us! Whoremongers and adulterers the Lord ſhall judge, ſaith another place. The Lord, even the Lord, whoſe love is life, and whoſe wrath is weeping and gnaſhing of teeth for evermore.

12. Marke againe, how the ſinne of the head redoundeth in puniſhment upon the members: and bee ſure that it is not only ſo with Kings to their ſubjects, but alſo with Miniſters to their flocks, parents to their children, maſters to their ſervants, and all degrees. Contrariwiſe, if the chiefe be good, ſee how the bleſſing reacheth unto the whole family in ſome ſort alſo. For to Zacheus it was ſaid: This day is ſalvation come to this houſe, not to Zache alone, but to this houſe, &c.

For the ſin of Superiours, inferiours alſo ſmart.

Luke 19.9.

13. Obſerve it alſo how early the King riſeth in the morning, after he was thus admoniſhed to performe the Lords will, and even heartily conſider with your ſelfe, that if a Pagan could not thus be quiet to deferre amendment, after he was wakened and warned by God to reforme his fault: how is it poſſible that Gods Spirit ſhould be in us, and yet no more touch, feeling, ſenſe, remorſe, nor amendment, then was in the dayes of our ignorance and deepeſt darkneſſe? Truely it cannot be but this Heathen King will accuſe us in the great day, if it bee not better with us.

Verſe 8. To deferre amendment.

14. It is ſaid againe in the text, if you marke it, that when he was up thus early, he called all his ſervants together, and telleth them all: both to take away all ſuſpition of his fact with Abrahams wife, and ſo to cleare her credit, which he was to be carefull of, and alſo to teach his ſervants by his example, ever whileſt they lived to beware. So carefull are good mindes, not only of themſelves, but of their charge. And how much the ſerious and earneſt warning of ſo great a perſonage may doe, I refer to your experience: Would God ſuch warnings and ſpeeches were more often made by ſuch. But becauſe you ſhould not doubt of it, the Spirit of God himſelfe hath teſtified ſo much in this place, and ſaith, they were all afraid. See then the piercing power of a good exhortation or admonition made by a ſuperiour. Therefore againe I ſay greatly to be wiſhed they would ſpeake more often.

A good thing to inferiours, the admonition of Superiours.

The third part of this Chapter.

THe ninth verſe. Theſe things thus done, The King called for Abraham, and talked with him: which teacheth us, that a true touched heart (indeed) with the word of God, is not proud nor diſdainfull, but admitteth of far inferiours upon occaſion of ſpeech. If this King had followed the cuſtomes of ſome in our dayes, that be no Kings, nor gods neither, hee would have ſent out a meſſage to Abraham by ſome page, boy or woman, and have kept his ſtate, with great diſdaine that a ſtranger, as Abraham was, ſhould come to ſpeech with his owne perſon. But it is enough, Religion is humble, and Atheiſme is proud and ſurly as the Devill, for ſuch heart, ſuch ſhew.

Verſ. 9. Religion is humble, and Atheiſme proud.

2. What haſt thou done unto Abraham, ſaith, he &c. A phraſe and manner of ſpeech, if you marke it, that ſheweth a wakened ſpirit in Abimelech, from that great ſecurity, whereinto his carnall affections had caſt him. And it is a ſpeech that would wonderfully profit us, if we would uſe it to our ſelves now and then, demanding of our ſelves what we have done. The drunkard, if God gave him an heart to ſay alas what have I done, ſurely he would amend; ſo the ſwearer, and ſlanderer, and ſuch like.

Verſ. 9.

3. What? have we ſinned ſaith he, we, we. A notable eſtate when a Governour joyneth himſelfe with his people in this, to avoid ſinne, caring that neither they nor hee doe any thing that may be ſinne and offend: and ſtill carry your eye upon it, how hee calleth ſinne, ſinne in himſelfe as well as in any others, no way excuſing, or ſhifting, or diminiſhing the matter with reſpect of yeares, of eſtate, or frailty, or any ſuch like, and yet he an Heathen, and wee Chriſtians.

Verſe 9.

4. Upon me and my kingdome, ſaith hee, full well confeſſing againe that a Superiour ſinneth not to the hurt of himſelfe alone.

Verſe 9.

5. But how ſhould Abraham bring a ſinne upon them? verily becauſe hee ſaid, ſhee was his ſiſter, and ſo gave occaſion to the King to offend, to his owne harme and his kingdomes. Well then we learne, that to give one occaſion to ſinne, is to bring ſinne upon him, and therefore we muſt make more conſcience hereafter of miniſtring occaſions, then happily heretofore wee have done.

Verſ. 9. Miniſtring occaſion of ſinne. Note.

6. Paſſe it not over how this Heathen King calleth taking another mans wife thus, but upon ignorance, not only a ſinne, but a great ſinne, a ſtrange ſinne, and a thing that ought not to bee done. You know our dayes, and the manners of the ſame: I ſay no more, your ſelves be judges whether Heathens and Pagans ſhall not riſe in judgement againſt ſome that cannot ſay, they knew not that ſhee was his wife, and yet no remorſe. Doe theſe men thinke there is a God, a hell, any damnation or ſalvation? would God they did; it would wring ſome grace out of them, if not for love, yet for feare.

Verſe 9. Adultery by ignorance, a great ſinne.

7. In Abrahams anſwer, that he thought the feare of God was not in that place, and therefore they would kill him for his wives ſake. You ſee what holdeth out, and what letteth in all wickedneſſe into a place, bee it kingdome, or towne, or houſe. If the feare of God bee there, the banke is ſtrong, Verſe 11. The feare of God as a bank.

certainly is the boldneſſe of peace of a guiltleſſe minde, when one is wrongfully accuſed.

Verſe 6.

6 God knew the integrity of Abimelech, and doth here acknowledge it, and will hee not the like by us, if our innocency be as good? Surely we may be certaine he will, to our great joy, and even with his owne good liking. This example telleth us ſo, and it is very comfortable if we marke it.

Verſe 5. God keepeth from ſinne a Heathen, and will he not us if we ſeeke it?

7 Yea ſaith God further to him, I have kept thee, leſt thou ſhouldeſt ſinne againſt mee. O heavenly goodneſſe of our God thus to care for one that profeſſed not his name! Can this God ſuffer us, or will he ſuffer us, to whom he hath vouchſafed the blood of his owne Sonne, to runne headlong into ſinne, if we had hearts to begge ſtrength to the contrary, and to bee afraid and loath to fall into ſo diſliked a courſe of his Majeſty? Never, never. And therefore by this occaſion let us conſider the ſame, as alſo whether the world, the fleſh, the devill, and all ſinne haleth us, and with true heate, with fervent ſpirits let us crave his defence; be aſſured, that he which kept thus Abimelech an heathen man from ſinning againſt Abraham and his wife, hee will never caſt our petition away, ſo good, ſo honeſt, ſo liked of his Majeſty; but will make us ſtrong againſt all frailties of our nature, yea able to refraine and ſtand ſound, though ſinne be even preſent as it were, and the opportunity very great. If wee love holineſſe and purity wee will aske, having ſuch a comfort as this to move us; and if we love to fall, wee ſhall bee left, hee will not keep us, and woe be to us one day.

1 Sam. 25. 34.

Ignorance excuſeth not from ſinne, but from leſſe or more.

8 Leſt thou ſhouldeſt ſinne, ſaith he, and that againſt me. In the firſt, remember, that if he had wronged the woman, he had not knowne it was any mans wife, but tooke her as ſhe ſaid, that ſhe was his ſiſter; yet ſinne, ſaith the Lord, had it beene, and thou haddeſt ſinned againſt mee in doing it. A good caveat for thoſe that thinke ignorance ſhall ſalve ſoares, &c. Surely they are farre wide. Ignorance may excuſe à tanto, but never à toto. Ignorance may leſſen faults, but not change their natures. Sinne ſhall be ſinne, though I doe it ignorantly. The latter teacheth us, that all ſinnes againſt the ſecond Table, and our duty towards our neighbours, redound to the breach of the firſt Table alſo, and are challenged by the Lord, as offences againſt his Majeſty. Againſt me, againſt me, ſaith the Lord. By name, this ſinne of adultery and whoredome, it reacheth to the Lord, and ſtayeth not at the womans husband, or the mans wife, and the Lord will be revenged of it. Thinke of it yee adulterers and adultereſſes, and know it betimes: though yee may deceive man, and bleare his eyes with a thouſand devices, of love, of ſervice, and profit by you, whileſt in the mid-way hee loſeth by you what no gold can redeeme, yet never can you blinde the Lord. The ſinne is againſt him as well as againſt the man, and no gifts, no bribes, no cunning, can ſtop him nor ſtay him: as he is God, hee will have vengeance, for his part, and thou muſt have as ſowre ſawce, to thy ſweet meate, as his dreadfull juſtice can give thee.

Sinne aganſt man, is ſinne againſt God.

O Note.

Let knowledge reforme what ignorance offended in.

9 Then ſaith the Story, Abimelech reſtored the woman to her huſband. A true teſtimony, and indeed the onely teſtimony of a touched heart, when knowledge reformeth what ignorance committed. As ſoone as hee knew, he reſtored her. Contrariwiſe, when we perſiſt in that after knowledge, which want of knowledge let us fall into, what touch is there, what token or teſtimony of God his working ſpirit? Surely, all is dead there, and the veines of ſpirituall life frozen up: that man or womans end ſhall bee worſe than their beginning, thoſe later ſinnes are more ugly than the former, and hell and damnation have even ſeaſed and taken poſſeſſion of ſuch ſoules to eternall woe.

Verſe 7.

10 When God ſaith Abraham ſhould pray for Abimelech: Marke the high price that God maketh of the prayers of ſuch good men if they may bee gained and gotten. Secondly, that ſinnes done in ignorance, and for want of knowledge, yet, need prayer. Thirdly, how by this meanes God deriveth both honour and ſafety to Abraham, a moſt gracious providence and comfort to all that marke it. And laſtly, even chiefly obſerve and note it, how acceptable to God, that the party offended and hurt, ſhould pray for him, that did him the wrong. O what an hard caſe is this, and what one amongſt us may be drawne unto it! yet even thus milde and ſweet will the Lord have us if we pleaſe him.

Verſe 7. Offence after knowledge. Iob 31. 9.

11 Thou and thy whole houſe ſhall die, ſaith the Lord to this man, and yet hee knew not that ſhe was another mans wife. O Lord, how aſſuredly then doe they overthrow themſelves and theirs, that know, and yet offend even in deſpight of knowledge, of conſcience, of God, and grace, and what motions ſo ever they have to the contrary. Will you remember what Iob ſaith? If my heart have beene deceived by a woman, or if I have laid waite at the doore of my neighbour, then let my wife grind unto another man, and let other men bowe downe upon her. And why, and why? marke what followeth: for this a wickedneſſe and iniquity to be condemned (ſaith hee) Yea this is a fire that ſhall devour to deſtruction, and which ſhall root out all my encreaſe. O ſmarting wrath, how ſhould it feare us! Whoremongers and adulterers the Lord ſhall judge, ſaith another place. The Lord, even the Lord, whoſe love is life, and whoſe wrath is weeping and gnaſhing of teeth for evermore.

Verſ. 11. Verſe 12. Heb. 13.

12. Marke againe, how the ſinne of the head redoundeth in puniſhment upon the members: and bee ſure that it is not only ſo with Kings to their ſubjects, but alſo with Miniſters to their flocks, parents to their children, maſters to their ſervants, and all degrees. Contrariwiſe, if the chiefe be good, ſee how the bleſſing reacheth unto the whole family in ſome ſort alſo. For to Zacheus it was ſaid: This day is ſalvation come to this houſe, not to Zache alone, but to this houſe, &c.

For the ſin of Superiours, inferiours alſo ſmart.

Luke 19.9.

13. Obſerve it alſo how early the King riſeth in the morning, after he was thus admoniſhed to performe the Lords will, and even heartily conſider with your ſelfe, that if a Pagan could not thus be quiet to deferre amendment, after he was wakened and warned by God to reforme his fault: how is it poſſible that Gods Spirit ſhould be in us, and yet no more touch, feeling, ſenſe, remorſe, nor amendment, then was in the dayes of our ignorance and deepeſt darkneſſe? Truely it cannot be but this Heathen King will accuſe us in the great day, if it bee not better with us.

Verſe 8. To deferre amendment.

14. It is ſaid againe in the text, if you marke it, that when he was up thus early, he called all his ſervants together, and telleth them all: both to take away all ſuſpition of his fact with Abrahams wife, and ſo to cleare her credit, which he was to be careſull of, and alſo to teach his ſervants by his example, ever whileſt they lived to beware. So careſull are good mindes, not only of themſelves, but of their charge. And how much the ſerious and earneſt warning of ſo great a perſonage may doe, I refer to your experience: Would God ſuch warnings and ſpeeches were more often made by ſuch. But becauſe you ſhould not doubt of it, the Spirit of God himſelfe hath teſtified ſo much in this place, and ſaith, they were all afraid. See then the piercing power of a good exhortation or admonition made by a ſuperiour. Therefore againe I ſay greatly to be wiſhed they would ſpeake more often.

A good thing to inferiours, the admonition of Superiours.

The third part of this Chapter.

THe ninth verſe. Theſe things thus done, The King called for Abraham, and talked with him: which teacheth us, that a true touched heart (indeed) with the word of God, is not proud nor diſdainfull, but admitteth of far inferiours upon occaſion of ſpeech. If this King had followed the cuſtomes of ſome in our dayes, that be no Kings, nor gods neither, hee would have ſent out a meſſage to Abraham by ſome page, boy or woman, and have kept his ſtate, with great diſdaine that a ſtranger, as Abraham was, ſhould come to ſpeech with his owne perſon. But it is enough, Religion is humble, and Atheiſme is proud and ſurly as the Devill, for ſuch heart, ſuch ſhew.

Verſ. 9. Religion is humble, and Atheiſme proud.

2. What haſt thou done unto Abraham, ſaith, he &c. A phraſe and manner of ſpeech, if you marke it, that ſheweth a wakened ſpirit in Abimelech, from that great ſecurity, whereinto his carnall affections had caſt him. And it is a ſpeech that would wonderfully profit us, if we would uſe it to our ſelves now and then, demanding of our ſelves what we have done. The drunkard, if God gave him an heart to ſay alas what have I done, ſurely he would amend; ſo the ſwearer, and ſlanderer, and ſuch like.

Verſ. 9.

3. What? have we ſinned ſaith he, we, we. A notable eſtate when a Governour joyneth himſelfe with his people in this, to avoid ſinne, caring that neither they nor hee doe any thing that may be ſinne and offend: and ſtill carry your eye upon it, how hee calleth ſinne, ſinne in himſelfe as well as in any others, no way excuſing, or ſhifting, or diminiſhing the matter with reſpect of yeares, of eſtate, or frailty, or any ſuch like, and yet he an Heathen, and wee Chriſtians.

Verſe 9.

4. Vpon me and my kingdome, ſaith hee, full well confeſſing againe that a Superiour ſinneth not to the hurt of himſelfe alone.

Verſe 9.

5. But how ſhould Abraham bring a ſinne upon them? verily becauſe hee ſaid, ſhee was his ſiſter, and ſo gave occaſion to the King to offend, to his owne harme and his kingdomes. Well then we learne, that to give one occaſion to ſinne, is to bring ſinne upon him, and therefore we muſt make more conſcience hereafter of miniſtring occaſions, then happily heretofore wee have done.

Verſ. 9. Miniſtring occaſion of ſinne. Note.

6. Paſſe it not over how this Heathen King calleth taking another mans wife thus, but upon ignorance, not only a ſinne, but a great ſinne, a ſtrange ſinne, and a thing that ought not to bee done. You know our dayes, and the manners of the ſame: I ſay no more, your ſelves be judges whether Heathens and Pagans ſhall not riſe in judgement againſt ſome that cannot ſay, they knew not that ſhee was his wife, and yet no remorſe. Doe theſe men thinke there is a God, a hell, any damnation or ſalvation? would God they did; it would wring ſome grace out of them, if not for love, yet for feare.

Verſe 9. Adultery by ignorance, a great ſinne.

7. In Abrahams anſwer, that he thought the feare of God was not in that place, and therefore they would kill him for his wives ſake. You ſee what holdeth out, and what letteth in all wickedneſſe into a place, bee it kingdome, or towne, or houſe. If the feare of God bee there, the banke is ſtrong, ſtrong, the flouds of lewd life cannot overflow: but if it be not, nothing ſo horrible but it will enter: yea, even this in Abrahams judgement, that a man ſhall be murdered for his owne wife. Happy then is the place where this feare is, and curſed where it wanteth.

Verſe 11. The feare of God as a bank.

Laſtly, the Kings gifts and liberality to Abraham, his kinde offer of his Land to dwell in, his good nip that he gave to Sarah for her diſſembling, ſaying, he was her brother, whom God had given her for her husband, and to be a veile to ſhield her, and cover her from all harmes, are good fruits of a heart moved with that which God had ſaid to him, and for our inſtruction. Alſo that Abraham prayeth for him heartily and unfainedly, and is in perfect love and charity with him, though ſomewhat he had wronged him, is worthy noting. And laſtly, how, when ſinne is reformed, God altereth his puniſhments, and taketh them away, healeth all the houſe, whom he had cloſed up from bearing children, wich ſuch other things, are matters of profit to us, if we marke them. Bleſſed is that man and woman that heareth God warning them, obeyeth his warning willingly, as this King did; abhorring that which is evill, with him; and with ſpeed and care reformeth things amiſſe, as he did; for ſuch will all godly Abrahams pray, and God by them will be intreated to take puniſhments away, and to put mercy in their place, to his great praiſe, and their great comfort evermore.

CHAP. XXI.

The generall heads of this Chapter are theſe three.

The birth of Iſaac: from the firſt verſe to the fourteenth.
The baniſhment of Agar: from the fourteenth verſe to the 22.
The covenant betwixt the King and Abraham.

Verſe 1. God ever performeth promiſe, but in his time, not in ours.

THe firſt particular I note is this, the performance of that promiſe in his appointed time, that was made unto Sarah before in the 18. Chapter, verſe 10. concerning a Sonne. It doth aſſure us thus much, that the word hath not paſſed Gods lips ever, which proved not true, and ſhall prove true to the worlds end. Truth being eſſentiall to him, and he never changeling: onely this, there is a ſeaſon and time appointed, either revealed or otherwiſe, which wee muſt expect. Tarry that, and all ſhall bee well, for ſo did Sarah here, and the godly elſewhere ever, and had their deſires.

Verſe 3,4. Our names remember us to be new men.

2 Iſaac is circumciſed, and called Iſaac at his Circumciſion, ſo have wee now our names at Baptiſme. That Sacrament then, as this now, are Sacraments and ſignes of our new birth. Fitly therefore by the receit of our names at ſuch time, ſhould we ever when we heare them, bee remembred, that we have promiſed to God and his Church, that we will be new men.

*Verſ.*6. Children ſhould cauſe joy, and not diſtruſt.

3 Sarah rejoyceth at this gift of God in her old age, and her husbands age: reproaching therin, and reproving plainly the coldneſſe and dulneſſe, the blindneſſe and unkindneſſe of ſome, that having children given, not one, but many, not in age onely, but from youth to age almoſt every yeare, rejoyce not, but murmure, fearing and diſtruſting, and farre, farre, from this good womans heart: Shee even danceth for joy in her minde, and ſaith, Who would have thought, &c.

*Verſ.*7. That mothers ſhould nurſe their owne children.

4 Sarah giveth this her owne childe ſuck, her ſelfe, till it was to be weaned. An ancient and good example to be followed of all women that have no true inabilitie indeed to deny it. For to this end hath God provided nouriſhment for it in the mothers breſt, that it might be ſo. The earth alſo nouriſheth the plants and hearbs which ſhee bringeth forth. The tree no leſſe with her ſappe and ſucke, the boughes and branches that ſpring out of her. All other creatures doe the like, be they never ſo fierce: The Tygar, the Wolfe, the Beare, and the Lyon, yet gentle to their young ones, and give them ſucke. Shall onely woman, more unkindely than any, deny them nouriſhment? The mother is content, when ſhee cannot ſee it nor handle it, but hath it in her body, to nouriſh it, yea, and to abide many a ſharpe nip and pinch for it, eating this, and forbearing that, as ſhall bee beſt for her childe ſhe goeth with: and when it is borne, that they may ſee it and handle it, behold it, and joy in it, yea, when it lyeth in their laps and cryeth, holdeth up a paire of little hands and eyes, begging, as it were, and entreating for Gods ſake, to be nurſed and nouriſhed by them, rather than any other: is it not a hard heart that can caſt it away, and put it to a ſtranger, whoſe affection can bee but frozen in compariſon at leaſt for a while? Laſtly, the dangers of this are not few, if they were well conſidered. For many a diſeaſe and ill quality is drawne with the milke from a bad Nurſe: beſides that, experience teacheth us, that many plants will never proſper, except they have of their owne earth about them. All theſe things then perſwade us as much as may bee, to follow Sarah here, this good woman, and to nurſe up our little Iſaacs that God doth give our ſelves. Yet neceſſity hath no law, I know it true, but let not wanton unwillingneſſe, nor unwilling wantonneſſe bee neceſſity. Judge of this thing in a godly feeling, according to your place, and other true circumſtances, and I leave it to you, I preſcribe to none, neither ſay any more.

5 When the weaning time came, Abraham made a feaſt, yea, a great feaſt, ſaith the Text, and it teacheth us the liberty of Gods children, according to places and times wherin they live, touching ſuch matters and cuſtomes as this is. We our ſelves have our faſhions and uſes at birth, at Baptiſme, at the mothers going to Church to give thankes, in her lying in, &c. What may well be done, and ſuffered, and liked, let it not be peeviſhly, waywardly, ſpitefully, and unjuſtly traduced: For this very feaſt and faſhion of Abraham might be cenſured, if to finde fault were to ſpeake true, if malice were zeale, and a froward nature were a good minde by and by. Surely, as the Apoſtle ſaid, to the cleane, all things are cleane; ſo ſay I to meeke and modeſt minds, all cuſtomes that may any way be charitably interpreted, are acceptable? and as hee ſaith againe, But unto them that are defiled and unbeleeving, nothing is pure, but even their mindes and conſciences are defiled; ſo ſay I unto thoſe that are waſhpiſh and wayward, ſpitefull and froward, every thing that they fancy not, is uncleane and unlawfull, either Heatheniſh or Jewiſh, or Popiſh, or ſome way intollerable; and their fanſie is, regula rerum, the rule of right, unto which all mens doings muſt be framed, if there be peace. But there is a rule, that all godly mindes preferre before all ſuch rules, to wit, even the rule of the bleſſed Apoſtle, If any man luſt to be contentious, wee have no ſuch cuſtome, neither the Churches of God..

Verſe 8. Cuſtomes ought not peeviſhly to bee carped at.

Titus 3.15.

1 Cor.11.16.

6 Iſmael mocked Iſaac, and Sarah ſpyed it. The Sonne of the fleſh, the Sonne of the promiſe. See in a figure the condition and order of the world. The ungodly are mockers, gibers, flowters, and fleerers, at ſuch as the Lord hath looked upon in more mercy, than he hath upon them, and it is no new thing: patience muſt paſſe it over, and God will pay it home, as hee did this. This mocking they take to be but a ſmall fault, if any at all; but the Apoſtle ſaith, it is bitter and cruell perſecution: peruſe the place, *Gal.*4. 29.

Verſ.9. Mocking and mockers bee odious.

7 That Sarah ſpied it, and not Abraham, the reaſon might either bee in her more uſually being with the children, than Abraham was, or in her affection, which was not ſo good to Iſmael, as Abrahams was, he being father, and not ſhee mother. Now wee know it well, that miſlike quickly ſpyeth a fault, when affection to the party is ſomewhat darker eyed.

Verſ. 8. Diſlike ſoone ſpyeth a fault.

8 Shee craveth of Abraham, that both mother and childe may for this cauſe be caſt out: and though it grieved Abraham in reſpect of his ſonne; yet God in the end joyned with Sarah, and admoniſhed Abraham that it ſhould be ſo. It noteth unto us, how mocking and ſcoffing, fleering, and geering, pride and vanity, and the contempt of Gods promiſes, never ſcapeth Gods judgement, but is both obſerved and puniſhed, ſome way or other, firſt or laſt. Nay, marke it more, which indeed is more, the childes fault is the mothers ſmart alſo, and ſhee likewiſe muſt be caſt out by Gods owne ſentence: For haply ſhee ſaw and heard theſe mockes, and rebuked them not, but cockered and dandled ſuch wicked beginnings in her young impe: but very ſure I am, in our dayes, many fooliſh mothers doe it, and are ſo vainly pleaſed with their children, that even their faults pleaſe them alſo. But let them marke this example, and provoke not God: He is as able, and let them feare it, to caſt both them and their children out of his houſe for ever, as here Abraham was, theſe two out of his.

Verſe 10. Mocking puniſhed.

Childs fault, mothers woe alſo.

9 The Text ſaith, This was grievous unto Abraham, and we ſee in it, what griefes fall out now and then betwixt the beſt couples. The one deſireth, and earneſtly ſeeketh, that grieveth the other to the very heart. But what then? Matrimony ceaſeth not to bee the holy ordinance of God, though theſe troubles in the fleſh, as the Apoſtle calleth them, intercurre.

Verſe 11. Griefe betwixt the beſt couples 1 Cor.7.

The ſecond part of this Chapter.

1 WHen God commandeth Abraham that he ſhould doe ſo, then marke, how ſtraight Abraham leaveth and forſaketh all private affection to childe or mother, and obeyeth Gods commandement: So muſt it be with us, if Abraham his ſpirit be in us. And what an example ſhould this be to all parents, to governe their mindes by? Abraham was godly, Iſmael his owne fleſh and childe, yet he executeth the Lords will upon his owne child, to his ſmart, and upon the mother alſo, preferring Gods will before them both, and forſaking them, rather than Gods commandement. What ſhall, or can, our doting affections anſwer to this example? Murders, adulteries, blaſphemies, and ſwearings, are ſuffered by us, with many moe, and no correction done. No it is to bee feared, many of us had rather ſhake off all Gods commandements, than once make our children ſmart a day. But be wiſe, be wiſe, and regard ſuch good examples as this, when we meet with them.

*Verſ.*12, &c. A notable glaſſe for parents.

2 It is ſaid, that Agar wandered in the wilderneſſe of Beerſheba: A lively example of Gods juſtice upon ſervants, that being in good place, cannot be thankfull to God, and dutifull to their maſters, but will ſo behave themſelves, that they loſe their place. Such wander many times up and downe, to their great griefe and ſhame, and want both in back and belly, thoſe comforts which they had very eaſily and largely, if they could have conſidered it. Nay, which is more, their wandring Verſe 14. As notable an example for ſervants well placed.

wandring and want, many times brings heavy and dolefull ends, to their ignominy in this world, howſoever they eſcape in the world to come. Wherefore let all ſuch as are well and live well, be they ſervants or other, remember this example of Agar, thruſt out from ſo good a place, and now deſolately and heavily, wandring with her poore child up and downe the wilderneſſe.

Verſe 15. Affliction followeth affliction, when God will, and ever greater and greater, the laſt worſt.

3 And when the water of the Bottle was ſpent, ſaith the Story, ſhee caſt the childe under a tree, and went and ſate over againſt him a farre off, about a Bow ſhoote, leſt ſhee ſhould ſee the death of him. Firſt obſerve, how affliction followeth affliction, and one griefe in the necke of another, when once God beginneth to exerciſe us. Shee loſt her place, ſhe wandreth in the wilderneſſe with her childe, comfortleſſe and deſolate; the water of the bottle is ſpent, and no more to be had when the childe cryeth for drinke, and is ready to die for it; and laſtly ſhee giveth her childe up to death, as ſhe thought, getting her farre off, as unable to heare the cry of it. The leaſt of all which, was a bitter pang to her that taſted it. Let it ſchoole us, if the Lord ſo deale with us, we are not priviledged, we have no immunity: If the croſſe come to us, as a thing judged fit for us of our God, we may not ſet him a ſtint, and ſay thus much will I beare, and no more: but leave him to his owne good pleaſure, expecting and enduring even one upon another, as thicke as ever it ſhall pleaſe him to ſend them. Taking hold of this promiſe by a lively faith, that hee will never lay more upon us, than he will make us able to beare, but will give the iſſue with the temptation, that we may endure it. And praying to his Majeſty upon that promiſe, that for his mercy ſake he would ſo doe. Nay, marke more here in this wofull woman, that her laſt croſſe is the greateſt of all, namely, the caſting of her childe downe under the tree, that it might die for want of drinke, and going from it to bee out of the crie. O fathers and mothers, but mothers eſpecially, that know what love of children meanes, conſider of it! What heart had this wofull woman thinke yee, when ſhe laid downe her childe out of her armes, nay when ſhee caſt it downe, as the text ſaith, like a woman all torne in peeces, and diſtracted almoſt with the woe and wound of a pained heart? How did ſhee looke upon it? how did ſhe take her leave from it, when the childe cryed, lifted up his watrie eyes upon her, ſtretched out hands and armes to goe with her, and not to bee left there without her? What wringing gripes, what twitching paine, when ſhe turned her backe upon it to goe away? What depth of woe came her teares from, when ſhe ſet out the crie and wept ſo dearly? O heavy mother! if there were ever any in this world. O pitifull parting betwixt a mother and her childe! O ſorrow upon ſorrow, and the laſt the greateſt by a thouſand degrees! Whoſe ſtony heart bewaileth not, as we heare it, this ruthfull caſe, of a poore mother and her childe?

O dolefull ſight!

Learne we then carefully, as I ſaid before, both how croſſe followeth croſſe, and how ſtill greater and greater, and the laſt the worſt of all, if it pleaſe God ſo, and let us harden our ſelves for it, in his holy feare, and not be over tender. Secondly, obſerve we againe the divers paſſions of love herein, either of parents to children, or friend to friend: Some cannot be drawne from them either day or night, when they are like to die, and it is a great love, and a good. But here it is otherwiſe, for the mothers heart cannot abide to ſee the childe die, and this alſo becauſe ſhe loved it: So are many where they love entirely. Thus differ our divers natures even in one thing, and we have our divers reaſons upon divers circumſtances. Bleſſed is the party, whoſe affections draweth neareſt the Lords allowance, and an holy patience. Laſtly, conſider it (and that not a little) how in this bitter agony, and moſt heavy plight, yet ſhee neither openeth her mouth againſt the Lord, nor againſt the meanes of her woe, Abraham and Sarah, no not againſt Sarah, that was the firſt and chiefe cauſe indeed, to ſtirre up Abraham to put her away. No curſing, no banning, no raving nor railing, is heard out of her: A very great commendation of her, and a very great want in our dayes, in ſome, that thinke themſelves no common Chriſtians, for that thing almoſt happeneth not croſſe to their minds, but the very ayre almoſt is infected with their bannings, be it never ſo ſmall, and of no account: Their ſoule is acquainted with bitterneſſe altogether, and their tongues cannot but take like courſe. What would theſe doe, if they were as greatly grieved as Agar was? Nay, whither would they have ſent Sarah, eſpecially, if they had beene in her caſe?

Divers effects of love in friends.

Agar raileth not as ſome do

Surely, ſurely, neither Abraham nor Sarah, nor God I feare me, ſhould have eſcaped curſes many and great; but for Sarah, ſhee ſhould have beene curſed to the deepe pit of hell ten thouſand times, and further, if further were any further torment to be had for her. But learne, O fiery and furious ſpirits! Even by Agar here, no other leſſon follow it, and uſe it with carefull hearts, if you meane not to brue for your ſelves in hell, what you wiſh to others.

Verſe 17. When griefe is at full, then God is at hand. O ſweet comfort.

4 But what now of Agar and her childe, in this depth of diſtreſſe and danger? O mercie and comfort! marke it if we be alive: When the griefe is at the top, and the caſe at the worſt, when the world and all worldly meanes are given over, then God is neareſt, preſent and at hand, and ſendeth his Angel to ſuccour this comfortleſſe woman and her childe, to his eternall praiſe, and her greater joy than ever tongue can tell. The Lord heard the voice of the childe, ſaith the 17. verſe, and the Angel cryed from heaven to her. Who will deſpaire of God and his help whileſt whileſt life is in him, that heareth and ſeeth, and marketh this? Shall it ever fall out, that the Seed of Iacob ſhall want reliefe, when Iſmael the mocker is not neglected? Cannot God forget his promiſe, and let Iſmael die? aud can he forget all his promiſes in Chriſt Jeſus ſealed, and delivered in the blood of his Teſtament; Yea and Amen in him, immutable and unchangeable for ever, and caſt away the care of us? O far be it from our ſoules to thinke it, and our hearts to feare it! This is our warrant with many moe, when our caſe is worſt, he ſeeth and pittieth, heareth and helpeth, and will never forſake us. 2 Cor. 1.

5. See it againe, how warily the text ſpeaketh, ſaying, God heard, and the Angels ſpake. It doth not ſay, the Angell heard the voice of the Childe, and ſo cryed. Leſt wee ſhould have left the Creator, and fled to the creatures in our diſtreſſes: Call upon me in the day of trouble, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, and I will heare thee, I, I, and neither Angels nor Saints. They ſhall helpe as God appointeth them, I meane the Angels, but God heareth and pittieth, and directeth all. Verſe 17. Pſal. 50.

6. When it is ſaid, The Lord opened her eyes, and ſhee ſaw a Well of water to give the Childe drinke of. It teacheth us all, that except God open our eyes, wee can neither ſee nor uſe the meanes which are yet before us. The Childe grew and dwelt in the wilderneſſe, ſorrow was turned into comfort by the Lords mercy; and touching outward things, God cauſed him to proſper. His mother tooke him a wife alſo, in his time, to note the authority of parents, and obedience of children in that matter, and thoſe dayes. Verſe 19.

The third part of this Chapter.

CONcerning the covenant betwixt Abimelech and Abraham, which is the third generall head in this Chapter, you ſee the occaſion of it in the 22. verſe: Namely, becauſe they ſaw God to be with Abraham in all that he did. See we by it, how the godly are feared, even of men farre greater than themſelves, for their holy walking before the Lord, and his gracious countenance to them againe. So we reade of Herod, that he feared Iohn, and reverenced him, becauſe he was a juſt man and holy, not for any worldly pompe or outward ſtrength that he was able to make, to hurt him by, for his coate was hairy, his girdle of a skin: and yet ſtruck the vertue of his life, and majeſty of his calling thorow the golden Robes of Herod, to his very heart, and made him afraid of him. Great is the power then of true vertue, and would God we would marke it, as alſo the dignity of the calling of the Miniſtery, if it be maintained. Verſe 22. True picty purchaſeth true reverence. Marke 6. 20.

2. The Kings requeſt being honeſt, note alſo how eaſily Abraham yeeldeth his conſent unto it. Ever a vertue in good men to be gentle and courteous, and eaſie to be intreated, for lawfull things. The contrary, a foule vice, whereſoever it is, morofity and frowardneſſe even in every thing.

Laſtly, that Abraham giveth ſheep and beeſes, &c. Learne we not only, how lawfull, but how wiſe a thing it is, and commendable, both to get and maintaine peace with our coſt ſometimes, and that it is not ever by and by well ſpared, that pinchingly and peltingly is ſpared. But it is even verified in that many and many a time, peny wiſe, and pound fooliſh. Thus this Chapter endeth, and we may end alſo with Davids remembrance concerning wiſdome, that the feare of God is the beginning of it, a good underſtanding have all they that do thereafter, and the praiſe of it endureth for ever. Coſt is not ever well ſpared. Pſal. 111. 10.

CHAP. XXII.

Generall heads in this Chapter, theſe chiefely.

- The commandement of God to have Iſaac ſacrificed.
- The obedience of Abraham.
- The deliverance yet that God gave at the pinch.

OF particulars this firſt, that it is ſaid, after theſe things God did proove Abraham, &c. That is, after ſo many tryals now already paſſed and ſpoken of, yet God tried him againe, and harder than ever before, namely, in the ſacrificing of his owne and onely ſonne. What ſhould wee learne by it, but this, that there is no time limited, no age freed, no perſon exempted, no not Abraham in his olde age, but whilſt life laſteth, ſo long ſhall Gods exerciſes bee incident unto us. And even ſtill the later the greater peradventure, if ſo God thinkes it good, yet all for the beſt, for either they make our faith and vertue appeare, and ſo God is glorified for his graces given unto us, and others are helped by our example, or elſe our infirmitie ſheweth it ſelfe to the greater humbling of us, and driving us to prayer, for greater ſtrength. Remember alſo the great honour that Abimelech the King had ſhewed him preſently before, & now marke what followeth, the death of his ſon, for any thing Verſe 1. No age freed from Gods trials.

he knoweth. Thus is the life of Gods children a mixture of ſweet and ſowre, and a continuall interchange of ſorrow and comfort, comfort and ſorrow.

The circumſtances that amplifie this triall.

2 Let us obſerve the degrees or amplification of this croſſe of Abraham, by ſome circumſtances that are laid downe, as firſt that Abraham muſt take him and ſacrifice him his owne ſelfe, and with his owne hands, a great matter, and farre more than if he had given him over to another. Secondly, of the perſon to be taken, who was he? thy ſonne ſaith the text, and not thy ſervant. Thirdly, thy ſonne, and not thy wives ſonne alone, as ſome ſonnes be. Fourthly, unicum, thy onely ſonne Iſaac. Fiftly, whom thou loveſt; all circumſtances of great moment, and greatly to be noted of us, that wee may know in what ſort God will be bold with us his creatures and workmanſhip, when it pleaſeth him. Wee muſt not thinke it ſtrange to be exerciſed even in thoſe things that are deare unto us: But whatſoever they are, ſtill to remember, that he which loveth any thing more than God, is not worthy of him. Sixtly, that he muſt goe with him three dayes journey ere he offered him: For the old ſaying is, Acerbiſſima mora quæ trahit pœnam, & miſericordia genus eſt cito occidere morti deſtinatum. Bitter is the delay, when puniſhment muſt follow, and it is a kind of mercy to kill quickly, who appointed once is to be killed. Certainly, the griping thoughts and twitching paſſions, that Abraham felt in his mind during theſe three dayes, made this triall of his farre greater, than it had beene, if preſently he ſhould have ſmit that blow. Laſtly, that he muſt offer him for a burnt offering: O depth of triall, able to have ſwallowed us up, a thouſand of us! both to lay his hands upon his deare ſonne, and then to burne him to aſhes when he had done, his owne ſelfe making and tending the fire till all was done, and putting peece after peece into the flame, when any was without, and with his owne eyes to ſee all this, and to looke upon it. Here is a triall, to tell us what God may doe, if it pleaſe him. This he did to one farre better than any of us, and yet we muſt be nice and tender, and dainty, and if God touch us but with the ache of a finger or a toe, we ſtraight think he dealeth hardly with us, and he hath forgotten his love: But O learne, learne, and ſee this!

Luke 14.20.

The ſecond part of this Chapter.

Verſ. 3. A true obedience.

THen Abraham roſe up, ſaith the text, &c. Here we ſee the moſt wonderfull obedience that ever we reade of, joyned, or rather flowing from a notable faith, and both of them held up with the ordinary props, no doubt of Gods truth and omnipotency. The nature of which, is either to uphold other: For his truth upholdeth his omnipotency, and his omnipotency his truth. And this his obedience is ſet out, even from the beginning, to the lifting up of the very knife.

How the commandements of God ſeeme ſo hard, or to whom.

2 Wee may here obſerve, what maketh the Commandements of God ſeeme ſo hard unto men: Surely not ſo much the nature of the Commandements, as their nature to whom they are given, which being crooked and corrupt, marvellouſly fighteth and rebelleth againſt the ſame ſtrongly. For ſay to an angry, furious and hot-blonded man, thou muſt forgive and love thy neighbour, bleſſe him when hee curſeth thee, doe good to him when hee doth hurt thee, &c. Out hee crieth it is impoſſible, how can a man obey ſuch a law? But ſay to an Abraham, that is, to one that is borne againe, and regenerated by the Spirit of God, in ſuch ſort as Abraham was, who hath now, God raigning in him, inſtead of old corruption, offer thy onely ſonne, beloved and deare unto thee, even with thine owne hands, and burne him when thou haſt done for a burnt offering, and you ſee here he will doe it without grudging or gain-ſaying. So ſure is it, that if the Lord have altered our nature, His yoake is eaſie, and his burthen is light.

Matth. 11.

Well therefore, may we ſay it is with us ſinfull men, as it is with ſicke folkes, who wonder at the ſtomacks, mirth and cheere of the whole, and thinke it a very hard matter to doe ſo: But where is the hardneſs? Is it in the thing, or in the weakneſs of the ſicke?

So I ſay is it, when we thinke any part of Gods law ſo hard, and hard, as many doe.

3 In that it is mentioned, hee roſe earely, to accompliſh this buſineſs, therein hath the Holy Ghoſt made manifeſt, not onely his great obedience, but his wonderfull alacrity and forwardneſſe in the ſame; a ſtrange example in ſo hard a matter. But what cannot Gods Spirit effect, if it be powerfull in man or woman?

Friends earthly affections, muſt be warily prevented.

4 He maketh not his wife privy, for any thing wee can ſee in the text, and as wee may conjecture, for feare ſhe ſhould hinder him by any womanly weakneſs or motherly teares, from his bounden and purpoſed obedience. Which if it were ſo, fitly doth it admoniſh us to do the like, when we juſtly can thinke, that our friends affections will any wayes tempt us, or totter us againſt the Lords Commandements.

Verſe 6. A figure of Chriſt.

5 Abraham tooke the wood of the burnt offering, and laid it upon Iſaac his ſonne, to go towards the place of death that God had appointed. Behold a lively figure of Jeſus Chriſt, bearing his owne croſſe toward the place of execution, even as young Iſaac doth here the wood to burne himſelfe withall, though as yet he knew not ſo much, and in the end God prevented it.

Verſe 7.

6 Behold the fire and the wood, ſaith Iſaac to his Father, but where is the Lambe for the burnt offering?

fering? O prick and wound to the Fathers heart no doubt, when the childe thus ſpake! But hee was reſolved, God, not naturall affections muſt now be obeyed. Therefore he taketh courage to him in a godly determination, and concealing all ſtill from the childe, anſwering him, My ſon, God will provide him a Lambe for a burnt offering, and ſo went on with the childe ſtill. In which anſwer of his, being of Gods providence, in a caſe hidden and ſecret as yet, we are notably taught in all diſtreſſes, what to hope, and what to ſay: Surely, even as Abraham did to his childe in this place, Dominus parabit, The Lord ſhall provide. If the wife ſay with Tobias wife, What ſhall we doe, we are poore, where ſhall we have bread for our children, where this, and where that? O be content! The Lord ſhall provide, is a good anſwer, a fit anſwer, and the anſwer of Father Abraham in this place to his ſon. Lord give us faith, and thou never provideſt more notably a Lambe to ſave yong Iſaac here, than thou wilt alſo provide neceſſaries for us to ſave our lives, till the time appointed of thee.

How to anſwer in things yet hidden.

7. But now the matter can be no longer hidden: for they are come to the place, and the deed muſt be done, Abraham buildeth an Altar there, and couched the wood, and bound Iſaac his ſon, and laid him upon the Altar upon the wood. Though the text ſpeak nothing of any ſpeech of Abraham to his ſon, yet like it is that ere he bound him, he ſhewed him Gods commandement, whereunto his ſon readily ſubmitted himſelfe. Ioſephus taketh upon him to tell us more, and ſuppoſing ſo ſtrange a thing could never be done without ſome dialogue betwixt the Father and the Son, he ſaith it was in this ſort.

Verſe 9. What Abraham ſaid when he bound Iſaac.

Firſt, the Father ſpake to his childe and ſaid: O my ſon, deare and beloved, with great care and diligence have I hitherto brought thee up, whom with a thouſand deſires I wiſhed before I had thee: thinking nothing more happy a comfort for mee, than if I might live to ſee thee a man, and leave thee in my place, the poſſeſſor of all that I have when I goe. But behold, it ſeemeth good to him now that gave thee to me, to take thee from me againe, and that I ſhould loſe thee. Which ſince it is ſo: O my gracious childe endure this ſacrifice, for I yeeld to God for my owne part, who ſeeketh this ſervice of us, for his continuall favour towards us, both in peace and warre. Thou art borne by nature to die a death at ſometime, and now thy death muſt not be common, but of thine owne Father, to the Father of all fleſh thou muſt bee offered in ſacrifice: As it ſeemeth, his mercy deeming thee unworthy to die, either by ſickneſſe or war, or any other calamity: But taking thy ſoule from thee in the middeſt of prayers and holy ſervice to his Majeſtie, he will place thee with himſelfe: whereas one mindfull of the end wherefore I have brought thee up, and thou ſhalt underprop mine age, and be my comfort, not of thy ſelfe, and by thy ſelfe, but thou ſhalt leave unto me God my defence and comfort in thy place. Then anſwered Iſaac, the worthy childe of ſo good a Father, and ſaid unto him:

Joſeph Antiq. lib. cap. 13.

O my Father, I am content unworthy ever to have beene borne, if ſtriving againſt the will both of God and thee my father, I ſhould not willingly endure that determined by you both, which if none but thy ſelfe would have, my deare father, I would not deny thee.

Thus (ſaith Ioſephus) ſpake they each to other, and then all things being ready, up went the knife to give the blow, had not God of his infinite goodneſſe ſtayed the hand. But O mercy memorable for ever and ever in the Lord, who will not the parting of ſuch a father, and ſuch a childe as yet, but ſtaying the matter, altereth the griefe into all joy, and delivering the father his childe againe, ſendeth them both home together with as cheerefull hearts as ever had any couple, no queſtion in this world after any danger. What two examples be theſe for us to mark? The father ſhewing us what it is to be uſed to the yoke from a mans youth, as he was, ſurely it maketh hard things eaſie, and even the very greateſt things to be better performed than ever they would, if ſuch exerciſes often had not been. The Son teaching us what grace is effected by ſuch gracious education, as no doubt this childe had. And both of them laying before our eyes, ſuch a patterne of obedience to Almighty God, even to the loſſe of life, as never we ſhould forget, but beſeech God with daily prayers, that wee may come as neare unto, as any cafe of ours towards his Majeſtie, ſhall require.

Lament. 3. 27.

The third part of this Chapter.

IN that God forbiddeth now at this pinch, this ſacrifice of Iſaac to bee made by his Father, We may well conſider how carefull the Lord is, leſt by any example of any commanded thing by him, others ſhould take occaſion to doe the like, without like warrant from him. Which haply in this caſe would have been done, if he had not ſtayed Abrahams hand, but ſuffered the matter to be accompliſhed and effected. Men would peradventure have raſhly judged ſuch ſacrifices to have pleaſed the Lord greatly, aed ſo have done wickedly.

Verſe 12.

2. Let us marke here, when the Lord came to deliver here: Not till the knife was up, and even read to ſtrike. It teacheth us for our ſelves, even then eſpecially, to looke for his help, when in mens eyes we are but gone. Yet muſt we truſt no further to helpe, than wee make our attempts by his warrant: For we ſee he did not the like to Ieptha.

Verſ. 10. Reade the note upon Gen. 21. ver. 17. Iud. 11.

Verſe 11. Why an Angell ſtayeth Abraham.

3 The Angell calleth, and forbiddeth, when as God could have ſtayed him by a ſecret power if he would. And why was this? Surely to inſtruct Iſaac further, that what his Father did, was by Gods commandement. Secondly, to ſhew him what ſingular care and favour God had over him, and toward him, who ſo notably would deliver him, by an open Angell from Heaven. And thirdly, that all the world might learne by it, that they muſt have very good warrant, eyther to begin, or leave off, any thing belonging and done to honor God by.

Verſe 12.

3 Now I know, ſaith the Lord, &c. When he knew before very well, what heart was in Abraham towards his glory. But thus would God commend unto all the world, the adjoyning of outward workes to inward faith. Conſonant unto which is Paul the Apoſtle, when he requireth a faith that worketh through love, and telleth us that as well, With the mouth we confeſs unto righteouſneſs, as with the heart beleeve unto ſalvation: alſo our Saviour himſelfe, who requireth to the inward acknowledging of him in the heart, the outward profeſſion of him before men. This is that which Saint Iames meaneth, when he ſaith, Abraham our Father was juſtified by workes, when he offered Iſaac his ſonne upon the Altar. Seeſt thou not ſaith he, That the Faith wrought with his workes, and through the workes was the Faith made perfect, &c. That is, Abraham by this meanes was knowne and declared to be juſtified, and his Faith being effectuall and fruitfull by workes, was thereby knowne to be a true Faith, and not a dead Faith. For Saint Iames ſpeaketh not of the cauſes of Juſtification, but by what effects we may know that a man is juſtified. True is the diſtinction therefore even of the Schoole-men themſelves: Chriſt doth juſtifie a man effectivè, effectually, by working his Juſtification: Faith doth juſtifie a man apprehenſivè, apprehendingly, becauſe it taketh hold of Chriſt, who is our Juſtifier: and workes doe juſtifie alſo, but declarativè, declaringly, becauſe they ſhew that a man is juſtified, as hath beene ſaid: So Chriſt, Faith and workes, do all juſtifie, but diverſly. True alſo is it that Bernard ſaith, workes are via regni, but not cauſa regnandi, the way to the Kingdome, but not the cauſe of raigning there.

Rom. 10. 9. Matth. 10. Matth. 10. James 2. 27.

How faith doth juſtifie, and how workes.

Verſe 12. The fountaine of obedience to God.

5 I know ſaith God, but what doth he know? That thou Abraham, ſaith hee, feareſt God. Then behold the Fountaine of all obedience, the feare of God, and the witneſs againe of the feare of God, true obedience: which being true, as it is moſt true, woe and bitterneſs to the inhabitants of the earth, if the Lord be not merciſull; for our obedience being turned into daily, fearefull, and moſt careleſs rebellion, where is our feare of his Majeſty become? Surely the Fountaine is dammed up and ſtopped, and therefore no fruit can flow there-from. Let every man privately apply this, and ſay with himſelfe, I thinke I feare God, but if God give judgement of my feare by my obedience, as he did here of Abraham, how will all prove? &c.

Verſe 12. God accepteth will for worke.

6 Becauſe thou haſt not ſpared thine onely ſonne, ſaith God, and yet he was ſpared. But this is the nature of our good God, to accept in mercy our will for our worke, and a ready endeavour even for the deed it ſelfe, if he would not ſuffer us to go any further: but this, when the word goeth before to guide the will, and not elſe. For thoſe Baals Prieſts being deſtitute of the word, though they lanced themſelves never ſo deepe, yet neither in will nor word pleaſed the Lord. And it is a good place alſo of Paul, not ſparing the body, &c. So then with this caveat let us gather great encouragement to ſerve him, who will in reſpect of our readie minde, acknowledge that we have not ſpared this or that, when indeed yet, it is ſpared, though not by us. Can we feare or doubt of reward if we do it, when ready will is thus regarded? Or doth that doctrine of God condemne good works, which thus aſſureth us good will is reſpected? Yet ever beware to exclude Gods mercy, and to put in place of it the workes merit.

Coloſſ. 2. verſe laſt.

7 Conſider what I ſhall now note unto you, and regard it with me from your hearts. Is Abrahams willingneſs to offer his ſon, a token of love and great affection to the Lord? So ſaith the Lord here, and ſo he taketh it, even as a worke that was done for his ſake, and which but for his ſake could not have beene obtained at Abrahams hands, for either gold or ſilver, by all the men in the world. O hearts of ours, then that they could feele! O eyes of ours, that they could ſee! what affection was it in the Lord to us, not to lay onely his owne and onely Son, beloved and innocent, upon the Altar of the Croſſe for us, and to have up the knife as ready to do it, but indeed to do it? O love of loves! what love was this, and what affection to us was this? Abraham was commanded of our God who could command: Abraham ſhould have ſinned if he had refuſed, ſo ſhould not God. Therefore if the one ſhew love in Abraham a creature; what doth the other in God the Creator? Well might it be ſaid with a vehemency, So God loved the world. So I ſay, and ſo as no tongue is able to ſpeake of it, nor pen write, nor heart thinke. The Lord give faith and thankfull feeling evermore.

Iohn 3.

God will provide for his ſervice, if we truely purpoſe it.

8 Abraham thus ſtayed from ſacrificing his Son, yet failed not of a ſacrifice in his roome, but lifting up his eyes, he ſaw a Ramme caught by the hornes in a buſh, him he tooke and offered. Now remember we what Abraham ſaid to his Son before, that the Lord ſhould provide him a Lambe. Was it not ſo? Did not God provide this Ramme to ſupply yong Iſaac his place? No queſtion hee did, and no chance, but Gods guiding hand brought him thither, and faſtned him there.

What

What ſhould we learne then by it, but this, that if our hearts be ſet indeed to ſerve the Lord in our place and calling, certainly he will never ſuffer us to want the thing that ſhall be neceſſary and expedient for us thereunto. A great comfort and a true.

9 Abraham taketh the Ramme, and yet none of his owne: but Abraham was aſſured no doubt that it was Gods doing, and being ſo, hee maketh no ſcruple to accept of Gods offer and providence, no more than Eliah made queſtion how the Ravens came by the meate which they brought him. We cannot follow Abraham, except we had his warrant. Verſe 13. 1 King. 17.4.

10 Abraham calleth the place, the Lord ſeeth, or provideth, ſhewing therein his care to continue the memory of Gods mercy, not of his owne fact, though indeed it was moſt notable, for if he had, he would have given ſome other title that ſhould at leaſt have glanced that way, but he doth not, and ſo ſhould we ever ſeeke the Lords glory, and not our owne. Surely if we honour him, he will honour us enough. Moe things might be noted in this Chapter, but let theſe ſuffice. Verſe 14.

CHAP. XXIII.

Two things in this Chapter eſpecially.

{ The death of Sarah: verſe 1. and 2.
{ Her buriall: 3. to the end.

IN mentioning ſo preciſely the age and death of Sarah, we may note the ſingular account that the Lord made of her, and if we marke it well, wee ſhall ſee it a prerogative above all other women. So would the Lord by all meanes incourage us to ſerve him. Verſe 1.

2 In that a woman who by nature is not ſtrong, in ſuch troubles and griefes many times as ſhe had, ſuch removes and travels through forraine countries ſhould live ſo long, how noteth it the power of God greater than any weakneſs, and how ſhould it comfort us againſt any infirmity of body whatſoever. God ſtrong, though we be weake.

3 When it is ſaid that Sarah died, though ſhe lived ſo long, remember ever the tale that ſhall be told of all fleſh firſt or laſt, he is dead, ſhe is dead. Thus you heard in the fift of this booke of a great ſort that ever they died were their yeeres never ſo many. Againe it teacheth us, that there is both a better life, and a worſe death than here is in this world, otherwiſe what preheminence had Gods children over the wicked, ſince they die as well as they? The tale that ſhall be told upon all.

4 But where died ſhe? the Text nameth the place, in Kiriah-Arba, in the land of Canaan. Thus did the Lord place and ſet downe in that country certaine pledges and pawnes to aſſure the reſt that hee would in time give that land unto them as he had promiſed, and they ſhould poſſeſſe it. So may we now be aſſured of the kingdome of Heaven, that for ſo much as many of our brethren and ſiſters are already there placed, and have taken poſſeſſion before us, ſurely we alſo ſhall follow, and he will give that land, even that heavenly Canaan and new Ieruſalem for ever and ever. Verſe 2.

5 Abraham lamenteth his dead, but not the eſtate of his dead. So did Chriſt our Maſter ſorrow for his friend Lazarus. So are we permitted by the Apoſtle, keeping a meaſure as men and women that are not without hope. So doth the wiſe Syrach counſell, and ſo hath all laudable cuſtome ever allowed. This moderation appeared in Abraham, for in the very next verſe it is ſaid, Abraham aroſe, &c. Iohn 11.35. 1 Theſ.4. Syrach.22.11.

6 He talked with the ſonnes of Heth. Where we ſee and learne, that ſo we ſhould give place to ſorrow, that in the meane while we regard alſo things neceſſary, as the buriall of our friends, and ſuch like: otherwiſe, our paſſions be impatiences, and as we offend the Lord greatly, ſo all wiſe men will miſlike us worthily. Sorrow muſt be moderated.

7 He telleth them he is a ſtranger, &c. A great token of his rare humility and lowlineſſe of minde, though he were in many reſpects a very great man. Then he ſeeketh nothing amongſt them, but for his mony, as good a teſtimony that way againe of a contented minde, though hee poſſeſſed nothing amongſt them.

8 Nay ſay the Hittites, my Lord thou art a Prince of God amongſt us, take therefore our chieſeſt places and bury thy dead in, a very great kindneſſe and courteſie on their parts againe. And let us marke in it, that humanity and bounty beare a moſt glorious ſhew even in Heathens. O how can ſuch vertues then diſgrace Gods ſervants, and profeſſors of a better doctrine than ever heathen knew! Verſe 6.

9 Abraham bowed himſelf unto them, and yet they were Heathens, to ſhew that he well eſteemed both them and their kindneſs. But wee have not ſo much good nature many of us to our owne brethren that are of the houſhold of faith with us, what love ſoever they ſhew unto us. Pride, and diſdaine, and ſcorne, are the flowers of our garland, and yet none ſo good Chriſtians as we, if we might be our owne judges. Verſe 7. Pride and diſdaine.

Verſe 11. Why Abraham would buy, and not take of gift. 2 Sam. 24. 24.

10 Divers offers are made him in great good will without any money; but Abraham would not ſo accept of them. He will buy for his money, but not take it of gift. And why ſo? Happily becauſe he would not receive at mans hands as beholden to him for it, what God had ſo often and ſo aſſuredly promiſed to give him. He would not prevent Gods gift in any part.

Verſe 16. Money, why called currant.

Laſtly, you have here the name of currant given to money, to note the uſe of it, not to bee hoorded up and lye in a corner, but to paſſe from man unto man according to his name. Wee read that money was firſt Leather, then Braſſe, then Silver, then Gold, but what ſaith one? I pray you note it. Quibus gradibus crevit pecunia materia, iiſdem decrevit antiqua mundi ſimplicitas, probitas, & integritas. Looke how money increaſed from baſer to better, by the very ſame ſteps did the world decreaſe from good to worſer, for the world was firſt golden, then ſilver, then braſſe, now leather or lead, or worſe, if any worſe thing you thinke good to name. Money is better, and Men worſe, the cheſt ſtored with better ſubſtance, and the ſoule filled with worſe ſins, yea even with all ſins that ſo ſinfull a world can bring forth and infect withall.

CHAP. XXIIII.

In this Chapter eſpecially conſider theſe things.

The counſell and commandement of Abraham touching a Wife to be taken for his Sonne,
The obedience and care of his Servant in that behalfe.
The contract or Matrimony it ſelfe.

Verſe 1. God can inrich at all times.

MOre particularly marke in the firſt verſe, that Abraham is both old and rich, and let the uſe of it be this to aſſure our doubting minds, that God is able to ſuſtaine us, when ripeneſs of wit, valour of body, and all naturall power to worke, labour, toyle, and draw with the world are gone. Yea, not onely to ſuſtaine us, but with very great abundance to bleſſe us as here he did Abraham. Therefore tye not God to yeeres, nor his mercy ever to the meaſure of your wit, But feare God in your youth, ſerve him in age, and be aſſured that neither youth nor age, ſhall want the benefit of his mercifull providence. Away with that ſpeech, that if we be not growne at 20. wary at 30. and rich at 40. there is never hope of ſtrength, wiſedome, or wealth, for God is free, and not tied to times.

Verſe 1. Gods bleſſing maketh rich. Prov. 10.

2 But how came Abraham by his riches? The text anſwereth, the Lord had bleſſed him in all things. Thereby giving the wealth of Abraham to the Lords mercy, and not to his owne induſtry. So it is ſaid elſe-where, Benedictio Dei facit divites, & benedictio Dei ſuper caput juſti; The bleſſing of the Lord maketh rich, and the bleſſing of the Lord is upon the juſt. Earthly wretches aſcribe all to their owne labours, policies, and fetches, but ſuch unthankfull hearts were there ever.

In a ſtrange country God can inrich.

3 Paſſe it not over alſo unnoted where or when God made him rich, ſurely in ſtrange countries, and when he was a very traveller and paſſer from place to place, not ſtayed or placed any where. Even then in this wandring time, which the old ſaying is, doth not gather moſſe, yet God was able to bleſſe him, and to make his ſtore increaſe. Surely in ſuch places it had beene great power in God to let him ſtill paſſe amongſt them with life, though he had left him and let him be poore. But the Lord would even this alſo: and therefore where, where, is not God able to do for his, if they pleaſe him?

Verſe 2. Degrees of ſervants and order of Abrahams houſe.

4 Abraham ſaid to his eldeſt ſervant, &c. Then we ſee in Abrahams houſe, order and degrees reſpects and regards divers of ſuch perſons ſerved him according either to time or qualities, or ſome circumſtances juſtly moving thereunto. This we may follow in our dayes, wiſe men do it, and God diſliketh it not.

Verſe 2. Putting his hand under his thigh, what.

5 The putting his hand under his Maſters thigh, noteth unto us the forme and manner of private oaths miniſtred privatly in thoſe dayes, of Superiors to their inferiours: for publikely equall perſons did otherwiſe. Or if you will, it ſheweth the ſervants obedience towards his Maſter, and his Maſters power over him.

Verſe 3. What men ſhould thinke of, that take an oath.

6 If we conſider the titles that Abraham giveth unto God, here they ſet out the terror of his Majeſty, and the might of his power, as alſo that to him which is about to ſweare, nothing is more fit to be thought of, than the power of God to puniſh falſehood, if it be avouched with an oath in his name. The forgetting whereof, maketh many a man and woman caſt themſelves and their ſoules headlong into great dangers.

Verſe 4. Religion chiefly to be reſpected in mariage.

7 That exception that you ſee the old man take here againſt the daughters of the countrey, and his expreſſe commandement for a wife to be taken to his childe out of the number of the faithfull, teacheth us notably, if we have Abrahams ſpirit in us, to give Religion and the true feare of God the upper-hand of all honour, friends, wealth, and glory of the world whatſoever, in all matches and mariages that we ſhall make either for our ſelves, or our friends, children, or charge.

charge. Conferre it with Geneſis 28. Deut. 7. verſe 3. 2 King. 8. 18. where the like doctrine is taught.

Parents authority in childrens mariage.

8 Paſſe not over againe in this talke of Abraham about the mariage of his ſon without noting, what power the parent then had over the child in guiding his choiſe and not leaving him liberty directly without cauſe to ſtray from his liking: oppoſe it againſt the licentious rage of children in theſe dayes, whoſe wit, and onely wit in this caſe muſt be followed, ſay parents to the contrary by grave experience whatſoever they can. Yet ſtandeth it faſt even in this matter as in all other, he that deſpiſeth me, ſhall be deſpiſed of me, and he that deſpiſeth parents, deſpiſeth God, who hath ſaid, Thou ſhalt honour thy Father and thy Mother, &c. Now ſhall children thinke that honour of word, cap, or knee, is due, and the greateſt matter of all others, either to their owne good or parents comfort, belongeth no further to them than they liſt? It cannot be. Therefore who ſo in this matter taketh not parents good adviſe and conſent, he deſpiſeth God, and the curſe doth reſt upon him, without repentance.

Verſe 5.

Verſe 6.

9 In the 5. verſe the Servant reaſoneth with his Maſter, and putteth a caſe. Conſider in it I pray you and learne, how it is not enough onely to beware of forbidden evill, when a man taketh an oath, but care alſo muſt be had leſt in things commanded we offend, not knowing the full drift and ſcope of the commandement. And for this cauſe doth this ſervant thus queſtion with his maſter.

Abrahams great faith.

Verſe 7.

10 Beware ſaith he, that thou bring not my Sonne thither againe, meaning into his own country out of Canaan. And why thinke you? Surely leſt he ſhould loſe the inheritance promiſed him there by God. Why was the matter now in any likelihood? truely no. Abraham was but a ſtranger in Canaan yet, neither had any more poſſeſſion than the Sepulcher hee bought there for to bury his wife in. But by his faith which wavered not one jot in Gods promiſe, he poſſeſſed even the whole Land, and therefore he would not ſuffer his ſonne to be removed thence to the woman, if the woman would not come to him. O that we had ſuch faith to beleeve what is promiſed us, and to expect it with aſſuring hope, then ſhould our hearts be free from many cares that now oppreſſe them, and wee poſſeſſe to our good content what yet in mans eyes wee have no hold of!

11 In the 7. verſe Abraham maketh mention of the Lords calling of him out of his owne country, into that where he now was, and ſo ſtayeth himſelfe upon that, that by no meanes hee will doubt but God will goe forward with his mercy begun in this and by this his calling. So, ſo, and even ſo ſhould all we be in that calling whatſoever unto good that God vouchſafeth us. As for example, if the Lord have called us into the land of light by hearing the word preached unto us, or any other good meanes whatſoever, neither ſhould the world, nor wants of men, neither any thing in this life, make us returne to the land of darkneſs againe. So of Magiſtracy, or Miniſtery, or ſuch like, the calling of God ſhould be our ſtrong ſtayes to goe through with it againſt all aſſaults to the contrary. But eſpecially this is a place, and an example for them that for any earthly preferment in mariage of their children, can bee very well content that they ſhould be carried from Canaan even againe and againe to Meſopotamia, that is, from the grace and light of God which hee hath given, and from the place where he hath promiſed to give an inheritance, into the miſts and clouds of old ignorance againe, and all damnable ſuperſtition. Abraham here abhorreth it, though his Son ſhould loſe his wife thereby: and ſurely as he ſhould be our example to follow ever, ſo ſhall he be their condemnation that will not do it.

Note well.

The arguments of Abrahams faith.

12 Marke againe in this verſe the arguments whereby Abraham ſtrengthneth his faith. Firſt he alledgeth the deed of God in theſe words, qui eduxit me, which brought me out. Secondly, his promiſe, qui loquutus eſt & juravit, which ſpake unto mee and ſware. And why doth he not alledge his owne doings, and ſay, becauſe I obeyed him, and left mine owne country for him; or becauſe againe I offered to kill this ſon of mine when he bad me, and to offer him up in ſacrifice to him; or ſome ſuch like? ſurely becauſe the children of God were never acquainted with bragging of their owne workes, and putting God in the noſe with their owne merits. Some doe it, and alas will not ſee how they offend in it, but men and women poſſeſſed with Gods ſaving ſpirit, never did it, neither will do it. Abraham knew merits in him were no ſuch props to his faith, as mercies in God, and therefore ſilent in the one, with comfort he alledgeth and remembreth the other. So let us do if we have no calling but the common calling of Chriſtians. And if we be further either Magiſtrates, or Miniſters or ſuch like, thē conſider alſo how fitly we may do it. For as Abraham had the deed of God in bringing him out, ſo have Magiſtrates and Miniſters, in giving them that place. And as Abraham had his promiſe and his oath, verily ſo have they, that he will be with them in the cauſe of Juſtice, and in their Miniſtery to the worlds end. Be it concluded then in our ſoules for ever, that the Angell of God ſhall be with us, as here Abraham ſpeaketh, ſo long as we live, to honour God by a faithfull ſervice, and not our owne ſelves by ſome ſubtill ſeemings, for God ſeeth.

2 Chro. 19. Math. 28.

13 I cannot but remember you of it alſo, how then the ſervant putteth the caſe, the woman would not come ſo farre, Abraham doth not bid him tell her what wealth ſhe ſhall have, what riches riches and treasure, and that his son should have all, or so forth, but he answereth by his trust and assurance that the Lord would move her and bring it to passe if it were his liking, and therefore he saith, The Lord shall send his Angell, &c. Thus ever, ever doth Religion perswade one way, and earth, and flesh, and the world, another way.

Verse 8. Doubting minds should be fully taught.

14 But if she will not saith he, then, &c. Where we see how fully doubting mindes are to be instructed. Oftentimes do we promise good unto men in the name of the Lord, and we hope it shall come to passe, yet wisedome would that we should more fully teach and say, as here Abraham doth. But, if she will not, &c. That is, yet if God will not thus and thus doe for causes knowne to his wisedome and not unto us, then this and this shall be your estate, &c.

15 Onely bring not my Son backe againe saith he, repeating againe what he had once given in charge before, and we noted it. O constant heart! both to abide himselfe, and to keepe his posterity in a strange country, being once called thither, although with wealth he might returne, and with his owne kindred peradventure live more quietly. What a thing in a godly mans heart is a place appointed him of God. How is he not fickle and fugitive, onely for greater worldly good, without any direction from a better cause? Yea, how must not a man like without God his liking, nor carve for himselfe a portion of this world where himselfe liketh, but where the Lord will be content, remaining constant, and with the same contented, till the Lord give a going out. Abraham had his griefes here no doubt, and probably may we thinke the Cananites were not to him as his kindred, nor Canaan as his owne country. Yet so would the Lord. And we see before our eyes that the heart of Abraham answereth to the Lord; O my God, I am content to doe it, and his tongue chargeth his servant againe, Bring not my Son backe, &c.

Psal. 27.

Vers. 9.

16 Then the servant sware, saith the Text. That is, after he had inquired, questioned, talked, and was fully instructed concerning his masters will, and the end of his oath, then he sware. A very good example, to teach all men how an oath is to be taken. But alas! where is this conscience, and care, and feeling, with feare to abuse this duty? Where is he that searcheth and seeketh to know the matter, and the depth of it, how far it may charge him? what he is requested to sweare unto? Yet thus doth Abrahams servant here, and let us note it.

The second part.

Verse 10.

THe Servant thus instructed and sworne, prepareth to his journey, and tooke ten Camels, &c. Teaching and shewing this wisedome, that a thing is not onely to bee done, but even all such things also as may be fit to the good bringing of it to passe, are likewise to be cared for and taken with us, as here this servant did.

Verse 11.

2 His making of his Camels to lye downe, as it here is mentioned, may remember us how a good man regardeth even his beast. The time and the place may shew the servants diligent care to observe and regard all good opportunities, to come by any entrance or successe in the matter he goeth about.

Verse 12.

3 His prayer to God that he would direct him, sheweth his faith and bringing up in Abrahams house. Also, how hee trusted not in his owne endevours, though yet hee used the best, but onely his confidence was in the blessing of God, who is able to effect and hinder what he will.

Verse 13. The simplicity of education in the dayes of the Patriarks.

4 Whilst mens daughters came to draw water, saith the Text, and afterward in this Booke wee shall reade, that Iacob found Rachel keeping of sheepe. Both these declare unto us the simplicity and plainnes of those dayes, touching education of their children. I beseech you, where were these golden, silken, pearled, and idle dames that our dayes yeeld, when water-pots and sheep-hooks were thought no hurters of womens hands, by the very Parents themselves? I urge it not for imitation, but for moderation.

Verse 14. A mark for to choose a wife by.

5 The servant nameth a marke, whereby he desireth of God he may have notice, which the woman shall be, that he should chuse for his masters Sonne. Grant, saith he, that she which saith drinke, and I will give thy Camels drinke also, may be she, &c. I pray you marke the marke that he wisheth in his masters wife. Is it not a sweet and courteous nature, rather than a gay gowne and a lofty looke? Is it not a lowly and loving mind, rather than any wealth and pompe? Surely it is, for he wisheth this, and leaveth out those. And peradventure touching the last, the servant had heard it out of the mouth of long experience, that Divite fœmina nihil intolerabilius. There is nothing more intollerable than a rich woman. Except God governe, let me adde I pray you: for his grace maketh many old sayings to faile of generality. Yet something there was, or is, that such Proverbs arose in times past, and are still called to remembrance in our dayes upon occasions. Surely, all be not Saints that go for Saints before strangers, it may be feared.

Verse 14. Mariage goeth not by hap. Prov. 19. 14.

6 That thou hast ordained. Marke this word well, and in it observe the judgement that the servant had of mariage; namely, that there was no hap nor chance in it, but that every one is served according to the ordinance of God, either with comfort or crosse. It is not all one with that which Salomon saith: House and riches are in the inheritance of the Fathers, but a prudent Wife

Wife commeth of the Lord? How doth this good judgement then ſhew unto us the good order in Abrahams houſe for knowledge and inſtruction. Hee that walketh in the Sunne will bee Sunburned, ſaith the Proverbe, and ſurely where good inſtruction is in a Houſe or Towne, the people will ſavour of it. Would God our ſervants might thus ſavour of the talke they heare at our tables or otherwiſe, as this man did. But alas! what know I? Nay, what know yee your ſelves of your ſelves? Without doubt this, that if carping and gnawling of others, if ſwearing and filthy ſpeaking, if mocking and cenſuring the way of truth, if Papiſme or Atheiſme bee a colour worthy carrying, our ſervants may learne in our houſes, and of us to carry ſuch colours: but as for Religion and ſound judgement in the ſeverall branches of Gods Booke, alas, alas, it is not to be had with many of us, nor amongſt us.

7 By the word mercy in the ſame verſe, appeareth the nature and heart of an honeſt and faithfull ſervant, that hee would not onely have things fall out to his Maſter, but in mercy to fall to him, that is, all for the beſt, and his comfort, if it may any way bee more than other.

A good heart of a ſervant to his Maſter.

8 Now what ſucceſſe had this prayer of a true ſervant with God? I pray you marke the 15. verſe: Ere he had left ſpeaking ſaith it, Behold Rebeka came out, &c. See then the gracious goodneſs of God, and how open his care is to one that is carefull of the credit committed unto him, be he ſervant or whatſoever elſe. Even before he had left ſpeaking, the Lord anſwereth this ſervants deſire, and ſendeth by his hidden powerfull providence, this Maid Rebecca to come to the Well to him. Now, if we conſider what he went about, and what the Magiſtrates and Miniſters here appointed in earth amongſt us goe about, is there any compariſon? then with aſſurance may they goe on in their places, that God will regard them, and give them his bleſſing, when he thus dealt with this ſervant?

Verſe 15.

9 In that ſhe came forth with a Pitcher to fetch water, the ſervant having prayed as you ſaw before in the fourteenth verſe, note the wonderfull providence of God, how it ruleth every action, and ſuffereth nothing to goe by chance as many dreame. For was there no time to fetch water but now, when the Servant lay by the Well waiting for Gods direction? Yes many times might ſhee that day have ſtored her ſelfe, had not God directed even to that time. And what God will muſt come to paſſe.

Verſe 15.

God diſpoſeth times and ſeaſons.

10 She goeth downe, filleth her Pitcher, and away againe, ſaith the text. Here is then no tarrying, no gazing at paſſers by, or ſtrangers, no prittle prattle, or telling of Tales, but modeſty, ſilence, and ready diſpatch of that which is gone about. A good example for youth, if it were carefully followed.

Verſe 16. 17. &c.

11 But the Servant ſeeing her make ſuch ſpeed, runneth to meet her, and praied her that hee might drinke of her Pitcher, She ſaith unto him, drinke Sir. In the ſervant note ſtill no overflowing of his buſineſs, but having commended his ſuite unto God, he beginneth to try the very firſt that came, to ſee if his marke before mentioned might be found in her. In the Maid marke all gentleneſs and courteſie of nature, with ſpeech convenient; neither a foole to ſay nothing, nor yet over bold to talke at randome. When ſhe had given the ſervant drinke, then ſee I pray you, how no doubt by Gods very direction, ſhe uſeth thoſe words that the ſervant had prayed God before might be a marke for him to know the Woman that God had appointed for his Maſters ſon by. I will (ſaith ſhe) draw water alſo for thy Camels. By which the ſervant knew it was his Miſtreſſe that ſhould be, Gods gift and appointed match for his Maſter Iſaac. Then he wondred to conſider Gods mercy and providence, fitting things ſo quickly and graciouſly upon his prayer, and bringing ſo forward the cauſe of his comming. And indeed the manifeſtation of Gods providence is wonderfull, for which of us could once ever have thought, that ſuch things ſhould have come to paſſe as now we know and ſee? Happy is that heart that is contented with Gods will, and praiſeth his name for well and woe.

Fit behaviour for a Maid.

The manifeſtation of God his providence is wonderfull.

12 Then the ſervant tooke forth a golden abilement, &c. Where we may ſee, how although he was perſwaded that this was the woman whom God had appointed for Wife unto his Maſter, yet doth he uſe ordinary meanes, as gifts of Gold, to procure her to conſent. Therefore wee ſee the children of God do never reaſon thus, if God have appointed the matter, it skilleth not what I do, but they uſe the appointed meanes, and leave Gods counſels to himſelfe. Our Saviour fled into Egypt from Herods tyranny, and yet God had appointed that he ſhould not ſo die. And in the Acts of the Apoſtles, they tooke broken peeces of the ſhip, and ſo got out, yet foretold that they ſhould not periſh; with many ſuch examples in the Scripture. Againe, wee may note here, that ſuch golden attiring as this, and Jewels, are not ſimply condemned in all women. But it is the manner, or meaſure, or calling, that maketh things not allowable. Conferre this with Peter and Paul, forbidding broidered haire, &c. as alſo with the third of Eſay, and interprete one by another. Maſter Cranmer in his booke of the Sacrament, ſaith, thoſe places of Peter and Paul be denials but by compariſon, and not ſimply. But I need not to ſpeake in this matter. We are too apt to take more than is allowed, when men are but carefull not to reſtraine what is allowed. Both are extremities, and the middle way is the good vertue ever commended.

Verſe 22.

Mat. 2.

Acts 17.

Attire in women.

13 The

Verſ. 26. Thankfulneſs to God.

13 The ſervant bowed himſelfe when he ſaw how all fell out. And we are to marke in it, how Gods children ſhould not onely pray in their wants, but alſo bee thankfull in their wealth, for ſo doth this ſervant. He beggeth Gods aſſiſtance, and now that he evidently ſeeth it, he boweth himſelfe, and bleſſeth the Lord for it. But God forgive us our unkindneſs in this behalfe: for if ten of us be cleanſed, nine of us never returne to give thankes.

Verſ. 31. A notable ſervant. The like is read of Populius a Romane, that he refuſed all entertainment of King Antiochus, untill he heard of him that hee would be ruled by the Senate, about which meſſage he was ſent. Diſcretion in doing a meſſage.

14 In the 31. verſe, and ſo on, it pleaſeth the Spirit of God to note Labans kindneſs, and good entertainment of this ſervant, when once he had heard of him by his Siſter, and no doubt it is ever thus done, to commend unto us courteſie and gentleneſs, and to bring us in diſlike with curriſhneſs and hardneſs. But when meat was ſet before him, the ſervant will not once taſt of it till he have done his meſſage: more carefull a great deale of his Maſters buſineſs than of his owne belly. Where are ſuch ſervants in theſe dayes?

15 When you come to the ſervants tale, I pray you note how hee leaveth out that which haply might have offended them, namely, how Abraham his Maſter gave him in charge in no caſe to bring backe his Sonne amongſt his Kindred againe. It ſheweth ſuch wiſdome and diſcretion in a good ſervant when he doth his meſſage, as is ever to be followed of all that read it. And it ſheweth alſo, that although no untruth be to be avouched, yet neither is all truth ever, and at all times to be declared.

Verſe 49. The underſtanding and affection of the godly when a thing is ſaid to them.

16 When the ſervant had thus ſhewed how all things had hitherto fallen out, even by Gods mighty and mercifull direction, yet leaveth he liberty to the parents and friends, if yee marke it, to diſpoſe of their child and ſiſter as they would. So ſee wee in thoſe dayes, how the godly abhorred to wring mens children from them by indirect meanes, if the parents were unwilling to beſtow them ſo.

Note.

17 In the anſwer of Laban and Bethuel unto the ſervant when he had ended his tale, marke the nature or manner of the godly, both for underſtanding and affection. Touching the firſt, you ſee they taſt a good tale when it is told them, and diſcerne God in his works. And touching the ſecond, they ſeeing the matter was of God, gave anſwer thus: Wee can ſay unto thee neither evill nor good, behold Rebeka is before thee, take her and go. Both theſe are very ſpeciall graces where God doth grant them, but rare graces wee muſt needs confeſſe in our daies, in compariſon of the greater number. For how many ſavour nothing whatſoever you ſay out of Gods Booke unto them, but are in this matter even void of all capacity, though in worldly cauſes quick enough. Then for affection how many wilfully ſtrive in mind againſt that thing, that yet in conſcience they are convinced to be the will of God. So that where is the man or woman almoſt (wee may ſay) among many, that hearing Gods will told them, and made rather more manifeſt than this was here by the ſervant, is ſtricken, moved, and touched with it inwardly, yeeldeth unto it, and ſaith: Sir, I can neither ſay good nor evill unto you, this thing is of the Lord that you tell me, I ſee his will, and farre be it from me to reſiſt him, no, my heart is ready, and I am content to do it, &c. Yet thus doe Gods children as here you ſee, let us follow it then, and follow it ever when a good tale is told us.

Honeſt mirth after paines taken. Verſe 54. Wee promiſe in haſt, and performe with delay.

18 Then the ſervant bowed againe toward the earth unto the Lord: wherein ſtill marke the conſtant piety of the ſervant, who ſtill, ſtill is thankfull and boweth to God. Againe, in the verſes following, note the cuſtome of thoſe dayes, to give gifts to the Bride, and to her friends. See alſo how it is lawfull to be honeſtly merry when once our buſineſs is done, and charge diſcharged: for now the Servant eateth and drinketh, which he would not doe before, &c.

19 In the morning the Servant would be gone, abhorring to loyter and linger in his buſineſs, as all good ſervants do. But let the Maid tarry a little with us, ſaid the friends, and then ſhe ſhall go: which may diſcover a fault of ours, even this thing in the friends, if we obſerve it. For what do many of us when we heare the word of God declared to us by ſome plaine evidence, ſo that we are moved with it? I ſay, what doe wee? Surely even as theſe friends did over night, go take Rebekah, &c. That is, we conſent and yeeld, and we are all in heat and haſt, to promiſe all obedience to that which wee heare, and a man would thinke wee were wonne for ever. But after a while, what do we? Truely as you ſee theſe friends, in the morning we are well cooled, or rather evill cooled, our heate and haſt is paſt, and now the Maid muſt tarry ten dayes, that is, now we will delay and deferre, what before we promiſed and purpoſed with all ſpeed. So the longer the worſe, when it ſhould be ever the better, if we were not evill.

20 But the Servant ſaith againe, Hinder me not, ſeeing the Lord hath proſpered my journey, &c. Many Servants if they had beene in this place, would have tarried and feaſted, and taken good cheere, and excuſed the matter well enough, that the Maids friends were loath to part with her. But ſo would not this moſt carefull and truſtie Servant do: but having ſped well, he longeth to be with his Maſter to eaſe his minde alſo, which is a ſpeciall good care in a good Meſſenger: for, ægrè triſtia, ſed citò læta ſunt nuntianda; Slowly is evill, but with all good ſpeed, glad things are to be told, ſaith the old ſaying. Againe, becauſe God had proſpered him, he would be gone, making Gods mercy a ſpurre to his faithfulneſs and diligence, and not a flower of him, as no doubt many would.

21 Then

21 Then they called the Maid, and asked her consent therein, leaving this for godly ever, and all to marke, that as children owe a duty to parents, to aske their consents, so even Parents also owe this to their Children, not violently to enforce them against their liking: for who so marieth, marieth for himselfe, and not for his Parents, and good reason that the heart should love whom the life must endure till dying day. Now love is not forced, neither ever can be, but God giveth it reciprocally, if the match be his. No love, no match of Gods making, let Parents thinke, and it is his prerogative to joyne together man and wife. If man will joyne by force and violence, whom God hath not joyned by consent and love, what a boldnes is that in him that doth it, and how will God not endure it, but turne it to his woe? Yet Children againe may not be over bold because of this, but like if they possibly can, where their parents better experienced than they are, justly like. For if they doe not thus, giving all possible place to their parents judgements, surely they do not honour Father and Mother as they should.

Vers. 57. Children ought not to be forced to marry.

22 The Maid then asked, saith she will, which was not any lightnes in her, or easines over much to be intreated, but it was a religious yeelding to that without fooliſh delaies, which she evidently saw was the Lords appointment for her. It should schoole us in these dayes to do the like, and never to use niceness and folly, under pretence of modesty, when the matter is discussed already by mutuall eviction of either heart secretly within, that the Lord will have it so. Such dilly dally is fitter for heathens that know not God, than for sober Christians who have vowed obedience in all staied gravity to the Lords good pleasure.

Behaviour for mariage, when an answer is required.

23 The honest and orderly sending her away, with her nurse and maids, are commendable practises even with us. But especially marke in the 60. verse, the blessing they gave her when she departed. Our care performeth all things rather than this, and yet this as necessary as many others. She rode upon Camels, and was not too tender, but our wanton waies will worke us woe if God do not change us.

Verse 59. Vers. 60.

24 In the 62. verse, note how Isaac not yet maried (for his Wife that should bee, was but now comming towards him with his servant) lived from his Father, and kept house. Now a dayes rich mens children either marry ere they know how to use a house, or neither marying not keeping house, live to spoile and spend what others carefully have got together. But wise Parents may learne of Abraham here, to see, how they will frame in their life time, and then as they like them, leave them more or less.

Verse 62. A good policy for parents.

25 One thing is mentioned here of Isaac, which is worthy memory whilst we live. Namely, that toward the evening he went out into the field to pray. It sheweth us the custome of those godly Fathers of whom he learned it, now and then to goe forth, and all privately alone, to send up to God the abundance of their hearts, fraught with his feare, to meditate of his mercy continually tasted, to pray against faults continually committed, and after many holy debatings of his favours in them, to turne home againe comforted and even refreshed, that with their God so good and so kind, they have had some conference, as became his children. O wee, wee sinfull and wretched! how many are our walkes for vaine pleasure, and how few or none in this holy order?

Verse 63. O notable custome!

26 As Isaac was thus walking in the fields, He lift up his eyes, and saw the Camels comming, and Rebekah, she looked, and saw Isaac walking, and asked who he was, the servant answering, that it was his master: she lighted downe, covered her selfe with a vaile, &c. Both her lighting and vaile, tokens of her modesty and humility. The marginall note is sufficient for this, if you joyne unto it the 1 of Sam. 25. 23. where Abigail meeting David hasted and lighted also.

Verse 64.

27 The servant declareth all Gods dealing in this matter, and no doubt it both contented and mooved Isaac, whereupon he brought her into his mothers tent; he maried her, well liking of Gods choice; he loved her, a token of Gods match; and hee was comforted with her after his Mothers death, to teach us for ever this good, that if God take one thing, he will give another, to the perpetuall praise of his infinite mercy, and the great incouragement of his children to continue in his feare. What a sort of instructions now hath this Chapter yeelded us, and yet neither in this nor in any, is that halfe noted that might be noted, So plentifull is the Spring of this heavenly Water, yea, such a Sea of knowledge and comfort is Gods Booke. This much is more than we thinke of ever: and thus much remembred by this occasion, and practised better, shall yeeld us joy, when all worldly follies shall faile their followers. Wee have here but a time and how short or long who can tell: spend this well and we live for ever: spend this ill, and we die for ever. Life and death differ very much, mirth and misery, weale and woe, joy and paine, I judge, we judge not to be like; but ever and never are piercing darts. The Lord make us carefull, and so I end.

If God take away one comfort, he giveth another.

Chap. XXV.

The chiefe heads of this Chapter are theſe:

Abrahams ſecond mariage.

Second mariage lawfull. Rom.7.3. 1 Cor.7.8, 39.

TOuching the firſt, it is a warrant of the lawfulneſs of ſecond mariage, againſt any prophane mind, that wilfully diſalloweth it. And the Apoſtle is as plaine, when he ſaith, as long as they live together, the man and the woman are each bound to other, but if eyther be taken away by death, the ſurviver is at liberty to marry againe in the Lord.

Verſe 2. &c.

2 Remember how God ſaid, that in Iſaac ſhould his ſeed be bleſſed, yet now commeth Keturah with ſixe ſonnes on a heape, ſuch events fall out to try the children of God, whether they will cleave to the word or no.

Verſe 5.6. To make a will is wiſedome.

3 Abraham maketh his Will and Teſtament in his life time, diſpoſing his goods in ſuch ſort as quietneſs may follow amongſt his children when he is gone. So was Ezechias commanded to do by the Prophet, and it is a thing that every wiſe man will be carefull of whilſt he hath time. The neglect of this hath ſpent whatſoever was gathered by him that dyed.

Verſe 8.

4 Abraham dyeth, and it is the way of all fleſh as hath often beene ſaid. He dyeth in a good age, ſaith the text, and full of dayes. Long life is good, and yet life will weary any body at laſt: a fulneſs of time will come to them, that moſt love this World, though it be long firſt: for Senium vivendi tædium adfert: Old age will waxe weary of life at length.

Verſe 9. To bury them is a debt of all freinds.

5 Iſaac and Iſmael his ſonnes bury him. A duty that parents do owe their children, and children againe to their parents, Husband muſt do this for his Wife, and the Wife likewiſe for her Husband, it is the laſt courteſie and kindneſs to be ſhewed, and it is not a matter of little regard with the godly. They know there will be a meeting againe, and therefore they lay up as it were the bodies of their dead friends, as men lay up their Jewels till ſuch day come. Iſaac and Iſmael were no great friends once, but yet no jarres hinder them from this common duty to their Father. We are more crooked and wayward, many of us, if luſt do urge us in this point. Our diſpleaſures private hinder us greatly from common good, and our anger laſteth from age to age, to our great reproach.

Verſe 10. Lying of frinds together in buriall.

6 Abraham is buried with Sarah his wife, and if they that loved and lived together while they were here, be alſo both laid together in that bed of earth, that all muſt come to, when they bee dead, it is a thing that may well be done, and deſerveth no juſt diſlike of any.

Verſe 11.

7 And after the death of Abraham, God bleſſed Iſaac, ſaith the 11. verſe, and how ſweet is it to all Parents, if they marke it. For ſince God is not the God of Abraham alone, but of all that feare him: This comfort may you have in your ſoules ever, that when you be gone, yet he remaineth and liveth for ever, to bleſſe and proſper, to defend and comfort your Children after you, that are now your care.

Verſ. 16. A comfort for all ſuccourleſs children.

8 In the Genealogie of Iſmael, having twelve Princes deſcending of him, ſee what God can do for a poore boy that was ſent out with a bottle of water, and as it were left to the wide world and to his fortune, as ſome ſpeake; O powerfull God! what cannot he doe, and whom cannot he exalt if it pleaſe him? Servants and all ſuccourleſs children looke at it.

Verſe 21. God taketh his owne time to give children.

Rebekah was barren long, and had no child, both to her owne and Husbands griefe no doubt. But ſo it pleaſed God then, and ſo now it pleaſeth him often alſo, to ſchoole his children, by withholding their wiſhed comforts from them a time. Iſaac had a promiſe, that he ſhould have ſeed, and in his ſeed the family and line greatly increaſed, yet God muſt have him waite for it, and tarry his good pleaſure in patience, which we muſt marke. Iſaac prayeth for his Wife, and the Lord is intreated; to ſhew us what couples ſhould do one for another in this behalfe, and how well the Lord liketh it, when they do it.

Verſe 22. The onely refuge of the godly.

10 Then ſhe conceived, and being with child, ſhe felt them ſtrive in her body together, and marvelling at her caſe, ſhe went to the Lord to aske him. Noting thereby to us, that there is no refuge to the godly ever in their diſtreſſes more than this, to get them to the Lord, and to learne of him ſome comfort for their caſe. But how did ſhe aske of the Lord? Surely there is no certainty laid downe unto us, and therefore as wee cannot be reſolved with any certainty, ſo is the ſilence uſed an evidence that there is no neceſſity: the matter is not to us materiall. Auſten ſaith, whether ſhe went unto the Altar that Abraham had built, or Melchiſedeck was yet alive, or ſome ſuch man, or any other way that I cannot remember and think of, ſaith he, this is certain, the Scripture is true, and ſhe asked God. Others ſay this was before Abraham dyed, and that ſhe asked asked of him, and had her answer as followeth: others say happily in a dreame she was told, or by some inward revelation, or by some Angell.

11. When the children came to be borne, Esau is borne red and hairy. So useth nature sometimes in mens bodies, to bewray their future manners, qualities, and conditions: Iacob is born the latter, whom God could have made first, if it had pleased him; but he would have it known that he was chosen meerely of grace, and not as more excellent, because the elder. Hee held his brother by the heele: which heele signifieth his posterity, over whom the Israelites ruled, not by nature, but by God.

Verse 25. Why Iacob borne latter.

12. Isaac loved Esau, and Rebekah loved Iacob. Such diversity in affection of Parents to their Children, we see daily. Sometime with reason, and often without. Here a reason is added of the fathers love; to wit, because he loved Venison, which Esau often killed for him. But of the mothers no reason is given, happily she loved Iacob more, because God had chosen him before Esau. Whatsoever it was, certaine it is, shee loved him whom God loved. But something was in Iacob that pleased her we may probably thinke, for this is the difference of Gods love and mans, that the reason of his is ever in himselfe, and not in the party being a sinfull man, but the reason of mans love, is in the merit of the party, lesse or more ever.

Vers. 28. Diversity of affection to Children even in godly parents. Rom. 5.

13. Sell me thy birth-right now, &c. As if he should have said, often hast thou offered, now performe it, and let me have it, and thou shalt have to refresh thy hunger withall. But was this a brothers part, to prey as it were upon his brother, and to lie in waite for a vantage? Surely if he had beene but a stranger, humanity would have relieved his hunger, either gratis, or for lesse then a birth-right, much more his brother. How then may Iacob be excused here? This answer of good men is, that in an extraordinary thing, wee may not use an ordinary measure, judging of it, as of other things that are ordinary. The Lords purpose was to derive the birth-right to Iacob: this occasion and opportunity falleth out, Iacob taketh it, and let us leave all to God, and make no doctrine either of rebuke to others, or imitation to our selves by extraordinary facts.

Verse 31. How may Iacob be excused for the birth-right to get it thus.

14. Loe I am almost dead, what is then this birth-right to me? A very bad speech of an earthly minde, that measureth all by the belly, and thinketh nothing of use that profits not that way: and we cannot better conceive of this speech, than by the like. Suppose a Christian in distresse seeketh comfort some way of a Turke; he shall say, if thou wilt forgoe thy faith and profession, thy title and interest in Christ and Religion, I will releeve thee. The Christian shall thinke and say: My distresse is great, and what good doth my faith and profession now to me, can my title and name now relieve me? Can I live by the name of Christianity? Is either meate in my belly, or money in my purse by religion? No, I may die for hunger, and lie in prison for want, for all my Christianity, and therefore better it is for me to take gold and silver, meate and drinke, pleasure and comforts of this life, and be out of this want, then to cleave and be wedded to my faith still, away then with this that helpeth not, and welcome that that never failes. For give me the penny, and I shall want nothing. Were not this a most horrible contempt of a most holy profession? Then thinke of Esau by this. What, saith he, is this birth-right to me, now that I am like to die for meate? as if he should say, give me for my belly, and let it goe that feeds me not, and so forth. Now if this be ugly before our eyes, as I am sure it is, then learne wee by it, never to measure spirituall things by worldly profit, to backe and belly, and purse, &c. but thinke of spirituall things in their kinde, and know, that he that feareth God shall want no manner of thing that is good. Godlinesse hath the promise of life to come, and of this life also, that is, of all necessaries here as shall be best. Seeke first the kingdome of God, and the righteousnesse thereof, and all these things shall be cast unto you. With many and many such promises.

Verse 32. How worldly men thinke of spiritual graces.

Godlinesse is gaine, and not contrary. 1 Tim. 4. Psal. 84.

15. Sweare to me, saith Iacob. And why sweare? Of like because he knew the instability and uncertainty of Esau, now in this minde, now in that, never constant in the word spoken. Therefore he maketh him sure, that he shall not start, with an oath, which doubtlesse very Esau made religion of, to the condemnation of many amongst us, that thinke they be better than Esau, and yet care as much for an oath, as for their ordinary speeches: we may learn by Iacob with worldly men to deale somewhat worldly, that is, to make surer of them by such lawfull meanes as we can, then we would of others, whose consciences be better, and constancy in a word spoken, far otherwise then this man was.

Verse 33. With worldly men we must deale thereafter.

16. Then he sware and sold it. Preferring as worldly men doe, an earthly commodity before Gods spirituall graces, which the godly doe not. The preheminence of the birth-right was this, Habebant jus Sacerdotii & regni in familia: They were Priests and Kings in the family after the Fathers death. They had a preheminence above the rest, in the division of the Fathers inheritance, Dent. 21. They succeeded the Father in all dignity, principality, and honour. They had authority over their yonger brethren, so that they rose up at their presence, & ministred to them. Spectabat etiam vitam æternam, It had also his reference and respect to eternall life. All which being great things, this prophane man made little account of, but sold his title to them all for an easie price, according to a silly feeling of spirituall grace. Beware wee by him, as the Verse 33. The birth-right what it was. Gen. 49. 3. 8. &c.

Heb. 12. 16, 17.

Apoſtle warneth to the Hebrewes, that we be not like him. Reade the Apoſtles words your ſelfe: Many among us can skill more of Sheep and Cattell, Corne and Wine, Farmes and Rents, than of ſpirituall regeneration, and death of ſin. Such ſayings ſavour not ought unto them, but remember Eſau, and I ſay no more.

Verſe 34. Wicked men of what remorſe.

Laſtly, when Eſau had ſold it, and Iacob gotten it, then falleth he to his meate freſhly, that Iacob ſet before him, and contemned the birth-right. See I pray you the remorſe in wicked men, when they have offended. They eate and drinke, laugh and are merry, this is the care they take, and feeling that they have. A fearefull dulneſſe if we thinke of it: not onely to doe wickedly, but to be far from repentance afterward. Yet is this uſuall with many men, Davids heart ſmote him that he had offended, and it was Gods grace and Spirit in him: ſo ſhall it be in us. A ſtony heart is a plague of God, and a fleſhly heart his good bleſſing. The one for his enemies, the other for his children. This feeling heart and tender ſence, when wee have ſlipped, the Lord give us ever, to a true repentance, and riſing up againe.

Chap. XXVI.

The heads of this Chapter, theſe.

The famine: verſe 1.
The exile of Iſaac, and his accidents: to verſe 15.
The hatred of the Philiſtims againſt him: to the 21.
The covenant betwixt the King and him.

Verſe 1. The trials of Gods children are alike.

TOuching the firſt, we remember, and the words remember us alſo, that God tryed Abraham this mans Father before, even with the ſame affliction in a ſtrange Country, and now he tryeth his ſonne after him with the ſame. Thereby giving us occaſion to learne, that even ſuch temptations as others before us, our Fathers and brethren have taſted of, wee alſo muſt expect and prepare our ſelves for. The cup of affliction is not appropriated to ſome few, but made ready even for the whole number of Gods elect, as the father of wiſdome ſhall judge it fit. Now if others alſo have drunk with us, both before and ſhall after, then falſe is that peeviſh perſwaſion, that Satan ſo faine would faſten in our mindes, that none but we taſte of this croſſe, or in this ſort, and ſuch like. It is not ſo, but as here what Iſaac is tryed with, his Father alſo endured before, ſo what we abide, others in like ſort have abidden, and it is no more token of Gods diſpleaſure to us than to them, but his meſſenger in love, to inure our faith, both to them and us. The Apoſtle Peter is very plaine, and let not his words depart from before you eyes day or night: whom reſiſt, ſaith he, ſtedfaſt in the faith, knowing that the ſame, the ſame afflictions (marke it) are accompliſhed in your brethren which are in the world. Both of which place and matter, I have much more ſpoken in the laſt petition of the Lords prayer, to your comfort I hope, if you will there ſee it and conſider it.

1 Pet. 5. 9.

Verſe 2. Gods care for his ever ſure.

2. The Lord appeareth to Iſaac and ſaith, Goe not downe to Ægypt, &c. Where we ſee the care and providence of the Lord for his choſen ever, whom though he exerciſe as it pleaſeth him, yet he never leaveth deſtitute of his comfort. His eye ſleepeth not, nor his love fainteth, but ever he is ready to ſupply another way, what wanteth ſome way to his children. Gen. 41. he admoniſheth Pharaoh of a famine to come, by his ſervant Ioſeph. And why? But that ſo he might provide for his ſervant Iacob, a place to be fed in. 2 King. and 8. you have another notable example of his mercy. Let the Lord then worke his pleaſure with us, ſure we are by theſe examples, he will not faile us, but provide for us as ſhall be beſt.

Verſe 3. Dwell where God placeth thee.

3. Dwell in this Land, and I will be with thee, &c. Note the bleſſing of God upon men, when they are where God appointeth them. If we carve for our ſelves, bee it unto us according to our boldneſſe. But if we tarry Gods leiſure, and follow his calling, and his direction, ſure it ſhall be to us there according to mercy: a good place to ſtay flitting mindes, no way reſpecting the Lord in their changes, but their owne pleaſures or ſelf-will. Reade the 31. of Deut. ver. 17. and confer it with this place.

The profit to children of parents piety. Reade 1 Reg. 11. 34.

4. Many bleſſings be promiſed here to Iſaac, if you mark them: and why? becauſe Abraham obeyed my voyce, ſaith he, &c. Teaching us plainly that there is no more effectuall meanes to provoke God to mercy toward children, than if their parents before obeyed Gods voice. This is it that God cannot forget, neither will forget for his goodneſſe ſake. But even unto thouſands of their ſeed that ſerve him and keepe his commandements will he be good. O parents marke it, and lay it to your hearts! You ſee the fruit of your comming to Church, of your hearing the word, receiving the Sacraments, and of leading your life according to the way preſcribed, it ſealeth up the Lords favour, not onely to your ſelves, but to your children after you, to a thouſand deſcents. This cannot raking and ſcraping up worldly pelfe doe, with neglect and contempt contempt of all I have named, but even quite the contrary, and therefore I pray you marke it.

5 What might be noted here in his denyall of his wife, hath ſufficiently beene touched in the remembrance of this matter in his father before him, Chap. 20. whither you may reſort againe, and compare the Father and the Sonne together; making this note with your ſelfe, that feare and diſtruſt is found in the moſt faithfull, and therefore no cauſe we ſhould utterly deſpaire for our owne wants. Verſe 7. Verſe 8. Verſ. 9.

7 Abimelechs judgement of adultery, in the tenth verſe, will condemne many careleſſe ſinners in this kinde, that make not the like conſcience to offend thus, that this man did. Theſe curſed dayes make but a ſport of this ſinne, ſo foule in the eyes of very Heathens. But let us beware, and lay it to our hearts, how in all ages, men that have not beene paſt all honeſty, have beene perſwaded that Gods vengeance ſhould light on wedlock-breakers. Verſ. 10.

7 Abimelech then gave charge, as you ſee, for Iſaacks ſafety, and his wives alſo, threatning death it ſelfe to him that ſhould touch them. See Gods mercy to take away his feare, that for his wife he ſhould be killed; and not onely ſo, but to raiſe him up ſuch a friend of the King, as here we ſee. O what is not God able to doe for his faithfull ſervants, and what is hee not willing to doe alſo for their comfort? Let us cleave to God then, and he will cleave to us; let us truſt in him, and he will never forſake us. Verſe 11.

8 Iſaac having thus found grace with the King, that he might be ſafe, fell to labour, and ſowed a crop. The Lord was preſent in that alſo, and gave him of his labour increaſe an hundred fold. So the Lord bleſſed him among theſe ſtrangers; and is that arme ſhortned, that it cannot now bleſſe our labours in our ſeverall callings and trades, if it pleaſe him? We know it is not, and therefore rather we want Iſaacks travell, who lay not on the one ſide and looked to live, but laboured truly, and ſowed his ſeed; or elſe we want his good heart toward God and religion, and therefore the Lord ſerveth us thereafter. Judge your ſelves, as you beſt can, and amend what you finde to be amiſſe: with ſowing, not with ſleeping, Iſaac got his increaſe, and yet not with ſowing neither, without Gods bleſſing; but the Lord bleſſed him ſaith the Text, verſe 13. and ſo makes him the Author of his fruitfulneſſe in the Land, as ever he is. His mighty increaſe alſo otherwiſe, the Text doth ſhew you, and marke it well, what God can doe. Verſe 12. It is not lawfull (ſaith the heathen Xenophon) for any that ſow not corne, to pray that they may have good corne; this very nature ſpake. Verſ. 14.

9 So hee encreaſed in very deed, that the Philiſtins had envy at him. Thereby wee finding the ſaying true; that poverty breeds pitty, and plenty ſpite: yea, thereby we ſeeing the guiſe of this world moſt plaine before us, that if a man want he is contemned, and if God bleſſe him, hee is envied, for envy is a griefe at anothers well doing. And there is no poyſon like this poyſon, for all others hurt ſome others, and not themſelves, but envy rather waſteth and weareth our owne ſelves, than hurteth others. Actius Sincerus ſaid well of it, when being in company where queſtion was made, what was good for the eyes to quicken the ſight, and ſome ſaid Fenell, ſome Salendine, ſome glaſſe, &c. he ſaid, envy was better than all thoſe. Noting thereby that envy and ſpite is ever buſie to ſpie quickly, rather with moſt than leaſt: what remedy but patience, and patience againſt ſpite ſhall ever have victory at the laſt. Xenophon ſaid to one that ſpake ſpitefully of him, Tu didiciſti maledicere, & ego conſcientia teſte maledicta contemnere: Thou, ſaith hee, haſt learned to ſpeake evill, and I in the teſtimony of my cleere conſcience to contemne thy ſpite. So ſay we, and ſo doe we, and the game will be ours in the end. Patientia vincit omnia, non colluctando, ſed ſufferendo; non murmurando, ſed gratias egendo: Patience overcommeth all things, not with ſtrugling againe, but with ſuffering; not with murmuring, but with giving of thankes. Socrates was merry, when he anſwered one that asked him why he put up an injury, and called not the party into Law: What? if mine Aſſe take up his heel and hit me, muſt I goe to law with him by and by? Noting what patience is rather to bee uſed of wiſe men. Verſe 15. Nube ſolet pulſa candidus ire dies.

10 The Philiſtins ſtop up his Wells, &c. This being their malice, let it hearten us, if ever wee finde the like, and teach us, that it is as true of malice as of love, that if it cannot goe, it will creep; that is, it will ſhew it ſelfe as it can, and if it cannot doe all it would, it will yet doe peeviſhly all it can.

11 Iſaac upon this changeth his dwelling, and we may learne by it, that quietneſſe is to bee ſought above profit. Verſe 17.

12 In digging of theſe pits that here you ſee, marke their names; the firſt is digged, and hee called it Eſek, that is, contention or ſtrife, becauſe they ſtrove with him for it. Then digged hee a ſecond, and called it Sitnah, which is hatred. But at laſt, He digged a third, for which they ſtrove not, and therefore he called it Rehoboth, becauſe the Lord had made him roome. So then after Eſek and Sitnah, ſtrife and hatred, at laſt he came to Rehoboth, roome and reſt: let us hope the like, after trouble, peace; after ſtrife, reſt; and after paine pleaſure; to the praiſe of Gods mercy, that in time ſhall moderate what is amiſſe. And he gave thē the ſame names which his Father gave them, ſaith the Text. Whereupon one noteth thus: Vix filium invenias, qui permittat, quæ pater inſtituit, permanere. Omnia volunt mutare, &c. Scarcely ſhall you now a dayes finde a ſonne that will ſuffer any thing that his father did, but alter and change, in conceit of their owne wits, and a ſelfe-liking of their owne inventions. Aſſuredly there be but too many of theſe new Verſe 18. Verſe 20. Verſ. 21. Verſe 22.

fangled ſons that in their pride, diſdaine their fathers ſteps, and therefore in the ſound experience of wiſe men, to whom their fathers gravity and diſcreet actions were well approved, are juſtly laughed at. Well ſhould it be both for them and theirs, if in time they would thinke of it, and reverence more their wiſe Fathers counſels, before their ſuperfine French and Italian deviſes had brought, as the old ſaying is, a noble to nine pence, &c.

Verſ. 24. 13. God appeareth unto him, and comforteth him, ſaying, Feare not, &c. See, and ſee again, the care of God for a true ſervant of his. Theſe croſſings and ſtrivings you have ſeene, and how grievous they were to the poore ſtranger you can conſider, more far than the like would have beene among his owne friends: God therefore ſpeaketh and cheereth him up, leaving us this to remember ever, that he ſeeth our griefes, noteth our wrongs, marketh our ſtrifes, and in moſt need he will ever comfort us. O ſweet mercy of a gracious father! how may it cheere us? he is not kinde for Iſaac alone, but for all them that truſt in him, and that have we found I am ſure all of us, if we will remember, and ſtill ſhall finde if we will regard him. His time he knoweth, and we may not appoint him, his time he will keepe, and we may not doubt him, our pinch hee ſpyeth, and we ſhall feele him.

Reade Habak. 2.ver.3.

Verſe 26. Reade Acts 7. 35. 14. Yet ſee more both of mercy and power in the Lord to his childe. That unkinde King that reverſed his love towards Iſaac and thruſt him away, the Lord maketh ſeeke to him againe for favour, and to feare his vertue. So can God doe, if it pleaſe him, with any of us, when wee are moſt troden downe and abuſed by any enemies that we have. But let us not appoint him, what he doth is ever beſt, only let us ſee what he can doe, if it be good for us.

Verſe 27. 15. Iſaac when they came, expoſtulateth with them of his wrong, yet he forgiveth it, and feaſteth them liberally. A good example for our eager wraths, that will never be appeaſed. If one Verſe 30. of us be touched, we carry deadly hatred to our grave with us, and have rooted it alſo in our poſterity, that they may carry it. Thus did not Iſaac, and God was with him.

Verſ. 34. 16. Concerning Eſau in the 34 verſe. It biddeth us marke who they be that marry againſt their parents minde, and alſo with wives of a falſe religion: Surely Eſaus not Iacobs, that is, ungodly children, not godly children that have grace in them. Againe, how bitter is it to a godly parent, to ſee the degeneration of his childe, and to harbour or countenance daughters in Law that feare not God. Thirdly, it is very worthy noting, that albeit this matching of Eſau in that Country with mens daughters, as we may probably thinke, not meane, might have been ſome worldly ſtrength to Iſaac, who was there a ſtranger, yet being not in the Lord, hee deteſteth ſuch meanes, and wiſheth in his heart no ſuch affinity, but in faith relyeth upon the ſure God.

Verſe 34. 17. Let us not paſſe it over unmarked, how though Iſaac had wealth at will, and flowed in abundance outward, yet wanted he not his houſhold croſſes. But Eſau marieth againſt his will, grieveth the heart both of Father and Mother. So muſt it be, and ſo ſhall it be, for this world is not heaven. The Lord only knit us to him in all our croſſes. Amen.

Chap. XXVII.

In this Chapter we have,

- The ſtealing of the bleſſing from Eſau by Jacob.
- The manner of the bleſſing.
- The behaviour of Eſau afterward.

Verſe 1. Iſaac dimme of ſight, why? IT is ſaid, that Iſaac was old and his ſight was dimme. Wherein we may note both a generall providence of God, and a particular. A generall, that commonly men in age and time, ſhould by courſe of nature waxe dark of ſight, that thereby they drawing towards another world, might be weaned from earthly matters, and be occaſioned more to meditate, by want of bodily ſight, upon things that are not ſeene. A particular, by this meanes, to draw this man to doe that which otherwiſe peradventure he would hardly have done.

Verſe 2. No man knoweth the day of death. 2. I know not the day of my death, ſaith he, &c. and who doth know it. Ideo latet ultimus dies, ut obſervetur omnis dies: Therefore is the laſt day unknowne, that we might bee in a readineſſe every day. Nothing more certaine than the thing, nothing more uncertaine than the time, and ſuch like ſayings many. Upon this occaſion Iſaac will make ready for death, and diſpoſe of his matters according to this uncertainty. So let us doe upon the like cauſe. for you ſee we know no more the day of our death then he did.

Verſe 4. Liking of ſome meate more than others allowed of God. 3. He loved veniſon. And to our comfort it teacheth us, that uſing moderation, and remembring thankes, the Lord is not offended with our fancies. Hee hath ſanctified all meates to the uſe of his children, and nothing is uncleane that the Lord hath created. And if further wee like like this rather than that, even ſo alſo is the Lord pleaſed; and giving us liberty to uſe our liking, bleſſeth with his mercy that particular to us. O gracious God!

1 Tim. 4.

4. Rebekah heard when Iſaac ſpake to his ſonne. Some note of the curioſity in womens natures, they will be hearkening over often when they are not called to be of counſell, and it is a tickling deſire in too many, to know all that that is ſpoken, bee it purpoſely wiſhed otherwiſe. Sarah before a good woman, yet hearkening behinde the doore, and now here Rebekah heard, and of like by ſome ſuch privy hearkening. All women be not thus, but many grave and wiſe, doe content themſelves within their bounds, ſuch as be ſo may well amend it, and bee greatly commended.

Verſe 5. Curioſity of women.

5. Now having thus overheard her husband, ſhe entreth into talke with her ſonne Iacob to prevent the old man, and to derive this bleſſing from his brother to himſelfe. Wherein we ſee the picture of a partiall mother, more addicted to one child than another, when yet both of them are alike dearely bought to her. Touching the ſubtilty ſhe uſeth, I doe not ſee how it can bee juſtified, for ſhe ſhould have tarried till God had performed his promiſe by ſome direct courſe.

Verſe 6. &c. A partiall mother. Her ſubtilty not allowed.

6. Iacob objecteth what danger may happen, and thereby we ſee the common ſaying true, Plus vident oculi, quam oculus, more ſee two eyes than one, and eſpecially if ones minde be vehement upon the thing in queſtion, for earneſt deſire to obtaine a thing dazleth the judgement often, that it ſeeth not hidden evill and inconveniences. Therefore if ever I ſhould uſe my friend, I would ſurely uſe him, and crave his due conſideration to joyne with me, when I finde my affections hot upon any thing to effect it or to have it: for even then ſooneſt, as I ſay, by the vehemency of deſire may my judgement faile me, whereas my friend being ſwayed no way with any affection, looketh more throughly into the matter, and with a clearer eye than I can, ſo finding and ſeeing ſuch perill and danger, ſuch evill and inconvenience, as I for my heat carying me unevenly could not ſee. So doth Iacob in this place object, what indeed in mans gueſſe might very well have fallen out, and of like, by his mother was not either at all or earneſtly thought upon.

Verſe 11. More ſee two eyes than one.

7. Iacobs care alſo not to offend his father, and ſo procure his curſe, is very worthy noting here, to the example of all children and youth which in theſe licentious dayes of ours make little account of parents diſpleaſure. My father, ſaith hee, may poſſibly feele mee, and I ſhall ſeeme to him to be a mocker, that would deceive him, ſo ſhall I bring a curſe upon mee, and not a bleſſing. Looke at this yee children that marry againſt parents mindes, and doe many things elſe to their great griefe. Where is this feare of your parents curſe that you ſee in Iacob, or that they ſhould thinke of you otherwiſe than well? Thinke you the parents curſe now a dayes being juſt, is not as ſtrong as in thoſe dayes? Deceive not your ſelves, for it is true even in theſe dayes as ever it was, That the bleſſing of the Father eſtabliſheth the houſes of the children, and the Mothers curſe rotteth out the foundations, &c. Reade the Chapter from the beginning, and you ſhall ſee more.

Verſe 12. The feare of Fathers curſe.

Syrac. 3. 10.

8. Vpon me be thy curſe, ſaith his mother, my ſonne, only heare my voice, &c. You remember when the children ſtrove in Rebekahs wombe, what the Lord told her concerning the yonger, which promiſe of his is to be thought her faith reſpecting, and aſſuring her ſelfe God would bleſſe Iacob, as he had ſaid, ſhe ſpake thus, fearing no curſe to come to him, whom God in mercy had choſen and regarded. Therefore this in her may be lawfull. But can no wiſe authoriſe us either in rage and heate of unbridled affections, or in deep and dead ſecurity and unfeelingneſſe to uſe like phraſe in an evill matter, as thoſe wicked Jewes did that cryed, his blood be upon us, and upon our children: as many deſperate and blinde Fryers doe, Seminaries and Jeſuits, Prieſts and practiſers for the man of Rome, that incourage the people to diſobey their Princes lawes, and governments that they live under, bid them lay that burden upon them, they will endure that danger, &c. Such ſeducing ſpirits have no promiſe to reſpect as Rebekah here had, but a fearefull fulfilling of wrath upon them for ſuch temerities, as the Jewes found. Yet I muſt confeſſe ſome have ſaid upon this place: Vide quam tenax propoſiti ſit fœmina ut nihil mali vereatur, modo faciat quod concupiſcit: See how wilfull women are in their intendments fearing nothing, ſo they may doe their will.

Verſ. 13. How Rebekah ſaith, that curſe be upon me.

Mat. 27.

Seminaries and Ieſuits.

9. Iacob ſaith he is Eſau, and that God hath brought ſo ſoone the veniſon to his hands, all which was untrue, to deceive his blinde father that could not ſee him. The marginall note doth ſatisfie us in it, that although Iacob was aſſured of this bleſſing by faith, yet hee offended in ſeeking it by lies, and the more becauſe he abuſeth Gods name thereunto. So ſee we the imperfections of good men, that they have been ever, and often great.

Verſe 19. Iacobs lie unlawfull.

Verſ. 20.

10. The old man calleth for him that he might feele him, and yet cannot diſcerne, ſo cunningly had his mother uſed the matter. We may marke in it how nothing is able to goe contrary to Gods will and determination. We ſhall feele and not know, we ſhall heare, and yet be deceived, yea, when even our owne mouths ſhall confeſſe it to be Iacobs voice, yet with an outward counterfeit ſhew of Eſau his roughneſſe, we ſhall be carried away if the Lord have ſo decreed it. Therefore let them that are to perſwade others be content if all beleeve not, and let them

Verſ. 21. Our eaſineſſe to be deceived.

Verſe 22.

them that beleeve not in ſo cleere light, feare leſt God have decreed woe to them; and haſten, if yet they will be warned, from ſuch hardneſſe. The ſons of Eli are a fearefull example if they will conſider it.

1 Sam.2.25.

Childrens uſage if they will be bleſſed. A cheerefull ſpirit moſt apt to bleſſe others. Pſal.137.

11. Let us conſider here who is bleſſed, ſurely a ſon that feedeth his father. And when doth the father bleſſe him? ſurely when his heart is even light and cheerefull in him. All which teacheth us both how children ought to ſeeke to win the bleſſing of their parents, namely, by well uſing them. And alſo that then is a man moſt fit to poure out comfort or bleſſing to others, when his heart is not troubled, but cheerefull, and ſmelleth even a ſweet ſavour in them whom he ſhould bleſſe and ſpeake unto, for hard it is to ſing one of the ſongs of Sion in heavineſſe, but the woe of minde and ſmart of griefe within letteth greatly the ſweete ſtreame of comfort that ſhould flow to others.

Verſe 27. The bleſſing. Goods ill gotten.

12. Marke how he ſaith that the ſmell of his ſon is like a field that the Lord hath bleſſed. From which gratulation all they are barred, that get their poſſeſſions, lands, and revenues, by ungodly meanes, as by ſtealth, bribery, oppreſſion, and wrong, for ſuch are a field which the devill hath corrupted and ſowen ſin in, to their certaine fall when time ſhall come, yet may their garments happily ſmell a great way off by the Art of man, but neither themſelves nor their riches by bleſſing of God.

What wealth he wiſheth.

13. Againe, conſider well in this bleſſing what wealth, and what riches the father wiſheth to his ſon, and you ſhall ſee it is no pompe, no port, no vanity of apparrell, nor ſuch things as the world now doteth upon, but he wiſheth him of the fatneſſe of the earth, and husbandmans fruit for husbandmans paines. Which though it tye not every man to till with his owne hands, yet teacheth it that our godly fathers in thoſe better dayes of theirs thought it a ſpeciall honour for their children to live by Gods bleſſings upon the earth, and not by other idle courſes and ſiniſter practiſes. Marke the bleſſing well, and you ſhall ſee more.

By earthly things other meant.

14. In that Iſaac nameth nothing but earthly things, be not deceived as ſome have beene, to thinke that either himſelfe reſted in ſuch things, or that he wiſhed no better to his childe, for it is not ſo. But by and under theſe earthly bleſſings, he compriſed and chiefly prayed for all heavenly and ſpirituall graces promiſed of God, and beleeved of Iſaac to Abraham and his ſeede, in Chriſt and by Chriſt. This manner of ſpeech therefore is no other, than uſually the Prophets have by things outward and ſubject to ſenſe and the weakeſt capacity, to underſtand and meane things ſpirituall, not ſeene, but ſubject to faith, above many times our ſlender capacity. So Eſay 11. and many other places.

An allegory.

15. The allegory in this place that Ambroſe maketh, is not amiſſe. To wit, that as Iacob the yonger is here bleſſed in the name of the elder, and the clothes that he hath borrowed of his elder brother, give a ſweet ſavour in the noſtrils of the Father: ſo are wee in the name of Chriſt our elder brother, with whoſe garment of pure righteouſneſſe being clothed, we ſmell ſweete alſo to our heavenly Father, and are accepted. This againſt indirect righteouſneſſe, and for righteouſneſſe of imputation.

Verſe 29.

16. That which he ſaith in the 29. verſe, let people be thy ſervants, and Nations bow downe unto thee, &c. may be a good proofe that Iſaac ſtayed not in theſe earthly things which hee nameth, but looked at higher matters. For how could he conceive any hope of ſuch dignity as this, ſaving that we was aſſured his poſterity was choſen of the Lord, and even for the kingdome that after followed, that it ſhould be in his ſtock and line, and belong to them? Therefore ſaith the Apoſtle, that Iſaac bleſſed Iacob by faith, and Eſau concerning things to come, as did alſo Iacob in the end of this booke when he was dying. This honour then that here hee ſpeaketh of, ſhot at that which was fulfilled afterward in David and Solomon, but chiefly in Chriſt, unto whom all people are ſervants, and all Nations bowe, even the knees of all things in heaven and earth, and under the earth, and to whom God hath given the heathen for an inheritance, and the ends of the earth for a poſſeſſion, as ſaith the Prophet. Yet true alſo even of the godly is this which is

Heb.11.20.

Pſal.15.

ſaid, he that curſeth thee ſhall be curſed, and bleſſed be he that bleſſeth thee: for even in his holy tabernacle ſhall a place be given to them that make much of ſuch as feare the Lord. And whoſoever

Mat 18.6.

offendeth one of theſe little ones that beleeve in me, it were better for him that a milſtone were hanged about his necke, and that he were drowned in the bottome of the Sea. But chiefly I ſay it is true in Chriſt who deſcended of Iſaac that here ſpeaketh thus; which Chriſt, whoſoever curſeth by abuſing his perſon, or contemning his truth, &c. that man ſhall bee curſed, and whoſoever bleſſeth him, by imbracing him, and beleeving on him, &c. that man ſhall be bleſſed.

Verſe 30. Narrow eſcapes.

17. Iacob was ſcarce gone out when Eſau came. Marke I pray you the powerfull providence of Almighty GOD, how it ruleth and governeth times and ſeaſons, dayes and houres, and moments of time, to the ſafety and benefit of his choſen. For doth Eſau come before Iacob is gone? No, firſt Iacob is out of his walke, and then hee commeth. Yet ſee againe the narrow eſcape, and let us learne by it not ever to looke for eaſie and great paſſage from perill, but bee content if hardly and narrowly GOD deliver us: ſcarce hee was gone, yet gone.

18. After

18 After long debating of the wrong, at laſt Eſau breaketh into teares, but prevailed not. Let it make us wary and wiſe, leſt prophaning the dignity of our holy calling to Chriſt, and vilely eſteeming ſpirituall graces, ſelling them as this man did, for ſome baſe price, and preferring profit or pleaſure before them, we at laſt bewaile the ſame, as now he doth, but all too late. Let the Apoſtles exhortation ſound ever in our eares: Let there be no fornicator, or prophane perſon, as Eſau was, which for one portion of meate ſold his birth-right. For ye know, how that afterward alſo, when he would have inherited the bleſſing, he was refuſed, finding no place to repentance, though he ſought it with teares. Surely ſuch men and women as having beene once zealous, and great lovers of the Word, of Preachers and profeſſors of the ſame, with very forward affection in all good cauſes, and after to pleaſe ſome mens humors, to purchaſe to themſelves this or that profit, or that they may enjoy ſome ſinfull pleaſure, either forgoe all againe quite, or in great meaſure. Let them take heed they be not either in, or very neare the prophanneſſe of this Eſau. For, what doe they elſe than contemne ſpirituall things to obtaine earthly, ſell their birth-right, that is, their title to Gods kingdome had by walking in his feare, for ſuch ſinfull reward, as they gaine by their change? God awake all cooled hearts, and give them heate againe, that ſo are ſlipped and think not of it. Remember Eſau, and beware Eſau.

Teares too late

Heb. 12. 16.

Note.

19 This bleſſing which Eſau wringeth from his father, includeth temporall things, which are common to the wicked with the godly. And that breaking the yoke from his necke, your margin ſheweth you when it was fulfilled: that which I note in it, is a certaine viciſſitudo rerum, an interchange of things. For hardly hath beene ſeene, or rather never, that any man, any ſtocke, or countrey, ſhould ever be aloft, or ever below and under: but the Lord changeth, giving the yoke, and breaking it againe, according to his pleaſure.

Verſe 39. Eſau his bleſſing. 2 King 8. 20. Verſe 40.

20 Againe, here in Eſau wee may note ſome properties of a bad man, voide and deſtitute of any true grace, and learne by them both to examine our ſelves, and to avoid them if wee finde them. Firſt, He hated his brother for this thing, and he that hateth his brother is a man-ſlayer, ſaith the Scripture. Secondly, he thinketh in his minde a ſecret venome of a poyſoned heart, his tongue he ſtayes, ſed loquitur in corde, ſaith within him ſome evill. Like as the Prophet ſaith, they imagine miſchiefe in their hearts, meaning the wicked. Laſtly, hee appointeth a time, when his Father ſhall bee dead, being content to make faire weather, and to carry murder, and ſuch murder as of his owne brother till that day. This is an hypocrites faſhion, ever to forbeare evill for feare of men.

Notes of wicked man.

Pſal. 140. 2.

21 But his mother heard of it. Hee happely afterwards bolting out ſome ſuſpition. This is the Lord ſtill and ſtill, and evermore in the behalfe of his, nothing ſo ſecret to their harme, which ſome way or other commeth not out. Thus hath thy power ô Lord, appeared mightily, and by name in this kingdome, and thy protection of thy faithfull ſervant, our deare and gracious Soveraigne Queene Elizabeth. O Lord, how haſt thou opened the darkneſſe of ſinne conceived againſt her royall perſon, againſt this Land, and the life of all that feare thy Name. For we are ſold, we were ſold, ô Lord, by many bloody minds, ſhe thy ſacred ſervant firſt, as out head and ſtay under thy Majeſty, and then we her poore people, living and breathing under her ſhadow, not to be for ſervants and handmaids, as complained that Queene Heſter to Aſſuerus, for then they had not beene ſo cruell, but to be deſtroyed after many miſerable and monſtrous torments, with bloody ſword of murdering mindes, that ſhould have licked us up, and drunk our blood till they had vomited againe for fulneſſe with the ſame. And from all this thine owne ſelfe hath ſaved us, and ſet us free, giving them their portions, either by ſea or land, by one meanes or other, as they did deſerve. Out thou broughteſt Eſau his conſpiracies all times to this day, and ſaved thy true Iacob whom thou haſt bleſſed amongſt us, and over us, to our unſpeakable comfort tenne thouſand wayes. Some or other heard of it, as Rebekah did heare, and were inſtruments of wiſedome, counſell, and ſervice, to prevent it. Bleſſed Lord we thanke thee, with the very ſoules of our ſoules we thanke thee, craving mercy that wee cannot doe it as wee ſhould. O Lord continue thy mercy for thy mercies ſake, and let the ſoule of our Soveraigne bee ſtill deare unto thee, write her (deare father) in the palmes of thy hands, and regard her ever as the Apple of thine eye. Continue thy Goſpell to this the land, and the light of thy countenance ſtill in our dayes, bleſſed for ever and ever, for what is paſt.

The Lord diſcovereth treacheries againſt his.

Engliſh treaſons.

22 Marke how Rebekah uſeth meanes to ſave Iacobs life, and yet ſhe had Gods oracle, that he ſhould be mighty, and rule over his brother, ſo that if ever any might have preſumed of Gods appointment, ſhe for one might: but yet ſhe doth not, but leaving that, uſeth ordinary meanes, and ſendeth him away. How ſenſeleſſe then is it, that ſome talke of Predeſtination, that if it be to be ſaved, they cannot be damned, and if to be damned, they cannot be ſaved, and therefore no meanes to be uſed: fie, fie of ſuch follies. Doe as Rebekah here doth, leave God his appointment to himſelfe, and take the ordinary courſe to be ſaved; heare his Word, beleeve his promiſes, and endeavour to walke in the wayes of his will, then ſhall God performe his appointment to your comfort, as he did to Iacob; the other is but tempting of God, and deceiving your ſelves.

Verſe 43. The godly uſe meanes, and preſume not upon God his appointment.

Chriſt

Christ himselfe flyeth into Ægypt from Herod, and yet appointed of God to live his time, which no Herod could prevent, with many moe.

Vers.46. Rebekahs godly discretion.

Lastly, note Rebekahs words to her husband, I am weary of my life for the daughter of Heth, &c. See in them, how going about to get Iacob leave to depart the Countrey, she telleth not her husband the true cause, lest she should grieve his heart, but maketh another excuse, yet a just one. Such wisedome and good discretion is commendable either in man or woman. Thus she had her desire, her husbands minde not troubled, her sonnes both saved, and her selfe in peace and quiet. It was the Lords goodnesse thus to direct her; and that Lord in mercy make all these things profitable to us. Amen.

Chap. XXVIII.

The heads of this Chapter are chiefly these.

The Fathers counsell at his sonnes departure.
The fact of Esau.
The ladder that Iacob saw.
The vow which he made.

Anger must have an end.

TOuching particulars. First, wee may marke how a sweet and temperate nature in old Isaac ruleth and over-ruleth all his affections, which otherwise were stirred up against Iacob, when once hee seeth the will of God, what it is. Hee is now so farre from raging or rayling against Iacob, that quietly and fatherly he calleth him unto him, blesseth him, and giveth him his counsell to direct his match. This is a speciall place for grieved Parents to consider of, or friends whatsoever, that we be not froward and wilfull when children or others have offended. Anger must have an end, and the sight of Gods will must over-rule us. I have heard of parents that never would relent, what circumstances soever were to move them. Their griefe may bee just, but yet for all that Isaac here is a better example than they are, and let us thinke of it.

Grieved parents or friends

Verse 3. A second blessing of Iacob.

2 He blesseth his sonne Iacob againe the second time, to confirme his faith, and to strengthen his heart, that the Lord would bee with him so long as hee served him, in all his matters, such comfort were fathers blessings in those dayes to Children, which now very little or nothing are regarded.

The comfort of Travellers.

3 That hee calleth him God All-sufficient, see comfort and stay of all travellers in strange places, whose travell lyeth upon them either by any necessity of their calling, or for the truth and their good conscience sake. Surely it is this. God is all-sufficient, ever able to protect and save them whersoever they come: So must Iacob thinke that goeth abroad, and be comfortable; so will Isaac thinke that parteth with him, and by the same stay his heart concerning the safety of his sonne. So let us, &c.

Unequall mariage.

4 He forbiddeth him mariage with unbelievers, and it still doth remember us how perfectly those godly Patriarkes hated such unequall matches either for lucre or pleasure, as we in these dayes make no conscience of.

Verse 5. The godly often banished.

5 It may bee againe our learning to marke the estate of Iacob here. Hee is chosen, and his brother rejected, he is the blessed of his father, and the blessed of the Lord, yet must hee now goe walke, hee must abroad and shift for himselfe, his countrey, and fathers house are not for him, a banished man must he be. O Iacob, wee see thy case, and consider the lot very often of Gods deare ones! God make us blessed as thou wert, for to be banished is no newes.

Esau seeth too late his fault.

6 When Esau saw, saith the Text, &c. Now then he seeth, when hee had offended, but hee should have seene before hee offended. An over-late sight is good neither in piety nor policy: for though the Proverbe said, it is never too late to doe well, yet another answereth, that had I wist, commeth ever behinde. So here, &c.

Verse 9. To please God, the cause of griefe must be taken away.

7 Esau seeketh to winne his parents love againe, but all in vaine, and prepostorously, as long as hee taketh not away the cause of their displeasure, to wit, his Cananitish wives. We may learne thereby, that in vaine also wee our selves shall seeke Gods favour, and seeme religious, except the cause of his wrath be done away by us, to wit, our sinnes, and hated offences.

Verse 11. After an humbling, comes an exalting.

8 Hee lodgeth in the fields, to wit, Iacob, a stone under his head, &c. In which let us marke his estate who was afterward rich and wealthy. The wide field is his house, the cold earth is his bed, a stone is his pillow, &c. Where is our faith when wee see this, with patience to beare the time of our humbling and tryall, knowing this and many moe examples of Gods exaltation of his childrens worldly estate, when hee seeth his time. For who seeing Iacob now, would have thought hee should have beene as hee was after, when he came backe againe: yet so hee he was, and ſo able is GOD to any, if it be his will. Onely beleeve in thy adverſity, and deſpaire not.

9 That night in his dreame he ſaw a ladder upon earth, and the top of it reached unto heaven, and ſo the Angels went up and downe by it. The letter ſheweth us the goodneſſe of God ever comforting his, and ſtrengthening them, yea then eſpecially when their need is greateſt of comfort, as divers times we have ſeene before in this booke. The myſterie of this Ladder may be this: The Ladder is Chriſt; the foot of it in earth, noteth his Humanity, man of the ſubſtance of his mother, borne in the world; the top reaching up to Heaven, noteth his Divinity; God of the ſubſtance of his Father, begotten before all worlds, perfect God, and perfect man, by which union of natures, he hath joyned earth and heaven together, that is, God and Man: The aſcending and deſcending of Angels by that Ladder, ſheweth, how by Chriſt the ſervice of Angels is purchaſed, to attend us, and ſerve us, as hee ſhall thinke good to appoint them, who onely is, (I meane Chriſt our Saviour) the Ladder whereby we aſcend into heaven: I am the way, ſaith he, and no man commeth to the Father but by me, &c.

Verſe 12. The Ladder what it ſignifieth.

Coloſſ. 1.16.

10 And behold the Lord ſtood above it, and ſaid. The Lord doth ſpeake unto him, and with a moſt ſweet promiſe comfort the heart of Iacob now thus caſt off, as it were to goe ſeeke abroad to get a living. By which we muſt firſt note the need of comfort, in reſpect of weakneſſe, that the beſt men have ſometime, for God did not thus cheere up Iacob for no cauſe. Secondly, wee may note to our owne comfort, the readineſſe of God to offer before men aske, to ſee the depth of the griefe they would otherwiſe fall into. And thirdly, that though Angels aſcend up and downe, yet it is God that keepeth and comforteth, and no creature doth, but what hee is the Author of. A good place to lighten our underſtanding concerning their blindneſſe, that make Angels their gods to pray unto, and to expect helpe from. No, ſaith this place, it is I, it is I; that am with thee, and will keep thee whitherſoever thou goeſt, and will bring thee againe into this Land: for I will not forſake thee, untill I have performed that which I have promiſed thee. I, I ſay, I it is, and not theſe Angels, that yet aſcend and deſcend by me, to doe what ſervice I appoint, but they are not of themſelves to doe any thing, onely they obey my voyce, and are miniſtring Spirits, to doe what they are commanded. I am the Fountaine and Author of all. Leave wee then this folly, nay great and grievous impiety to our adverſities, that will not be perſwaded by any thing, and cleave wee to God as the onely giver of all good, knowing that Angels ſhall ſo farre miniſter unto us, as he appointeth, and no otherwiſe: for hee is the Lord, and they are but ſervants.

The Lord, not Angels keepeth Iacob.

11 But it is a marvellous ſweet ſpeech that I have named, and here you ſee in the 15. Verſe, and ſuch as might comfort Iacob indeed with a very full comfort. If the Lord would ſay ſo to me, I would feare nothing, may ſome man thinke, &c. Indeed, and would it ſo cheare you, if God ſhould ſay as much to you? Looke then what the Prophet Hoſea ſaith, when hee ſpeaketh of this thing, and hereafter performe your promiſe, never feare, but truſt in God, for even thus ſaith the Prophet, He ſpake unto us, us I ſay all, and not onely to him.

To us this alſo ſpoken.

Hoſea 12.4.

12 And I will not forſake thee till, &c. O Lord, thus art thou in this, and thus art thou in all things that thou ſpeakeſt: Not for a time endureth thy favour, but whom thou loveſt, to the end thou loveſt them, and never wilt thou leave that man or woman that truſteth in thee.

Verſe 15. The Lords love laſteth. Iohn 13.1.

13 Till I have performed what I have promiſed, ſaith the Lord. And did he then forſake Iacob? No, it is as much this word, till, as never. I will not forſake thee till, that is, never will I forſake thee. Often alſo is the word taken elſewhere for a perpetuity, and doth not limit a time, as the Goſpell, I will be with you till the end of the world, that is, ever, and not then to give over when the world endeth, ſo Pſal. 72.2. and in other places. Weake therefore is their conjecture, that thinke Ioſeph knew his wife after Chriſt was borne, becauſe it is ſaid hee knew her not till ſhee had brought forth her firſt begotten Sonne. For the word till, there may ſignifie a perpetuity as well as in thoſe places that I have named, and in others: and the meaning be, hee knew her not till then, that is, he never knew her. I will not ſaith God here, forſake thee, till I have performed, that is, as I ſaid, I will never doe it.

Till, for ever; not for a time.

14 When Iacob ſaith, Surely the Lord is in this place. Hee meaneth not to include his infinite Majeſty in a finite place, for God is every where, and may not locally bee included any where. But Iacob meant of the ſigne of his preſence which hee gave there, which is uſually ſaid in the Scripture to be his being here or there. Reade the laſt of Eſay in ſtead of many moe. And I was not aware, ſaith Iacob. Whereby we may gather this comfort, that if the Lord be ſo neare his faithfull, when they are not aware, that is, before they ſeeke and looke intentively for him, how ſhall hee abſent himſelfe, when they doe looke for him, yea, ſhrieke with fervent prayers groanes and cries in his Majeſties eares, that he would come unto them and comfort them? O he can never doe it, and therefore doubt not of him, but urge him with this example, if you liſt, to Iacob, and be full of faith.

Verſ. 16.

How God is in a place.

A comfort.

15 Then Iacob aroſe, tooke the ſtone that was under his head, and pitched it as a pillar, and powred oyle

Verſe 18.

Christ is the stone upon whom we rest. Esay 28. Psal. 45.

oyle upon it. This stone by some is noted as a figure of Christ, for it was one of the stones of the place, and preferred by Iacob to this use; so Christ, a man of the nature of men, but chosen amongst them to a higher use and dignity than any else. This stone was placed in Bethel, that is, in the house of God: and the Prophet saith of Christ, Ponam lapidē in Sion, I will put a stone in Sion, &c. Thirdly, this stone had oyle powred upon it, and Christ with the oyle of gladnesse was annointed above his fellowes.

Dignity of place not ever one. 1 King. 13. Iosh. 18. 12. 1 Sam. 13. 5.

16 The name of the place being before called Luz, Iacob now called Bethel, that is, the house of God. But afterward in time we reade how it fell out, that by Ieroboam and others, it was made Beth-aven, that is, the house of wickednesse and Idolatry, 1 King. 13. And shall wee thinke it an impossible thing for Rome to become Babel, or for any place to bee rejected of the Lord, if it reject him? Rome never had the promises that other places had, neither ever was God more truely served there, than sometimes he was in Bethel, yet Bethel is changed, and why not Rome? If it may be, then looke not at a place what once it was concerning Religion, but what presently it is, for a change may be, and we know who saith it even of Rome. Quæsivi Romam in Roma, & non inveni Romam, I have sought Rome in Rome, and I have not found Rome; you may see his meaning.

Verse 20. Popish vowes.

17 Iacob vowed, so will Papists, but see the difference, he to God, they to Saints; he to performe things agreeable to the Word, they contrary to it; he maketh his vow no merit, they doe, &c. Secondly, when Iacob saith, If God, &c. he meaneth not by that if, to make a conditionall proposition, as not to serve God but for gaine; but his intent is, to shew what retribution hee will make for all Gods benefits, even serve him onely for evermore. Thirdly, consider here, that if to make God his God, be commended thankfulnesse, then to make creatures our God, is condemned unthankfulnesse, what colours soever wee cast upon it. Lastly, in thankfulnesse, Iacob will give tenthes to God, and of all that God shall give him, and we will bee judged thankfull also, and either pay nothing, or the worst wee have, and but of something.

CHAP. XXIX.

There are laid downe unto us in this Chapter, generally and chiefly these heads.

The comming of Jacob to Haram, with the circumstances.
His service there with Laban.
His mariages.
His children by Leah.

Verse 1. Iacob cheared with the promise, so should wee.

FOr particulars, it is said, after God had talked with Iacob, as we saw before, that Iacob lift up his feet, and came into the East Countrey, which seemeth to note allacrity in him to goe forward, after he had so comfortable a promise of the Lords company with him, and guiding grace over him in all his wayes. If it were so (as sure there was good cause it should bee so) wee may profit by it in this sort. He had a promise, and wee have a promise; he was cheared, and so should wee bee with the same; hee to goe into a strange Countrey, wee much more to goe into our owne; Hee to serve many painfull houres by day and night, we to rule and raigne in unspeakeable joyes with the Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghost for ever and ever. Goe we then forward with the feet of our affections, cheerfully lifted up towards the place we seeke, as Iacob did here, and wee shall finde rest, not for body alone, but for body and soule eternally.

Reade Heb. 13. vers. 13. and 14.

Verse 2. The allegory of the Well.

2 And as he looked about, behold a Well in the field. The letter is plaine, and wee see in it the providence of God, who directed him, and brought him to Labans house. But mystically some have understood by the field, the Church, and by the Well, the Word of God in the same, which is opened by the chiefe Shepheard, Jesus Christ, that his sheepe may drinke, and his flockes be watred. O that we would goe to this water to drinke ever, then should we be sure to finde him ready, that saith, Come unto me all ye that thirst, &c. But when wee leave this sweet Well of Gods VVord, and runne unto mans traditions, what marvell if we finde no true comfort, to coole our heate withall.

Esay 55. 1. Reade Ier. 2. vers. 13.

Verse 4. &c. Curtesie to strangers.

3 The dialogue that you see betwixt Iacob and the shepheards of that place, noteth the curtesie of those dayes, and of that people to strangers, ever a good thing, as hath beene noted before in Abraham and Lot, and others. Doggishnesse and currishnesse graceth neither countrey nor people.

Mans law more regarded often than Gods.

4 VVhen they say, We may not water till all come together, &c. We see in them more regard and care to observe the law of shepheards, then, I feare me, we can finde in our selves to observe the law law of the higheſt. For who being willed to ryot and ſurfet, to quaffe and exceed, to ſweare and blaſpheme, to commit fornication and whoredome, anſwereth in earneſt as theſe ſhepheards did, we may not, the law is contrary, &c. Looſer therefore, I ſay, I feare, are we to our woe one day in a greater matter, than theſe ſhepheards were in a leſſer. Would God wee regarded but Princes lawes, and civill conſtitutions, as theſe men did their paſtorall orders, then would not many doe as they doe, but anſwer to all allurers; we me may not, &c.

5 When Iacob ſaw Rachel and his Vncles flockes, he rowled away the ſtone of the Well, he watered the flockes, hee kiſſed Rachel, told her who he was, and lift up his voyce and wept. See the affections of fleſh unto fleſh, I meane unto our carnall kindred: how dull are we, that we cannot thus heartily be moved with the ſight and preſence of brethren in faith. Conſider our coldneſſe, and as wee know the band is better, ſo daily let us ſtrive to thinke better of it.

The force of affections.

6 Rachel runneth and telleth her father Laban, he comes running to meet him. Where we compare and reſemble unto Laban this preſent world, which at the firſt, meeteth men as Laban did Iacob, and ſeeming very joyfull for them, entertaineth them well; but afterward churliſhly altereth upon them as he did. O flatring world! how many haſt thou deceived, that felt nothing but honey for a time! I ſay no more: I wis there bee moe Labans in the world, than have to name Laban, as he had, hot at firſt, cold at laſt, friendly in the beginning, froward in the end, be Iacob never ſo worthy of continued love unto him.

A pattern of the world.

7 Laban will not ſuffer Iacob to ſerve for nothing, but he will needs give him hyre, at leaſt he maketh ſhew ſo, ſaying, Though thou beeſt my brother, yet ſhouldeſt thou ſerve mee for nothing? Whereby we may learne, that if a brother of a brother be to bee rewarded, and one kinſman of another (for ſo meaneth Laban) if he take paines in truth and induſtry for him: then may wee not let ſtrangers, that are no way bound to us in nature, as the other be, goe without their wages, neither may we let them goe to bed without their hire. And what ſtrangers? Surely our Miniſters, that faithfully and truely teach us; we may not defraud our ſervants, we may not rob them of their due; neither any labourer that worketh with us, for this were more injuſtice than the other, and yet the other, ſuch as Laban maketh ſhew to be aſhamed of.

Labourers hire Verſe 15.

Syr. 34. 23. Deut. 24. 14, 15

8 Iacob is content, all other wages ſet aſide, to ſerve him ſeven yeares for Rachel his youngeſt daughter. Wherein we ſee how Iacob uſeth lawfull meanes to come by his wife, and not unlawfull, and at ſeven yeares end alſo, asketh her, and doth not take her by force. Compare it with the damnable libertie of our dayes, wherein gaining our purpoſe, is thought both obedience to God, and love to our neighbour ſufficient, though wee would bee loath our ſelves to have ſuch meaſure, and both God and man ahhorre us for it. That the time ſeemed ſo ſhort, ſheweth the force of affection when it is ſet.

Verſ. 18. Vſe of good meanes to obtaine a marisge Verſe 21.

9 Laban accepted the condition, and the yeares being expired, the mariage is ſolemnized: of a feaſt at mariages, we read here: and in Ioh. 2. of mariage garments, that is, cleaner or extraordinary ſomewhat, according to our places and abilities: of Virgines going before with Lamps, Mat. 5. and ſo forth. But I remember yet what Chryſoſtome noteth, when he ſaith, De nuptiis Iacob legimus, de tripudiis & choreis non legimus, We reade of Iacobs mariage, but of dancing wee read not.

Verſe 19. Rites of mariages then. Verſe 22. Verſ. 23.

10 When Evening came, Laban deceived Iacob, and gave him his daughter Leah inſtead of Rachel, whom he could not by any light then know, becauſe of the Vailes which Virgins were covered withall, in token of chaſtity. The ſimplicity of thoſe dayes appeare in it, which I leave to your owne conſiderations, and thinke we of the world in this place, which may well bee reſembled to Laban: Becauſe as Laban promiſed faire Rachel, but in the end performed but bleereeyed Leah: ſo doth the world promiſe often mountaines to men, but performe in concluſion little Mole-hils; my meaning is, many men gape and hope after promiſes, for many matters, and in the end are ſerved with a jugling caſt, as here Iacob was, and miſſe of the matter they looked for. Truſt not to the world then, nor all golden promiſes in the ſame, for men are falſe upon the weights, and Laban is alive to deceive ſtill; beleeve you ſhall have a thing when you have it, and not over-haſtily before, you were beſt.

Labans deceit.

The world like Laban.

11 But why would not Laban give him Rachel, as he promiſed? We ſee he pretendeth cuſtome and manner of that place, not to give the younger before the elder; but why then had he not ſo told him in the beginning? The truth is plaine, he meant no truth, but finding Iacob ſuch a ſervant for his profit, as he could not well ſpare, and very gladly would retaine ſtill, hee wrought this craft to continue his ſervice to him for ſeven yeares more; which was performed of Iacob, and that willingly, for his affection to Rachel. So Laban had his purpoſe, though by a bad means, and a little honeſty in him.

Why Laban brake promiſe. Verſ. 26. Verſ. 27. Verſe 28. &c

12 When the Lord ſaw that Lea was deſpiſed, he made her fruitfull, but Rachel was barren, ſaith the Text. Firſt we ſee the power and ſtrength of affections, even in the beſt men many times. Here they were ſo ſtrong in Iacob, that Leah in compariſon of Rachel was deſpiſed; which the Lord ſaw and miſliked, giving upon that a mercy to her, that he gave not to Rachel, to be fruitfull and beare. Wherein we ſee againe, that children are the bleſſing of the Lord, and his free gift, Verſe 31. Whom man deſpiſeth, God regardeth.

gift, never to bee had by any power but by his. Leah joyeth in his mercy, and acknowledgeth that it proceedeth from God, who looked upon her tribulation, and therefore ſhe bleſſeth him, and giveth her childrens names according to her feeling of that goodneſſe: ſo ſhould we doe, and not ſo little regard his mercy, as many doe. Shee hopeth her husband will now love her, and keepe her company; by which wee ſee what ſhould bee, if it bee not in all men, children are a chaine to binde them to their wives in all love and affection, and this chaine is ſtrong with all good men. Laſtly, ſhee was contented with her number, and wee alſo muſt learne to moderate our deſire by her. Many things elſe are in this Chapter, which rather private reading than open ſpeech ſhould note.

CHAP. XXX.

The chiefe points or heads of this Chapter are theſe.

Jacobs children by others.
Labans hardneſſe to Jacob.
Jacobs painfull diligence notwithſtanding.

FOr particulars, firſt the Text ſaith, that when Rachel ſaw ſhe bare no children, as her Siſter did, ſhee envied her ſiſter, &c. Where both her envy, and unadviſed ſpeech to her husband, to give her children, ſheweth the frailty of women, when they want any thing that they much deſire.

Verſe 32. &c. The frailty of women when they want their wils.

They are not patient and moderate as they ſhould bee, but ſuffer affections and paſſions to carry them headlong both into ſinne againſt God, and offences to their husbands. Wee ſee it here in Rachel, otherwiſe, a good woman, no doubt of it, and let the fouleneſſe of the ſpot in her make us wiſe and wary, to avoid it in our ſelves; It graced not her, it cannot grace us, nay it diſgraced her, and it will all blurre and blot us. Shee wiſhed not to others, as to her ſelfe, no not to her owne ſiſter; no more doe we I feare me: ſhe praiſed not God as well for his mercy to others, as to her ſelfe; no more doe we, I feare me, yet both ſhe and we bound to doe it. Better then is the ſpirit, that not finding in it ſelfe what it wiſheth, joyeth yet unfainedly that others have it. Wiſh I may here that we ſaw our ſelves barren of good works, with ſuch griefe as Rachel doth her ſelfe of children; It would ſtirre us up to much amendment, &c.

Verſe 2. Saint-ſervers.

2 The anſwer that Iacob maketh to her unadviſed ſpeech, may very well ſhew us, what anſwer all Saint-ſervers ſhould have at their Saints hands, if they heard the petitions that are made unto them: namely, as Iacob anſwered Rachel, Am I in Gods ſtead, to doe this or that for thee? For the anger of Iacob, being alive, may well aſſure us of the like now, except heaven have made him leſſe zealous for Gods glory, which no man thinketh. Againe, his earneſt ſpeaking, or anger that was kindled, may teach us alſo, how our hearts ſhould burne, and bee troubled and grieved in us, when we heare men aske of creatures, what is the Creators both glory and mercy to give.

Zeale.

Verſ. 3, &c. Impatience.

3 Their giving of their maides unto Iacob, full foulely ſheweth the impatience of fleſh and blood to ſtoope to Gods pleaſure, and endure what hee doth appoint unto us. They had rather have children in this ſort, than tarry Gods time in patience and hope. Iacobs act in conſenting, may not be our example: many things in the Fathers God endured, that hee allowed not ſimply, being not ſo from the beginning. The names of the children ſhew their affections, which impoſed them, and ſo ſometimes ſtill, as yet amongſt us.

Verſe 14. Mandrakes.

4 Ruben goeth forth in the Wheat-harveſt, and findeth Mandrakes. To diſcourſe whereof, belongeth rather to Phyſitians, than Divines: It is an hearbe, whoſe root hath a certaine likeneſſe of the figure of a man: there is male and female of it; that is, two ſorts, differing in greatneſſe both of roote, leafe and fruit, which commonly men call after this ſort: the fruit of the female is written, in quantity like a Cheſnut or Walnut: the apple of the male, as great as an egge; the roote forked, as a man is; the ſmell of it very paſſing pleaſant, for the force of it is to work love; I leave it to others to juſtifie, that ſo write of it: For the efficacy of it, either of roote or apple, in helping barrenneſſe in women, which ſeemeth to be aſcribed to it by theſe ſiſters here, (they contending ſo about it) haply it is not generall, for the hearbe being very cold, cannot have that effect in all bodies, but rather the contrary in ſome, namely, in cold: But in hot countries, as in Affrica, Spaine, Italy, Ægypt, and ſuch like, where the bodies are commonly of extraordinary heate, this may be uſed to bring them to ſome good temperature, and conſequently, if God will, to more fruitfulneſſe, immoderate heate being an enemy to conception, as well as immoderate cold: But as I ſay, I leave theſe things to Phyſitians. For Ruben that found them, I rather thinke he brought them for the pleaſantneſſe of the ſmell, which is written to be very great, then for ſecret vertues that he knew to be in them, to ſuch an end as we now ſpeak of. I will now tell you what what one writeth of his owne experience, and ſo leave this. Levinus Lemnius ſaith, hee had hanged of the leaves and apples in his ſtudy, for the great pleaſure of the ſmell: and in time hee began to be ſo heavy headed, that he could not hold open his eyes in his ſtudy, but muſt needs ſleep, and thus he continued rather every day worſe then other. At laſt, wondering what ſhould aile him, and ſtriving with himſelfe, by caſting his eyes to and fro, up and downe, hee threw them upon the Mandrakes, and preſently ſuſpecting they were the cauſe, he removed them away out of his ſtudy. Upon which he every day amended, and his ſleepy pang was gone. So is it ſurely effectuall, to ſleepe by this experience.

An experience of Mandrakes.

5. When Rachel ſought ſome of theſe Mandrakes at her ſiſter, ſhe eagerly anſwered, Is it not enough for thee to take away mine huſband, except thou take my ſons Mandrakes alſo? Whereby wee ſee how either an old griefe breaketh out, or elſe, how indeed Iacob was to blame, to accompany the one ſo much for beauty, that he grieved and neglected the other, who had born him children. Every way it ſheweth imperfections of fleſh in men and women of the beſt note.

Verſe 15. Impertections in the beſt.

6. Iacobs comming late from the field in the Evening, ſheweth his painfull ſervice, to his great praiſe, and the example of all ſervants that deſire to be accounted good: Leah going out to meete him, may well be a patterne to all wives, of kindneſſe and love to their husbands, and in her was the fruit of a loving woman. It is ſome comfort to him that hath travelled truely, to bee welcome home, though his fare be but ſilly. And froward unkindneſſe betwixt couples pierceth deep. Leah is dead, but this kinde meeting of her husband when hee commeth from his labour, with both good face and good heart, may live and rule in us, if God will.

Women kinde to their huſbands.

7. They both conceive and have children, Leah and Rachel, but it is ſaid, God heard them, and remembred, and opened the wombe: all which give glory to God for children, and not to man or any meanes whatſoever, as I have noted before. The deſire that here appeareth of children, may be the poore mans comfort, that hath his houſe full.

God the giver of children.

8. When Rachel had conceived, and borne alſo, Iacob then asketh his wives, that he may depart, and telleth his uncle, he knoweth what ſervice he hath done. Where we ſee, how a good conſcience maketh his maſter judge, yea a good conſcience feareth no judge. The Apoſtle telleth them, they knew after what ſort he hath been amongſt them, &c. Strive we then ever for this good conſcience and cleane hand, that we be not aſhamed.

A good conſcience in a ſervant. Acts 20.

9. If I have now found favour in thy ſight, ſaith Laban, tarry, for I have perceived the Lord hath bleſſed me for thy ſake, &c. See and note, how faire a ſubtill worldling can ſpeake for his profit, and ſee how palpable faire flattery is, when experience hath been had before of no ſuch nature. Why is not Iacob rewarded all this while for his ſervice, being by Labans owne confeſſion ſo good? Surely the better nature the ſooner abuſed, by kinde ſpeeches drawne along, and nothing given, leſt if he had any thing he ſhould depart. So the old ſaying was ever true, Bonus ſervus perpetuus aſinus; If he be a good ſervant, keepe him ſtill under, and ſo ſhall you enjoy him longeſt. So that be he good, or be he bad, the worldly and unkinde maſter will give little or no reward. For if bad, then he deſerves nothing, ſaith his Maſter, if good, then faire words muſt feed him and his charge, nothing given, leſt he depart. Hee muſt bee drawne on to ſerve in expectation, that ſtill he may ſerve. But ſuch Labans are not ſo wiſe as they take themſelves, for they rob themſelves indeed, by this courſe, of many an honeſt heart, that both is with them, and would be with them, if ſuch wicked unkindneſſe were not.

Verſ. 27. Faire ſpeech for profit.

Servants not rewarded.

10. In Iacobs anſwer, note a reverent expoſtulation, but no exprobration, together with a godly obſervation of Gods bleſſing upon his ſervice, and a carefull aſcribing of glory to God for it, and let it be whileſt we live our imitation in any thing whatſoever, wherein we finde the bleſſing of God upon us. For gratiarum actio eſt ad plus dandum invitatio; A thankfull heart pulleth the Lord on to more mercy, when a proud minde to give to our ſelves what his meere mercy hath given to us, driveth both him and his goodneſſe away.

Verſe 29,30. A thankfull acknowledging of Gods bleſſing.

11. But now when ſhall I travell for mine owne houſe, ſaith Iacob? wherein wee ſee under the Lords hand and ſeale warranted, that with care for others, wee may lawfully joyne a care for our ſelves, and thoſe that be ours. For he that provideth not for his family (ſaith the Apoſtle) hath denyed the faith, and is worſe than an infidell. Yet ſo will Iacob care here for his owne, that hee is content God ſhall ſtrike the ſtroke, and diſpoſe the number of lambes to his ſhare at his pleaſure. Such truſt in the Lord, and contented relying upon his good pleaſure, becommeth all men.

Verſe 30. Care of family 1 Tim. 5.

12. Then ſaid Laban, What ſhall I give thee? Worldly mindes love certainties, for feare any liberality ſhould be expected at their hands. When a man knoweth his price, thinke they, hee knoweth his paine, and if I pay that, he can challenge no more, I performe promiſe; but if I leave it uncertaine, and let him ſtand to my courteſie, haply my credit may be coſt too, for I muſt content him, &c. Thus earthly and baſe mindes, have uſually earthly and baſe conceits: ſtill is their hand upon their half-peny.

13. Iacob will no certainty, but chooſeth a way, wholly depending upon the Lords bleſſing.

Verſ. 32.

A notable truſt in God.

Wherein, as I ſaid before, he ſheweth his firme truſt in Gods providence: Which truſt we muſt follow, though the manner of covenant binde us not, being in Iacob an extraordinary inſtinct, that Gods power, mercy, and favour to him and his truth, and honeſt ſervice of Laban, might the better appeare.

Worldlings be wavering.

14. But why ſaith Iacob this day will I do it? was there any ſuch haſt of it in reſpect of Iacob? no: but for Laban. Iacob knew full well rich mens properties moſt commonly for wages and promiſes; namely, to defer long, and performe hardly then alſo, therefore hee will take him while he may have him, leaving him no ſecond cogitations. But leaving us an example of lawfull wiſdome, when we deale with wretched minded men, that more regard profit than honeſty.

Verſe 33. Reward inferreth not merit, but mercy.

15. So ſhall my righteouſneſſe anſwer for me, ſaith Iacob, &c. Where we all ſee, how the godly doubt not of the reward of their truth with God, though their truth merit not the ſame, Chap. 32. 10. I am not worthy, ſaith the ſame ſervant of God, of the leaſt of thy benefits, &c. therefore no merit: yet here, My righteouſneſſe ſhall anſwer for me nevertheleſſe, Why then ſhould a popiſh eye not ſee, that deniall of merit taketh not away reward of mercy? But haply they ſee it, and are not content with reward of grace, except their workes may be alſo meritorious. Which if it be ſo, let them looke to it: for ſuch pride will ſmart one day, that will have Gods grace fall, that their merit may ſtand. The Apoſtle teacheth us, that grace denyeth merit, and merit denyeth grace. And the Father alſo when he ſaith, Gratia non eſt gratia niſi omni modo ſit gratuita.

Verſe 34. A covetous man greedy of a good bargain at any mans hand.

16. Would God it might be ſo, ſaith Laban. See a Churle, if ever you will ſee a kindly one. Iacob is his fleſh and blood by birth, and his ſonne in law by mariage, hee hath both his daughters, and their children are many, bone of his bone, yet is he glad to have Iacob on the hip for a bad bargaine as he hoped, and thinking thereby to gaine Iacobs ſervice for little or nothing, would God, ſaith he, this bargaine might ſtand: Where he ſhould rather have ſaid in all courſe of nature and civill honeſty: Alas my Sonne, this will bee no great gaine to thy maintenance, and to the maintenance of thy wives and children, which bee mine, as thy ſelfe art alſo, to love and care for ever; therefore deviſe ſome better way than this, for I would wiſh thee far more, &c. But as true as old is the ſaying: Quod facis ingrato perit, What ſervice a man doth to an unkinde maſter it periſheth. And in vaine doe the children of God depend upon worldly and baſe minded men for reward. Look we to God, look we to God, who ſhall never faile us, as Iacob did.

It is good for me, ſaith the Pſalme, to hold me faſt by God &c. Covetouſneſſe breedeth ſuſpition.

17. Then Laban went thorow the flockes, and ſeparated the ſpotted from the reſt, whereas in the two and thirtieth verſe, Iacob ſaid he would doe it. What now if Laban would not truſt Iacob: Was it not a fine reward of his great truth, and might not a man have joy to ſerve ſuch a maſter? He ſetteth them alſo, when he had parted them, three dayes journey aſunder from the reſt, and with his owne ſonnes, every way as you ſee preventing jugling with Iacob, which as it ſeemeth, he halfe ſuſpected. But what ſee you and I, and all fleſh, that will conſider it? Surely that which may bee our laſting comfort and ſweet joy; namely, that the more warily and wilily, ſubtilly and cunningly worldly men deale with Gods children, the more breaketh out Gods mercy towards them, and their cleare truth, innocency and honeſty, to the praiſe of God, to the comfort of them, and to the confuſion of them that thought an evill thought of them. Care away then, when the wicked ſift us and ſearch us, compaſſe us round about, to ſpie into us what they may rebuke, for they worke for us, and not againſt us: God is on our ſide ſtronger than they, and in deſpite of all their peeviſh policies, hee will have his love and our truth appeare. O truth then in all our delights to be kept as a jewell, more worth than any treaſure.

A quiet minde.

18. Iacob feedeth the reſt, ſaith the text, of Labans ſheepe, to wit, with a quiet minde, well contented, and nothing diſcouraged with his Unkles too too ſuſpitious and unkinde dealing, hee waiteth with patience, and godly comfort of heart, for the Lords bleſſing upon his true ſervice, and nothing doubteth, but that hee who enjoyeth the earth, and all that is in it, had enough for him and his, and would as his good pleaſure ſhould bee, miniſter it to him. Let all ſervants conſider this faith and truth in Iacob, and follow it; and remember, that though they ſerve men, yet they ſerve alſo the Lord in thoſe men, which Lord, will deale like himſelfe ever.

Ephes. 6. 7.

Verſ. 37. Verſe 9, 10.

19. Then Iacob tooke rods of greene poplar, &c. A fact that at firſt ſeemeth great falſehood, craft and ſubtilty in Iacob, and very unlawfull. But better conſidered, it is not ſo. For as touching the warrant of it, the next Chapter telleth it plaine, it was Gods appointment, from whom no unjuſt thing can proceed. Far therefore is it from being any cover to their craft, that ſhall bee without like author, by their owne corruption practiſed of any. Now if any man goe further, and thinke ſuch a meanes may not well bee aſcribed to God, unleſſe wee will make the Lord unrighteous and faulty, let that man conſider, and ſee how hee not onely toucheth Iacob in credit, who aſcribeth it ſo, nay the Spirit of God who cannot lie, and who directed the pen of Moſes to lay this downe; but further, hee denyeth the Lord that equity and and right which he ſeeth, and confeſſeth and granteth to man. For what if a Judge condemne one that hath wronged or robbed a man, to pay him foure-fold, is it injuſtice in him? no, and why then if the Lord condemne Laban to anſwer Iacob a portion for the wrong hee had done him, ſhall he be unjuſt? May not the Lord give unto his ſervant his owne bleſſing without injuſtice? Or is God ſo bound to Laban, to bleſſe his flocks ſtill, that he may not alter his hand without a fault? And what elſe doth God in this place, but ſuffer Laban to enjoy whatſoever he had gotten by his bleſſing upon Iacobs true ſervice, and for Iacobs ſake before, without taking thereof any thing away? Onely hereafter he will not diſpoſe his bleſſing as he had done, but for Labans ill dealing, will tranſlate it from him to Iacob. Is this unlawfull for the Lord, that is bound to none, to uſe his liberty? God forbid: and this is all that God doth here. If you ſay, O but the meanes ſeemeth cunning; I pray you conſider whether man bee to appoint Gods meanes or no, ſaying thus ſhalt thou effect thy will, and not otherwiſe: If not, then both leave Gods bleſſing for the Cattell, and liking of the meanes free to his owne wiſdome, and take ever his will to be a rule moſt ſure of all right. Then it is a queſtion whether this was miraculous, or naturall, or mixt, partly miraculous, and partly by nature, and it is concluded that it was mixt, it being nothing prejudiciall to the power of God to uſe a meanes, although ever he doth not, but ſometimes with, and ſometimes without. Without meanes the Lord wrought when hee gave Manna to the Iſraelites, when hee divided Jordan, when he made Aarons rod to bud, and ſuch like: ſo healed Chriſt many other by the power of his word, without any meanes. With meanes, when he appointed a plaiſter of figs to Ezechias, when Naaman waſhed in Jordan, when Chriſt uſed clay and ſpittle, and ſuch like. Alſo in the meanes that God uſeth, is to be noted, that ſometimes they are in nature ſomewhat availeable to ſuch an effect, ſometimes nothing at all, but rather contrary: Availeable, as oyle and water to heale, &c. Nothing availeable, as clay and ſpittle to give ſight, &c. This act of Iacobs in ſetting the rods in this ſort, was of the firſt kinde, namely in nature ſomewhat availeable, for great is the power of imagination in conception, either of reaſonable or brute beaſts, which imagination is affected and moved by ſights very much, and ſo was here by theſe party coloured rods. For theſe rods wrought not this effect, becauſe they were looked upon, but becauſe the inward ſenſes were affected by them, and the imagination made as it were like them. Now if any will ſay, there were ſome ſenſe in this, if imagination and generation belonged to one and the ſame faculty, or to one and the ſame part of the body; but none now as it is, imagination belonging to the minde, and generation to nature, imagination alſo being in the braine, and generation in the members of the body appointed thereunto, much diſtant from the braine: that man muſt remember that yet they are the actions of one and the ſame creature; and being ſo, there is a ſympathy and mutuall affecting of parts of the ſame body, though they bee divers, and much diſtant in place one from another. Experience you ſee in the parts of generation, which are affected, moved and ſtirred, with uncleane thoughts and conceits in the minde; as is alſo the thought and minde by thoſe parts, if ſeed doe abound in them to ſtir up luſt. And therefore ſtill no marvell, but naturall, and by courſe of reaſon poſſible, that the minde affected with a ſight, and an impreſſion thereof entred into the imagination, ſhould alſo have an operation and an effect in the wombe below, to frame and forme the thing therein conceived after that ſort. This was ever allowed of Philoſophers, Phyſitians, and all learned, and examples many related in Authors of the ſame. Galen telleth an experience of a woman that had a moſt faire childe, neither her ſelfe nor her husband being ſo: And how? Only by an intentive beholding a faire picture. Hypocrates ſpeaketh either of the ſame or the like, and ſaith, the woman being accuſed and condemned in all judgements, as diſhoneſt and adulterous, ſhe was quit by him, who commanding a ſearch to be made what pictures ſhe had in her houſe, and one being found of a very faire yong man, Hypocrates aſſured them of her honeſty, by a learned diſcourſe of the power of imagination in theſe things. Quintilian in his controverſie, wherein he defendeth the Matrone that brought forth a black Moore, uſeth this argument to cleare her with. In Spaine it is well known, that by ſetting before the eyes of their Mares the faireſt Horſe they can poſſibly get, they have found it ſpecially profiting to their deſire. Auſtin giveth this very reaſon wherefore in Ægypt there is never wanting a white ſpotted Oxe, which they call Apis, and worſhip for a god. In another place he much ſpeaketh of the great things that are wrought hereby, except ſome groſſe corpulence or hard matter hinder in the female. By all which you ſee it appeareth plainly, that together with the working power of God, which in this was chiefe, and ever is, yet even in nature and reaſon this laying of party coloured rods to affect the imagination of the females, at the time of their heate, before their eyes, was effectuall, to bring to paſſe a like coloured yong one to Iacobs gaine, whoſe bargaine was to have all ſuch, and only ſuch.

20. There is another queſtion in this place yet, and that is concerning the time when Iacob laid the rods in. And ſome have ſaid he obſerved a time of the day, namely, the morning, and not the evening: others a time of the yeare, as about September, that they might lambe about March; and not at March, that they might lambe about September: The latter is better, and more agreeable to the text: yet they that hold the first, would seeme to relye upon the benefit of sleepe, which hath gone before. As if by reason thereof, the morning should bee better both for a stronger conception, and also for a more quick affectation of the power imaginative. What is true we may thinke of, if we will, and that is this: The most kinde of creatures (that be for mans use) sleep in the night, and feed and labour in the day: Therefore the morning generation is after sleep and before meate; the evening, after meat and before sleep: Wherefore in the morning the seed is better concocted, and the braine wherein the imagination is, more quick, free, and cleare: For sleep especially furthereth concoction, riddeth away the vapors of the braine, and giveth vigor and strength, to sense and motion: Therefore the seed by reason of better concoction, is more fruitfull, and the imaginative vertue, by meanes of the late refection of spirits by sleep, and clearing of the braine, more forcible and effectuall. Contrariwise, at night the meate lying unconcocted, the head is charged with thick vapors from the stomack, and the imagination wearied with long watching. And so consequently, the seed neither so fruitfull and strong, neither the imagination so effectually moved and smitten as in the morning. But as I said, it is better to refer Iacobs deed to the stronger and better parts of the yeare, which hee carefully observing, to lay or not lay the rods before the sheepe, hee had both moe and more strong, Laban fewer and weaker. And this I hope may suffice, both for this place and this Chapter.

Chap. XXXI.

In this Chapter we may consider generally.

- The causes of Jacobs departure.
  - Evill words.
  - Change of countenance.
  - Gods Commandement.
- The manner of the same, together with Labans following.
- The Covenant betwixt Jacob and Laban.

Verse 1,2. Particularly: First, these words that Labans sons speake, Iacob hath taken away all that was our Fathers, &c. together with the countenance of Laban, that was not towards him as in time past, and let us note these things in them and by them.

Worldly goods part friends. First and formost, the nature of this worldly trash and pelfe, how the love of it severeth and sundereth neare and deare friends, maketh them dislike greatly one of another, and remove dwellings so farre asunder, that seldome or never they meete againe. A most woefull effect of such a cause, and a most horrible corruption in us, that should over-rule such earthly affections.

Secondly, how nothing contenteth a covetous minde, as long as he seeth another man thrive by him. He would have all, and without, he will never be pleased.

Thirdly, how like to the father the children be, all of them mutterers and murmurers against Iacob, for the blessing that God vouchsafed him.

And lastly, how hot youth bableth out that which cooler age covereth and keepeth in. Laban as bad in heart as they, but yet he keepeth his tongue and dissembleth, so cannot the yong men doe, their blood is too warme, and wily craft hath not yet possessed them.

Verse 2. Face sheweth what heart thinketh. Good that men should change upon us

2. That Labans countenance was changed toward Iacob, as the text saith, we see, Quam difficile est crimen non prodere vultu: How hard it is not to bewray in face, what lodgeth in heart, against any. Vultus index animi, The countenance declareth the minde, and so here.

Psal. 119. 3. When Labans face is changed, then Iacob of like bethinketh him of his country, though not presuming to attempt any returne without better warrant. And we may thus profit by it, even to consider how good it is sometime to have mens faces change, that we may thereby the rather looke unto better things, as to the Lord, and the light of his countenance, to heaven our countrey, where no snubs bee, &c. which haply wee are too cold in, as long as mans favour carryeth us along in the liking of this world. Why doth David say, It was good for him that hee had beene in trouble, but that he felt the change of man kindle in him a sweeter thought of that God and his great mercy that cannot change, but yesterday, and to day, and for ever, is the same? Why saith he againe so earnestly, but it is good to hold me fast by God, by God I say, and to put my trust in him, &c. saving that mans tottering love, and too fickle friendship smote his heart with a deeper consideration of the comfort thereof above all earthly things whatsoever? No doubt againe but it was good for Ioseph that Putiphar turned upon him as hee did, without cause, for hee saw thereby what man is, and what God is, and how broken a reede he trusteth unto, that maketh flesh his arme, and thinketh all shall be well with him, because such and such give him countenance. Alas, alas, who hath not beene deceived by mans mans fickle favour, and thought all was ſure, when and whileſt he had that, and rather might many things fall out, than ſuch perſons change their love without juſt cauſe. But their experience at laſt hath beene even as Iacobs was here, that neither truth of ſervice, and performance of painfull labour by day and night, neither neereneſſe in blood before mariage, nor any increaſe of knot by mariage, neither any bleſſing of God given unto paines, nor any thing whatſoever, could hold that love that was never true, but for reſpects, or that man or woman that never made conſcience indeed of deſerts, to yeeld them due comfort according to their quality. But well well, let it be too late to call againe yeſterday, yet it is not too late today to ſee the word of the Lord before us, and to marke this example of Iacob, how he found a change in his owne uncle, without any juſt cauſe, and to beware of our ſelves of being over farre caried hereafter with that which is ſo uncertaine in it ſelfe.

4. And the Lord ſaid unto Iacob, turne againe into thine owne country, &c. See the ſweet mercy of Almighty God to his true ſervant. When man lowreth, he laugheth upon him; when man hateth, he loveth; and when man looketh away with a face quite altered, he looketh upon, and unto his true Iacob, with the eyes of his old mercy and loving kindneſſe, rather much increaſed, than any one jott leſſened and diminiſhed. O comfort, a true one, and a great one: for thus I feele it! When the potentates of this world liſt to waxe big againſt a poore child of God, and to ſwell with diſlike againſt him, they alſo adde this vanity, to that grievous iniquity, that they thinke he ſhall never be able to beare their diſpleaſure, but he is even in their hands to be uſed as they will, and what will they? Surely they intend to beggar him and all his, to cruſh him, and breake his back, to grinde his face, and play Rex with him at their pleaſure. And other mad men are alſo of that minde, and begin to ſay, alas how ſhall we doe, ſuch an one is offended with him, and his countenance is changed upon him. Surely he is undone, and caſt away, with other like ſpeeches to that end. But let theſe Nimrods, that ſo will tyrannize over any poore Iacob, and ſuch faithleſſe fearefull men, as ſo bewaile the oppreſſed, looke upon this example here, and conſider it well.

Verſe 3. When man forſaketh, God reeveth.

Did Iacob periſh when Labans face changed, and all his children with him? hath Laban power to ſinke him and cruſh him, and doe what hee will? No, but when all theſe changes are in man, then God ſteppeth in, and looketh upon him that man will not ſee, ſpeaketh unto him, directeth him from them ſo unkinde regarders of a true heart towards them, and wholly taketh him into his owne protection, to his owne care, that neither they nor any for them ſhall hurt him, and Iacob ſhall live in another place, under his bleſſing and mercy, better than ever he did there amongſt them. O God then ever be our God wee beſeech thee entirely, and wee care not what changes man ſhall make upon us unjuſtly and unkindly.

5. Then Iacob ſent for his wives into the field to him, Rachel and Leah. Whereby we may note, how in matters concerning them, it is a good mans part to confer with his wife, and not to doe all upon a braine, in a kinde of proud and unkinde authority over the woman, who though ſhee be in ſubjection under her husband by law of ſexe and mariage, yet ſhe is fellow and companion and helper alſo, even by advice and counſell many times. Sweet then is the conference of man and wife together about common cauſes concerning them both, and let it be liked in our eyes ever by this example of Iacob, that intending a remove from ſo unfriendly a friend, ſendeth for his wives to him, and talketh with them. His ſpeech hath in effect beene conſidered before by his parts, and we ſhall not need to ſtand upon the particulars againe, onely your ſelfe reade it and conſider it: marking the 6. verſe, how a true ſervant that hath conſcience in him ſerveth, namely, with all his might, this is oppoſite to that eye-ſervice which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, Epheſ. 6.

Verſe 4.

Husbands ſhould confer with their wives.

Reade before upon Chap. 18. ver. 6.

6. Come we therefore to the anſwer of his wives, who with one conſent ſaid unto him, Have we any more portion and inheritance in our fathers houſe, &c. Doe whatſoever God hath ſaid unto thee. By which ready and full conſent, we ſee the duty againe of godly wives, namely, when their husbands doe impart unto them his purpoſe, grounded upon juſt cauſes and ſufficient warrant, then not to hang back, to croſſe him and grieve him, and not to yeeld to him, but rather with theſe gracious women here to ſay, what God hath put in thy minde that doe. Wee are ready, and we will obey. Thy lot ſhall be our lot, and the Lords good pleaſure all our lots. Again, let it not bee unconſidered, how Iacob finding juſt fault with their father, and upon true cauſe complaining of him, the women yeeld unto truth, and neither cleave to their father againſt their husband, nor forſake their husband to juſtifie their father. Here is no ſuch croſſing partiality, but as God hath made them wives to Iacob, ſo they cleave unto him kindely, and preferre him before all the world.

Verſ. 14. &c. Wives ought to cleave to their husbands.

7. By which willing conſent to forſake father and friends, country and all, and to cleave unto their husband, may be happily reſembled the nature of the Church the ſpouſe of Chriſt, which is ever to forſake all and to follow him.

A type of the Church.

8. Rachel departing, ſtole her fathers Idols, which he called gods, a great fault in a good woman: but weakneſs ſometimes is in the beſt, and it may not be juſtified. This itch of ſuperſtition, though though good men endeavour, yet can they not ever utterly extinguish in their deareſt, but in long time, if ever.

Verſe 19. Weakneſs in the beſt.

Verſ. 22. 9. Iacob thus gone and removed away with all that he had, three dayes after Laban heareth of it, and purſueth hotly with all his power. What he meant to doe we cannot tell, becauſe God hath not told us, but of like he was fiery enough, and conceived diſlike before hee would now prick him forward mightily. But what doe we ſee? truly that which with unſpeakable comfort we may well note and ever remember, to wit, how God cooleth him and tempereth him before he commeth unto Iacob to overtake him, charging him in a dreame for his life, not only to doe no evill, but not to ſay ſo much as an evill word to Iacob. Take heed, ſaith God, take heed. Can a man conceive of this care and mercy in God toward Iacob as it deſerveth? O how true ſaid the Prophet David, yea rather bleſſed are the people that have the Lord for their God, &c. for ſo it is indeed: If God be with a man, little needeth he to care for unjuſt rages after him and againſt him. The Lord hath a ſnaffle to put in their jawes that purſue his deare ones, and they ſhall do no jott more than he will. If ever you ſaw a worldling curbed, you ſee it here. Not a word, much leſſe a deed muſt paſſe againſt Iacob, ſave what is good. Thus reſtrained the Lord Saul, and made him a Paul in his hotteſt purſuit of the godly. Thus ever hath God done, and ever ſhall doe as ſhall be beſt. Comfort your hearts then beloved ever with this example, and feare not man: but feare and love, honour and ſerve to your dying day this God, that can, this God that will, and now doth ſo bridle an enemy.

A ſweet comfort.

Pſal. 144. 15.

Verſe 27. Smooth diſſembling. 10. In the 27. verſe you ſee what Laban ſaith, if he had knowne of Iacobs departure, he would have ſent him away with mirth and with ſongs, with tymbrell and with harpe. Thus is his tongue changed by the Lords warning, but God knew his heart. There were many preſumptions by former facts how he would have liked his departure if he had beene made acquainted with it, but it is beſt now to ſay the beſt, and gracious is that GOD that can pull ſuch words out of a man diſpleaſed, and force him to ſpeake nothing but faire where hee will have it ſo. Let all ſnuffers and brow-beaters of honeſt men conſider this, and ſee if they can doe what they liſt.

Verſe 29. How the godly &wicked differ 11. I am able to doe you evill, ſaith Laban, but God hath forbidden me, &c. Where we may ſee a difference betwixt the godly and ungodly men. The firſt ſpeake and boaſt of juſtice and equity, ſaying, this or that is due to you by right, and to your offence; but the ſecond boaſt and brave it ever with their power and might, ſaying, this and that I am able to doe, as Laban did here: I truſt we are reſolved ſoone whether to follow.

Verſe 30. The gods of Idolaters. 12. In calling thoſe idols his gods, ſaying, Why haſt thou ſtolne my gods, he bewrayeth unto us what all Idolaters and ſuperſtitious perſons doe and thinke, whatſoever they ſay, namely, even make and uſe, repute and take ſuch things as they worſhip beſides the true God, for their gods. And what skilleth it for the name, when there is proofe of the thing.

Verſ. 31. Iacobs anſwer to three objections. 13. In Iacobs anſwer, carry your eye to Labans objections which were three. Firſt, that being his ſervant, he fled away ſecretly: ſecondly, that he tooke away his daughters and their children, being ſo neere to him in blood, without his privity: and thirdly and laſtly, why he ſtole away his gods: unto all which Iacob anſwereth, but diverſly: for to the two firſt he ſaith plainely, it was becauſe he was afraid, and thought that Laban would have taken his two daughters from him: wherin we may note the open ſimplicity and uprightneſſe of Iacob, in telling the truth even as it was indeed, without ſuch colours and cunning as men uſe in theſe dayes. To the third hee anſwereth by a ſtout deniall, referring him not only to ſearch all that ever he had, but offering the party to death with whom any ſuch thing might be found. By which unadviſed ſpeech he raſhly over-ſhot himſelfe, and would have beene as ſorry as ever was Ieptha when his daughter met him, if Laban had taken him at his word, and found the gods with Rachel, Iacobs deareſt wife. We learne therefore by it, that haſty ſpeech may worke much woe, and therefore bee wee not over raſh. We know none ſo well as our ſelves, and therefore good to be ſo bold to promiſe innocency for none but our ſelves for feare of reproofe. But yet this is, and this was, and this will be ever, that as every one is true and good in himſelfe, ſo eaſily thinketh hee others to bee ſuch, but often deceived, and ſo was Iacob here. Yet as God would, it was not then found out, for Rachel made a cunning excuſe, as you ſee in the Text, that her Father ſhould not ſearch under her, where indeed theſe Idols were, though unknowne to Iacob. Such wits have women oftentimes upon a diſtreſſe, to ſhift away a ſhame, which indeed were better never deſerved, than with any deviſe, though never ſo fine, avoyded.

Raſhneſſe in Iacob. Gen. 44. 9.

Verſe 36. Some anger lawfull. 14 Then Iacob was wroth, ſaith the Text, and chid with Laban, a juſt anger that hath a juſt cauſe, and is not immoderate. What griefe to a true man to be made a thiefe, and to be burdened with practiſe that his ſoule abhorreth. Yet this you ſee falleth out ſometimes, and by name now here upon Iacob, which muſt worke a ſtay of minde in us, if a like thing happen. Moſes was angry when he ſaw the Calfe, and when Corah rebelled, Numb. 16. 15. Ionathan for his fathers rage againſt his friend David, and many mo examples of lawfull anger hath the Scripture, ſo that all anger is forbidden, but onely ſuch as hath ſin in it.

Exod. 32. 19. Numb. 16. 15. 1 Sam. 20 34.

15. In

15 In the expoſtulation that Iacob maketh, if you mark it and reade it, is notably laid downe the faithfull uſage of a good ſervant, and the unkinde requitall of a bad maſter. A good ſervant is not flitting every day, and changing, but twenty yeare in a place ſometimes, as Iacob here. Hee waſteth not any wayes his maſters good under his hands, but ſo careth for, and regardeth all things, that his Maſter proſpereth by his faithfull travell, In the day hee is conſumed in the beate, and with froſt in the night, and his ſleepe departeth from his eyes; for thus ſpeaketh Iacob of himſelfe. An unkinde Maſter is deſcribed thus, cruelly hee requireth of the hands of his ſervant whatſoever is loſt, without regard of circumſtances: Hee changeth his wages often, and ever to the worſe, and at laſt hee ſendeth empty away, whom in all conſcience hee ſhould reward very liberally. Thus you ſee is Laban charged here, and let us bee aſhamed of ſuch qualities.

From 38. to 43.
Properties of a good ſervant, and a bad maſter.

16 Then Laban anſwered, Theſe daughters are my daughters, &c. Now ſee a trick of this world againe, when a man is brideled, and dare not hurt, then to pretend favour and love, and ſmooth the matter, as though hee never meant hurt, which is not ſo. This jugling the world hath not loſt yet, but God ſeeth truth, and loveth truth.

Hollow flattery.

Finally, a covenant of love Laban will have made, becauſe his conſcience accuſed him of evill deſerts. Iacob is content, and letting anger goe, maketh them good cheare. Laban ſweareth like an Idolater, and Iacob aright, conſider you both: of a rough beginning, there is a ſmooth ending. Laban taketh his leave and departeth quietly, and all is well. O able God, and carefull God for his children ever, make us thy ſervants faithfull and true, that in all ſtormes wee may finde thy favour, and of all feares no worſe an end than in thy mercy may be to our comfort, as this was now to Iacob. Amen, Amen.

A quiet end of all troubles.

CHAP. XXXII.

The chiefe things of this Chapter are theſe.

The meeting of the Angels.
The meeting of his brother Eſau.
And his wreſtling with the Angell.

FOr particulars, let us remember, that but even now was ended Iacobs feare of Laban, and his bad meaſure that hee was ever like to offer to him and his, had not God reſtrained him, and now followed preſently at the end of that, the feare of his brother Eſau, whom hee muſt meet. What ſheweth this unto us, but the continuall ſucceſſion of feare upon feare, trouble upon trouble, and tryall upon tryall to the godly, to the true teaching of us what to expect, and wherewithall not to be diſmayed if it happen, for it is the lot of Gods deareſt.

A ſucceſſion of feare to the godly.
Finis unius mali gradus eſt futuri.

2 Wee ſee here a multitude of Angels meet Iacob as he ſetteth on his journey. Where firſt marke the thing, and then the opportunity of it touching time. For the thing it ſelfe, it truely confirmeth this doctrine, that God giveth his Angels charge over his Elect, to attend and defend them, as ſhall ſeeme beſt to his great mercy and infinite wiſedome, ſo ſaith the Apoſtle, Are they not all miniſtring ſpirits, ſent forth to miniſter for their ſakes which ſhall be heires of ſalvation? ſo ſaith the Prophet, The Angels of the Lord pitched round about them that feare him, and delivereth them: yea, hee hath given them charge over every one that putteth his whole truſt in God, and committeth himſelfe wholy to his protection in all temptations, to keepe ſuch an one in all his wayes. And they ſhall beare that perſon in their hands, that he hurt not his foot againſt a ſtone. Examples in Elizeus, in Peter, in many moe. It derogateth therefore greatly from the mercy and care that God hath for his, to ſay that every man hath but one good Angell, and one bad, for every man and woman fearing God hath many, as Iacob had here, and even ſo many as ſhall be needfull to his wiſedome that ever knoweth what is expedient and fit. Secondly, for the opportunity of this viſion, you ſee how great it was, even then when Iacob was ſetting forward to meet with his brother Eſau, of whom he was greatly afraid, not only for himſelfe, but for thoſe with him that were as deare to him as his life. What they taught Iacob by thus appearing unto him, we may all very eaſily conceive, ſurely even this, that though hee were weake, yet was he ſtrong, ſtrong I ſay to God, and the might of his power, who would never ſuffer him to miſcarry, whileſt hee had an Angell in Heaven to ſend with him, but would ſo ſtand on his ſide againſt Eſau, that all ſhould bee well, and with ſafety paſſed over. O this GOD this GOD of ours! Doe wee not ſee him? Since this booke began have wee not ſeene many teſtimonies of love and care, not onely to helpe and comfort, but even in the nicke to doe it, when there is moſt neede, and when his Childes heart is downe in the bodie, by ſome occaſion. Never any more notable than this to Iacob here, and therefore let us marke it, and of God comfortable, and in fit time.

of them all conclude how bleſſed the man is that hath the God of Iacob for his help, and whoſe truſt is in the Lord his God.

The godly uſe meanes. Verſe 3,4,5.

3 The next thing wee may marke, is the counſell of Iacob, under GODS bleſſing, taking on him to pacifie his brother, and to have a good meeting. Firſt, he ſendeth meſſengers to him, to ſignifie his comming, leſt by ſtealing by him hee might juſtly offend. Secondly, hee divideth his people and cattle as you ſee. Thirdly, hee prayeth. Fourthly, and laſtly, hee ſendeth a preſent. In all which wee may note two things. Firſt, that the godly have never beene deſpiſers of meanes, though their truſt in GOD, and aſſurance of his helpe were never ſo great, but wiſely and with good policy and diſcretion they have diſpoſed themſelves to uſe the ſame as GOD directed. Secondly, that it is lawfull to uſe ſubmiſſion in ſome ſort to the wicked, and that religion ſtandeth not in ſtubbornneſſe and frowardneſſe, and diſdainfull, proud, and undutifull ſpeeches, as ſome imagine.

My Lord Eſau.

Verſe 6.
Verſe 7.
How hard it is for the beſt to cleave ſtedfaſtly and ſtrongly to God.

4 Theſe Meſſengers thus ſent of Iacob, to give his Brother notice of him, returne againe and tell him, that Eſau commeth to meet him with foure hundred men, whereupon ſaith the Text, Iacob was greatly afraid, and ſore troubled, and divided the people that was with him, and the ſheepe, and the beeves, and the camels into two companies, not knowing what Eſau meant, by bringing thus many with him (which of like Eſau did onely for pompe, and to ſhew his power) but fearing the worſt, as nature is apt to doe in the very beſt. The thing that wee are to note in it, is, how hard it is even for Iacob, that is a very extraordinary man, to cleave ſtedfaſtly unto God in perill and danger, and to overcome by faith ſuch falſe feares as will muſter themſelves before his eyes. Wee ſaw before, how God had comforted him by that hoaſt of Angels that met him, yet now, even now againe when hee heareth this newes, the infirmity of fleſh appeareth, and Iacob is ſore afraid. Know wee then our mould, what it is, and if ſo notable a man as Iacob, after ſo many incouragements, have yet imperfection of faith, ſet wee it downe, that great is our need, farre unlike Jacob, to pray for faith, that the Lord may increaſe it in us ever more and more. See againe in Jacob ever as wee goe the life of man, feare after comfort, and comfort after feare, ebbings and flowings, riſings and fallings, ſo wee goe along, and ſo wee ſhall end.

The right uſe of meanes.

5 That hee falleth to prayer after hee had divided his company: ſee both the right uſage of lawfull meanes, and the true comfort in all diſtreſſe, whatſoever it is. The right uſage of meanes is with prayer, and the right uſe of prayer is with meanes, if God offer them: theſe, one exclude not another, but both joyne together as loving friends, and thus joyned and joyntly uſed, the Lord giveth his bleſſing to the beſt. The true comfort in all diſtreſſe, wee ſee here, is to flie to God by prayer, to caſt up our eyes, hands, and hearts to his holy Majeſty, that hath witten his faithfull in the palmes of his hands, and cannot forget them. This now is Jacobs refuge, chiefe, and moſt comfortable. O God of my Father Abraham, and God of my Father Iſaac, looke upon mee, &c. Wee know how hee ſped, and what promiſe wee have at this day if wee knock, therefore uſe wee the like in our diſtreſſes, and expect in comfort his aſſiſtance.

Verſe 9.
Parents piety a comfort to the children.

Prayer hath her ſtrength from promiſe.

6 In the prayer it ſelfe, conſider how ſweet it is in the Childes woe, for him to bee able to remember, that his Parents were godly, and in favour with the Lord. Then conceiveth hee comfort, that hee which loved the ſtocke, will not caſt away the branch, but graciouſly reſpect him, and therefore to his comfort hee cryeth, O God of my Father, ſuch an one, and ſuch an one, that went before mee, looke upon mee, and have mercy upon mee: thou waſt his God full good and full kinde, evermore, ſhew mercy now to his ſeed according to thy ſweet promiſe, and ſo forth. A great cauſe to make Parents godly, if there were no other, that their children ever may pray as did Jacob, O God of my Father Abraham, and God of my Father Iſaac, looke upon mee, &c. Secondly, conſider how hee groundeth both prayer and hope, upon word and promiſe, ſaying, Lord, which ſaidſt unto mee, returne unto thy countrey, and to thy kindred, and I will doe thee good. So let us doe, and not firſt doe raſhly what wee had no warrant for, and then pray to God for helpe, wherein wee have no promiſe: yea, if you marke it, hee repeateth this promiſe over againe in the twelfth verſe, it was ſuch ſtrength unto him to conſider it. Thirdly, not merit, but want of merit is his plea; I am not worthy of the leaſt of all thy mercies, and all the truth which thou haſt ſhewed unto thy ſervant. Which beateth downe all Popiſh pride, and biddeth them learne, that ſurely if Jacob wanted worthineſſe, and worthineſſe of the leaſt, they are no Jacobs, but farre behinde him, and therefore much more unworthy mercies many, and mercies great, which yet God beſtoweth. Secondly, it mightily comforteth us againſt that fiery dart of the Devill, wherewith hee often troubleth ſome weake ones, namely, that they are unworthy, vile, and wretched, and thus and thus unworthy, therefore they may not pray to GOD, nor expect from him any favour. Ah wicked ſpirit avant! for doe wee ſee here Jacob driven away from God with any unworthineſſe? No, no: but in the humble confeſſion thereof not-notwithstanding it all, hee commeth to God, and so doe wee comfortably and boldly. For though our unworthinesse be more than Iacobs, yet is it not the measure only that God hateth, but the thing; and if here wee see the thing, no reason to drive from God, where it is acknowledged, surely no more is the measure, neither where that is also confessed and bewayled. Lastly, consider here he alledgeth his weakenesse as a reason to move God to mercy: for I feare him, saith he, lest he will come and smite me, and the mother upon the children. What a comfort is this, that we should have warrant in the word to urge God to mercy, by reason of our wants? Satan perswadeth us we must runne away, by reason of our wants, but you see hee lyeth, and the contrary here is our comfort. Yet see this further. Iacob was comforted many wayes, as you saw before, that he should not feare, yea, by an hoast of Angels that met him, and yet he feareth. This was a great infirmity of fraile flesh in Iacob, you must needs confesse, and yet so farre is Iacob from being daunted with this, to keepe from God, that even because of it he goeth to him, and not hiding it, nor fearing the discovery of it, layeth it before the Lord, as an Argument to move him. How then shall we doe quite contrary to what wee see here, and say, O I dare not, I dare not, I am so weake, and ever fearing that God will not heare me. Move him as Iacob moved him, and say as Iacob might have said: Truth Lord, I have had many comforts, and helps of my faith to drive all feare from mee, and to assure me of thy care, and yet Lord I feare still: thou mayest say therefore to me, O thou of little faith, I will no more regard thee: but Lord, such is not thy sternesse to thy children. What moved thee therefore first to yeeld me comfort, let it move thee still I most humbly beseech thee, for they both still remaine, to wit, thine owne goodnesse and my imperfection. Thine remaineth, and mine is not yet gone quite as it should: Lord then help, help me, for yet I feare. Thus shall we follow Jacob rightly in this place, and let him thus profit us. Verse 11.

Iacob pleadeth no merit.

Note this comfort.

7 I cannot omit this godly remembrance that Jacob here maketh of his first estate, when he came into the Country, and of his estate present now when he doth returne; With my staffe, saith he, came I over this Jordan, and now have I gotten two bands. A notable meditation morning and evening, for rich Merchants, wealthy Lawyers, and men and women of all degrees, whom God hath exalted from little to much, or from lesse to more any way: and would God wee thankfully might thinke of it often. Verse 13. & 14. Rich Merchants consider this.

8 By the way also we may consider the difference of times, and manners of men. Then Jacob travelleth into Mesopotamia with a staffe or rod in his hand, and safe enough. No if wee will goe but to the next towne, swords and speares, and gunnes are necessary, or else wee smart for it: so changed are times, and men in them. Weapons.

9 Then Jacob maketh ready a Present for his brother Esau, the fourth and last of his counsels as I noted before. The greatnesse of which, if ye marke it, sheweth us, how dearly peace in the land of Canaan is to be bought, and what we must be content to depart from for the same. Understand by the land of Canaan, our owne country and home, where we were borne & brought up, learned and lived in the light of the truth, and how precious in our eyes should the peace thereof be? What Sheepe, and what Goates? what Camels and Colts? what Kine, and what Bullocks? what treasure and substance of any condition, should wee willingly part withall, still to keepe that? Understand by Canaan, the truth of the figure, everlasting Heaven, and what ought we to part withall to purchase that? Surely, not with as much as Jacob doth here, but with all that ever we have, even life it selfe, if so the case require. For he that loveth house, or land, or any thing more than that, is unworthy of it. So then possesse wealth, that wee willingly part with it, if the keeping must part us, and our heavenly Countrey. Verse 13. Presents and gifts appease anger.

10 All things thus ordered, and the Presents dispatched away, night is come, and having gotten over his wives and children, and all that hee had, Over the Ford Iabbok, Iacob himselfe is left alone, when there commeth a man and wrestleth with him. The Text saith a man, but it was God in the forme of a man. Which wrestling, as it was a very extraordinary thing, and strange, why it should be, to such as doe not understand it: so was it a notable thing and full of instruction to us, if wee doe understand it, and consider of the Lords dealings and purpose herein, both with Iacob and others his faithfull evermore. First, then this wrestling warned and forewarned, as it were Jacob, that many struglings remained for him yet in his life, to be run through and passed over, which were not to discomfort him, when they happened; for as here, so there he would goe away with victory in the end. Secondly, it described out the condition, not only of Jacob, but of all the godly also with him, namely, that they are Wrestlers by Calling, while they live here, and have many and divers things to struggle withall, and against; some outward, some inward, some carnall, some spirituall, some of one condition, some of another; which all, yet through God they shall overcome, and have a joyfull victory over in conclusion, if with patience they passe on, and by faith lay hold upon him ever, in whom they onely can vanish, Christ Jesus. Thirdly, it was God, not man; yet man appearing, and God hidden; to tell and teach us, that in all our assaults, tryals and conflicts, it is God that we have to doe withall, and that entreth the lists to wrestle with us, to the end our strength may appeare, although not God, but Verse 24. Iacobs wrestling. 1 The doctrine and use of this wrestling. 2 3 but man, or ſome other meanes appeares unto our outward eyes: which thing is a matter of great moment to all faithfull to be remembred ever: for wee ſhall thereby conceive great comfort, and leſſe feare, knowing that no evill can come in the end from ſuch an adverſary, whereas the ignorance or forgetfulneſſe of this, maketh us runne too violently upon the outward cauſes or cauſers, and ſo to offend. It mightily ſtayed Iacob that he ſaw it was God that wreſtled with him, and did not barely reſpect the ſecond meanes. Fourthly, it diſcovered the ſtrength where-

4 by Iacob both had and ſhould overcome ever in his wreſtlings, even by Gods upholding with the one hand, when he aſſaileth with the other, and not otherwiſe: which is another thing al-
5 ſo of great profit to be noted of us, that not by any power of our owne, we are able to ſtand, and yet by him and through him, Conquerors, and more than Conquerors. Fiftly, it is ſaid, that God ſaw how he could not prevaile againſt Iacob, which noteth not ſo much ſtrength in Iacob, as mercy in God, ever kinde and full of mercy. Compare it with a ſpeech not unlike unto it in the
Gen. 19.22. 19. of Geneſis, where it is ſaid, I can doe nothing till thou be gone, &c. God his cannot, is his will 6 not, for love that he hath unto his children, and liking to be even overcome by their faith. Sixtly, he touched the hollow of Iacobs thigh, and it was looſed, ſo that Iacob halted. Whereby wee may ſee how the godly wreſtle with temptations in this life, and overcome; ſurely, ſic vincunt ut vulnerentur, ſo they overcome, that yet now and then they get raps and wipes. David was a notable wreſtler, yet ſinfull fleſh gave him a foule venie or two, though he roſe againe like a good Wreſtler, by true repentance, and had the victory againſt that fall. So all the godly by one imperfection or other, we ſee they get wipes, though in the end all is well; by the ſtrength of him
7 that gat no rap by ſinne, Chriſt our deare Saviour and true overcomer. Seventhly, that the Lord ſaith to Iacob, Let me goe, it wonderfully commendeth Iacobs tolerance of the Lords wreſtlings, till himſelfe gave over, and would depart: and to us it giveth this doctrine, that when God doth trie us with any temptation and croſſe, by any aſſault and ſpiritual exerciſe, we ſhould not be content onely for a day or two, or while we thinke good, but even ſo long endure his good pleaſure, till himſelfe doe give over of himſelfe, not preſcribed nor appointed by us; which, becauſe it is a great matter for our frailty to doe, therefore wee may boldly pray that the Lord would in mercy conſider our ſtrength, and according to his promiſe lay no more upon us then he will make us able to beare: but give the iſſue with the temptation in due time, to his glory
8 and our good. Laſtly, that Iacob ſaith, He will not let him goe except he bleſſe him: It teacheth us to be ſtrong in the Lord whenſoever we are tryed, and even ſo hearty and comfortable, that we as it were, compell the Lord to bleſſe us ere he goe; that is, by his mercifull ſweetneſſe to comfort our hearts, and to make us more and more confirmed in all vertue and obedience towards him; yeelding us our prayer as far as it may any way ſtand with the ſame: which force and violence, as it were, offered on our parts to the Lord, he highly eſteemeth, and richly rewardeth e-

Whatſoever it is, turne to this place and conſider theſe things, follow and fulfill as the Lord inableth you this courſe, and Gods truth for your warrant, you ſhall wreſtle well, and to your great comfort in the end.

Verſe 31. The Allegory of Iacobs halting. 11 Iacobs halting ſome have reſembled, if you liſt to heare it, in this ſort. Firſt, that it ſhould betoken an halting poſterity that ſhould come of him, for many of them. Others have ſaid, that his good legge noteth the godly, who walke uprighly before the Lord; and his bad legge, the wicked, that ever halt and are not ſound. Others, that his good legge noteth the ſpirit in man, which is ſtrong and willing; the bad legge, the fleſh which is fraile and weake, &c. That the Jewes eate not of that part, was a ceremony of that people, who had many moe. Much better ſhould they abſtain from all halting in Gods ſervice and true religion, then from the part which Reade Heb.12. 13. was touched, but that fleſh and blood is more buſie in ſhew and outward obſervance, than in 1 King.11.21. matter of weight and inward truth. Thus let it ſuffice to have profited by this Chapter.

CHAP. XXXIII.

The chiefe matter of this whole Chapter, is the reconciliation of the two Brethren, Jacob and Eſau, when they met. Which how it was in the diſcourſe thereof we ſhall ſee.

Verſe 1. WHen he ſaw his brother Eſau comming, and with him 400. men, hee divided the children to Leah, and to Rachel, and to the two maids. Wherein we ſee thus much, that a wiſe man is not ſo ſmitten out of his wits with a danger, when he is in it, that he cannot tell what he doth, as many many men are, but he governeth his feare, and keepeth it within limits, hee caſteth about in good diſcretion and abilitie of minde, what is beſt to be done, he concludeth quickly, and executeth ſpeedily his determination, and ſo all being done that he can, for his part he committeth the whole to his gracious God, to bleſſe and give ſucceſſe to, as his will ſhall bee. Thus let us marke in Iacob here, and by it hereafter ſtay ſuch amazements as many of us as uſe to be ſubject to in a diſtreſſe, when it commeth.

In perill not amazement, but counſell, is covenient.

2 He put the Maids and their Children formoſt, and Leah and her Children after, and Rachel and Ioſeph laſt. Which if it were done in reſpect of ſecurity & ſafety to one more than another, we ſee then in the godly, how affections have place. To the Maides he wiſhed well, and to their Children, but to Leah better, and to Rachel beſt of all. Thus are good men, men, and ſubject as I ſay, to humane affections in their meaſure. But if he put Rachel hindermoſt, becauſe ſhe had but one childe, then ſavoureth it of order as was ſaid before. The former for my part I rather thinke, for we have ſeene before his exceeding love to Rachel, and in the former Chapter this reaſon was given of dividing the people, That if Eſau come to the one company and ſmite it, the other company ſhall eſcape. Therefore evident as I thinke, what he meant to Rachel, when he ſet her laſt.

Verſe 2. The godly have their affections.

Verſe 8.

3 Then he went before them himſelfe, and bowed to the ground ſeven times, untill he came to his brother Eſau. His going before a notable argument of his faith. For God ſaid unto him, I will be with thee; in the aſſurance of this which his heart beleeveth, he marcheth forward. His love alſo appeared in his charge that followed him, for what part they take hee will take, and that firſt and formoſt, yea he will interpoſe himſelfe betwixt them and the danger, that he may avert it from them, if God ſo will. A patterne of a good Shepheard, of a good Parent, of a good Maſter, and indeed the office of a couragious Captaine. His bowing, as it was a token of ſubmiſſion to his brother in worldly things, ſo may it reſemble the ſtate of the Church in this world, ſtooping and bowing, ſubject, and under their pompe and ſtate in this life, who in the next ſhall bee moſt miſerable for ever and ever. The glory of the wicked is here, and the godly are under; the glory of the godly is in the next life, and then the wicked ſhall bee under. Have wee patience then, and tarry the time till it may appeare what we are.

Iacobs going before all, ſhewed his faith and love.

1 Iohn 3.2.

4 Then Eſau ranne to meet him and embraced him, and fell on his necke and kiſſed him, and they wept. O the power of God to turne all hearts which way hee will! Now bee wee judges our ſelves, whether it be not true that Salomon ſaith: The Kings heart is in the hand of God, and as the Rivers of water he turneth it whitherſoever pleaſeth him. Tea, hell and deſtruction, are before the Lord, how much more the hearts of the ſonnes of men? Where is that of Eſau, The dayes of mourning for my Father will come ſhortly, and then will I kill Iacob? The Lord, even the mighty and merciſull Lord, hath wiped it out of his mouth and heart, out of his minde and purpoſe, and out of his might and power. And here is a change farre fitter for a brother. Glad was Iacobs heart, when he ſaw this, I warrant you, and glad were all his people. Bleſſed be God that can ſo cheere his children ever, and ſo ſitteth in the hearts of their threatners that they cannot move, but as he will. Who will not truſt in this God in all his diſtreſſes, that hee ſhall worke for him, and change hearts to his beſt comfort evermore? Is he the God of Iacob alone, are all his promiſes come to an end when Iacob is helped? No, no: we alſo are his, and he is ours, dearer to him than his owne life, when time was, and for us therefore alſo ſhall hee thus worke in the hearts of men, as ſhall be good for us if we cleave to him. What can a thundring ſcolding enemy doe to you or me, more than Eſau could do to Iacob? If you will think of nature, God is ſtronger than nature, and therefore can effect more. Be it unto us then in the Lords bleſſing, ever an increaſe of our faith this example. Something againe as a meanes conſider of Iacobs humility, who bowed himſelfe ſo to his Brother. Doth not God bleſſe it to a good effect? Sic ventus vincit, dum ſe ſubmittit arundo, Impulſu quorum robora celſa cadunt: So overcommeth the reed the windes, by bowing to them, when the mighty Oakes are overthrowne that bow not. Humility then in Religion, as pronuntiation in Rhetoricke, the firſt point, the ſecond point, the third point, and all in all. Where pride is, there is ſhame, but where humility is, there is wiſedome, ſaith Salomon. And ſurely, It is better to be of an humble mind with the lowly, then to divide the ſpoyles with the proud, &c.

All hearts in Gods hand.

5 Then Eſau asked him of the Women and Children? To whom Iacob anſwered, They were his Children whom God of his grace had given him. Therein acknowledging Children to bee not only the gift of God, but the gift of his grace to as many as have them, which is a great comfort, if it be well marked, to all Fathers and Mothers of Children. Again, before a bad man, yet he ſpeaketh religiouſly, and Eſau maketh no jeſt at it, as bad as he was. We frame our ſelves too much to company, and prophane ſpirits in our dayes, ſcoffe at any thing that ſavoureth of Religion.

Verſe 6. Children the gift of grace.

6 Next, he asketh him of the droves which he met; not that he was ignorant, for the ſervants that carryed them had told him, but that he would take occaſion to thanke Iacob for them after ſome ſhew of refuſall. Iacobs ſuing for favour by them, hath beene touched before, and ſhewed to be lawfull. Eſau his ſpeech that he had enough, ſheweth the pride of rich mens hearts, bragging ſtill of their plenty. Iacobs faire praying, the policy of the Holy Ghoſt to ſtay anger. Mollis reſponſio

Many worſe than Eſau for anger.

reſponſio frangit iram, a ſoft anger breaketh wrath, it hath beene often noted. When he ſaith, He hath ſeene his face as the face of God. His meaning was, that in that change of countenance from that which hee feared hee ſaw evidently Gods face, that is, his worke, providence and mercy, and therefore his heart joyed in it. His terming of his preſent to bee a bleſſing, hath this reaſon, becauſe gifts were given of the godly that gave them willingly, with bleſſings and prayers, and wiſhes of all proſperity with thē. Contrary to the courſe of many in our dayes, whoſe preſents and gifts by the ſame reaſon may be called curſings, becauſe with them (hand and heart going not together) they wiſh evill, as the devill choake him, or ſuch like.

7 Thus Eſau is appeaſed, and his wrath departed, meanes have prevailed, and he is not obſtinate. We have men and women within the compaſſe of our knowledge, whoſe wrath can never be appeaſed by any meanes that either the parties themſelves or any friends for them can make. No ſubjection, no ſubmiſſion, no words, no deeds, can ſtirre them a jote. And yet they would bee loath to be called Eſaus, much more impatient, if a man ſhould ſay, farre worſe than Eſau. But they ſee themſelves whether indeed it be not ſo: when Eſau is intreated, and they cannot, to that which God and grace, and the perill of damnation perſwadeth unto. God is love, and without love, without God, and conſequently caſt away for ever.

Verſ. 13.
A patterne of a good Paſtor.

8 Iacobs care of the Cattell to drive as their pace will endure, moſt fitly ſheweth the duty of a carefull and good Miniſter, ever to have an eye to the weake ones in his flock, that cannot endure what the ſtronger can, and ſo to regard all, as he over-drive not any. Better it is that the able goe more ſoftly, than the weake and feeble over faſt: for the one hath danger, the other none. Let haſty ſpirits conſider this, that never knew what bowels indeed a true Paſtor hath to the whole, and not to ſome few ſingled out in a partiall affection, and for ſome ſhew of that which indeed is not in them. They are all the Paſtors care, and he muſt in conſcience drive, as the weakeſt may endure, not hurling, and haſting to the abilitie of ſome, and utterly overthrowing the greater part. A good Phyſitian of the body doth not deſire to cure haſtily, but ſurely and ſoundly: and why muſt the Phyſitian of the ſoule his praiſe conſiſt in haſte? You may conceive a fault, though I paint it not. Ne ſutor ultra crepidam, Let the Shooe-maker goe no further than his Shooe. Tractent fabrilia fabri, And let Carpenters meddle with Carpenters work. The Paſtors office is above their reach, if they loved not to have an Oare in other mens Boats; and he that hath called him to it, counted him faithfull, and put him in his ſervice, hath indued him in diſcretion, and aſſiſteth him with a conſcience to conſider his charge; who bee ſtrong, and who be weake, what might bee done, and what is convenient and profitable to be done, with the diſcharge in ſingleneſſe before his eyes, that is, the Shepheard of Shepheards, and chiefe Biſhop of our ſoules. Who art thou that judgeſt another mans ſervant? he ſtandeth or falleth to his owne Maſter. Thou art not the Paſtor, and therefore haſt neither his bowels, nor knowledge. His courſe and reaſons thereof have another Judge. Iacob may not have more care of bruit beaſts, than Miniſters muſt have of Gods people, but he will not over-drive the very weakeſt, no more muſt the Miniſter if he meane to ſave and not kill. Haſt hath made waſte, that I can tell, and more leaſure would have beene better ſpeed. Remember Iacob here.

Rom.14.

Verſe 20.
Jacob thankfull after deliverance.

9 And laſtly, ſtill ſee the practiſe of faithfull men, ever when God hath beene mercifull to them, and delivered them out of danger. Now Jacob buildeth an Altar in the true thankfulneſſe of his ſoule unto God for this great mercy and deliverance of him from his brother Eſau. And he calleth it The mighty God of Iſrael: giving to the ſigne the name of the thing which is ſignified, which is uſuall in Scripture. Thus would God it might kindle ſome heate in our hearts, and conſciences to conſider our ſelves, the dangers we have beene in in our dayes, the dangers of the Land wherein we inhabite, the dangers of our deare and nurſing mother, her moſt excellent Majeſty for our ſakes, becauſe ſhe loveth us with a true love, not keeping the body onely in an earthly ſafety and well being for earthly commodities, but chiefly procuring our ſoules comfort, and defending the ſame unto us againſt all malice of mighty powers. The dangers of wife, children, and friends, and now our ſafty and deliverance from all our feares, our quiet ſitting under our owne Vines, without noyſe of Drum, ſound of Trumpet, neying of Horſes, roaring of Canons, clattering of armour, cries of the ſlaine by day and by night. For this hath the Lord done for us, and whatſoever it is in our eyes, ſurely it is wonderfull even through the world. All Nations ſee our happineſſe, the wicked gnaſh their teeth at it, the godly have ſent us their gratulations, and they bleſſe God for us. But where now are our Altars? That is, where are our thankes and moſt gratefull ſongs for our deliverance? We have found mercy, as Jacob did; yea, farre more, for greater Eſaus have come againſt us, than did againſt him, not with foure hundred men; but many thouſands, to captivate us for ever as their ſlaves, when they had ſlaine their fill. And yet we live, and by God onely who hath ſtrangely revenged us upon them that would thus have eaten us up. Yet with Jacob we build no Altars. That is, as I ſay againe, wee give no thankes for the cuſtome of our time, as hee did after the manner of his. At the firſt peradventure we did, but it was ſoone at an end. Now are wee fallen into a dead ſleep againe, and both God and his mercy is forgotten. Our danger alſo, as if it had never beene. But in the

Lord

Lord I beſeech you, let us awake againe, looke upon Iacob here what he doth, and every man and woman follow his example. Build God an Altar, not in earth with Lime and Stone, but in your heart of moſt kinde and thankfull remembrance for all his mercies to the Land, to our dread Soveraigne, to our ſelves, our ſoules and bodies, to our wives and children, to our neighbours and friends, and infinite wayes that we cannot name. Bleſſe his Majeſty for them, and let not the remembrance die, till you die your ſelfe. A thankfull heart is all that the Lord ſeeketh, and it is all that indeed we can doe to him. The childe unborne hath cauſe to thanke him, and much more we that enjoy his mercy at this preſent houre. The Lord touch our hearts that we may feele, the Lord loſe our tongues that we may ſpeake, and the Lord inable both heart and tongue to continue praiſes unto his Majeſty, not for a day or two, but whileſt breath goeth through our noſtrils, and we remaine. O our God of mercy! bleſſed be thou, bleſſed to day, and bleſſed for ever: bleſſed with heart, and bleſſed with ſoule: yea bleſſed with the ſoule of our ſoules: for we were dead and now alive, yea as ſheepe appointed to the ſlaughter, after ſtrange tortures and torments before, ſo were we: but the ſnare is broken, and we are delivered: wee releaſed, and our enemies crawling in the bottome of the Sea. Thou haſt done it O God our God, and to thee be praiſe for ever and ever for it. Amen. Amen.

CHAP. XXXIIII.

The chiefe heads of this Chapter are theſe three.

The defiling of Dinah the daughter of Jacob.
The fraud and ſubtilty of her brethren.
The cruell murder they committed for that cauſe.

Verſe 1. Womens needleſſe going abroad.

COncerning the firſt, the Text ſaith, Dinah went out to ſee the daughters of that Country. That is, ſhe went a walking to gaze and ſee faſhions, as women were ever deſirous of novelties, and given to needleſſe curioſity. Sechem the ſonne of Hamor Lord of that Country, ſaw her, and preſently tooke her, lay with her, and defiled her. This was the fruit of her needleſſe jetting abroad being a yong woman. A profitable example to warne all youth, honeſtly minding and meaning, to beware, and to keepe within: for it is ſafe, it is ſure, it is credit ſo to doe. Liberty and looſeneſſe hath ſpoiled many a one, as it here did her. Which the wiſe Syrach well knowing, willeth all that have daughters to keep their bodies; and not to ſhew any cheerefull face to them, that is, not to be fond over them, and ready to grant them what liberty witleſſe youth may wiſh to have, but rather to marry them with all good ſpeed, and then is a weighty worke performed. Solomon endued with ſuch deep wiſdome, noteth it as a property of an unchaſte woman, and given to filthy delights, That her feet cannot abide within her houſe, but now ſhe is without, now in the ſtreets, and lyeth in waite at every corner. The Apoſtle Paul againe as a thing that greatly diſgraceth any woman living, layeth it downe, to be idle, and to goe about from houſe to houſe. For this will make them alſo pratlers and buſie-bodies, ſpeaking things which are not comely. David compareth a good woman to a Vine upon the wals of the houſe, becauſe ſhe cleaveth to her houſe, and keepeth within, even loath to be gotten out, except the occaſion be good and juſt. Others have compared her to the Snaile, that hath even her houſe upon her backe.

Syrach. 7. 24.

Prov. 7. 11. &c. 1 Tim. 5. 13.

Verſe 4. Conſent of Parents.

2. Obſerve the conſent of Parents regarded here even by the Heathens. For Sechem beggeth of his father that he would get him this maide to wife, that is, that he would procure Iacob her fathers conſent, and give his owne alſo. Of which having ſpoken elſewhere at large I ſtand not now. But ſhame it is for us to be worſe than Heathens.

Verſ. 5. Opportunity to be expected, and griefe bridled.

3. This evill newes is brought to the old man, even to Iacob I meane, that his daughter Dinah was thus taken up and defiled. Whoſe woe what it was for ſo great a wrong, let Parents judge that know Parents hearts. Nevertheleſſe his ſonnes being with his cattell in the field, Iacob, ſaith the Text, held his peace till they were come. Thereby declaring that a wiſe man ruſheth not by and by into actions according to his griefe, or when his affections are hot, but ſtayeth himſelfe, moderateth his heat, and over-ruleth his paſſions till a quieter minde may better deliberate of a due courſe. This is gravity, this is wiſdome, and this is ſtrength that greatly adorneth any which hath it. The want of this hath cauſed great repentance when it is too late, and daunted the credit of very many for ſtaid government of themſelves. Iacob I ſay held his peace.

Verſe 7. Whoredome of good ones ever abhorred.

4. When his ſonnes came home they alſo heare the matter, and it grieved the men, ſaith the Text, and they were very angry, becauſe hee had wrought villany in Iſrael, and lyen with Iacobs daughter, which thing ought not to be done. See how we ought to be affected to this kinde of ſinne, which filthy fleſh ſo joyeth in. Iacobs ſonnes abhorre it, deteſt it, and loath the very thought of it: ſo ſhould we. They conſider circumſtances that increaſe the foulneſſe of it, as that it was in Iſrael, that is, amongſt a people profeſſing God, that it was with Iacobs daughter, that is, ſuch a noted mans daughter for piety and religion, &c. ſo ſhould wee, and ever knowing ſinne to be ſinne, yet to know that circumſtances make ſinnes greater and greater. This argueth love of God, love of vertue, and feeling of ſinne, which ever are arguments of Gods holy Spirit in us. Compare this deteſtation and religious anger in Iacobs ſons againſt this ſinne, with the jeſts and gibes that fleſhly worldlings make of it, and with the pretty excuſes that our holy Fathers in Rome doe uſe: Si non caſtè, tamen cautè: If not chaſtly, yet charily, &c.

Verſ. 8, &c. A fond father over his childe.

5. From the 8. verſe to the 13. you have Hamor his Oration or perſwaſion uſed to Iacob and his ſonnes, to obtaine their good will that Dinah might be maryed to Sechem. Reade it and marke it, and you ſhall ſee nothing but a fond ſpeech of a fond father, who as he was the Governour and Magiſtrate of that Country, ſhould ſharply have puniſhed ſuch behaviour in his childe. But peradventure it was Cat after kinde. Howſoever, ſurely the truth is tryed, that blanda patrum ſegnes facit indulgentia natos: A mally Father maketh a wicked Childe. Reade the two and twenty of Deuteronomy.

Religion made a cloake.

6. From the thirteenth verſe to the 18. you ſee the ſubtill courſe which the ſonnes of Iacob deviſed to be revenged for the villany done to their ſiſter, and in her to their whole houſe: their making religion and the ordinance of God a cloake to cover their craft, and a meanes to compaſſe their deſire by. No new practiſe you ſee, neither yet for age worne out either of memory or practiſe in our dayes: who would have thought ſuch deadly wrath had lodged under ſo reaſonable words, or ſuch bloody murther under the ſhew of a mariage? Deepe is the heart of man we ſee, and godly ſhewes have dreadfull treaſons, and cruell maſſacres often under them. Even alliances therefore and offered knots of great good will beware betimes.

Verſe 21. Private reſpects covered with cloake of publike good.

7. The conditions agreed upon betwixt Hamor and Iacobs ſonnes, the conſent of the reſidue of the people wanted, which Hamor their Governour to obtaine, aſſembled them together at the gate accuſtomed, and there by a ſet Oration, ſheweth them what good ſhould grow to the whole Country in generall, and to every one in ſpeciall, if they would hearken unto the condition of being circumciſed, that thereby there might grow alliances with theſe Strangers, in mariages with them croſſe either with others. Pretending cunningly (which is the thing I marke) the publike good, when wholly it was a private reſpect that he had, and a particular pleaſure that he ſhot at. Here is the policy then, or rather ſubtilty, which now in our dayes wee ſee ſo rife. If malice poſſeſſe us, and wiſh a revenge, if covetouſneſſe have caught us, and would have a benefit, or whatſoever it is we would effect, ſtill the pretence is a publike good, thus and ſo ſhall the Church be profited, and thus and ſo ſhall the Land be inriched, if our deviſes may have place, when indeed they tend to as much good to either, as this perſwaſion did to the Sechemites, being the meanes whereby cruelty tooke place, malice and wrath had opportunity, and the fearefull deſtruction of them all was brought to paſſe and compaſſed. Truſt not therefore over haſtily ſuch goodly promiſes and painted ſhews of publike good, to bring in an innovation, which as this, may have danger under it and yet not doubted.

Innovation dangerous often.

Verſ. 24. Profit perſwadeth mightily.

8. The ſilly people conſent unto Hamor his ſpeech, whereby we may learne how dangerous a temptation the promiſe of gaine and profit is to the ignorant multitude. This winneth and bewitcheth them, this gaineth and getteth them to doe any thing, yea, with this both eyes bee dimmed and eares ſo ſtopped, that ſubtile men may worke their wils, and had I wiſt comes ever too late.

Verſe 24. Great mens perſwaſions.

9. Marke againe what power to effect either good or ill, is in the perſwaſions of great men to their inferiors. They carry them headlong to deſtruction if ſo they will, and they carry them comfortably unto good if ſo they will. Happy be the Governours that perſwade but well, and ſo anſwer not with their owne for the blood of many. Againe, marke here what often elſe may bee ſeene, that when the Lord determineth to puniſh, men have no power to foreſee the perill. In Juſtice hee taketh the wiſedome from the wiſe, and counſell from the prudent.

Both Father and ſonne are ſlain, that filthy luſt may have worthy recompence, and ſweet meate ſower ſawce.

10. Thus the Inhabitants being enticed to admit of circumciſion for an earthly commodity and reſpect, the third day when they were ſore, Simeon and Levi the ſons of Iacob, with ſwords drawne come upon them and kill every male amongſt them. A bloody fact and a great murther, in mans eyes worthy of great blame, that for one mans fault ſo many ſhould die, offering them recompence by admitting their condition, and ſo deeply deluded by ſo holy a ſhew. But altogether we may not eſteeme it by this, but ſomewhat conſider the revenging hand of a juſt God in it, who will never ſuffer the wrongs violently offered to his choſen people to eſcape unpuniſhed, if they cleave to him. The mighty worldlings may imagine they ſhall doe what they liſt with us, and proudly wrong us, emboldned by their might and our weakneſſe, but they ſhall be deceived, as is ſeene to their terrour and our comfort in this example. That

Simeon

Simeon and Levi were ſo forwardſome in nature we may juſtly thinke of. For Dinah to them was full Siſter both by Father and Mother, where unto ſome others ſhee was but onely by Father, Leah was her Mother, and the mother of Simeon and Levi alſo. Againe, wee may ſee in this example that ſaying verified, Quicquid delirant Reges plectuntur Achivi: For the ſinnes of Governours the people often ſmart: and therefore happy people that have a good Governour; it is a treaſure that of many is little conſidered, and a bleſſing that God is never worthily thanked for.

11. Then came the other ſonnes of Iacob upon the dead, and ſpoiled the City. See therein anger how it rageth and increaſeth, being once incenſed and ſtirred up. One man by example kindleth another, and violence upon violence will encreaſe ſtill, if wee ſtay not quickly. If you marke now the ſtate of this City, how the Children be fatherleſſe, the women comfortleſſe, no houſe without bloodſhed, murther and death, their goods ſpoiled in City and field, their bodies captivated which remaine alive. O heavy woe! would not the heart of any man or woman tremble to offend the Lord, to feed the fleſh that ſinfully luſteth with ſuch deadly delight, and careleſſe to ſcorne what ſo fearefully puniſhed we ſee of God? How happy Hamor, if his ſinning ſonne had never beene borne, how happy the ſonne, if he had turned his eyes from evill, and bridled his luſting heart with vertue and honour. How happy all both old and young, both great and little, men and women, with babes and ſucklings, if God had beene feared, and ſinne abhorred? This is ſinne in the eyes of the higheſt, a cryer continually for his wrath, till at laſt it come. The Lord give a feeling, that we may truly hate what hurteth and harmeth in this ſort.

Verſ. 27. &c. The rage of an offended mind.

Stand in awe and ſin not.

12. Then ſaid Iacob to his ſonnes, ye have troubled me, &c. Pitifully bemoning the danger which this deſperateneſſe caryed with it, both to him and his, had not God been good, whoſe mercy indeed onely effected, that the Countries about did not riſe up in armes againſt him and deſtroy him quite. The Lord knew how Iacob abhorred this courſe, and yet how perfectly he hated the ſinne of his daughter, wherefore in mercy hee provided for him, ſtayed all evill that might be againſt him, and kept both him, and for his ſake, his, that might elſe have periſhed well enough. I note it to my comfort, and the comfort of many, that may in their houſes and ſeverall families, either by children, or ſervants, or friends, have that committed which their ſoules abhorre, and they little know of. God is gracious to regard the innocent, and to turne from his faithfull ſervants that which evill committed might procure unto them, as hee here did from Iacob. Then marke againe in theſe ſonnes of Iacob, whether for their merits God ſo increaſed them, and made them his people, or it onely was mercy and no merit. And remember withall, what by Ezechiel God ſaith unto them, I meane to the people deſcended of them, and of like merit with them for this that we ſpeak of: Son of man, cauſe Ieruſalem to know her abominations, and ſay, Thus ſaith the Lord God unto thee, Thine habitation and thy kindred, is of the land of Canaan, thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite. And in thy nativity when thou waſt borne, thy navell was not cut, thou waſt not waſhed in water to ſoften thee, thou waſt not ſalted with ſalt, nor ſwadled in clouts. No eye pittied thee to do any of theſe unto thee, for to have compaſſion upon thee, but thou waſt caſt out in the open field, to the contempt of thy perſon in the day that thou waſt borne. And when I paſſed by thee, I ſaw thee polluted in thine owne blood, and I ſaid unto thee when thou waſt in thy blood, Thou ſhalt live: even when thou waſt in thy blood, I ſaid unto thee, Thou ſhalt live. Mark you this repetition, Even when thou waſt in thy blood, I ſaid unto thee, Thou ſhalt live. That is, even when thou wert ſinfull, wretched and ugly to be looked on in thy ſelfe, yet in mercy I regarded thee, turned my face from thy due deſerts, and ſaid, Thou ſhalt live. Now if there were no merit in this firſt people, why the Lord ſhould chooſe them before all others, but that meere mercy regarded them in their blood, what merit might be in us Gentiles, wilde Olives, and behinde them far in circumſtances ſundry of great importance, that we ſhould ſwell and be puffed up? Reade the whole Chapter in Ezechiel, and think in your ſoul how much rather the Lord might complaine of us generally or particularly as there he doth of them. And what ſhould have humbled them, let it humble us, what ſhould have made them ten thouſand times thankfull, let it make us not only that way, but every way dutifull to our lives end. Moſes was a Levite, and yet he writeth this of his father Levi, an argument evident, that fleſh and blood did not rule in the writing of the Scriptures, which hardly is drawne to lay downe any ſhame or blame of their anceſtors, but that Gods Spirit, the God of truth and verity, guided and governed the pen of the writer, as beſt was ſeeming to his wiſdome.

Verſ. 30. &c.

Faults committed in families, ſore againſt the will of the rulers.

The Iewes not choſen for merits.

Ezech. 16. 2. &c.

The Scripture written by inſpiration, and not by fleſh and blood.

13. Shall he abuſe our Siſter as a whore? ſay they: No, yet may not thereon be concluded, that againſt a fault any manner of proceeding is allowed. The fact was wicked, yet the puniſhment ſhould have beene orderly, and with their fathers advice, who chiefly was wronged, and whoſe wiſdome and diſcretion would better have guided his ſonnes, then they any way could direct him. But this is youth, hot and fiery, raſh and unbridled, never forecaſting what may enſue, but eagerly harping upon a revenge. They never thinke of their Fathers eſtate, and their owne in that Country, that they were but ſtrangers there, that they were but few, and that extreame danger might ariſe both to their Father and them by this rage: No, no, the heat of youth doth firſt performe, and then repent when it is too late. Whither did Cain his outragious anger carry him? Surely his brothers blood was nothing, when fury and anger had taken place. Saul againſt Ionathan, Achab againſt Naboth, Aſa againſt the Prophet, with many moe, declare well the effects of anger, when once it is kindled and incenſed.

2 Chro.16. 10.

Theodoſius, after his ſlaughter of ſeven thouſand at Theſſalonica in his anger, by the perſwaſion of Ambroſe, laid downe a law, that whoſoever after ſhould be condemned to death, ſhould have execution thereof deferred for thirty dayes, to the end, that if anger had any way made the judgement too ſharpe, this reſpite and time might againe moderate it according unto Juſtice. For, ut fragilis glacies, interit ira mora:

Theodoret. lib. 5. cap. 16, & 17.

Ovid.

As Ice in time doth melt away,
So time makes anger to decay.

Naked excuſes.

Laſtly, if you marke this anſwer of Iacobs ſonnes, it may ſhew what naked excuſes we content our ſelves withall, rather than wee will acknowledge that we have done evill. Againe, how unprofitable ſpeech is to an angry man till the moode bee paſt. Anger ſo darkneth the minde, that reaſon can have no place. No, reaſon to a minde incenſed with anger, is like a Key to a locke that is jumbled, that is, it can doe no good. And as a Theefe chooſeth often the darkeſt night, and the Fiſher the water that is troubled: So Satan to worke many miſchiefes in, chooſeth a heart when it is troubled with anger. But let thus much ſuffice of this Chapter.

CHAP. XXXV.

The chiefe matters of this Chapter are theſe two.

The remove of Jacob away from Shechem.
The death of certaine of his deareſt friends.

Verſe 1. The care of the Lord for his.

COncerning his remove the Text ſaith, that then God ſaid to Iacob, that is to ſay then, even when his heart was troubled and full of feare, for the bloody fact of his ſons in Shechem. Where ſee the vigilant care of the Lord over his in all their diſtreſſes, doth he ever forſake them that faithfully and heartily cleave unto him? No, no, he is at hand and ready even before the trouble happen to be comfortable to us, becauſe this is eſſentiall in him, and not acceſſary.

Verſe 1. Gen.28.

2. Marke how he biddeth him goe to Bethel, and there build an Altar unto God, that appeared unto him when he fled from his Brother Eſau. Why? If you remember or looke the place, Iacob there promiſed, that if God would be with him in the journey and keepe him, and give him bread to eate, and cloathes to put on, ſo that he might come againe unto his Fathers houſe in ſafety, then ſhould the Lord be his God, and that ſtone which hee there ſet up, as a pillar, ſhould be Gods houſe, &c. And hath Iacob beene all this while in the Country, and not beene yet there to performe his vow, and to give the Lord thankes, who ſo graciouſly had granted his deſire? O great ſlowneſſe in ſo good a man, and very worthy blame exceedingly. See then and marke it well, how ſlack the beſt of us are to pay in proſperity, what we promiſe in adverſity, even with great zeale. We ſay in ſickneſſe if we may recover, we will doe this both to God and man, and in other perils, we promiſe much: but alas, where is all, when once wee are well and out of danger? Hath Iacob dulneſſe, and have we none? Thinke of it, and by his fault in this place that muſt be called upon, and ſpurred up by God himſelfe, let us amend what is amiſſe. Then marke againe in this remembrance made by God, the manner of it. Goe up to Bethel Iacob, ſaith he, and make there an Altar, &c. This is not, why haſt thou not done it, and becauſe thou haſt forgotten me, I will forſake thee, or any ſuch like ſharpe rebuke. Sweet againe is this, if we conſider it. For Iacob was now in ſorrow, his heart being wounded both for his daughter that was defiled, and for the cruelty of his ſonnes, with the perill alſo that his whole family was in. In which griefe of his, the God of mercy would not adde griefe unto griefe: but ſparing him kindly, admoniſheth him graciouſly with ſweet words, not ſo much as once quipping him for his fault, with but halfe a ſharpe word. A patterne ever to be followed of us, one towards another, that we bruiſe not the heart already broken, but too much, that we inſult not one over another for ſlips and wants, but kindly quicken up, when a hard ſpeech would cruſh too much. O ſweet God, how ſweet art thou to ſluggiſh ſinners when they doe fall, and ſhall wee not labour to be like them! &c.

Proſperity forgetteth what adverſity promiſed.

A ſweet example.

Good men oft have affections too much.

2. When Iacob had received this word of the Lord, hee willeth his houſhold to put away their ſtrange gods, plainely noting that there were ſuch amongſt them. And knew Iacob this, and reformed it not? Surely the beſt men then have their affections, and even good Iacob is not here without them. Rachel his wife is moſt deare unto him, and for her ſake either he ſeeth not, or he feeleth not with that heate, or both ſeeing and feeling he lingreth reformation over-long. She had ſtolne her fathers Idols as you heard before, and what others they had gotten in the ſpoile of the City it is uncertaine. Prone is our nature by naturall corruption to ſuch abuſe, and if Iacobs people ſo well inſtructed will yet be halting, O what are we ? This cleaveth to our bones, and the very marrow, to be ſuperſtitious and delighted with evill. The gods that be ſeen beſt like our humours, and what hands have made we repoſe truſt in, but fie of this folly if wee be alive, and not dead in heart to God and grace.

or

3. What then, did God abhorre the houſhold of Iacob, and refuſe it to be a Church ? No, howbeit that family was thus blemiſhed, and the Wife of his love that ſlept in his boſome thus all to ſpotted : yet ever were Iacobs ſacrifices acceptable unto God, and his family cared for as his Church. Note we thereby, not to love Idolatry, or to mingle the Wheate with the Chaffe, ne yet to extenuate Iacobs fault, nor to follow him our ſelves in not reforming. But note wee this, and note it againe, that particular blemiſhes in ſome of a Church not yet amended, deprive not the whole either of name or nature of a Church, neither make the good things therein done according to the word (as were Iacobs ſacrifices) of no effect : much leſſe doe they reach out danger of death and damnation to all that hold fellowſhip with that Church, either not knowing, or no way approving what is evill. I could urge the place harder if I would.

Note this well.

4. In bidding them cleanſe themſelves and change their Garments, let us note how outward ceremonies help inward duties, uſe them as helpes, and not make them our reſts, thinking all is done, when the outward thing is done, but know, that cleane Garments call for cleane hearts much more, and cleanſed bodies bid cleanſe our ſoules much rather : elſe are we like the Maſſing Prieſts that waſhed their fingers ſo ſolemnly, and neglected their conſciences altogether, or like the hypocriticall Phariſies, that ſcoured ſo carefully the outſide, and forgot ſo negligently the inſide.

The uſe of cleane clothes on holidayes.

5. Then they gave unto Iacob all the ſtrange gods which were in their hands, &c. where ſee a very notable example of prompt and ready obedience to the word. Bleſſed therefore he that bade them, and bleſſed they that ſo willingly hearken unto him. Such Iacobs to bid, and ſuch people to obey, would long and long continue theſe happy dayes of peace and freedome unto us, with a gracious Governour and Soveraigne over us, in whoſe dayes we may truly ſay, mercy and truth have met together, righteouſneſſe and peace have kiſſed each other. But why are they ſo zealous and ready now, having beene ſo dull hitherto ? Surely the danger they ſaw themſelves in, by that outrage committed, was a great meanes of it. And therefore well may we marke how profitable for us ſometimes are feares and dangers, troubles and perplexities in this world. Then are we awaked and quickned that before were heavy, and then wee both heare the word, and obey it with alacrity and readineſſe. Take then the croſſe away, and take our great good away, as we plainly ſee.

Verſe 4. Obedience to doctrine, &c.

Perplexities profitable.

But the Text ſaith, Iacob bid them under an Oke that was in Shechem : when as we reade that Moſes tooke the golden calfe that Aaron made, and burnt it in the fire, ground it to powder, and ſtrawed it upon the waters, and made the children of Iſrael drinke of it. A zeale indeed againſt Idolatry and ſuperſtition. For anſwer whereunto it may bee ſaid, that good men have their wants, and Iacob himſelfe in this was not ſo provident as he might have beene. Yet with comfort we ſee that even this meaſure of vertue and piety in Iacob was accepted of GOD, the want pardoned and caſt out of ſight. With comfort (I ſay) wee ſee it, being thereby juſtly incouraged to doe good, and to hate evill, ſeeing there is mercy with GOD in ſweet kindneſſe to accept what is well, and to turne his face from what is wanting. Away therefore with all diſcouraging thoughts, and very ſowre conceits, of no acceptance with GOD, where any blemiſh or imperfection is. For even in this example if wee had no more, it is proved falſe.

Exod. 32. 26.

6. When Iacob thus had reformed his houſe, hee tooke his journey from Shechem towards Bethel : and the Text ſaith, The feare of God was upon the Cities that were round about them, ſo that they did not follow after the ſonnes of Iacob. It is the Lord then that cooleth and quencheth the rage of men againſt his children, yea it is the Lord that is able to muzzell the mouthes of the Lions of this world, when they briſtle themſelves beſide his liking, to commit any violence or fury upon the godly. Let him ſay nay, and they cannot ſtirre : let him ſay yea, and they runne apace.

Verſe 5.

It is the Lord that ſtayeth intents againſt his.

The devils themſelves cannot touch the Swine till they have leave of him : and are porcorum ſeta numbred, ſaith the ancient Father, and his choſen children forgotten ? No, no, there is no power againſt the leaſt of them, except it bee given from above. Therefore care away, comfortably ſing wee and ſay wee, Si Deus nobiſcum, quis contra nos : If the Lord bee with us, who can bee againſt us. No doubt theſe inhabitants had burning hearts againſt Iacob and his family for the murder committed, but both hearts and hands are bridled by him, that brideleth the very devils, and ſuch a feare is ſtriken into them by the Lord, that Iacob goeth ſafely ſafely on his journey, and not one dare looke out of the doores after him, to attempt an evill againſt him. O ſweet God, O deare God, direct us aright to be thine truly, and we ſee here our ſafety! Thou wilt defend, and thou wilt protect, and mightier far than our ſelves are, thou wilt make to feare us for our good. Bleſſed, bleſſed be thy name for ever, and let our hearts till death be ſecure in thee, Amen, Amen.

Verſe 19. Worldly comforts ſubject to change.

7. The next thing I note, is the death of Rachel, the wife of Iacob, deare and deare, and twenty times deare againe unto his heart. Who can expreſſe the woe of this day, and the bitterneſſe of this loſſe to the man of God: Rachel is dead: and is ſhe dead? O death voide of mercy, or reſpect of perſons! She dyeth upon childe, an increaſe of griefe: ſhe calleth the childe the Sonne of her ſorow, a heavy word. But be comforted Iacob, and leave all to God, who giveth and taketh at his pleaſure. And learne we by thee whileſt the world endureth, to know worldly comforts whatſoever they be, to be ſubject to change. Love with unfainedneſſe what may be ſo loved, but love never too much for feare of a check.

Verſ. 22.

So love, that we think of loſſe if the Lord ſo will: yet ſo love, that wee wiſh no loſſe if the Lord ſo will. Let his liking moderate our affections ever, and ſo happily ſhall we enjoy the thing liked a great deale longer. But if thou exceed, wert thou as juſt as Iacob, God will ſchoole thee as he here did Iacob. Thy deareſt wife, thy deareſt childe, thy deareſt friend, ſhall feele then mortality, that the heart may bee taught, and wiſh for eternity, crying heavily, ſighing with mournfull voice: Vanity of vanity, and all is but vanity.

The uſe of bitter accidents to the patriarkes.

8. Grievous it is alſo that we reade in the 22. verſe, Ruben the ſon of Iacob to lye with Bilhah his fathers Concubine. But ſuch bitter accidents have in the wonderfull wiſdome of God befallen to theſe great men, that we poore ſouls might not be oppreſſed with grief, when the like befall us. Fathers and Mothers can doe no more than they can doe, that is, inſtruct, exhort, admoniſh, and teach their children and charge, and if that will not ſerve, but contrary to it they will wilfully and wickedly offend the Lord, lewdly and looſely behave themſelves, their burden is upon their owne backs, and the God that ever was holy and pure, will pay home, accepting the induſtry of the parents in good worth.

Moſes expreſſeth not how Iacob grieved, when he heard this, but only ſaith, it came to Iſraels eares, that it was done. Surely the reaſon was this, that we might thereby conceive that the grief was greater than could be expreſſed, to have his bed defiled by his owne Son. So reade wee, the Painter that portrayed the intended ſacrifice of Iphigenia, painted her father Agamemnons face covered, becauſe it was not poſſible to expreſſe well the countenance of a man ſo plunged in woe. Thinke we then earneſtly of Iacobs ſorrow, but know that wee cannot thinke how it was. And what croſſing griefes the Lord ſends us, let us ſtrive to patience by theſe examples. Yea let us grow by theſe examples to a Chriſtian ſtrength againſt worldly ſcandals and offences, not moved by them to waver up and downe as ſome doe, condemning truth, and judging perſons by faults and offences that doe happen. As if one ſhould ſay, See the religion of theſe men, can it be true, can it be good, when the profeſſors of it have ſuch ſpots? Simeon and Levi cruell bloodſhedders, Dinah wanton and wantonly defiled, and now Ruben an inceſtuous perſon defiling his owne fathers bed. How ſhould the religion of theſe men be good? Surely the Idolatrous ignorance, and ignorant Idolatry of the Gentiles, of the Cananites, Periſites, Jebuſites, or ſuch like, was the good religion, and not the way that Iacob ſerved God by. Were this to reaſon well, or rather for the falls and faults of men to condemne the truth of God, and to cenſure men by their imperfections not to be what they are in deed and truth, though thus defiled? Yet this is the common reaſoning of the world, and thus daily ſome ſtumble at mens offences. But let us be wiſe, and learne by this to take a ſurer courſe to judge both of men and of religion. Iacob and his family had the true religion, though thus ſinfull fleſh offended ſometimes. All were not evill in ſuch degrees, though ſome offended too much. Bewaile the falls we may of thoſe that profeſſe the truth, nay bewaile them we ought with a ſighing heart, but forſake truth for them, or condemne truth to bee no truth, wee may not, wee dare not, wee ought not. Let God be true, and all men lyars. Let truth be truth, and all men ſinfull, yea ſuch great Patriarkes as theſe were not ever free. Though his judgement ſhall bee great that giveth the offence, yet they ſhall not bee excuſed that ſo farre take the offence, as for it to forſake the way that is right. Then having thus profited, let us marke againe in this example of Ruben the ſafety of ſinners, notwithſtanding ſinne, that truely repent and forſake their ſinne. Ruben was not a caſtaway for ever from God having thus offended, but ſorrowing and ſighing (as no doubt he did) for this ugly tranſgreſſion, the blood of Chriſt Jeſus beleeved of him then in time to be ſhed, as we beleeve now that it hath beene ſhed, waſhed him cleane, and procured pardon with God, that all ſorrowfull ſinners might have faith, and not dolefully die in deſpairing woe, if haply they fall at any time through ſtrength of fleſh, of world, or devill. Thus therefore againe let us profit by him, and deny to none that hath fallen, comfort; if ſight cauſe ſorrow from an heart not faining.

Strength againſt offences.

9. The death of Iſaac, the father of Iacob, is another thing mentioned in this Chapter, who who enjoyed the presence of his sonne Iacob, to his great comfort before his death. And Iacob to all his griefes had this also added, the death of his father. So that if you thinke of the course of Iacobs life but even hitherto, surely his griefes were many, and his crosses great, such as we do not endure with that patience that both we ought, and he did; neither yet with that comfort, as by this example, and others of Gods deare ones, we are justly incouraged unto. God gives friends, and God takes friends, fathers and mothers, sisters and brothers, or whatsoever, and he spares not any when he will, though he love them dearely. Abraham loseth Terah his father, and Sarah his wife: Isaac loseth Abraham, and Iacob now Isaac, beside other friends, whom each of them lost in their times. This is our estate, we hold these things during pleasure, and are Tenants at will, not otherwise. That the Text saith, Isaac dyed full of dayes, it may well teach us that there ought to be a contentment in us even with yeares, which indeed is not in too many. But we covet to live, and still to live, and ever to live if it were possible. This world so pleaseth us, as if we dreamed of no other, these earthly pleasures seem the joyes we wish; and death, death, O how bitter is the remembrance of thee, even in very old age! Surely old Isaac was not thus, and I trust we will note it to our good. And thus much now of this Chapter.

Great faith exercised with great crosses.

CHAP. XXXVI.

THe principall matter of this Chapter, is the progeny and off-spring of Esau, in the observation whereof divers good things may bee noted, respected no doubt of the Spirit of God, when hee caused it to be written. As first it sheweth the truth of Gods promise made concerning Esau, Chapter 25. verse 23. and elsewhere, and yeeldeth us this sweet comfort, that if the Lord bee so sure to them that are not of his houshold and family, but hated as Esau was, how assured may wee bee, that hee will never faile us in any thing promised, except hee faile to bee GOD.

The truth of Gods promise ever.

2 When it is said, that Esau removed his dwelling, and gave Iacob roome, were it of favour, or were it for other profitable respects in the world to him, we will note the over-ruling power and providence of the Almighty for his ever. Had they lived together, being both so great, as the 7. verse noteth, in all likelihood quarrels would have growne, and perilous contentions. Esau was mighty, fierce and irreligious, and what conscience such men make to wrong and wring a good man, the world yet sheweth too much. All this God preventeth in mercy to his Iacob, and maketh Esau give place. Cast we our care then upon God, and labour to be his, woe shall ever bee cared for.

Verse 6.

God his sweet care for his.

3 Their riches were so great, that they could not dwell together, (saith the Text) that they could not dwell together, and the land wherin they were strangers could not receive their flockes. Let never then filthy feare to want in this world; what may be good for us, wound our soules with distrust in God. The beasts of the field, the fowles of the ayre, and the fishes of the Sea, bee all his, yea the whole earth, and all that is therein is his, as the Psalme saith. If to Iacob and Esau he be able to give such wealth, when went his powerfull might from him, that he cannot doe it againe to you, to me, to whom soever his good pleasure is and shall be. If in a strange Countrey their flockes be so many, let my soule never despaire for place, but dwell where the Lord appointeth, and with beleeving heart remember such examples as this. Yea let it goe to bed with you, let it rise with you, write it upon your hands, and print it in the very veines of your heart, what the Psalmist saith: The Lord God is the sunne, and shield unto us, the Lord will give grace and glory, and no good thing will hee withold from them that walke uprightly. Hee that honour me, him will I honour, saith the Lord, and he will not breake a promise to very Esau, of any good or comfort, as you see in this whole Chapter. Be not we faithlesse then, but faithfull.

Verse 7.

Gods powerfull providence for his in all places.

Psal. 84. 11.

1 Sam. 2. 30.

4 A sweet comfort againe I see here in this, that if a man and woman feare the Lord themselves, if religion be setled in the furrowes of their hearts, as it was in Isaac and Rebekah, surely even unto their wicked children, if they have any, yet for the parents sake, God granteth often worldly favours, as here to Esau: who would not then with a faithfull heart love such a God? Hee loved Iacob and hated Esau, yet Esau being the sonne of a good father, and of a vertuous and religious mother, the fountaine of mercy, and God of all goodnesse to his true servants, even the GOD of Heaven, will shew mercy to this Esau, thus farre, as in the world to make him a great one, and to give him riches. Againe, I see worldly state, no good cause why men should forget themselves, and waxe proud: but ever looke at the inward heart what piety is there, lest painted port, and glistering glory of this fading world be united in my person with the hatred of God concerning future state, as it was in Esau. I have hated Esau, saith the Lord, and yet his pompe thus great: were this thought of, peradventure our hearts would change, and with lesse regard of earthly shew, make earnest search for the favour of God, how indeed wee may bee assured of it towards us ever.

God is often mercifull even to the evill children of good parents.

Worldly glory, no sure witnes of Gods love.

5 God

The godly ſtill under faith and hope. Dukes be his ſonnes,&c. Verſe 15.&c. Read the chap.

5 God promiſed Iacob that Kings ſhould come out of him, but behold as yet all the glory in Eſau. How then, hath God forgotten, or will hee faile in faithfulneſſe towards his ſervant? No, no: you know what glorious Princes came of Iacob in time, and the Prince of Princes that ſitteth upon his Throne for ever, Chriſt Jeſus. But as yet Iacobs ſhew is leſſe, and Eſau his ruffe hath the eyes of men. Thereby we learning, that Gods uſuall manner is to keepe his children under faith and hope in this world ever. What pleaſeth him hee performeth in Iacobs life, and the reſt his faith is exerciſed with in hope aſſured of it in time, ſo with another and another after him, and ſtill there is uſe of faith and hope in this world with the godly. Bee content then with what God granteth, and beleeve the reſt if it be promiſed.

6 The invention of Mules ſpecified in this Chapter, ſheweth the buſie curioſity of ſome mens natures given to newes, and ſtrange inventions, not contented with ſimplicity and plainneſſe, nay diſcontented with the courſe of Gods nature many times. If wee praiſe this invention, take heed wee touch not Gods former diſtinction of their kindes and ſexes, which hee had created. Therefore rather blame I, than praiſe ſuch needleſſe newes as this was.

Mans buſie braine.

7 You ſee in this Chapter, as I ſaid before, all the glory in Eſau, and Iacob hath little, but hereafter theſe Edomites fall, and the Iſraelites riſe. Therefore thus let us profit by it, as never with the luſty bloods of this ſinfull world, to deſpiſe the ſlow going forward of the children of God, or the cauſe that they maintaine. Sat ſitò ſi ſat bene. Soone enough, if well enough, that is, faſt enough, if with Gods favor, and better a ſtable eſtate that is in longer time attained, than a fickle fading eſtate got in haſte. Not unlike the graſſe on the wall top, that is ſoone up, but as ſoone withered and gone againe.

Laſtly, for Genealogies in this Chapter laid downe, I referre them to each mans diligence that liſt to ſearch them, wiſhing the Apoſtles counſell followed in this matter ever, 1 Tim. 1. verſe 4. and Tit. 3. 9. For our Pedigrees in theſe dayes, as they have an uſe modeſtly and moderately looked into, ſo ſhew they mens vanities otherwiſe uſed, who yet would not like to bee called vaine. Maximilian the Emperor forgot himſelfe in it, as I ſhewed before, and of his very Cook he was reproved. Let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdome, nor the ſtrong man in his ſtrength, (much leſſe in joyned pedigrees) but hee that gloryeth, let him glory in the Lord, and that his name is written in the booke of life, and he reckoned in the rowle of the righteous. He that is over-buſie in laying downe his Anceſtors, whileſt hee ſeeketh to be eſteemed, as deſcended of them, is often juſtly deſpiſed as degenerated from them, and not in any meaſure ſeeking to expreſſe the vertues in them. But let thus much ſerve both of this matter, and of the Chapter.

CHAP. XXXVII.

The heads of this Chapter are chiefly three.

The hatred of the brethren towards Ioſeph.
Their treachery againſt him.
The lamentation of Iacob his Father for him.

THe cauſes of their hatred are ſpecified in the Chapter to be theſe: His complaining of them to his father, verſe 2. His fathers great love to him above them, verſe 3. And the dreames which he had, ſeeming to note a ſuperiority over them like to enſue in him, verſe 5. &c. The greatneſſe of their malice is alſo mentioned when it is ſaid, they hated him and could not ſpeake peaceably unto him, verſe 4. For particulars, to begin with the firſt cauſe of their malice towards him, becauſe he brought their evill, as the Text ſaith, to his Father, it may well teach us, that although brethren in nature and duty ſhould moſt kindly love one another, yet not ſo far, as they that boulſter up one another in ſinne and evill. For true brotherly love admitteth an orderly complaint of evill, yea and even requireth it. Not onely they that doe ſuch things, ſaith the Apoſtle, but they that favour them, &c. Noting it a moſt grievous fault to winke at ſinne and wickedneſſe, and to beare with it. Veritas odium parit, fratrum quoque gratia rara eſt. Truth gets hatred, and even brethren to love together (if truth be told) is a hard thing. The ſecond cauſe of the brethrens malice was their fathers love to Ioſeph above them all, and an unjuſt cauſe againe. For it is lawfull for a parent to love one childe more than another, as for a man to love one man more than another. Our Saviour Chriſt loved Iohn more than the reſt, yet might not the reſt therefore have hated him. Nevertheleſſe Ambroſe his counſell is good in this matter, to wit, that parents ſhould beware, Ne quos natura conjunxit, paterna gratia dividat, leſt whom nature hath joyned, they by their partiall love doe ſeparate and disjoyne. There is a cauſe laid downe why Iacob loved him more than the reſt, becauſe hee begot him in his

Rom. 1. 31. Winking at evill.

Note it.

his age, old men either not looking for any moe in ſuch yeares, or receiving ſuch as they have beſides expectation, both which are cauſes of entire love towards ſuch as in old age are borne to them: ſo was Iacob towards Ioſeph. An effect alſo of this love in Iacob is laid downe, that he made his ſonne a party coloured coate. A thing likewiſe lawfull, that parents may attire one childe better than another, yet ſtill wiſdome and diſcretion muſt moderate affection, for feare of ſuch heart-burning amongſt children, as here we ſee.

Children begotten in age, loved for two cauſes.

2. Yet this childe ſo beloved, went to the field and kept cattell as his brethren did ſometimes, not finding his fathers affection unto idleneſſe in him, which is a thing that may greatly profit us in theſe dayes: wherein if in any thing we will make a difference betwixt our children, ſurely it is in labour and travell, and matter of fruitfull induſtry for the time to come. Some ſhall be put to all hardneſſe, yea to all drudgery, and others whom we favour more, not ſuffred to do even good things, whereby hereafter they might be bettered a great deale: not to learn leſt they catch cold: not to ſtudy, leſt their wits be dulled: not to doe any thing, leſt we want them to make wantons of. So did not Iacob though he loved Ioſeph, but to the field hee went as well as the reſt, and did what he could in that courſe. Iacob ruled his love to his childes profit, and ſo ſhould we: Iacob wanted his company for his good, and ſo ſhould we: Iacob hated idleneſſe in his children, and ſo doe not we.

Parents love ſhould not be to childrens loſſe.

3. The third cauſe of the brethrens wrath, were the dreames that Ioſeph had: The firſt of Sheaves: the ſecond of the Sunne, and Moone, and Stars, doing reverence to him. Of dreames hereafter ſomething ſhall be ſaid: Now concerning his firſt dreame, Ioſephus ſaith they were ſheaves without corne, and therefore the dreame ſhewed, that not only he ſhould come to honor, but that honor ſhould be by forrein meanes, not by helpe of any goods or poſſeſſions of his fathers. Surely, howſoever the ſheaves did pretend that, ſo it was, and therefore comfortably teacheth us, that God is able without parents help (if it pleaſe him) to preferre their children even to the greateſt places: no cauſe to make parents careleſſe, but a very juſt cauſe to make them not over-carefull: And a ſweet comfort to all that either have no parents of ability to enrich them, or if they have, yet unjuſtly are throwne off, and by ſiniſter practiſes deprived of their portion, which in nature and equity is to be given them of their parents. God is in heaven as mighty as ever he was, and as good as ever he was. Let him be my Father and Mother, and remember Ioſeph, &c.

God, without parents helpe, exalteth often their children.

4. What ſay the brethren, Shalt thou raigne over us, and rule us? or ſhalt thou have altogether dominion over us? And they hated him ſo much the more. And why ſo, was he not their brother? Is it ſo tickle to have a brother rule over his brethren? yea ſurely. So cankred is the nature of many men, that they can better endure to be ſubject to a Turk, than to their own fleſh and blood; and as our Saviour ſaid, No Prophet is eſteemed in his own Country; ſo may it truely bee ſaid many times, A kinſmans government over his kinſmen is envyed and ſpited: But it is no vertue, let them uſe it that liſt. They bewray more corruption than all the water in the river will waſh off, and of wiſe men they are eſteemed accordingly. Not much unlike to theſe brethren of Ioſeph be they, that had rather any man ſhould have a peny-worth in what they part withall, than their friend, yea a friend may not have it for any thing, when a meere ſtranger ſhall have it almoſt for nothing. The nature is naught, if there be not very juſt cauſe of ſuch refuſall, and as dogged as here were Iacobs ſons.

We rather obey ſtrangers than our brethren.

5. How readly they interpreted his dreames, yea and how rightly? yet they abhorred to yeeld to them. So doe many with the word of God, they perceive what he meaneth, God I ſay in his word, and what he requireth, yet no yeelding, no ſubmiſſion, no contentment, but grudge and grieve as much to be ſubject thereunto, and to ſubmit their necks to the ſcepter, therefore, as Ioſephs brethren did here to their brother, albeit, they gueſſed, and that truly, what was intended. A fearefull ſtubbornneſſe, and a ſtiffeneſſe, ſtarting aſide with aſſured danger, if it be not reformed. Not to ſee the Lords will is a plague, but to ſee it, and to refuſe to obey it, is death and damnation juſt for evermore, withou repentance.

Knowledge not obeyed.

6. As the fathers favour here towards his ſonne Ioſeph, was the cauſe why the reſt hated him, ſo is the gracious favour that God Almighty ſheweth to his children often, the cauſe of hatred in others towards them. If God be extraordinary to Moſes, even Aaron his brother, and Miriam his ſiſter will be offended: if David be loved, Saul will envy him, and ſeeke his deſtruction: So in moe, and ſo in too many, if men were not wicked. The Lord may not doe with his own as he will, but our eye is ſtraight evill, if hee be good. This is not well in them; but to us let it be no diſcomfort: for their envy, malice, and hatred ſhall hurt us as theſe mens did Ioſeph, that is, God ſhall turne all to his owne glory, and our further way unto ſuch good, as in his good pleaſure is determined for us. Beleeve this example of Ioſeph, exalted notwithſtanding all their ſpite.

Gods favour to his children, cauſe alſo why they are hated in the world of ſome.

The

The second part of this Chapter.

Verse 18.

HAving heard before the hatred growne in the brethren against Ioseph, in this second part of the Chapter we may see their execution and practise of the same against him, when they had opportunity. The opportunity was this: Their father sendeth Ioseph into the fields to them where they kept their cattell, to see how they did: whom when they saw in this sort come into their hands, straight they conspired against him. Now that the father would send him, and that Ioseph would go, having had such notice of their disliking of his Dreames, it plainly sheweth the simplicity of the godly, and such as have honest mindes, that they are far, and often but too far from suspecting and forecasting such perils as indeed are towards them, and such evill nature in others, as in time sheweth it selfe and bursteth out. It is an old saying, and even here we see it true, Vt quisq; est vir bonus, &c. A man that meaneth truly and honestly himselfe, thinketh all others to meane so likewise. But it was so: Though old Iacob meane no hurt, neither yet Ioseph, the other brethren doe, and conspire his death, when in love sent, in love hee commeth to see how they did. Though simple then it is good to be, yet over-simple beware to be; Inter spinas calceatus; Amongst thornes have on thy shooes, saith another proverbe, and it is worthy practise.

Verse 16, 17. Many seek one thing, and find another.

2. Out goeth Ioseph, and thinketh no harme, then as I said, and he seeketh his brethren from place to place, but he findeth bloody enemies, rather than brethren, at the last. So fareth it daily with many a man: We seek life, but we finde death at the Physitians hands: We seek justice, we finde oppression: We seek truth, we finde falsehood: and in a word, as Ioseph here, we seeke for brethren, but finde far otherwise in the end: So doth secret sinne cover it selfe even in the Church militant to this day. But who so reputed a brother, becommeth a foe, let him thinke what credit Iosephs brethren had with God or man for such hypocrisie: and who so is halted withall, and deceived, as Ioseph was, meaning no worse than Ioseph did, let him turne his face from man, and clap hold of God, saying with the Prophet, It is good for mee to hold mee fast by God, to put my trust in him: and what protection and safegard poore Ioseph found, when hee was here alone in the middest of his, no brethren, but bloody foes: that comfortably hope at the same Gods hand, who is one to day, then, and for ever, to all that truly cleave to him.

Gods writings and mans writings. 18.

3. But why saith Moses so broadly that they conspired to slay him. This was much to bee laid in writing against such men. No not a jot: For it being so indeed, the holy Spirit of God hath taught us notably by it, what difference is betwixt man and God: Man in his writings flattereth and smootheth, and dissembleth faults, yea often for vice putteth in vertue, and where indeed a dispraise was due, yet there extolleth to the skie. But Gods holy Spirit in his writings doth not so: He speaketh plainly and ever truly of all degrees whatsoever. Againe, it sheweth that Moses was not directed by flesh and blood; for if he had, he would have covered the blemishes, especially these great blemishes of his Ancestors. Thirdly, it is a rule to direct them to doe it, and it is a warrant to them, if they doe it, that write stories, and commit to writing facts of present or former times. Truth was ever without shame, what blame soever it getteth unworthily. But filthy flattery maketh them live with shame, that use it, during life, and shamefully spoken of even after death.

Scoffers and mockers.

4. Behold (said they) this Dreamer, or master of dreames commeth. A scoffe, and a lewd scoffe, the dreames of Ioseph, being of God, to a speciall revelation of his great mercy in time intended to that house. But we may well see in it the fashions of the wicked, and the lot of the godly in this world often. How differ these speeches? Behold the Dreamer; and Behold the holy man, the holy woman, the hot Gospeller, &c. Surely both are scoffes alike from a prophane heart, which God will visit with a whipping rod in his good time. Thus scoffed the Captaines and their fifties, when they called the Prophet in mockery, Man of God, but with fire from heaven the Lord consumed such mockers: If the like fire from heaven consume not our mockers, let them yet bee sure that fire in hell shall never faile them.

2 King. 1. 11.

Verse 20. Hatred brings forth murther.

5. Come therefore (say they) and let us slay him, and cast him into some pit, &c. See what it is to harbour in our bosomes a dislike and hatred of a man, in time it leadeth us even to bloody murther of the party so disliked, or at the least to a willingnesse to doe it, if we bee by meanes kept from the act. For if a brother breathe death against his brother, because he hateth him: surely men in further degrees from us, will never stand in our hands. Then stop betimes, if wee feare God, and abandon hatred out of our hearts: Let it never lie boyling within us, and gather strength. Such Patriarches overcome by hatred against their brother, may teach us whilest wee live what hatred is.

Strivers against Gods appointment.

6. Then shall we see what will become of his dreames. As if they should say, so shall we prove his dreams false. O blinded men! the determined counsell of God they will overthrow, and by their power and practise, they will prevent what he will have come to passe. So thought the blinde Pharisies, Priests, and Elders, if they could compasse once the death of our Saviour, all should bee well, well, they ſhould ſtill deceive the world, the Scriptures ſhould bee falſe, and whatſoever by Chriſt was effected, ſhould be prevented. But was it ſo? or rather did not all their malice work to the effecting of Gods purpoſe? Herod by policie, or open cruelty, will kill the Babe Jeſus, and then all ſhall be well, yea even to this day fooles will contend againſt God, and prove him untrue. But away betimes with ſuch dreadfull impiety. God will bee true, and his purpoſes ſhall bee performed, when all earthly creatures ſhall bee confounded that ſtand againſt him: Ioſephs dreames ſhall come to paſſe in deſpite of all ſcorners, or unnaturall practiſers to the contrary. So let us thinke, ſo let us know, ſo let us live till life take her leave, and all be effected. Our faith, our cauſe, our profeſſion, and religion ſhall ſtand, being the Lords, though thouſands of our bodies be deſtroyed by raging cruelty, and all is not ſure on our adverſaries ſide, as they ſuppoſe, when once they have prevailed againſt ſome of us. Bleſſed be God.

7 But when Ruben heard that, he delivered him out of their hands, &c. What Ruben was this? Surely evē he that lay with Bilhah his fathers Concubine, as we heard in the 35. Chapter. Learne then, ſaith Calvin upon the place, Non eſſe à peccato uno quantumvis atroci, æſtimandos homines ut nobis deſperata ſit eorum ſalus; Not to judge men peremptorily upon one ſinne, though a very great one, and their eſtate to us ſeeme very deſperate. For here we ſee more vertue, more piety and feare of God, though before he had ſo grievouſly fallen, than in all the reſt. See againe how God will ever have one Ruben or another, that is, one meanes or another to deliver his out of perils and dangers, as ever ſhall ſtand with his bleſſed pleaſure. Let wicked men deviſe and determine what they will, the Lord hath a hand over all their purpoſes, and they ſhall not prevaile, but as he will. Killed to bee, God will not have his ſervant, and they cannot effect it, but ſold into Ægypt hee will have him, and therein they prevaile. So it is his will, not theirs; his counſell, not theirs, that indeed ruleth. The device that Ruben had to ſave his life, may ever bee a warrant to us, to uſe good meanes, and lawfull policies, to the good of our brethren the children of God, either in delivering them from bloody rages of cruell adverſaries, or otherwiſe. This was pia fallacia, ſaith a learned man, a holy deceit, to a good purpoſe, and we may obſerve it.

Verſ. 21. Never give ſentence upon any for one fault.

8 They ſtrippe him, &c. Greatly they ſpited his particoloured coate, as wee ſaw before, and what moſt men are ſpited to have, they are firſt robbed of, if their envying foes prevaile over them. What they ſaid to Ioſeph when they thus ſtripped him, or what hee to them when they thus uſed him, is not laid downe. But well wee may thinke this was doleſull entertainment to his harmleſſe heart, that came in ſuch ſort both readily and kindly, to ſee how they did, and to beare to his father what they wanted. Yea queſtionleſſe with weeping eyes, and a kinde heart, hee cryed for pitie, calling them brethren, a name of love, mercy and nature, remembring them of God, of nature, of their aged father at home, who had ſent him to them, and of whatſoever might move compaſſion, but it would not ſerve. O Lambe amongſt Wolves, if ever were any! O Iacob at home, thou ſeeſt not this! Little dreameſt thou thy darling is in this perplexity amongſt his brethren: To thee hee ſhall come no more, but his coate for him. Thy ſorrow is neare, and even at the doore, by ſuch cruell children. No God, no Brother, no Father, no Friend is regarded of them. Stony-hearts, and Iron bowels, are now where Nature ſhould have dwelt. See wee then man, if the Lord touch not; and prepare to endure what God ſhall ſend. Pitie or none, favour or none, feeling or none, his will be done.

What we are grudged to have, wee are ſooneſt robbed of.

See chap. 42. verſe 21. the anguiſh of his ſoule.

9 Then they ſate them downe to eate bread (ſaith the text.) Alas they ſhould rather have ſate downe to weepe for their moſt wicked behaviour towards their innocent brother, than to eate and drinke, but they felt not the as ſinne yet; and thus are mens conſciences too often lulled a ſleepe through Satans ſubtilty; an eſtate moſt dangerous, and abhorred of God. Such a lethargie was in David, in Ezechias and others, to their great hurt. Wherefore bleſſed is the man that eſteemed of Salomon that feareth alway, that is, that hath a feeling ſtill of ſinne, to avoid it, and hate it, to ſigh and ſorrow for it, as becommeth a man or woman that feareth God. But whileſt thus they were eating, behold a meanes to deliver Ioſeph out of the pit, and to ſame his life. They lift up their eyes and ſaw Merchants comming, ſtraight they concluded by the motion of one to ſell Ioſeph to them, and ſo to be rid of him. So fit can God make meanes fall out to ſerve his providence evermore. So came Rebekah, ſo came Rachel fit in their times: ſo can a thouſand knowne experiences full well declare if they bee remembred. God hath his times, and his opportunities of times, to fit aſſuredly, and let it be our comfort. Ioſeph then is ſold, and away hee goeth: but God had a purpoſe unknowne to Ioſeph, to his great comfort: had he knowne it, his ſorrow, nothing would have beene ſo great. Let it comfort us when adverſe things happen, little know we what may enſue.

The finall ſecurity of a dead conſcience.

10 Finally, the ſorrow of Iacob, ſo great and ſo grievous, ſo long and ſo laſting, refuſing to be comforted whoſoever came to him: moſt plainly and effectually expreſſeth a fathers heart towards a childe beloved. Iacob had endured many great afflictions in his time, yet never ranne out as he did in this. Here hee is even overcome with griefe, and his paſſions vehement ſhew themſelves in a dolefull meaſure. Thus neare lie children to their parents hearts: Touch our goods, or touch our owne bodies, we endure it often with great patience, but touch our children and and we are gone: Iob can witneſſe it, if our daily knowledge wanted proofe. The comming of friends to comfort him in his woe, full well commendeth unto us a kindneſſe and duty that is moſt commendable. But that his ſons would ſuffer him thus to ſorrow for their brother that lived, O barbarous hardneſſe! Their confeſſion of the truth, though it might very juſtly have wrought them blame, yet moſt ſweetly it would have refreſhed the mourning heart of their aged father. But ſee our nature how it abhorreth truth, if it may ought hurt us, and how obſtinate nature ſtandeth in a ſinne to face it out, and keepe it cloſe. Such is our mould, and ſuch is our great corruption. They comfort their father, and yet cauſe his woe, much like our Uſurers that ſpeake ſo kinde, and cut ſo deep into a mans eſtate till he be undone. O miſerable comforters! and ſo I end.

Chap. XXXVIII.

The generall heads are theſe chiefly.

The mariage of Judah: to the twelfth verſe.
The Inceſt: to the foure and twentieth verſe.
The manifeſtation of the ſame: from thence to the end.

God plagueth ungodly mariages.

TOuching particulars, it is to be obſerved, firſt, how Iudah tooke to wife the daughter of a Canaanite, which affinity by God was utterly condemned: And the children that hee had by ſuch mariage proſpered not. Even therefore, as it ſhould ſeeme, the mariage of the father being mentioned, that we might know how juſt cauſe there was, why God ſhould detract his mercy and grace from the iſſue. Let men then look upon this example, and call to remembrance with it their owne experiences. Hath not God ever hated ungodly matches? Hath not God ſundry wayes plagued them even in our dayes? by deniall of iſſue either to ſuch as ſo marry, or to the next children of ſuch mariage; or by withdrawing his grace from them, that they become wicked and vicious as theſe were here, Er and Onan; or by ſome meanes or other beſt pleaſing his juſtice, that ſtriketh in time the unreformed perſon, though he ſpare long. Let never then either luſting fleſh, or covetous heart, or any reſpect under heaven, draw us to the match that is not in the Lord. If ſhe be a Canaanite, or the favourer of Cananites unlawfully, let her never be ours. And ſo on the womans part.

Verſe 6. Conſent of parents.

2. It is ſaid, Iudah tooke a wife to Er, his firſt borne ſon: and why ſhould this be mentioned in this ſort, but of purpoſe to ſhew the regard that was had of parents in thoſe dayes, touching the mariages of their children. A thing that I have often noted before, and can never note too often, ſo bold is youth in theſe dayes to take themſelves, and not to let parents take for them.

Verſ. 7. The end of the wicked to be ſlaine.

3. But Er, this firſt borne of Iudah, was a wicked man, &c. therefore the Lord ſlew him. Wicked, I ſay, becauſe it pleaſed not the Lord to give his bleſſing to the fruit of a wicked match, and ſlaine of the Lord in juſtice for his wickedneſſe, that all like diſpoſed perſons might ſee in experience what firſt or laſt ſhall befall them for ſuch behaviour.

Verſe 8. An envious minde hated of the Lord.

4. Then the father willed his ſecond ſon Onan to take his brothers wife, and to raiſe up ſeede to his brother. A thing that after was made a law, as we reade Deut. 25. 5. But what did the wicked man (for even the ſame alſo was a wicked man, that an unlawfull mariage of the father might fully be puniſhed) I ſay what did he? Curſedly and ſinfully he ſpilled his ſeed upon the ground. Wherefore the Lord alſo ſlew him. Behold in this man the malicious, ſpitefull and envious nature of many a man and woman in the world, who rather make choiſe to hurt themſelves, than to pleaſure another. They cry as the woman did to Solomon, Neither to me nor to her, but divide it. But let theſe natures beware, leſt God deale with them as he did here with Onan, whom in his fierce wrath he ſlew for ſuch envying. And concerning the fact of Onan, thinke no better of it, than you doe that a woman ſhould deſtroy her fruitfulneſſe, for this in man is even that ſinne: an ugly, foule, and filthy wickedneſſe. Many men are not of Onans minde, who are too ſoone entreated to raiſe up ſeede to other men: yet I know the difference, but thus much by the way.

Verſe 11. We blame readily the unworthy of blame.

5. Iudah had yet a third ſonne, but he was yong, and ſeeing both his other ſonnes thus dead, he was afraid to give him to Thamar his daughter in law, leſt he ſhould alſo die as his brethren did. Wholly imputing the cauſe of his ſonnes death, not to their owne ſinfull wickedneſſe, as indeed hee ſhould, but to his daughter in law, nothing guilty of the ſame. Therein teaching us two things: Firſt, how ready it is with partiall man to blame others not blame-worthy, rather than to lay the fault where indeed it ought. Secondly, that when any croſſe befalleth our family, we ſhould ever enter into conſideration of ſinne, and ſearch carefully what hath beene committed to provoke the Lord in ſuch ſort againſt us. The former hee teacheth us here by his doing, the latter by his not doing. Iudah, I meane the father of theſe children. The father father in mariage with a Canaanite, and the children otherwiſe grievouſly ſinned, and yet poſt it over to the poore woman, as though ſhe were cauſe of all. David ſaid well, and hath left us a good preſident when he cryed in unfainedneſſe, It is I Lord, it is I that have ſinned, and done evill, theſe ſilly ſheep have done nothing: let thy rod be againſt me, &c. to the like effect. Thus did not Iudah here. 2 Sam. 24.

Seeke ſinne in our ſelves.

6. Then ſhe put off her widowes apparell (ſaith the Text.) Thereby inſtructing us that even in thoſe dayes widowes did uſe ſome grave, ſad and ſober apparell, whereby they were knowne to be widowes, and to carry in minde the loſſe and lack of their husbands. What it was wee know not certainly, neither if we did, is it neceſſary that all countries and perſons in ſuch outward and indifferent things ſhould be alike. Let it thus farre profit us, that wee may uſe ſome grave forme according to the manner of the place where we live, and wee ought not to judge thoſe that doe it. Verſe 14. A kinde of mourning apparell.

7. She covered her ſelfe with a vaile, a thing that in my opinion maketh nothing againſt the uſe of women in ſome places after child-birth: for honeſtly it may of an honeſt woman be uſed, that immodeſtly of naughty ones is abuſed: And ſo in men. Much more might the vaile that Rebekah caſt over her, be uſed to approve that faſhion, then this any way be urged to improve it. But moſt plainly this fact of Thamar teacheth, that wicked women in thoſe dayes were not altogether ſo paſt ſhame, either had the devill taken ſuch full poſſeſſion of them, as now in ours he hath of ſuch like. For then they ſinned with covered faces, as having ſome ſhame; but now with open faces, as paſt all ſhame. Then ſuch behaviour ſhewed ſome feeling of it, that it was not well, but now bold and bare faces, nothing bluſhing to commit ſuch ſin, ſhew plainly to all men, we have no more feeling than we have vailes, no more conſcience than we have ſhame, and that is juſt of neither any jot at all. O fearefull boldneſſe in ſo bad a cauſe! whither will it carry us if we take not heed? Womens vailes.

8. The reaſon is alledged, why Thamar thus wickedly proſtituted her ſelfe to her father in law: to wit, becauſe ſhe ſaw that Shelah the third ſonne of Iudah was growne up, and yet ſhe not given to him to wife, according to promiſe. Alas! and ſhall another mans fault make me offend? If Iudah breake promiſe, will Thamar forgoe piety? Surely this is even the poyſon of diſcontent: It boyleth, it breweth with man and woman ſore, and never ceaſeth urging to ſome revenge: Yea here it prevaileth with her even to ſhame her ſelfe, and to ſinne damnably, rather then not to be revenged upon her father in law. Diſcontent made Iudas to betray his Maſter: Diſcontent made Haman ſet up the gallowes that by Gods juſtice ſerved himſelf: Diſcontent made Demas forſake Paul, and imbrace the world. And what deadly ſinne hath not Diſcontent made ſeeme as reaſonable, equall and juſt? O treaſons and treacheries againſt Chriſtian Kings and Governours! O butcherly bloodineſſe and bloody maſſacres that Diſcontent hath greedily drawne upon men, otherwiſe qualified with many gifts! Beware we then ever of Diſcontent, and ſnub it betimes leſt it overthrow us, as it hath done many, and here did Thamar. And if we have any cauſe of juſt offence, let it never draw us to unjuſt revenge. If Iudah breake promiſe with us, let not us offend, God ſeeth our wrong, and God will puniſh our wrong, if we commit it to him in godly patience. But if to puniſh ſinne, we alſo will ſinne, as we loſe the benefit of Gods regard of the wrong done us: ſo ſhall we ſurely taſte of his rod our ſelves for ſo offending. The poyſon of Diſcontent. Verſe 14.

9. The Text ſaith againe that he knew her not. Yet he talked with her, and ſhee with him largely; how then might it be that he knew her not, ſhe having beene the wife of his ſons, and long in his company? Verily God, angry with his lewde diſpoſition, had blinded him ſo that he knew her not. And ſhall it not ſhew us the wrath of the Lord againſt filthy conceits. If thou loveſt ſin, and wilt ſtaine thy conſcience to drinke of that cup, take heed leſt in judgement the Lord take knowledge and feeling from thee, that thou no more diſcerneſt ſin to be ſin, as it is, then Iudah knew Thamar to be his daughter in law, as ſhe was. Verſe 16. Sinners blinded in Gods juſtice.

10. The match being made for her ſinfull hire, and the ſin committed by her ſinfull father, the Text ſaith, He ſent her his promiſe by his neighbour the Adullamite: Such Cole-cariers the world is too full of, and I would their occupation were writ in their foreheads, then would there be leſſe wickedneſſe wrought than is by much. The vertue of man or woman hath no ſuch enemy under heaven, as theſe cariers be: They bring and they ſpeake, yea they ſweare, and foully forſweare to worke a ſhame. What ſender cannot, theſe cariers can have time and place to diſcourſe at full: They lie, they cogge, they face and flatter, till harmeleſſe heart receive their venome. O brokers of Satan for ſin and wickedneſſe! what will be your end? If the ſinner ſinning by your procurement, be damned and die, what meaſure of confuſion is due to you that have brought it about? Spit we then ever with defiance upon ſuch Adullamites as this was. Verſe 20. Cole-cariers betwixt offenders. Such neighbours as this be good to ſcoure an hot oven withall. True friendſhip is uſq; ad aras, and no further.

11. When this carier came, Thamar was gone, and finding her not, hee returned his cariage unto Iudah, and told him of it: To whom Iudah anſwerd, Let her take it to her (to wit, his pledge) leſt we bee ſhamed. So ſhewing plainly what we finde too true, more in our eyes to be the ſhame of the world, than the feare of God. But it is a wrong courſe if God gave eyes: Verſe 23.

for he above all is to be feared and regarded, that is able not to ſhame only, but to kill both body and ſoule, and to caſt into hell fire.

Verſe 24. 12. In time this whoredome draweth to light: for Thamar being with childe, after three moneths made open ſhew, and the newes of it is brought to her father in law, who by and by ſtoutly, as if he had been the honeſteſt man alive, giveth juſtly ſentence that ſhe ſhould be burnt: Shewing, as it is thought, that even by the law of Nature, written in mans heart, whoredome ſhould be puniſhed by death, before ever the Law written was given. When ſhe was brought forth to the end to ſuffer, ſhe ſent unto her father in law his tokens left with her, when ſhe offended: Which by and by knowing, he changed his ſentence, abſolved her, and condemned himſelfe, ſaying; She is more righteous than I, for ſhe hath done this becauſe I gave her not to Shelah my ſon. So haſty ſentence was ſoone repealed, and the caſe being altered, hee is not ſo haſty as he was. Such Judges and judgements have been ſeene, but the leſſe the better. Sin will be ſin whatſoever we doe, and God will aſſuredly puniſh ſin whatſoever wee doe. Circumſtances may alter ſin from more to leſſe, or back againe, but circumſtances never can make ſin no ſinne, and unworthy blame. She had cauſe to complaine of wrong done her by her father in law, not giving her a wife to his ſon, but that therefore with her father in law ſhe ſhould commit inceſt, it cannot be juſtified: but enough before of this matter. That it followeth ſtraight, He lay with her no more, it was ſome grace and token of repentance. Such as if offenders would ever ſhew, no doubt but mercy might be found for paſſed frailty. Regard this therefore, and obſerve well, Iudah ſinned, but he ſinned no more, &c.

A comfort to women with childe in their travell.

Laſt of all, when the time of deliverance came, her travell was hard, yea ſo hard, as it is not convenient fully to utter, yet all was well in the end, both mother and twinnes too were in ſafety. The uſe of it, to women to truſt in God who is mighty, and almighty, good, and all goodneſſe, to regard his faithfull ſervants ever in this buſineſſe. Let them not feare, but cleave faſt to his gracious favour, the rather if before they have proved his mercy: For though it bee a fault for any to doubt, yet it is a double fault for one that hath tryed, to doe it. Neither Gods mercy nor might waxeth weaker with time, but he is for ever, what ever he was, and if you beleeve it, as here did Thamar receive a good end, ſo ſhall you. Firſt one, then another, and if there had been moe, the Lord is ſtill one according to his pleaſure. And this of this Chapter.

Chap. XXXIX.

In this Chapter theſe three things, as generals, eſpecially are to be noted.

{ Ioſephs faithfull and true ſervice.
{ His holy and unviolated chaſtity.
{ His wrongfull and unjuſt impriſonment.

Verſe 1. Concerning the firſt, it is ſaid, That he ſerved Potiphar, an Eunuch of Pharaohs, and his chiefe Steward, who bought him at the hands of the Iſhmalites. Where we ſee the Lord hath a reſting place for his, ever in his good time, howſoever they be toſſed and caryed up and downe, even from pillar to poſt, for a while. Reade Eſay 39. the 7. verſe, and confer it with this verſe of this Chapter.

Verſe 2. 2. The Lord was with Ioſeph (ſaith the Text) and he was a man that proſpered. Giving us to learne therein very notably, that the favour of God is the true fountaine of all proſperity. Hee riſeth, whom God loveth, if ſo it be good, and without him no man riſeth, though they burſt their hearts. Yet is not proſperity a token ever of Gods love, though no proſperity come but from Gods will. But here we are told in this particular, that Ioſeph proſpered, becauſe God was with him. Which when his maſter ſaw, he alſo favoured him, and made him Ruler of his Houſe, putting all that he had under his hand, making by that meanes good Ioſephs piety ſerve for his profit, but not caring for the ſame to learne it himſelfe. A daily trick of earthly minded men. Yet God is good to his ſervant ſtill, and bleſſeth even the Ægyptians houſe for his ſake. So gainfull is godlineſſe but in ſervants. What ſhould it be in our ſelves, if wee alſo were right hearted with them: Should God forget to be good to ſuch a Family? No, no, he would bleſſe it certainly very graciouſly.

Verſe 3, 4.

Verſ. 5.

Verſe 6. 3. Then did his Maſter much more truſt him, taking no account of any thing that was in his houſe. A vertue in ſome ſort, and a teſtimony of good nature in his Maſter. For there be ſome that are ſo partially wedded to their owne Country-folke, and ſo doggedly hearted towards any ſtrangers, that rather they had endure the doltiſhneſſe of the former, than uſe the dexterity of the latter. So was not Potiphar: But ſeeing Gods graces in a ſtranger, even there alſo hee yeeldeth favour, and uſeth him fully according to the ſame.

Verſe 6. Partiall affection to our own Country-men.

4. His perſon is commended, that he was faire and well favoured: a grace, if God give it, not not to be despised, for it maketh lightly whatsoever we doe to be better liked, according to the old saying: Gratior est pulchro veniens è corpore virtus; Vertue in a comely personage is more esteemed. But see the malice of Satan; though he could not make Ioseph abuse this beauty, either to pride or otherwise, yet he tempteth Potiphars wife by it, and with it; for it is said shee cast her eyes upon him, and said, Lie with me. So that wee see our very senses sucke in our bane, if the Lord assist not, and the eyes especially. In this booke before it was said, that the Sonnes of God saw the Daughters of men that they were faire, and tooke them wives. David saw from the top of his Palace Beersheba, and by sight sinned in measure straight, and soone after more. Peter speaketh of eyes full of adultery: Iob made a covenant with his eyes, that they should not offend in this respect. All these places teaching what windowes for wickednesse to enter in at our senses bee, if God give not grace. Well prayed David therefore, that the Lord would turne away his eyes, lest they should behold vanity. A carefull conscience preventeth much, and a careless person is soone deceived. Beware we by this wanton Mistresse of Iosephs, if we feare God.

Beauty a snare, and our eyes windowes to sinne. Verse 7. Gen.6.2. 2 Pet.2. Iob 31.

5. Ioseph abhorred such impiety, and with most good and godly arguments repelleth the temptation. The first drawne from ingratitude and unfaithfulnesse, in these words, Behold my Master knoweth not what he hath in the house with me, but hath committed all that he hath to my hand. There is no man greater in this House than I, neither hath he kept any thing from me, but only thee, &c. As if he should have said, being trusted as I am, and preferred in my Masters house as I am, it were the greatest unfaithfulnesse, and the foulest ingratitude that might be, in this sort to requite my Masters favours, and so great favours towards me: Therefore I may not doe it; for I abhorre to be unfaithfull where I am trusted, or unthankfull where I am regarded and done for. Here then is a servant of servants, if we thinke of our dayes, here is a jewel more worth than gold, and a pearle of price for a mans house: faithfull and thankfull, what wish we more. By these two vertues, as it were by two bands upon his soule, kept for such villany towards his Master, as is contrary quite to them both. Live Ioseph, live, though long thou art dead, for this thy grace, and live not with God alone in his shining light, but in the mouthes of men till the world have end, to thy praise and honour most justly deserved: who taste of grace will follow thee, and who offered thus, preferre their lust, in the judging day shall bee condemned by thee.

Verse 7. An honest nature, the more trusted, the more faithfull. Verse 8.

His second argument is drawne from that mariage knot that ought to hold till death doth part. Thou art (saith hee) his wife, as if hee should have said, such truth should bee in thee towards thy wedded Husband, even because thou art his wife, that if I would thou shouldest defie me: and againe, such stop to me is made by this estate in thee, that if we both would, yet we ought not. A maried woman must have a maried minde, that as her body by orderly course is appropriated unto one, so her minde must be also to the same, and to none other. Being then his wife, and so proper unto him, I may not consent to abuse this knot, that God and grace would be inviolate.

The second argument.

His third Argument is drawne from the nature of the sinne, it is a great wickednesse to touch another mans wife; and as all wickednesse should be abhorred: So great wickednesse greatly abhorred. A true judgement in Ioseph, and would God wee might ever retaine it in our selves. The world maketh but a jest of it, and at it, being herein behinde the very Infidels and Heathens, of whom many have confessed and hated as Ioseph doth. But with these mockers and fleshly Wretches, the Lord shall not mocke in his due time, when that shall be fulfilled in the thirteenth to the Hebrewes, Mariage is honourable amongst all men, but Whore-mongers and Adulterers the Lord shall judge.

The third argument. Gen.20.9. Heb.13.8.

His last Argument is drawne from the love of God: Thus should I sin (saith he) against God, which how may I doe? As if he should have said, I love God who hath ever loved me, and my love admitteth no such requitall. Many, and many are the sweet mercies that I have found at his hand, if I should tell all, and how then should I sinne against him? Therefore since trusted I am, and may not be unfaithfull; since regarded I am above all in the house, and may not bee unthankfull; since thou art a mans wife, and by that knot bound to abhorre all others in such respects; since the sinne is great, and therefore with great care to be avoided; and since I love the Lord for his love to me, which abhorreth such requitall; I must say nay, and thou must not say yea, God must be feared, and these reasons regarded; sin must be hated, and vertue preserved in us both. O vertue bright in a holy childe of God! to speake of it, were to say lesse than the thing deserveth, and therefore honoring both it and him that had it, God give us grace ever to follow it.

The fourth argument.

6. It followeth in the Text, that she spake to Ioseph day by day, and yet he refused. Where not only marke her most ugly unshamefastnesse, that having received such answer, would yet solicite: but see also plainely, and observe it carefully, how Satan ceaseth not to assay us againe and againe with the same temptation, hoping in time to winne our consent unto the same, and to give us the foyle at the second or third assault, though stiffely wee stand and resist the first. Therefore once or twice having well fought againſt filthy aſſaults, yet bee not ſecure by and by, but even reckon of your enemy yet againe, and prepare like anſwer to the end. Ioſeph as heartily and zealouſly as ever any did, repelled the baite that Satan laid for him in his miſtreſſe, yet he giveth not over, but ſtill worketh in his Inſtrument to attempt him againe, yet doe what both hee and his inſtrument could, Ioſeph ſtood faſt in his holy purpoſe, and ſaid her nay. Had Sampſon done ſo to Dalilah, it had ſaved his life, Iudg. 16. Yea marke it with mee and forget it never, what the text ſaith, that when hee ſaw her wickedneſſe, hee not onely avoided her filthy deſire, but even her dangerous and uncleane company. Thereby moſt notably inſtructing all men, that if they will not burne, they may not put their fingers in the flame; that is, if they will not be evill, they may not ſtill and daily bee in evill company: For company cauſeth in continuance, what is not clawed off in any continuance. Let Solomon teach us, and many moe. Peter in bad company denyed his Lord, the skarre whereof in remembrance liveth yet. Lot in the company of his luſting Daughters is over-reached, and committeth inceſt. Beware the woman that is unſhamefac'd, if ſhee ſtill may have place to continue her aſſaults. Reade the ſeventh of the Proverbs, and marke it well, at laſt ſhee prevailed, and led him home, as an Oxe that goeth to the ſlaughter, and as a foole to the ſtockes for correction.

Verse 10. Satan tempteth againe and againe to the same thing.

Company to be avoided.

Prov. 13. Syrac. 13. Pſal. 18.

Prov. 7. from the ſixt verſe, to the end.

Verſe 11, 12. Impudency.

7. Then on a time Ioſeph entred into the houſe to do his buſineſſe, and there was no man in the houſe. Therefore ſhee caught him by the garment, &c. O ſtrange impudency, and more foule and filthy then that I can ſpeake of it: Marke it and hate it, loth it and deteſt it with a perfect hatred, for ſo it deſerveth. And let it teach us this, even to daſh the bones of filthy conceits at the firſt whileſt they be yong; for if we harbour and hatch them up ſtill in our boſomes, their ſtrength will be ſuch in ſhort time, that we ſhall even with impudent faces, as here did ſhee, endeavour the accompliſhing of them to our ſhame. Qui ſemel verecundiæ limites, &c. Who once hath paſſed the bounds of modeſty (could the Heathen man ſay) he will even ſtraight and in very ſhort ſpace become paſſing impudent, if he take not heed. Againe, obſerve it diligently, how when Ioſeph is about his worke, and thinketh not any thing of ſuch matters, Satan aſſaulteth him, and would overthrow him. Beware therefore ever, and be armed ever; even in thy worke Satan will be buſie, and not let thee alone; in thy ſtudy, in thy houſe, in the field, and at thy plough make ready for Satan, and thinke it not ſtrange, if even here alſo you feele his temptations: Hee goeth about continually ſeeking whom he may devoure. Laſt of all, in the Woman obſerve it alſo, that there was none in the houſe, and then ſhe is boldeſt of all, and bolder than ever ſhee was. So is Satan helped, and wickedneſſe ſtrengthened by ſolitarineſſe and want of company. Therefore, though evill company be ever dangerous, yet ſome company with us, or neere us, is much profitable. We ſee this example, and we remember alſo when Satan tempted our Saviour himſelfe, even when in the wilderneſſe hee was alone; thinking ſolitarineſſe an advantage even againſt Chriſt, much more againſt us, and therefore to be avoided as we may. Evident it is alſo here, how readily wicked ones take their opportunity to doe evill, and of Iudas it is ſaid, that he ſought opportunity to betray him; happy we, if we ſo watched to worke the will of God. But Ioſeph fled, and left his garments behinde him, a dangerous token not onely againſt his credit, but even againſt his life, if God had not beene. Yet innocency is innocency, and to God hee rather chooſeth to commit both life and credit, then to offend. An example for all men to follow in like diſtreſſes. God ſeeth, and God is good to his evermore to cauſe their vertue, truth, and innocency to breake out, as the Sun out of a cloud at noone-day. Truſt to him therefore, and ſtand ſtable in vertue.

Fulgent. epiſt. 4. ad Prob. pag. 532. de orat. et compunct.

Solitarineſſe to be avoided.

Verſe 13. to the end.

8. This filthy woman having received a foile then in this her ſo impudent an aſſault alſo, (for Ioſeph ſtood vertuous ſtill to the end) ſee her device: She having his garment, which in his zealous indignation againſt her monſtrous behaviour flinging away from her, hee left behinde him, ſhe maketh that a meanes to colour her filthineſſe, and to accuſe Ioſeph, as you ſee in the Text: Thereby teaching us, that where incontinency is, there are many vices: impudency, ſubtilty, ſlander and treachery, and what not? Againe, teaching us that filthy love denyed, her luſt turneth to hatred, and deadly hatred, not caring to worke the deſtruction of the denyer: So did ſhee. Since ſhe cannot have Ioſeph as ſhe deſired, ſhee will deſtroy him if ſhe can, as hee deſerved not: who would thinke ſhe could finde in her heart ſo to injure him, whom even now ſhe ſo affected? But thus it is, and therefore thinke we of Mantuans verſe if we liſt, Aut te ardenter amat, aut te capitaliter odit: Either ſhe loveth thee heartily, or hateth thee deadly: the mean is not found of many women.

Where incontinency is, many vices are.

Mirabilis malitiæ artifex fœmina.

Credulity a great fault.

9. Not onely ſhee accuſeth him to her Servants, which was too much, but to her Husband when he commeth home, which farre was more: ſo malice worketh in mad mindes, from worſe to worſe. Her fooliſh Husband having heard his Wife, beleeveth all, and condemneth Ioſeph, never rewarding his faithfull ſervice with due examination of the truth. A fault too c mmon with greateſt perſons, yet a blot too black for ſuch eſtates. Ioſephs whole courſe had g^o^en occaſion of better conſcience, and ſhall all be forgotten? Shall the truſty Servant and faiv fulleſt heart in all that houſe lie preſently as open to the dart of ſlander, as hee that was never ſuch? What wiſdome is this? what honour is this? what conſcience is this? David ſo credulous, or rather injurious to true Mephiboſheth, whom flattering Siba falſely accuſed, is chaulked out in no worſe Chronicle than Gods booke for an unwiſe man, to ſay no more. So ever were they that would meaſure true hearts no better meaſure than this. Scite & ſapienter (Epicharmus,) Memento diffidere, Sharply therefore and wiſely ſaid Epicharmus, Remember to be ſlow of beleefe. And another againe: Nervus eſt ſapientiæ non temerè credere, It is the very ſinew of wiſdome, not haſtily or raſhly to give credit. But this is not obſerved or remembred here. All is beleeved againſt good Ioſeph, and as a man moſt guilty to priſon he goeth. Behold yee ſervants, and be of good comfort. Not ever to be eſteemed and dealt withall according to deſert, is but the lot of a childe of God, and one that is worthy of love and good liking, though yet not given him. Then paſſe it over as you may the wrong that ſo wringeth, God is in heaven, and in time Ioſeph ſhall out of priſon with honour againe. Such ſnubs as theſe be little clouds, that when God hath exerciſed us, with his ſunne of righteouſneſſe he will diſperſe and cauſe to vaniſh. But whither goeth Ioſeph to priſon in this diſpleaſure? Surely ſaith the Text: To the place where the Kings priſoners lay bound. O mighty providence of Almighty God, and ſweet, ſweet to bee obſerved! You know what after this ſtory fell out, when Ioſeph expounded the Baker and Butlers dreams, and how by that meanes after Ioſeph was remembred as able to interpret the Kings dreames, and ſo delivered. This could not have been, if he had been in any priſon elſe, and therefore here God would have him, as having determined both his delivery, and the meanes. Care away then with the Lords elect. For if they goe to priſon, there God governes, and even the place; their end is appointed in his wiſdome, and it ſhall not faile.

Cicero.

A comfort to ſervants.

Verſe 20.

10. And the Lord was with Joſeph, ſhewing him mercy, and getting him favour with the maſter of the priſon, &c. To priſon he goeth, but yet to that priſon that God appointeth as a place fitteſt to his Servants future and intended good, and there, even there the Lord is with him, not ceaſing to worke his comfort as might be good. In his former maſters houſe hee wrought his favour whilſt it pleaſed him, and now in this mans houſe when that is gone hee doth the like. So ſafe is he ever that feareth the Lord. And ſhall hee not want favour with men neceſſary that cleaveth to God, and defieth ſin? Locked doores cannot lock God from us, and that is comfort. Looke in Joſeph in this Story againe and againe, and the more you meditate of him, the more is the Lord able to make his example profitable unto you. His life is as the Skie, and his vertues as the Starres, appearing therein above our ability to number them. Towards God you ſee in him wholy feare and piety, towards his maſter faithfulneſſe, gratitude, and integrity; towards his Miſtreſſe, modeſty, ſhamefaſtneſſe, and chaſtity; towards himſelfe, ſpirituall wiſedome, and ſound reſolution. You ſee in him ſtrength invincible againſt the ſugred baites of deceiving ſinne, patience and courage to abide for innocency ſuch unjuſt adverſity as ſlander and credulity caſt him into. Philo writing of this impriſonment of Joſeph, ſaith Joſeph in priſon ſhewed ſo many vertues, that unto the very malefactors he was a very miracle, they joying and rejoycing that God had ſent a man amongſt them for their comfort. And now that priſon was not ſo much a priſon, as a ſchoole of vertues and grace, Joſeph both by precept and practiſe teaching ſo notably all that were there. His life before them was a beautifull table painted and garniſhed with all goodly things. Thoſe that were before judged incurable ſpots and blots with grievous ſinnes that had even eaten, as a canker into their ſoules, hee converted, and ſo converted, that deteſting and abhorring their former courſe, they cry out; O where hath this good ſo long beene hid, from which we have erred as ſinfull men, and now by this ſhining light that is come unto us we ſee it, wee loath it, wee abhorre it, and are aſhamed of it. Thus farre Philo.

Verſe 21. and to the end.

Even the priſon is directed by God.

Others have written of him in this ſort: Joſeph ſervus eſt, ſed pravis dominæ ſuæ cupiditatibus ſervire neſcit; venditur hero, ſed mancipium Satanæ non vult eſſe; decorus facie, ſed pulchrior mente; corporis formam oculi heræ contemplabantur, ſed ad caſtum cor non penetrabant; ferrum in carcere tranſiit animam ejus, ſed peccatum non ſauciavit conſcientiam ejus, &c. Joſeph is a ſervant, but he cannot abide the ſinfull deſires of his luſting miſtreſſe; ſold hee is to his maſter, but ſold hee will not be unto Satan; beautifull in his face, but farre more beautifull in minde; his bodily beauty his miſtreſſe ſeeth, but her eyes pierce not his chaſt heart; the iron in priſon entred into his ſoule, as the Pſalme ſaith, but ſinne could not wound his conſcience, though his miſtreſſe ſought it as experience ſhewed, &c. O ſweet example then of a deare childe of God! Neceſſe eſt ut veniant tentationes: Quis enim coronabitur, niſi legitime certaverit? Aut quomodo tentabit, ſi deſit qui impugnet? Tu ergo accedens ad ſervitutem Dei, ſta in timore & prepara animam tuam ad tentationem. Neceſſary it is, ſaith Saint Bernard, that temptations ſhould come: for how ſhall a man be crowned except he have ſtriven lawfully? or how ſhall he ſtrive lawfully if none do oppugne? Therefore whoſoever thou art that commeſt to the ſervice of God, ſtand faſt in righteouſneſſe and feare, and prepare thy ſoule to temptation. Look at this one example of Joſeph from the beginning to the end, and you need no more proofe. Soone and in his tender yeares did

Pſal. 105.

Eccleſ. 2. 1.

Satan begin to practiſe againſt him, and ſo continued his curſed malice, but God (to the comfort of all that behold it) gave him victory. Reade the Pſalme named before 105. ver. 17. and ſo on. He ſent a man before them, Ioſeph was ſold to be a bond ſervant, &c. Reade the booke of Wiſdome, where it is ſaid of Wiſdome, that when the righteous was ſold ſhe forſooke him not, but delivered him from ſinne, ſhe went downe with him into the dungeon, and failed him not in the bands, till ſhe had brought him the Scepter of the Realme, and power againſt thoſe that oppoſed him; and them that had accuſed him, ſhe declared to be lyars, and gave him perpetuall glory; meaning all this of Ioſeph. But what ſhould we ſay? Many things moe might here be noted if I would be long. Firſt, as that ſo long a man ſtandeth liked and regarded in place of ſervice as God thinketh good, who hath further to uſe and diſpoſe of that man. Secondly, that diſgrace and diſlike by God are directed not to hurt, but even further to prefer his faithfull ſervants that ever ſo lived as they well deſerved favour ſtill, though they had it not. Thirdly, that before a riſing goeth an humbling, as here in Ioſeph, that thankfulneſſe may be more, and experience of affliction in others, with many ſuch, but I will not ſtand any longer now: only this let us note, and end, that the higheſt ſervices be not the ſafeſt ſervices for an honeſt minde. More temptations to doe evill, more diſgrace when there is no evill, than meaner places can afford. Yet every man would be climbing, and pitch we doe too often our deſires there, from whence we ſhall ſuck the ſowreſt ſorrow that ever we taſted of in our lives. If Ioſephs eſtate bee thus tickle, having ſuch vertue, and ſuch gifts: Mediocria firma, meane things be beſt things, and ſureſt to continue, ſing we ever, and think we ever. Some have noted in the ſale of Ioſeph, how the Church ſtandeth in more danger of falſe brethren and hollow hypocrites, than of outward enemies. A mans enemies are they of his owne houſe: but I end.

CHAP. XL.

The Heads in this Chapter are chiefly theſe.

The impriſonment of the Kings chiefe Butler and Baker.
Their dreames which they had in priſon.
The interpretation of the ſame by Ioſeph.
The effect and truth according to his interpretation.

Verſe 2. Great mens anger. Prov. 19. 12. Chap. 16. 14.

TOuching the firſt it is ſaid: Pharaoh was angry with his officers, &c. Greater men are ſooner angry, and with more danger far by reaſon of their power: but Princes angers above all others, are eſpecially dangerous, and to be avoided. For the Kings wrath (ſaith the wiſe Solomon) is like the roaring of a Lion, and his favour againe like the dew dropping upon the graſſe. Yea, the wrath of a King is as Meſſengers of death, but a wiſe man will pacifie it, in another place. This anger of his caſt them into priſon: and their impriſonment againe teacheth what I ended the former Chapter withall, to wit, how dangerous high ſervices be in compariſon of meaner places, even to men of all conditions. The meaneſt places are often meaneſt to worke great extremities unto men. Theſe priſoners are put in the place where Ioſeph was, and how this doth work a deliverance with honour to Ioſeph the ſequell ſheweth. So guideth Gods goodneſſe his childrens affaires to their good. Ioſeph alſo hath the over-ſight of them, that ſtill we might ſee how God was with him and got him favour, though his wicked miſtreſſe, and too credulous maſter did ſeeke his woe.

Of dreames.

2. Theſe two priſoners dreamed (ſaith the Text) either of them a dreame in one night. And it might occaſion us to thinke of the cauſes of dreames, and matter belonging thereunto, if I would be long. As that dreames flow from over-ruling humors in mans body, whereby it falleth out that ſanguine conſtitutions dreame of merry and comfortable matter, of love and lightneſſe alſo, with ſuch like: cholerick, of wars, brawles and contentions, and of fire and ſuch like: Flegmatick, of water, winde, and ſuch like: Melancholick, of heavy, dolefull and ſad matters, of death, and dead folkes, with ſuch like. So that Phyſitians obſerve our dreames very uſually, as no ſmall help to diſcerne what humour ruleth and troubleth us moſt. Galen and Boetius write much of it, and uſed it ſtill to their Patients. Galen in his booke of dreames, telleth a tale of one that dreamed one of his thighes became ſtone, and ſhortly after a dead palſie tooke it, another dreamed that he ſtood in a veſſell of blood, and the Phyſitian ſtreight conceived hee abounded with blood, and had need to have a veine opened, &c. Hypocrates giveth it for a rule: Quæ per ſomnum accidunt, necnon ipſa inſomnia conſideranda: A Phyſitian ought to obſerve both the ſleepe and the dreames of his patient. Sometimes of actions and deeds done by us the day before, according to the ſaying:

Galen de inſomniis.

Aphoriſ. 16.

Omnia

Omnia quæ ſenſu volvuntur vota diurno,
Pectore ſopito reddit amica quies.
Iudicibus lites, aurigæ ſomnia currus.

Sometimes of feare, according to the alſo:

Somnia fallaci ludunt temeraria nocte,
Et pavidas mentes falſa timere jubent.

Theſe are naturall dreames, and proceed commonly from their cauſes therein. Beſide which, there are dreames ſpirituall, and dreames diabolicall. Dreames ſpirituall have ever ſome certaine notes whereby they are knowne and diſcerned, and either of the party or of ſome others, have their true and certaine interpretations. Dreames diabolicall, are illuſions wherewith Satan vexeth his owne eſpecially, as Witches, Sorcerers, and ſuch like. Theſe dreames of the Butler and the Baker, might well be naturall, being ſo touching their proper functions; and yet ſpirituall in this reſpect, that God uſing proper cauſes, had a ſpeciall drift in cauſing them, that Ioſeph might have paſſage to the Kings knowledge, and ſo ſuch honour as after followed. Thinke of them as you will, ſure and certaine the Lords finger was in them, and with Ioſeph to interpret them to them. So all things worke as the Lord hath appointed, and by one meanes or other his mercy to his children ſhall be effected.

3 Having dreamed theſe dreames, in the morning when Ioſeph came in to them, they both were ſad, and looked heavily. Ioſeph ſpied it by and by, and ſaid unto them, Why looke yee ſo ſadly to day? Thereby declaring the goodneſſe of his nature, and the fruit of affliction in himſelfe: Vincula qui ſenſit didicit ſuccurrere vinctis; He that hath beene bound himſelfe, knoweth the better what belongeth to bands. Neither had hee an eye more to ſee, than a heart to pitie, and to inquire what might be the cauſe, ready no doubt to doe them the good that any way he was able. Such vertue is commendable with God and man, when ſowre and ſterne diſpoſitions get no ſuch praiſe. A comfortable word to a heavy heart, God knoweth, is ſweet, and too much we thinke wee can never doe for ſo good a nature. They told him readily their griefe what it was, not thinking (as it ſeemeth) that hee could expound them. But Ioſeph a man inſtructed aright, anſwered againe; Are not interpretations of God? As if he ſhould ſay, Cannot God ſtirre up in this your content; therefore be not ſad, but tell your dreames unto mee. Which ſtraight they did, and received a true and certaine interpretation of them at his hands. But if here-hence we conclude, that with us alſo our common dreames are to be expounded, wee ſhall foully erre, and who ſo have done, have made themſelves ſpectacles of folly to many, and ſhewed no little impiety in themſelves, both in ſpeaking and printing: for there is no rule that can hold as certaine in things ſo variable as dreames be. As for example, that ever when we dreame of ſuch a beaſt, of ſuch a matter, or in ſuch a manner, it ſhould ſignifie the ſame thing at all times, whereof unwiſely ſome have written too much. But of dreames elſe-where I have ſaid more.

Verſ. 7. A good nature ſoone ſpyeth others griefe, and comforteth them.

No certaine rules of expounding dreames. Somnia ne cures, nam mens humana quod optat, &c. Read Syrac. 24. Eccl. 5. Ier. 23. 27. and 27. 9. Cic. de divinat. Confuteth, &c.

4 Ioſeph having told the chiefe Butler his dreame, which ſhewed his deliverance very ſhortly, and reſtitution to his Office againe with credit, beggeth of him but this requitall, that hee would ſhew mercy to a priſoner alſo, as himſelfe then was, and to make mention of him to the King, that he might be delivered. Teaching us therein not to neglect meanes whenſoever wee neede, but to uſe them carefully, referring all effect to God. The Baker ſeeing his fellowes dreame ſo good, telleth unto Ioſeph his alſo. But alas the difference. Yet Ioſeph is true, and telleth him truely what it was, though it were ſo bitter. Teaching us well that truth is to be preſerved, howſoever the matter is, and even hard and ſowre truths to be told, if we be required. Conferre herewithall for proofe and practice but theſe Scriptures, 2 Sam. 12. 7. 1 King. 22. 17. 2 King. 20. 1. and 17. Mich. 2. 11. Mat. 3. 7. and Chap. 14. 7. Gal. 1. 19. with ſuch like. Beware we then Miniſters how we conceale what the Lord revealeth to us.

Sharpe truths muſt be told.

5 What is ſpoken here of Pharaohs birth-day, and in Matth. 14. of Herods birth-day, ſheweth us the antiquity and lawfulneſſe alſo of this obſervance, if it be in meaſure. Birth-dayes and mariage-dayes, may bee obſerved, if we keepe a courſe free from vanity and ſuperſtition. That Pharaoh delivereth them both out of priſon, one to life, and the other to death, ſome have made it a figure of Gods laſt judgement, when the like ſhall be done. But I ſtand not of it. This only I will note, and now end. How the Butler releaſed forgot Ioſeph, a note of diſgrace to him juſtly, and to all others that in proſperity forget their comforters in adverſity. Too many, too many hath this world daily, that exalted to honour, to riches and comforts, forget Ioſeph, that is, ſuch perſons as are godly and faithfull, worthy of comfort, and yet oppreſſed by ſome ſtrange Putiphars, who earſt have beene of their great acquaintance. Iſocrates maketh it a difference betwixt the friendſhip of bad and good men, that the one remember their friends onely preſent, the other be they never ſo farre diſtant from them. How much more ſhould Chriſtian love doe that which is fit. But I ſtay my ſelfe.

CHAP.

Chap. XLI.

In this Chapter we have theſe things eſpeciall to be obſerved as chiefe heads.

The dreames of Pharaoh the King.
The deliverance of Ioſeph out of priſon.
His government in the Land when he was preferred.

The company of the godly profitable to the wicked.

TOuching the firſt, we ſee Pharaoh here by dreame admoniſhed of a great dearth that ſhould inſue in his land, and was this thinke you, for Pharaohs ſake? No indeed, not principally and eſpecially, but it was for Ioſephs ſake, that he might be releaſed and preferred, and for Iacob his old fathers ſake, with all his family, who were by this providence comforted and provided for, and brought into Ægypt, there to remaine an appointed time, according as was ſaid to Abraham. See therefore againe and againe, what profit ſtill comes to the wicked by the godly. For their ſakes they have mercy, and manifold mercies, as here had Pharaoh and all his Land, when otherwiſe the famine had devoured moſt of them, as well we may ſee, if it had not beene told to Ioſeph by God, and he directed with wiſedome to provide for it. The King hath two dreames, but all to one end, the doubling being onely for more certainty and more plainneſſe. Whereby the Miniſters of the Word may learne of the Lord in matters of weight that ought to be knowne, even twice to ſpeake the ſame thing, and oftner alſo if it be needfull. For this is ſure, this is plaine, and this is even the practice of the Lord himſelfe. Fooliſh curioſity avoideth this, and vaine-glory ſuffereth us not to ſubmit our ſelves; but who followeth the Lord, he followeth the wiſeſt guide, and let others be no rule againſt him.

Preachers to repeate the ſame thing good.

Verſe 8.

2 When the morning came, his ſpirit was troubled, which feare was enough to teach him that theſe viſions were ſent of God; but none could interpret them unto Pharaoh, that we might thereby learne, how the wiſe in the world underſtand not Gods ſecrets, but to his ſervants his will is revealed. Then ſpake his chiefe Butler, and told him of Ioſeph. Better late than never, but fie of ſuch an heart that ſo long could forget ſo good a man, and one that ſo friendly had dealt with him. Two yeares (ſaith the firſt verſe) ere this was done, after Ioſeph ſpake unto him. Delayes in Court then, and ſome Courtiers even in honeſt ſuites, and very reaſonable, are too old we ſee. But the beſt men abhorre them ever, and thankfull mindes defie forgetfulneſſe of their friends: twice is it done that quickly is done, and a ready diſpatch doubleth the benefit to the receiver, and conſequently duty to the giver.

Verſe 9. Worldly wiſe underſtand not God. Delayes in Court, old.

Verſ. 14. The wicked ſeeke to the godly in their need.

3 Then ſent Pharaoh and called Ioſeph. Not much unlike to many others, that ever in their need doe ſeek to the godly & well diſpoſed, to receive that comfort, or reape that benefit which other cannot yeeld them. But in proſperity they contemne them, and little either regard them or their vertues. That Ioſeph ſhaved himſelf, and changed his raiment to come unto Pharaoh, it may well teach us with reverence to regard the Lord much more. Before whom yet wee come not with thus much regard: the more is our fault, and the leſſe is our feeling aſſuredly. The Lord weigheth not outward geſture, but inward heart, yet in reſpect of our ſelves, outward geſture doth helpe our inward heart, and ſtirre us up rather unto reverence, as changing of garments, kneeling and bowing, with eyes and hands lift up, and ſuch like, therefore to be uſed.

Outward reverence before God.

Verſe 16. Glory to bee given to God.

4 Without me (ſaith Ioſeph) God ſhall anſwer for the wealth of Pharaoh. As if hee ſhould ſay, though I expound thy dreame which turneth to thy good, it is yet God, and not I that anſwereth for thy wealth. A dutifull ſpeech in a childe of God, to give God the honour that is due to him, fit for us, and for all beleevers evermore. For what have we that wee have not received? Doth not every gift and every thing in nature good, proceed from God? Why then ſhould wee rob him of his owne? God forbid. Herod for taking to himſelfe moſt vainly the praiſe of his well ſpeaking, fearfully periſhed, to make us beware. Yea Ioſeph is carefull even before the unbeleevers to commit this ſinne: and let us marke it. Therefore in the 28. verſe he repeateth it againe, This is the thing which I have ſaid unto Pharaoh, that God hath ſhewed unto Pharaoh, what he is about to doe; carefully preſerving unto the Lord his due.

1 Cor. 4. 7. Iam. 1. 17. Act. 12. Verſe 28.

Verſ. 35.

5 That Ioſeph giveth counſell to Pharaoh to lay up, &c. beſide that it ſheweth the duty of Gods Prophets and Miniſters, not onely to ſhew the evils to come, but alſo the remedies for the ſame; it doth alſo further warrant as lawfull and good, ſuch laying up in one yeare as may ſerve for another, either of father for his childe, man for his family, or governour for his place committed unto him. Onely moderation and order that it be kept is to be cared for. Which moderation muſt regard circumſtances of perſon, calling, place, time, &c. Therefore ſaid Ioſeph, let there be choſen a man of underſtanding and wiſedome to doe this, meaning no doubt which ſhould doe with diſcretion that which was fit. No warrant therefore this gathering thus limited, and for ſuch end, for thoſe ſcrapings that greedy cormorants uſe amongſt us, neither with meaſure, nor for good end, or any care of any godly circumſtance.

Storing lawfull

6 Then ſaid Pharaoh, can we finde ſuch a man as this, in whom is the Spirit of God? Thou ſhalt bee over my houſe, &c. Making this Argument, that becauſe Ioſeph had ſuch gifts, therefore he was fit for ſuch a place; and implying the contrary, that places ought not to goe where want of gifts is fit for them. A thing that will accuſe many a giver in the latter day, when the Lord ſhall reckon: That they have not beene ſo holy as Pharaoh of Ægypt, to regard gifts in ſuch men upon whom they have beſtowed places of charge, and moſt great charge. But what did I ſay? Not regard gifts, doe not givers of places in our dayes regard their gifts who muſt enjoy them? How have I erred, ſince gifts, and gifts, and nothing but gifts, and all for gifts, wee doe what wee doe. Si nihil attuleris ibis Homere foras; If you have no gifts the doore is open, and the way before you, pack you hence. But ô curſed gifts, and curſed they that regard ſo much ſuch kinde of gifts! My meaning is plaine, and this Text is plaine. Pharaoh of Ægypt, even Pharaoh of Ægypt, I ſay, regardeth what was within Ioſeph, and not what was without, and ſhall wee be all for the gifts without, and nothing for grace within? For gaine to our ſelves by ſinfull bribes, not for gaine to the Church or Common-wealth by ſtrength to diſcharge? Thou and thy gifts periſh, (ſaid the Apoſtle once) and thou and thy gifts periſh, ſhall God ſay one day, when it ſhall ſmart. Yea thou with thy gifts that thus giveſt for ſuch gifts to an unworthy one; and he for want of gifts that yet giveth thee theſe gifts to ſupply his want of gifts inward in mind, and required of God if he will have ſuch a place as requireth ſuch gifts to the diſcharge of it. The Heathens to ſhew that honour ought ever and onely accompany Vertue, built a Temple to Honour, and ſo adjoyned thereunto another Temple to Vertue, that by no meanes a man could get into the Temple of Honour, but onely though the Temple of Vertue: and alas, ſhall we that profeſſe more knowledge, be worſe in our practice than all Heathens? God worke with us for his mercie ſake in this reſpect.

Verſe 38. Gifts fit for places to bee regarded.

Gifts too much regarded.

Panormitan. lib. 1. de geſtis Alphonſi.

7 Then ſaid Pharaoh to Ioſeph, Behold, I have ſet thee over all the Land of Ægypt. He took his Ring and put it upon Ioſephs hand, arrayed him in garments of fine linnen, and put a chaine of gold about his necke. He ſet him upon the beſt Chariot that he had ſaving one, and they cryed before him Abrech, &c. O God of comfort, how art thou one and the ſame for ever to thy children, ſweet and mercifull, kinde and gracious, bountifull and liberall in thy good time. Is Ioſeph now thus highly exalted? And ſhall all Ægypt be ruled by him? O what are the afflictions of Gods children then? are they any thing but ſuch humblings and ſchoolings as the Lord their God, and moſt gracious Father fitteth them by, and with, and under, to ſuch places, honours and comforts as he hath appointed for them either here in this life, or in that come? No, no, they are no matters of anger any way, but traynings and leadings to other purpoſes of our ſweeteſt God. Foule dayes have faire dayes we ſee it here, and lowring nights to bring bright mornings, wee ſhall ever finde as ſhall be good for us. Farewell Putiphar with thy filthy unkindneſſe to a true and gainfull ſervant; farewell Miſtreſſe of miſchiefe with thy ſinfull ſlander, thou haſt done thy worſt, and Ioſeph liveth and is out of priſon, honoured with honour above they ſelfe, and God taking his part, thy malice hath failed of ſtrength to hurt him, bleſſed bee God. And bleſſed God bleſſe us alſo, that ſinfull unkindneſſe towards true meaning, or helliſh malice againſt holy life may be endured with patience of us, and viſited in mercy by thee; towards us in thy good times, our righteouſneſſe made open by thy favours, as here it was: yea, all thy children enabled by view of this experience to continue carefull, to bee upright, and to cleave unto thee before all the world, in love, in feare, in thankfull feeling and comfortable taſte of thy ſweet nature towards thine for ever and ever. Amen, Amen. If you liſt here you may remember what one ſaith; to wit, that Princes may make noblemen, but not wiſe men, and therefore Maximilian uſed to preferre wiſe men before Noble.

Verſe 41, 42, 43.

After a foule day commeth a faire.

Sweet comfort indeed in all afflictions. O note and feele.

8 That Ioſeph ſuffered all this honour to bee done unto him, and received it, held it, and uſed it, doth it not ſhew that the children of God may enjoy worldly places of high regard, and yet be faithfull? is piety ſuch a ſimplicity, that cannot abide honor in this, or like order amongſt men? No, neither yet is ſuch peeviſhneſſe piety that condemneth Gods bleſſings, as things unlawfull for his children, and grindeth the teeth at the comforts of Ioſeph without a cauſe. What Anabaptiſts thinke and have put in writing we know more, than wee need to regard. Their kindes were divers, and their ſentences differing accordingly. Princes and Potentates in this world here on earth have received honours, and given honour to their inferiours againe without diſlike of God, ever from the beginning, ſo that an order be kept. And to ſay that Princes may not uſe any of their ſubjects ſervices according to their gifts, and honor them for their ſervices accordingly, when they have done, is moſt derogatory, not onely to the Princes owne honour, but alſo to his government and liberty. How did Darius honour Mordecai, and how did Mordecai (a faithfull man) accept the ſame? How did Nabuchadnezzar honor Daniel, and Daniel take it, uſe it, and enjoy it with thankfulneſſe to God, faithfulneſſe to the King that gave it, and great good to many one. Daniel was made a great man, ſaith the Text, by the King, who gave him many and great gifts, and made him governour over the whole Province of Babel, and chiefe of the Rulers above all the wiſe men of Babel: Sidrach, Miſack, and Abednego, were were alſo honoured, and accepted of it. Obadiah a good man, met the Prophet Elia, and fell on his face and ſaid: Art not thou my Lord Eliab? And the Prophet refuſed not this honour. The like ſaid the Sunamite to Eliſha, with divers others. Let not my Lord be angry, ſaith Aaron to Moſes: and here dwelleth in this towne a Seer, an honourable man, ſaith Sauls ſervant of the Prophet Samuel. The Jayler in the Acts to Paul and Silas: My Lord, what ſhall I doe to be ſaved? And they ſtartled not at this title, who yet rent their cloathes, &c. when unlawfull honour was given to them. To be called Princes of Prieſts, in that eſtate was moſt honourable, and no title greater. Eleazar the ſonne of Aaron was called Prince of Princes: Eliaſaph, Elizaphat, Suriel, are called Princes and heads. But of this I have ſpoken elſe-where, and therefore now goe no further, hoping that thereby we ſee it plaine, that titles and honours are accepted of Gods children, as here of Ioſeph, and no ſignes of ambition; nor forbidden as unlawfull, ſo the minde bee humble and meeke, and a meaſure kept. And immoderate it cannot truely bee ſaid, which of a Chriſtian Prince, for juſt cauſe is vouchſafed to the faithfull ſubject according to the cuſtome and manner of the Countrey. No, rather it is to the Common-wealth and Church both Ornament and adjument. The contrary being ſought at this day in Miniſters out of all queſtion, by the deepe malice of Satan, to the end that all they being brought into contempt, Religion with them might alſo fall, he having his libertie to ſpit out his venome and blaſphemies againſt it at large, not one being of authority and countenance to oppoſe himſelfe againſt him, and ſuch his dealings againſt the Miniſters. Who ſo would have the foundation of an houſe and building out, may not immediately begin to ſtrike at that, for feare all the building fall upon his head, but he muſt begin at the top, and firſt untile it, then untimber it, and ſo by little and little come to the foundation, which after this ſort he may take away with eaſe: Even ſo in this, which wee now have ſpeech of, if Satan directly ſhould ſtrike at the foundatiō, Chriſt and his Word, with Religion iſſuing from the ſame, then all men ſpying his malicious drift, would oppoſe themſelves againſt him, and ſo his drift be hindred by many ſtones in the building, falling as it were upon his head. But when he beginneth to untile it, and untimber it, as I have ſaid, that is, to debaſe and diſgrace the Minſters already in it, and to hinder by their diſgraces others of any gifts to come unto it, with ſuch like proceedings many and wicked, in time hee will have the foundation with eaſe, that is, Chriſt and his Word out of the ſame, with all holy worſhip according to the ſame, placing for learning, barbariſme and blindneſſe, and for religion, ſuperſtition, with all the blackneſſe and darkneſſe of Ægypt againe. Wherefore if ever the comforts of learning and learned men have nouriſhed to Church and Common-wealth ſufficient helpes, and the contrary in all ages rooted them out by little and little, till all were gone: let us never grieve at the meanes that ſo happy a good followeth after, but bleſſe God heartily if the place we live in afford them to us, and labour to our powers ever to maintaine them. Knowing by Ioſeph, Daniel, and all theſe examples now recited, that in men of all conditions and callings in the Church and Common-wealth, outward things, as wealth and riches, honors, and dignities, with titles of incouragement, and gracious favour in religious Princes may bee allowed. The true Children of God having daily learned to abound and to want, that is, in proſperity to uſe what the time affordeth to Gods glory, and in adverſity to embrace what the Lord then alſo ſendeth without repining. If Iſrael offend, let not alſo Judah ſinne herein: that is, if ſome offend, who ſhould not doe ſo, let not us thus hearing, and thus ſeeing, follow their example, and offend likewiſe. But defie we Satan and his attempts, to our laſt day.

CHAP. XLII.

In this Chapter conſider theſe heads eſpecially and chiefe.

{ Jacobs ſending of his ſonnes into Ægypt for food.
{ Their entertainment there with Joſeph when they came.
{ Their returne againe to their Father.

The godly afflicted as the wicked, yet to other end.

TOuching the firſt, in that Iacob ſendeth for food, wee ſee that even he alſo was ſubject to this famine; where we may note, that the godly oftentimes endure the ſame afflictions that the wicked doe, but farre yet differing from them in the end. For unto the wicked ſuch afflictions are the whips and ſcourges of God for their ſinnes and deſerts; unto the godly they are trials of faith and patience, that God may be further glorified by them. Jeremy, Ezechiel, Daniel, with thouſands mo may be examples unto us, & proofes hereof. That Jacob ſent we ſee he tempted not God, but uſed means, and we muſt do the like. The Ægyptians ſold, and we keep, never contented with the price, that our judgment may be juſt in the day of the Lord, when we ſhal ſmart for this greedineſſe and want of love. To have trafficke alſo with ſtrangers and forreners, and with ſuch as differ from us in Religion, this Story warranteth with many moe. But that Jacob would would not let Benjamin goe with them, we ſee his love, he loved the mother, and he loveth the Childe. Benjamin is his joy now that Ioſeph is gone, and hee may not be from him. The reaſon that is alledged, leſt he ſhould die, is common to the others alſo, if hee had regarded them ſo much. But indeed he did not, though all were his children. Benjamin hee loved, and for him he feareth, love being ever given to feare, according to the ſaying: Res eſt ſolliciti plena timoris amor.

Verſe 6.

2. Ioſeph was Governour of the Land, &c. And why did not Ioſeph ſignifie ſo much unto his Father all this while by letter and meſſenger ſent of purpoſe both for his Fathers comfort and his owne by mutuall hearing one from another? Saint Auſten moveth this queſtion, and anſwereth it by another. Why (ſaith he) did not God reveale unto Iacob his beloved ſervant, what was become of his ſonne, and that he was living, &c? Sure (ſaith Auſten) becauſe his good pleaſure was otherwiſe, and that things might come to paſſe, not only which God had decreed, but as God had decreed concerning the manner. The ſelfe-ſame thing it was which governed and ruled Ioſeph, that he could not like to ſignifie unto his Father his eſtate, but even follow the Lords determined way, and let all fall out as he would. That the Text ſaith alſo, Ioſephs brethren came and bowed their faces to the ground before him; it ſheweth us plainly, how the purpoſes of God doe come to paſſe, we little knowing, either to good, or to evill. For was not this the dreame of Joſeph, that all their ſheaves ſhould doe reverence to his ſheafe? and ſee now if it be not truly fulfilled, though they little think of it. They bow, and they bow to the ground before Joſeph, little thinking that it was Joſeph. So did the Jewes fulfill the Scriptures concerning their dealings with Chriſt, when he ſhould come, and yet they did not thinke ſo. So doth the Church of Rome fulfill the propheſie of the Apoſtle concerning a departure from the faith, a forbidding to marry, and commanding to abſtaine from meats which God hath ordained to be received with thankſgiving of them which beleeve and know the truth. Doe you remember a little before, how theſe brethren of Joſeph ſcoffed at his dreames, and ſaid: then ſhall we ſee what ſhall become of his dreames. Now let them ſee what is become of them, they being now with their faces downe to the ground before him, doing reverence unto him, as the Ruler of all Ægypt. So ſhall all mockers ſee come to paſſe what God hath ſpoken to their juſt confuſion, if they repent not for ſuch diſdaine and unbeliefe. Let thoſe mockers, of whom S. Peter ſpeaketh, conſider this: They ſay in their jollity, Where is the promiſe of his comming? tuſh the day of doom will never bee, &c. Behold, behold, yee prophane hearts what is come to paſſe in Joſeph, and what yet ſhall further follow in his time, and take up your ſcoffes in trembling feare to provoke his wrath, whoſe truth did never faile, nor ever ſhall. But ſome may marvell all this time that Joſeph did not ſend unto his Father, to advertiſe him that he lived, and in what eſtate, knowing ſo well that he being deare to his Father, the ſuppoſed death of him was moſt bitter, and the better tydings would have been a thouſand times welcome. But Saint Auſten by another queſtion ſatisfieth this matter. For, ſaith hee, tell me againe you that marvell at this, why the Spirit of God, who at other times often did inſpire Jacob, did not by his revelation make Jacob to know this? Surely, you can alledge no other cauſe, but that it ſeemed not good to make him to doe ſo. Which anſwer I alſo make to the former; to wit, that by the ſame Spirit Joſeph was kept from doing, as you ſaid, till Gods time was come that he ſhould in this ſort make knowne the matter.

3 Joſeph knew his bretbren, and made himſelfe ſtrange unto them, ſpeaking roughly, &c. Some condemne him for diſſembling, and ſay, we may not follow him. But others excuſe it by our Saviours dealings with the woman of Canaan, to whom he meant in the end nothing but good, what ſhew ſoever he made a while that her faith might appeare. Howſoever ſurely the truth is knowne, that we may conceale a truth for a time, and not by and by utter all that in time wee will. Therefore hard it is to interpret all the doings of the godly, according to outward ſhew and ſeeming for a time. But that Joſeph knew them, and they knew not him, ſome have made it a figure of our Saviour Chriſt, knowing, but not knowne at divers times. Mary knew him not being riſen, till he called her by her name, yet he knew her. So againe the Diſciples going to Emaus, and many moe. But the day ſhall come, that he ſhall be knowne to thoſe that ſold him, and unto all, as Ioſeph in time was to his brethren.

4. Joſeph telleth them, they are ſpies, and are come to ſee the weakneſſe of the Land. Thereby ſhewing us how carefull all good Subjects ought to be of the ſafety of their Countrey, and how jealous that any ſhould ſpie the weakneſſe or nakedneſſe of the ſame to the hurt of it ever. Farre and farre unlike to ſuch unnaturall Runnagates, as are borne amongſt us, which daily and continually are diſcovering to the enemy our Ports and Creekes, our men and Munition, our ſtrength and weakneſſe, and whatſoever we have or may have that may hurt our ſelves, or profit our foes. But the reward of ſuch is with a juſt God that ever hated it ſince he made man. And for this preſent time me think we might thus profit by this place: that if Rulers and Governors be ſo carefull to keep covered the weakneſſe of the Land, leſt any advantage ſhould bee taken by the enemy, ſurely with like wiſedome and very godly diſcretion ſhould all particular men bee carefull carefull of their private wants and weakneſſe, their imperfections and infirmities, either to fortifie againſt them that they may ceaſe to be ſuch, or to keep them covered & warily hidden from advantage ſought, and to be taken by the adverſary. For this is fit, if we care for any thing, and no little good it would cauſe in time to the common truth. Many are too weake and wide open, if Satan ſailing and ſeeke a port, will enter there. And being thus weake and full of advantage, there is not that care that ought to be to prevent the ſame. Whereby we fall, and with us the cauſe that wee ſhould more tender than our ſelves. Be warned by this, and apply we the care of Governours in the land to our ſelves, and our amendment in this reſpect. We ſee it, good, and let a word ſuffice us.

5. They ſay to Ioſephs face that Ioſeph is dead. The yongeſt (ſay they) is with our Father, and one is not. What a blindneſſe is this? Face to face to ſpeake with a man, and yet not to know him. Marvell we not then if God ſo will that ſome ſee not the truth, that is yet preſent with them, and even under their eyes: For their darkneſſe is deepe whoſe eyes are blinded in the Lords judgement. When Chriſt ſpake to Mary, ſhe knew him ſtraight, but not before. So if Chriſt touch, we ſee full bright, but not before. That Ioſeph ſweareth by the life of Pharaoh, wee ſee the experience of pitch pitching the touchers of it. That he ſweareth againe the ſecond time, we ſee how eaſily ſinne entreth twice, where it hath entred once. And therefore learne to beware betimes, not giving entrance at all to that which is evill, if we can.

Verſ. 21. The force of affliction and trouble.

6 Then they acknowledged their tranſgreſſion when time was, againſt their brother Ioſeph, and ſaid one to another; We have verily ſinned againſt our brother, in that we ſaw the anguiſh of his ſoule, when he beſought us, and we would not heare him, therefore is this trouble come upon us. Shewing in themſelves by ſuch ſpeech, that force and fruit of trouble and affliction, even to make men acknowledge their faults, which otherwiſe ſlily they would diſſemble. Guiltineſſe in the heart and conſcience is fitly compared to a body laid in the grave, for as that ſleepeth and lyeth ſtill, but at laſt awaketh and riſeth againe: ſo doth guiltineſſe and ſinne, it awaketh, it awaketh, and biteth full ſore, that earſt lay ſtill, and was cleane forgotten. Proſperity lulleth and lappeth it up, but affliction rouſeth it, and unfoldeth it all. Ruben, as one that is alſo wounded, perfectly remembreth them of that which paſſed againſt their brother. Did not I warne you (ſaith he) not to ſinne againſt the childe, and ye would not heare; charging them in words as worſe than himſelfe, and yet touching himſelfe alſo very deep, who both conſented in the end, and kept counſell with them all this while. So uſe fellowes in ſinne to fall out amongſt themſelves, when filthy wickedneſſe hath touched them all. But why did hee wiſh them not to hurt the childe? The reaſon in him is very well knowne unto all, becauſe nature moved him, and the doing was bad. But the reaſon that I thinke of, might have beene this, and as yet may be in like caſe, becauſe children in time may be men, when wee may be reckoned withall for our doings. Then Ioſeph a child, was too weake for ten, but now Ioſeph a man is too ſtrong for ten. Therefore to uſe children whileſt they be young as well may bee anſwered when they bee men. There is a remembrance of the anguiſh that poore Ioſeph was in when hee beſought them. A circumſtance ſure that moveth a good heart very much, and moſt hard is the heart that yeeldeth nothing to teares and anguiſh of a troubled minde. Would God the ſighs and grievous groanes of our perplexed brethren moved us more. Wee ſhou'd more reſemble the God of pitie, and leſſe expreſſe the manners of theſe ſtony brethren. We know the truth of the ſaying moſt ſure, that hee wich wanteth mercy, of mercy ſhall miſſe, and hee ſhall have mercy that mercifull is. Yet grieve we the ſoules and wring the bodies both full hard and ſore of our Chriſtian brethren and neighbours by us. But marke theſe brethren of Ioſeph here, how now it pincheth their very inwards, that ever they were ſo cruell to their brother, eſpecially that they regarded him not, when in anguiſh and woe he beſought them of favour and better dealings. Verily ſo ſhall it us, if wee doe the like, cruſhing our brethren, and grinding their faces whom wee can overcome. And who knoweth the end of Gods wrath to ſuch bloody hardneſſe of heart? Againe, marke in theſe brethren the nature of a guilty conſcience, how it ſtill accuſeth, ſtill ſtirreth and ſtartleth within a man, and is alwayes galling his minde with bitter remembrance of the deed done. Eſpecially when any things doe chance or fall out croſſe, as here it did. Then it tormenteth it more within, then the affliction we doe ſuffer doth without, ſtill ſuggeſting in our mindes, that this befalleth us for ſuch a thing. So you ſee were theſe brethren now tormented, and beware wee by them. Laſt of all, that Ruben exhorted, and warned them when they did offend, and now juſtifyeth his warning given to their faces: may it not well remember us of the warnings given unto our ſelves by Preachers, and by Parents, by friends and well-willers of ſundry degrees? Is not Gods finger in it, that wee are thus warned? And ſhall not they alſo one day accuſe us certainly, as here Ruben doth, and witneſſe unto our faces, that they did admoniſh us, and we would not heare? Surely they ſhall: and wee cannot bee ignorant of it any way. Happy is the man then that hearkeneth willingly to all good admonitions, and yeeldeth to them. Ioſeph heareth this woefull Dialogue of his Brethren, but little knew they that either he was Ioſeph, or yet underſtood them: And hee turned (ſaith the Text) from them, them, that he might weepe. Shewing thereby (what I wiſh well noted) that a man poſſeſſed with Gods Spirit, hath pitty and mercy ever within, what face or faſhion ſoever he be forced to ſhew without. He ſpeaketh roughly like no brother for a time, but his affection is brotherly and moſt tender at all times. His words bee rough, but his meaning ſmooth; our words bee ſmooth and ſofter than oyle, when our mindes and meanings are rough and cruell. O contrary courſe, and therefore contrary end if we take not heed from Ioſeph here!

7. Ioſeph then taking Simeon a pledge that they ſhould returne, commandeth their ſackes to be filled with wheate, and every mans money to be put againe into their ſackes, with victuall given them for their journey. And why muſt the money be ſecretly put in their ſackes, and not openly given them to their hands? The reaſon was here that they might ſuſpect nothing, his time being not yet to reveale himſelfe. But we may truly learne by it this good leſſon, even to ſteale a benefit upon our brethren, doing them good without any trumpet blowne before us. Time ſhall ſerve to reveale what God will have knowne, and till then it is knowne to God, which is enough. We covet too much many of us the knowledge of men, when we doe them good, and if they ſee it not we will tell it, yea againe and againe, rather then it ſhould be ſecret and unknowne. But this marreth all, and thus loſe we love with men of skill, and all reward with God Almighty that hateth vain glory: Wherefore he ſaid it well that ſaid it: Si tanto ſtudio vitia noſtra abſcondimus, ne humanam gloriam amittamus: quanto majori cura diſſimulandæ vertutes cœleſtem gloriam amittamus: If ſo carefully we hide our faults leſt we ſhould loſe the praiſe of men: how much rather ſhould we cover and keepe ſecret our vertues leſt wee loſe the praiſe of God. For as well God is loſt with vaine publiſhing of our good deeds, as man by revealing of our evill deeds. A treaſure hidden is ſafer from theeves, and vertue covered is ſafer from Satan. The fruit that hangeth by the way ſide ſeldome ſtandeth till it be ripe, and vertue publiſhed before men for vain-glory ſake loſeth her beauty and deſerved praiſe, which kept more cloſe he had beene ſure of. To conclude, the Hen becauſe ſhee cackleth loſeth her egge, and cackling boaſters loſe their praiſe with God and man, which Ioſeph did not, being thus ſecret in his good.

8. Having all things ready, theſe brethren ſet forward to returne to their father, and being in their firſt Inne, one of them opening his ſacke to give his Aſſe provender eſpyed his money in his ſackes mouth, whereupon a great feare aroſe in them, and they were all aſtoniſhed, &c. Their Innes then differed much from ours, yeelding them no ſuch proviſion for their Cattell as ours doe, but faine every traveller was to carry for himſelfe: would God this benefit (the leaſt of ten thouſand that our Land affordeth us) might ſtir us up to be thankfull to God and to preſerve the peace and proſperity of the ſame to our beſt powers. They that have their buſineſſe in forren Countries know by experience the bleſſing that we have, and many times utter it in our eares, if our hearts had feeling of any good. If the word ſhould be urged, peradventure our bleſſing would greatly be amplified: for it forceth not that they were in any Inne at all, but onely abode in a place for the night ſeaſon, and there provendred their beaſts and refreſhed themſelves, having proviſion given for both. How Iacob lodged you remember before, and what a ſoft pillow he had of a hard ſtone under his head. Therefore look we more at the good of our Country, where every village almoſt yeeldeth comfortable reſt to a weary traveller. Their aſtoniſhment and feare, ſtill, ſtill declareth the gall of a wounded conſcience, which being in theſe brethren great and grievous, and accuſing them ſtill without any reſt, made them thinke that God would have brought them to ſome trouble by this money. Not to have therefore thy conſcience againſt thee, is to have a thouſand comforts with thee. Againe, it ſheweth how little good a multitude doth in diſtreſſe except God give counſell, and direct to comfort. For here are many, and yet all amazed at a matter not great, had they conſidered. Pray wee therefore in all perplexities to the Lord of counſell and wiſdome, and he will direct us aſſuredly, but truſt we nothing in numbers of men, for they cannot helpe. They feare againe where was cauſe of comfort had they knowne all: even ſo doe others to this day ſtill, and yet all is well in the end, when God openeth matters fully. Even in feares therefore comfort we our ſelves hereafter, and truſt in God, hoping the beſt in the end: their eye caſt upon God in this their perplexity, ſaying one another, What is this that God hath done to us, muſt make us avoid all drouſie dreames of Luck and Fortune, and ſee the Lords finger even in our adverſity: So did Iob, and ſo have all godly done from the beginning. The Lord it is that taketh as well as that giveth, and bleſſed muſt be his name of us in them both. The greatneſſe of their aſtoniſhment appeareth in this, that the reſt did not looke whether their money alſo were in their ſackes, but as all amazed are void of conſideration what to doe: when being come home their monies alſo were found likewiſe. The drift of good Ioſeph was not to feare either father or brethren, but to comfort them, and to provide for their comming againe, if haply money ſhould bee ſcarce. But what a good man doth to a good end, often by mens weakneſſe or waywardneſſe turneth otherwiſe.

Then Iacob cryed (and no doubt he cryed) yee have robbed, robbed me of my children, Ioſeph is not, Simeon is not, and Benjamin now ye will have alſo from me: all theſe things are againſt me. Alas good Iacob, thou knoweſt not yet how God will comfort thy heart ere long, and ſhew how all theſe things are for thee, but as yet the time is not. Therefore now doeſt thou ſhew, and let us learne the pangs and paſſions of naturall parents. Their children ſticke neare to the hearts of them, and with their adverſities they cannot jeſt, would God their children requited them ever. 10. Ruben ſteps in to appeaſe his father, and bids him ſlay his two ſonnes if he bring not Benjamin ſafe againe unto him. Why, the matter concerned no more Ruben than all the reſt. Wherefore then will he offer ſuch a pledge, not knowing how able he ſhould bee to performe? Surely Ruben regarded his fathers griefe, Simeons impriſonment in a ſtrange Countrey, and their credit to be cracked, with Simeons danger for ought he knoweth, if Benjamin goe not. Therefore learne by Rubens in our parents feares to be comfortable and hearty to bring them out, in our brethrens diſtreſſes not to be forgetfull, or yet formally mindfull, as ſpeaking and doing nothing earneſt and to effect in deed. But as Ruben, be earneſt, and impawne even thy credit to deliver effectually a brother and friend in a cauſe that is good: againe remember it tenderly, and approve it carefully by this example. Spies they were called, and more than once, ſent to eſpie the weakneſs of the land, for ſome evill purpoſe: nothing they knew, but it was in earneſt, and being not ſuch, Ruben is carefull to make it appeare by the courſe agreed upon, to wit, by returning with their youngeſt brother that they were no ſuch. So earneſt is hee in a manner of ſuppoſed trechery againſt a forren Countrey. O faithleſſe wretches then, that feare neither fame nor truth of treaſon, and trechery againſt their owne Country, but wiſh it, and will it, hunt it and ſeek for it, and being not able to become traitors ranke enough at home, runne over Sea to the Schoole-houſes and nurſeries of this damnable ſinne, that there they may receive as deepe a dye in this helliſh colour, as the Blackamoore hath of his naturall hue, whom all the water in the Sea cannot waſh white.

11. But ſay Ruben what he could, Iacob endureth not to part with his Benjamin, and therefore ſaith flatly, My ſonne ſhall not goe downe with you: for his brother is dead, and he is left alone, if death come to him by the way which ye goe, then yee ſhall bring my gray head with ſorrow to the grave. Perplexity ſeeth not by and by what is to bee done, and therefore Iacob yet denyeth, what after he yeeldeth unto. But why is Iacob ſo fond over Benjamin more than all the reſt, that if he die his gray head will follow after? Surely the affection that hee bare to the mother now dead maketh him love above all the reſt, the childe that he had by her. So love to the living ſheweth love to the dead, what it was when they lived. And would God it alwayes ſhewed as it ſhould. David loved Ionathan whileſt hee lived, and for his ſake he loved others, making open inquiry for any of his ſtocke, that hee might doe good unto for Jonathans ſake. I could ſay ſomething, if your thoughts themſelves could not reach farre enough in this matter. If want of love to the living, how want of love to the dead of whom theſe living came, judge in your hearts, without further ſpeech, what lives bē written in ſome foreheads, to their endleſſe ſhame, that they never loved whom God a duty bound them unto whilſt they lived. Iacob is not ſo, David was not ſo, never will any good one be ſo, and therefore beware. That Iacob mentioned his gray head, is greatly patheticall, and telleth us truly, that all parents are duely to be regarded, that they be not grieved, but the aged father or mother with lockes like Snow is moſt tenderly and dearly to be regarded. Whoſe heart then melteth not to ſee this old man thus making his moane, and if Benjamin die, he will die, and his gray head with griefe and woe ſhould follow his childe to the grave that he ſo loved. God give children ſome of this love.

Perplexity blind a while.

2 Sam. 9.

Love to the living ſheweth love to the dead.

CHAP. XLIII.

This Chapter containeth theſe heads eſpecially.

- Jacob is content to let Benjamin goe.
- Their ſecond comming to Joſeph.
- Their entertainment.

Verſe 1. Tryals of faith.

Touching the firſt, it is ſaid, the famine grew great, and what they brought from Ægypt was ſpent, whereupon old Jacob wiſhed them to returne, &c. Where wee ſtill muſt mark (what we noted before) how this godly Patriarke with all his houſhold, is alſo ſubjeſt to the famine, famine, yea to this great famine, wherein no doubt, notwithstanding this wheat from Ægypt, they were glad to eate hearbs, and roots, and berries, with many an hungry meale: yea even in that land are they thus distressed, wherin God hath promised to blesse both Iacob and his posterity: and was this thinke you no temptation to Iacob? Learne we then profitably by this example to stand stedfast in faith whatsoever fall out, and preparing our selves for the worst events, comfortably wait for an end joyfull, as here it was.

2. Could wee know certainly that hee would say, Bring your brother with you, &c. As if hee should have said, Wee answered but his questions of our kindred and brethren, not able to guesse before-hand what thereupon hee would inferre. Therefore speaking no more than wee were urged unto, wee are not to bee blamed for his illations. Truth it is, and may teach us daily to spare undeserved blame, that we use many times to bestow upon men. For so it is, that a man speaking as occasion justly moveth him, something is inferred that he never dreamed of, against his will. Wee may not lay this to the speakers charge, but leave it as a thing besides thought falling out, and excuse the guiltlesse. Verse 7. Inferences upon our speeches more than we thought of.

3. Then Iudah, another sonne of Iacobs, moveth his father to consent to the request of Ruben his brother made before, Benjamin to goe with them, and useth to this end some arguments, as first of necessity: That wee may live and not die, both wee, and thou, and our children. Secondly, from security, I will be surety for him, of my hand thou shalt require him, if I bring him not thee, and set him before thee, then let me bear the blame for ever. Lastly, à damno, of hinderance that commeth by stay: Except we had made this tarrying, doubtlesse by this wee had returned the second time. Then the father yeelded and said, If it must needs bee so, doe thus, &c. Where see and marke in Iacob a most godly course in extremity and danger, namely, to use all honest meanes to relieve our feare, and yet onely to trust in the God of heaven. Iacob sendeth the best fruits of the land, &c. But as his hold above all holds hee speaketh thus: God Almighty give you mercy in the sight of the man, &c. Then againe observe it in Iacob here, that in time he yeeldeth, and cannot resist, when God hath decreed it should bee so. Surely, so doe wee, and so must we, doe what we can. Startle we may and strive a while, as Iacob did here, utterly refusing, and utterly disliking to doe this or that, but if GOD have appointed it to be so, a time will come, that wee shall strive no longer, but say as Iacob said in this place: If so it must be, then so be it. Happy are they that yeeld soonest and strive least against that good which God hath appointed. Obstinacy was never constancy, nor wilfulnesse wit, as I have noted before. To change from evill to good, from errour to truth, from darknesse to light, was ever piety, when contrary course was sinfull obstinacy and the rod of God upon the ungodly. But O how hardly is this perswaded! So love we the thing we have loved long, that needs wee must cleave to our damnation, and thinke it holy. So have wee done, and our fathers long: O constant course! but you shall not doe as your fathers have done, saith the Lord. Verse 8. Verse 9. Vers. 10. Verse 11. The godly have ever a yeelding time to every good thing. Obstinacy is not constancy. Ezech. 18.

4. The truth of Iacob would also be observed, who willeth them to take double mony with them, lest haply the former was an error. This conscience want not onely theeves and robbers, and open offenders, but some that seeme honest, and are not the worst. Who can bee content to make an advantage of the error of over-sight, or mistaking of their neighbours, according to the common saying: See, spie, sport, &c. But if you spy not, good earnest, and swallowed up without any remorse at all. Thus did not Jacob, no, this hated Jacob, and all good men ever. God seeth, and God must judge me one day justly according to my workes. What profiteth then if my neighbour seeth not. Beware we therefore, and keepe cleane hands with a good conscience, that shall never be ashamed. Truth in all dealings.

5. Thus all things made ready, these brethren set on and come into Ægypt before Ioseph, who when he saw Benjamin was not a little glad: yet kept his owne counsell, and commanded his Steward to make ready for dinner, that they might dine with him. The Steward did so, and now when it was time he brought the men all to Iosephs house, who straight were afraid, and said to themselves, Because of the money that came in our sackes wee are brought hither that hee may picke a quarrell against us, &c. O filthy suspition! how blottest thou, and spottest thou even good men? Thus apt to misdeeme are these men. So was even Abraham in his time, when hee said, I thought the feare of God was not in this place, and that they would kill mee for my wife. So was old Heli, and misjudged Anna, that shee was drunke. Wherefore well said the Father, and full true, Quanti non dederunt locum errori, & dederunt suspitioni? What men have understood error, and given place to suspition? Suspitio calumniam parit: Suspition breedeth slaunder, and is the mother of it in time. Suspitio amicitiæ venenum: Suspition is the cut-throat of friendship and ever was. As hardly doth a good man suspect one to bee evill, so hardly doth an evill man imagine one to bee good. Againe, see how Joseph in a meaning so good is misjudged and ill thought of by those men. Then who can avoid this damnable suspition, or what can a man so well intend, which some will not construe quite awry? The man so good, the meaning so good, yet all suspected. Then God give grace Suspition. Gen. 20. 1 Sam. 1. Ambros. offic. Chrysost. in Matth.

to doe but well, and God give comfort againſt curſed miſdeemers, for they cannot be avoided, but will be doing.

Verſ. 26. A glaſſe for Children.

6. When Ioſeph came home they brought their preſents to him, and bowed downe to the ground before him, where ſee the dreame againe fully accompliſhed. Now is the yongeſt alſo with them, and all bowe. Then asked Ioſeph of their welfare, and by and by whether their father the old man was in health. Not forgetting I warrant you for any honour his old Father. This was a childe that had God in him, and this is a glaſſe for all children to behold themſelves in, who now adayes quickly forget their parents, if never ſo little wealth grow. But if honour alſo happen to come, O what ſhould we doe with our old Parents then? our high places may not thinke of ſuch meane people. But proud peacoke remember thy ſelfe, and behold here a man ſecond in the Kingdome to the King, a man honoured with all the honour that a mighty kingdome could afford, and yet his ſecond word is for his father, his old father, his deare father, and never is he well till he have him with him. Let Courtiers like or diſlike, his friends be his friends, and he will not deny them. God give children ſuch hearts.

Gods mercy maketh a mans heart to melt.

7. Then Ioſeph turned to his yongeſt brother Benjamin, his brother wholly by father and mother, (for Rachel bare both Ioſeph and Benjamin) and Ioſeph bleſſed him, with that, not able to goe any further his heart ſo melted upon his brother, but turned aſide to weepe awhile. See teares by Gods mercies. Himſelfe delivered from danger and priſon, exalted highly to great honour, his father alive and in good health, his brethren before him, and Benjamin with him, what mercies are theſe? No marvell then if a good man ſeeing ſo ſweet a God bee moved to teares in a ſweet feeling. And thinke of your ſelfe, If never wet eye hath ſhewed any feeling heart, have you not been dull? Certainly mercy in a gracious God wringeth out teares from a feeling Childe, when neither fire nor ſword can get them out. The one we overcome by faith aſſiſted, but the other quite overcommeth us being ſweet and comfortable above all deſert. Then Lord give feeling.

Want no affections but yet cover them ſometimes.

A ſtate may be maintained lawfully.

8. When Ioſeph had eaſed his heart by his tender weeping, forth he came to dine with them. But they prepared for him by himſelfe, and for them by themſelves, ſaith the Text: which being done to ſhew his dignity, it teacheth us our liberty in this reſpect. What God vouchſafeth may be uſed without pride or blame, or any offence. And as great a fault is an abject minde to go too low, as an ignorant and haughty to goe too high. Dauid exalted, maintained his ſtate though a poore mans childe. Daniel preferred, knoweth his liberty and doth the like. Eſter again, with many moe. So God be honoured as the giver, and meaſure obſerved in his feare, have honour and uſe honour, have ſtate and uſe ſtate, according to the place you live in lawfully, behold Ioſeph here and all the reſt.

Verſe 32. Hypocrites be better ever in their owne eies then others.

9. The Ægyptians might not eate bread with the Ebrewes, for that was an abomination unto the Ægyptians: by what law? Surely by the law of conceited Hypocrites, imagining themſelves to be better than other, that indeed are farre and farre better than themſelves. Such law ruleth ſtill where in law it ought not, to their ſhame be it ſpoken that are ſo lawleſſe: and who now is defiled with Church meetings, with prayers and Sacraments celebrated duly, but he or ſhe that indeed is more vile, if all were knowne, than any or many that are yet deſpiſed as unworthy ones. To eate or drinke with us poore Ebrewes not at Ioſephs table, but at the Lords table were no abomination to theſe Ægyptians of whom I ſpeake, when living without a vocation by other mens labours, and at other mens tables, when hard and extreame dealing in buying and ſelling, when keeping commodities for a greater price, as Barley or Mault, or the like, till they be caſt away, when cenſuring Magiſtrates and Miniſters with Corah his countenance, yea (ſhall I ſay) when filthineſſe and ſinne ſundry wayes, is ſwallowed and accounted not ſo great an offence as to come to Church. But let theſe Ægyptians know the Lord ruleth, who hath choſen theſe deſpiſed Ebrewes to be his people, when they and theirs ſhall periſh in the red ſea of everlaſting fire. Abhorre we then heartily ſuch damnable hypocriſie. Say we to no man in this proud ſpirit, Stand apart, I am holyer than thou, touch not, handle not, &c. but modeſtly thinke we every man better than our ſelves, and of all ſinners, with the Apoſtle Paul, let us thinke our ſelves the greateſt. So ſhall God exalt who humble themſelves unfainedly, and proud Phariſees ſhall be caſt downe. But why did not Ioſeph reforme this faſhion ſo foule in the Ægyptians, and ſo greatly in diſgrace not only of others, but of theſe his owne brethren and friends? Surely becauſe he could not. And ſee here his wiſdome, what hee could not reforme, he endureth without contention, being nothing prejudiciall to the piety of him or his brethren, though to their worldly diſgrace. Such wiſdome, ſuch ſpirit, ſuch patience and diſcretion, O how ſhould it ſchoole us, and teach us to abhorre the contrary? We ſeek not peace, neither enſure after it, when wilfully we wrangle about every trifle, and place life and death in every ceremony. Fathers of the Church have done farre otherwiſe, if we remember them, and even the Apoſtle himſelf denyeth ſuch cuſtome in a Church of God. But I have elſewhere touched this more at large.

1 Tim. 1. 15.

10. Then

10. Then they tooke messes from before Ioseph, and sent unto them. See not only kindnesse in Ioseph to his brethren, but a figure and type of Christ Jesus to his brethren, who bountifully and mercifully set messes before them, being unknowne unto them, of life and salvation. How then may he never forget them that know him and love him, feare him, and serve him with a perfect heart and a willing minde? Never, never shall he faile them, but as here is said of Benjamin, five times greater shall he make their messes than any others. That is, where any mercy is vouchsafed unto those that know him not, many shall they have that duely serve him as their God. But was Benjamins messe thus increased more than the rest? O how hardly then may love bee smoothered altogether? It cannot, doe what you can, but one way or other it will peepe out, much like a candle that inclosed fast in some house or prison, shineth through the chinkes of the doore or walls, and will not be hid. Love will creep where it cannot goe, (saith the olde Proverbe) and amongst others it may have even this sense, that wholly and fully it will not bee hidden, but if it may not appeare in full strength for some purposes, yet glimmering it will bee through one chink or another, that it may be spyed. How then may we thinke of Christian love and charity, when naturall love is of this kinde? Verily what nature may worke in a naturall man, Gods holy Spirit much more effecteth in the spirituall man. Then no fruits of love, no love, and small fruits, small love. Examine we our selves by this rule, our charity to our Christian brethren were it any thing in us, by one way or other it will appeare as here did Iosephs. Yet his brethren observed it not, as little thinking he was Ioseph: and if our love tokens be not ever seene of those that thinke not of us as we are, it is but like this, and it may not grieve us. Ioseph will be knowne ere it be long, and then all these tokens will be remembred, So we againe: But I goe no further, let this suffice.

Verse 34. Love cannot be hid. A Type of Christ.

A servants comfort amongst others.

CHAP. XLIV.

Two things especially hath this Chapter, and they are these.

{ Iudah his oration for Benjamin.

TOuching the first, we are to understand that Ioseph was desirous to make tryall of his brethrens affection towards Benjamin, thinking peradventure they envyed him as they had done himselfe before: where we may see and learne, how even good men are hardly induced to thinke well of those whose behaviour before they have knowne to be bad. Therefore stand we stedfast in a good course, lest haply our fall make all our whole life after halfe suspected. Credit, and honour, and honesty is soone lost, but not soone gained againe when once it is lost. The meanes that Ioseph used, was a commandement to his steward to put his owne cup in Benjamins sack, &c. which may not be a warrant to us to use any unlawfull practises, seeing God hath commanded us to walke in simplicity: of like in Joseph this was some particular motion for which he might have warrant. It seemeth by the Text the cup was silver, and then how that might be, his honour being so great, may be a question. Whereunto we may answer that peradventure that age was more temperate in plate and pompe than this of ours: againe, though it were but silver, yet might the ingraving and workmanship be very costly. What also if Joseph but newly exalted, wisely and discreetly moderated his course, lest spite and envy (a weede in Court growing very much) might worke him woe being but a stranger. Increase one may with credit well, but to strike saile with worldly mindes can never want scorne and scoffing taunt.

Credit once cracked is hardly recovered.

A moderation in pompe and port of plate, &c.

2. That Joseph taketh upon him to be a Diviner, it sheweth the little spots that are in the fairest faces, and may not bee followed: but let us rather stand now and see the poore mens plea when Josephs steward overtooke them, and laid the cup to their charge. Alas say they, why doth my Lord say so, GOD forbid that thy servants should doe so, &c. But how doe they prove themselves honest and true? First, à detestatione peccati: God forbid we should be such, as if they had said, it were not right, it were not good, and thy servants (though poore men) have a care of right, and what may become them. Secondly, à repugnantibus, of things contrary in some sort one to another. Behold (say they) wee brought our money againe, how then should wee steale? &c. these things being crosse and contrary one to another in some sort. Lastly, ab incommodo, by the detriment they are content to endure. With whomsoever of thy servants it is found, let him die the death, and wee also will bee my Lords servants. So stiffely stood they upon their truth, and so bold is truth before all men ever. But yet see a defect, though bold they might bee being true men, yet wise and not rash must innocency make men. They rashly said, with whom it is found let him die: but they should have added, being stollen

Verse 7. The best men have imperfections.

Be bold, but wary in justifying your selfe.

by the party, and of knowledge taken. For want of which warineſſe we ſee their danger, had not things beene as they were. Therefore thus much let us learne, and not ſtand upon it, that in the middeſt of our beſt integrity and upright courſe, yet wee uſe no unadviſed ſpeeches, neither give any needleſſe advantage, but warily ſpeaking avow our truth, and ſo abide the triall.

A patterne of the fading comfort of this world.

3. This offer of theirs was thus far taken of the Steward, that he with whom the cup ſhould be found ſhould become ſervant, and the reſt ſhould be blameleſſe. Then fell they to ſearching, beginning at the eldeſt, and behold, in Benjamins ſacke the youngeſt of all, is the cup found. Then they were abaſhed, they rent their clothes, they laded their aſſes, and backe againe gat they to the City to Ioſeph for mercy. Who ſeeth not here as it were a patterne of this brittle worlds comfort? Yeſterday theſe men were bidden to dinner, feaſted and much made of at the Governours table, yea the ſame day in the morning with comfort and gladneſſe they laded away and all was well: but behold now another hue, all is changed and changed greatly, their clothes rent, their hearts heavy, and nothing but danger and death before their faces. Such is this world, and the fickle fading comforts of it. To day we laugh, to morrow we weepe; to day we flouriſh, to morrow we fall; nay even in the turning of a hand our eſtate is turned as theſe mens was; Poſt imbres fluctus, poſt maxima gaudia luctus, Raine brings floods, and joy brings woe, ſorrow followes comfort, too oft we ſee it ſo. Being come to the preſence of Ioſeph againe, they fell before him with heavy hearts, wee may well thinke, and the rather may wee thinke it becauſe there is no mention of any words uſed by and by, by them, but that they only fell before him upon the ground. Surely their feare and ſorrow within bereaved them of ſpeech for a while, and ſo doth it uſe. Remember Anna whoſe heart oppreſſed, as it were with anguiſh and griefe, tooke ſpeech from tongue, and ſpake by ſignes. Remember the Shunamite againe falling at the Prophets feet, and not able to ſpeake. Such was the caſe of theſe men, by humble geſture, and falling downe they ſue for mercy not able to ſpeake: yet at laſt they ſpake, God knowes with paſſions, with teares and lamentation, with ſobbings and ſighings to ſee their caſe (as Luther noteth.) They ſay, they can ſay nothing, the thing is found with them, and what ſhould they ſay? His ſervants they muſt be, and abide his pleaſure. But Ioſeph would not ſo, having his affection but upon Benjamin only. Then Iudah drew neere and told him the whole ſtory that here you ſee, how hardly their father parted with Benjamin, what promiſe was made to returne him ſafe, and how lamentable would be their olde fathers caſe if they ſhould faile. Therefore whoſoever tarrieth, he muſt goe or his father die: For his life depended upon the childe. Where I marke againe the reverence of age in thoſe blinde dayes, if their light be compared with ours: Before there was mention of his gray head, and now here is mention againe of the ſame to move pity and regard in Ioſeph towards him. Let it ever be honourable then as it ought, old age, and let hoary head worke all regard in the beſt minde ſtill and ever. But then againe let old men be alſo admoniſhed to remember well the old verſes concerning this.

Verſ.14.

1 Sam.1.13.
1 King.4.27.

Sæpè nigrum cor eſt, caput album, ſed quibus album
Et caput & cor eſt, ſint in honore ſenes.

To confeſſe is better than to excuſe.

White heads ſhould have white hearts.

Often is the heart black, and the head white, but who ſo have both white hearts and white heads, thoſe old men are honourable indeed and to be regarded. The vehement affection of old Iacob to his ſon Benjamin hath often beene noted, and yet here againe is laid downe in large manner, Iudah refuſeth to ſee his face any more, rather than to go without the childe: yea to redeeme the childe that he might returne to his father, he offereth himſelfe a ſervant for ever in a ſtrange country, which never would he have done, but that he knew his fathers life depended upon the childe. Unſpeakable therefore is a Parents affection ſometimes where it is ſetled. Doe we thinke Ioſephs heart was not turned up and downe in his body, whileſt he heard and ſaw theſe things? Yes, yes, the next Chapter will ſhew he could hold no longer. Such ſorow, ſuch weeping, ſuch ſighing and ſobbing in all his brethren, ſuch feare in their hearts to loſe Benjamin, ſuch mentioning of his fathers love to the Childe of his mother that was now dead, and the rather becauſe he the other brother by that woman was accounted dead. Theſe things I ſay were darts and daggers to pierce Ioſephs heart, and he could no longer hold but confeſſe his name.

Ioſeph not able to hold any longer.

CHAP. XLV.

The heads of this Chapter are these.

{ Joseph's manifestation of himselfe to his brethren.
Pharaohs Princely clemency when he heard of it.
Jacobs dancing heart when they came home, and told him that Joseph lived.

NOw are wee come to that which wee long have looked for, Ioseph to bee knowne unto his Brethren. Wherein first it is said, Ioseph could not refraine himselfe before all that stood by him, but cryed, Have forth every man from mee, not that hee was ashamed of his kindred, but that hee would cover his brethrens fault: then wept he and cryed so aboundantly, that the Ægyptians heard, and the house of Pharaoh also heard. Bridled then may bee affection a while, but when the banke breaketh, the streame is strong, and who can then stop the course againe a while? Yet see a care of his brethrens name, even in the middest of his pang, and till all were gone he would not touch them. Such wisedome, such government, and such discretion is most gracious whersoever it is: and would GOD wee might ever bee beautified with it. Let love bee seene, and let sorrow shew, but remember ever time and place. Then cryed Ioseph, I am Ioseph, I am Ioseph, doth my father live? As if he should have said, feare no longer my deare brethren, neither bee dismayed, it is Ioseph your brother that hath thus dallied with you, Ioseph your brother, your owne flesh and blood, and no other. I am Ioseph I tell you, even Ioseph your brother, and cast feare away. Doth my Father live? But his brethren amazed, could not answer a word, they were starke dumbe. O mighty GOD! what a change is here? Such ends to sorrowes can GOD give when it pleaseth him, and let all flesh give glory to him. Againe, see a type of the Lord our GOD, which may bee comfortable. Hee checketh us, and snubbeth us, hee bindeth and imprisoneth us, that is, hee imposeth upon us sundry afflictions, as Ioseph did upon these his brethren, and when hee hath tryed us to his good pleasure, wee thinking of this man and that man, of this malice, and that malice against us, fearing, and dismayed almost altogether, in the end hee can hold no longer, but that bottomlesse mercy of his breaketh out, and with bowels of love hee cryeth unto us, It is I, it is I, I am Ioseph your brother, that is, CHRIST your Saviour, your GOD and your LORD, that have not spared mine owne life, but have given it for you: be not afraid, be not afraid, but plucke up your hearts and rejoyce, your sorrow is ended, and your tryall finished, I will bee a brother to you, and no worse for ever. It is I, it is I: so sweet is the end in time of the troubles and tryals of Gods children. Even as upon the sea, when hee walked, and his Disciples feared, hee cryed, It is I, bee not afraid, bee of good comfort. Come neare unto mee saith Ioseph, and come neare unto me saith CHRIST: yea, Come unto mee all yee that travell and are heavy laden, and I will refresh you. So againe in his day of judgement, Come yee blessed of my Father, come, come, I am Ioseph your brother, &c. which kindnesse in him both heaven and earth shall heare then, as Pharaoh his house heard now of Ioseph. So fitteth the figure to our Saviour.

Verse 1. Affection restrained if it breake out is violent.

Isay 40.2.

Mat. 14.27. Iohn 14. I will manifest my selfe unto him.

2. Now therefore be not sad, neither grieve with your selves, that ye sold mee, for God sent mee before you for your preservation, &c. This comfortable speaking of Joseph to his brethren must teach us by all meanes to comfort them which are truely humbled and wounded for their sinnes. Reade Bernards Sermon of Mary Magdalen, and see how good men deale with offenders that bee sorry. The ascribing of his comming into Ægypt to God, teacheth us to distinguish betwixt Gods finger and mans malice in the selfe-same action, for they differ greatly, the one being sinfull to an evill end, the other being gracious and mercifull ever for good. In Iobs affliction God had his finger, and Satan but his wish, but Satan maliciously, God most mercifully directed to his glory, and to Iobs good. So the crucifying of our Saviour, and the afflictions of his children evermore. Therefore it followeth not, that if wee say, such things be of God, by and by it should be concluded, that he is Author of evill. You see the difference, and remember S. Austin, God would never suffer evill to be done, except he were able out of evill to draw good. The Land of Ægypt yeelded this comfort, that the posterity of Iacob, according to Gods purpose, might bee preserved in the same. Therefore the godly are not burdensome to a countrey, but a countrey is blessed that it may relieve them, and the inhabitants enjoy for them such mercy, as peradventure without them they should never have. So happily even this Land wherein wee live for the poore exiles of Gods flocke, and we may doe well to thinke of it, to stay all grudging.

Verse 5. Comfortable to the grieved.

Tom. 3. Enchyridion. c. 100.

3. That Ioseph calleth this deliverance a great deliverance, being but from famine and bodily death

Vers. 7.

Great deliverances.

death, it may fitly move us to thinke of our deliverance from hell, death and devill, by Jesus Christ, in the bottomlesse love of our most gracious Father: and from ignorance, superstition and Popery, from fire and faggot with most bloody cruelty, by a dread and deare, a milde and mercifull Soveraigne of GOD, for this purpose given unto us, and placed over us. O what deliverances bee these! and how should wee feele them within, and publish them without day and night, to the praise of GOD the fountaine of all, and the honour of all his annointed, and appointed meanes for ever? The Grecians delivered but from bodily servitude, called their deliverer a Saviour to them, and rang it out, Saviour, Saviour, that the fowles in the ayre fell dead downe with the cry. Much more, much more then tenne thousand times, may wee call the Lords annoynted a Saviour unto us. GOD give feeling, which I feare we want.

Plutarch in the life of Flam.

Verse 9.
Friends to bee near a comfort Psal.75.
Vers. 10.

4 Then biddeth hee his brethren, goe tell his Father what honour God had given him in the Land of Ægypt, making God the fountaine of his preferment, like a thankfull man, and not worldly meanes, like the graceless hearts of these times. Promotion commeth neither from East nor West, from North nor South, but God raiseth up and setteth with Princes, even with the Princes of his people. That Ioseph would have his father neare him, it noteth the comfort that is comfort indeed if God vouchsafe it, friends to bee neare one to another. And that he promiseth to nourish both him and his may not be forgotten, but for ever teach us, that if the Lord vouchsafe us any thing in this world, our parents portion should be therein, with offer of us, before demand of theirs, and all comfortable countenance unto the end. Yea see, if Ioseph bee not even earnest and greedy to have this comfort derived to his father from him, and verily there is no more pleasure or sweet comfort to a good vertuous child than to doe good unto his parents according to the power that God hath given. Fie of all filthy natures then too visible daily before our faces in this accursed and dangerous time, that being both rich and wealthy, warme and well furnished with all comforts, suffer not onely other friends in kindred neare them (to say nothing of the naked members of Christ) but even their parents that bred and bare them, to suffer both hunger and cold, need and misery, to their utter shame. Thus did not Ioseph, and let us marke it.

Verse 11.
Parents to bee nourished, if the childe bee a Joseph.

The godly bee full of kindnes and grace.

5 Then fell hee upon his brother Bejamins necke and wept, and Benjamin upon his necke. Moreover he kissed all his brethren and wept upon them, &c. See the bowels of men indued with Gods Spirit, they are full of love, full of affection, full of grace, and full of goodnesse, when clubby churles have iron hearts and brasen bowels as farre from sweetnesse outward towards any friends, as from holy feeling inward towards God. O where are these natures become now a dayes that was in Ioseph? Wee, when our friends come to us have a formall shew, but for this heate and heartinesse, this life and power of love that was in Ioseph, alas it is gone, and that makes us strangers one to another: but I say no more. You see here by Ioseph the godly to be no Stoicks, nor they bee not flinty Nabals towards any, but full of affection to their friends. Yea, though their friends have wronged them as these had Ioseph, yet all is forgotten and blotted out when once they meete. Now the GOD of love, worke more of this love amongst us daily.

Verse 16.
Gods power over mens hearts.

Prov. 21.

Theese Courtiers despise not a worthy man for his poore friends, &c.

6 The tydings of this meeting came unto Pharaohs eare, and the Text saith, it pleased Pharaoh well and his servants: where wee see the power of God still for his servants, to give them favour in the hearts, and eares, and eyes of any mortall men whatsoever, whose ministery it shall please him to use to the relieve, comfort, or countenance of any of them. Hee ruleth poore and rich, meane and mighty to his childrens comfort when he will, yea even the Princes have their hearts in his hand, and hee turneth them as the rivers of water at his will. Wee heard in the former Chapter, that for the Ægyptians to eate bread with the Hebrewes was an abomination to the Ægyptians, yet see now even the King and his Courtiers most favourably bent to these despised Hebrewes. So powerfull I say is God over all hearts when hee will, and who may not be comforted with it? Nay, see more, not onely the King is favourably inclined to them, but most extraordinarily regardeth them, calling for Ioseph, and giving him commandement to dispatch his brethren away with their lading, and to give them in charge to bring their father and families wholly unto him, and he would give them, not some waste part of the Land, but the very best of the Land, and they should eate of the fat of it. Hee furthermore willeth, that Charets be taken out of Ægypt for their children and wives, and that they should not passe for their stuffe, for he would provide for them. See therefore the power of God, not to provide small things for his children, but even thus farre to move the King, that he thinketh of the very best of the land for them. And see in the King a most Princely minde, being (where hee is good) most bountifully good. A vertue ever worth great commendation. In farre meaner personages it may have his effect in a measure. They also doing good for their degrees liberally, heartily and throughly, not sparingly and pinchingly. Againe, wee may see the use of charets in those dayes, for necessity, not for pompe and pride, where the journey is small, the way easie, and the body strong. That use then warranted them, and such use now condemneth them, if it bee be ſo. Let therefore neceſſity have her lawfull helps, but let not pride and vanity bee cheriſhed and maintained. Laſtly, in the King it was moſt honorable ſo to love his true ſervant, that for his ſake he loved all his friends; yea not onely loved them, but thus loved them, that he would be a father to them and theirs in this meaſure, and in this extremity of famine and dearth. Happy Ioſeph, whoſe faithfull ſervice found ſo gracious regard, and worthy Pharaoh of a faithfull ſervant, as ever was any Prince that we may reade of.

7. Then did Ioſeph carefully diſpatch them according to the Kings commandement, and ſent unto his Father alſo great comforts elſe, as you ſee in the Text; with all which proviſion they come to their father home ſafe, and well every one of them, and as all afire with the comfort of their tydings, they tell their father, Ioſeph is yet alive, ſpeaking, as it ſhould ſeeme, even all together, leſt any ſhould prevent another in ſo ſweet newes. Abruptly alſo and haſtily their ſpeech ſeemeth to have beene made, which argueth the heate of their hearts, and their affections all troubled with theſe ſtrange events. Iacob, a good man, on the other ſide hearing theſe words, betwixt hope and feare, is all daunted and amazed, ſo that his heart failed (ſaith the Text) God knew his heart, when he heard of Ioſeph to live, and yet afraid he is, leſt ſo ſweet a tyding ſhould not be true. Even as uſually ſtill we ſee it fall out, that happy newes are hardly credited, or feare of the proverbe, Too good to be true. But when he ſaw the Charrets that Ioſeph had ſent to carry him, then the ſpirit of Iacob revived. Such aſſurance have deeds above words alwayes. The phraſe of his ſpirit reviving, may put us in minde of the effect of ſorrow, even killing as it were the hearts and mindes, and ſpirits of men, as alſo of the nature of comfort and joy, to revive againe what ſorrow ſo had daunted and even overcome.

Tarda ſolet magnis rebus ineſſe fides.

8. Then Iacob ſaid, I have enough that Ioſeph my ſonne is yet alive, never making any mention of his honour, where a man would have thought he ſhould have gloried in that. No, no, the life of his childe is that, which cheareth him above the whole world, and therefore of that he ſpeaketh. Teaching us, that naturall parents doe greatly joy to have their children living, though they have no honour nor dignity in the world: Yet not unthankfull to God, if that alſo be added, as Iacob aſſuredly was not here. Would God children were in like ſort affected to them againe, joying in their lives and healthes more than in honours, or worldly poſſeſſions that they are endued withall, bee they never ſo great. Surely both duty and nature would it, if God were in us. Then ſaid Iacob, I will goe downe and ſee him yet ere I die. Teaching us the nature of faithfull love, it coveteth ſight, and comfortable ſociety in the preſence of thoſe, whom in heart and minde we doe both love and affect, and contenteth not it ſelfe wholly with hearing that they are alive. Such long and liking abſence then of Parents from children and children from parents, and one friend from another, ſheweth frozen affection, if not all dryed up and quite decayed. Iacob was now about a hundred and thirty yeares old, and yet hee will take this long journey to ſee his Childe, cutting the throate by this his example, of all ſuch ſilly excuſes as wee uſe to keepe our ſelves out of anothers company. Surely love will creepe, if it cannot goe, and tender affection by one meanes or other will ſhew it ſelfe. If ſo great an age, ſo long a journey, ſo many difficulties, as might have beene objected in this remove, cannot hinder Iacob, what can hinder the heart that loveth, from ſometimes viſiting his affected friends, and bleſſing God even together for his given comforts? Here is then a ſweet alteration of Iacobs eſtate, and even ſuddenly. So ſweet is God.

Friends ſhould meet together.

CHAP. XLVI.

Then followeth this Chapter, wherein wee have laid downe:

The preparation of this old man, with all his to his journey.
The manner of their going.
The number of perſons that went.
And how they were all received in Ægypt.

THen Iſrael tooke his journey (ſaith the Story) with all that he had, and came to Beerſheba, and offered ſacrifice unto the God of his father Iſaac. Whereby he ſignified, that with moſt thankfull heart he ſaw the great goodneſſe of God towards both him and his, and that he kept in his breaſt the poſſeſſions of that land from whence preſent neceſſity drove him. Yea by this example hee moſt effectually taught, that both journeyes, and all other buſineſſe whatſoever, ſhould be undertaken with prayer and ſervice of God. Since a good beginning hath a good end following in Gods gracious bleſſing. Verſe 1.

2. Then God ſpake unto him in a viſion by night, &c. Where we ſee and learne that never commeth meth man or woman to the Lord in true duty, but he is ready to give eare, and to anſwer in unſpeakable mercy. Iacob in all likelihood had beſought God to proſper his journey, and to be his protection againſt all dangers, and the Lord is ready to aſſure him of his deſire with moſt ſweet comfort. Follow we then Iacobs practice, and expect in faith, not wavering, Iacobs bleſſing.

Gods children are ready to heare when their father ſpeaketh. Thinke of this

3. No ſooner had God ſaid, Iacob, Iacob, but hee anſwered and ſaid, I am here, being preſt and ready with all reverent attention, to heare what his God ſhould ſay unto him, and to follow the ſame with all faithfull obedience. Such readineſſe becommeth Gods children well, even at this day in the Church where God ſpeaketh; and with that heart, to come and to ſit downe, is a holy obedience to the Lord, thinking with my ſelfe in this ſort: O Lord, this is thine ordinance, by thy Word preached to inſtruct thy people of thy will. Here Lord then am I in all humble feare to heare thy bleſſed pleaſure, what this day it ſhall pleaſe thee to put in the mouth of thy ſervant, the Miniſter by whom thou ſpeakeſt to us, to deliver: Lord guide him, and Lord frame mee to all profit and good in this thing: Here I am, therefore ſpeake on Lord, thy ſervant heareth. This cannot they ſay, that dull and dead in their inward feeling, eſteeme of the Miniſtery of the Word, as of a matter of courſe and humane policy, to keepe people in obedience, and no otherwiſe: therefore abſenting themſelves from it, and ſeldome or never ſetting themſelves in this holy manner, to heare the Lord ſpeake his good pleaſure to them. But let us be wiſe and learne of Jacob, if they will be wilfull and witleſſe both, what remedy? I am here Lord, is a ſpeech for a childe of God, When I am in the fields with my cattell, in my houſe with my coffer, or in the Taverne with my like, is a ſpeech of a wicked worldling, that ſavoureth not the things which are of God, as one day they ſhall know, when it may bee too late to repent their folly, and to call againe yeſterday. That God that is able, rent our hearts and give us feeling, I beſeech him.

Abſence from Church.

Verſe 3. The ſweet care of God for his children.

4. Then ſaid the Lord, I am God, the God of thy Father, feare not to goe downe into Ægypt, for I will there make of thee a great Nation. I will goe downe with thee into Ægypt, and will alſo bring thee backe againe, &c. Here is the mercy of a ſweet God, here is the ſtaffe and ſtay of all godly hearts. Mercy, that thus ſweetly he would comfort his old ſervant now worne and wearied with a wicked world, aſſuring him of his hand, favour, and helpe in all this journey, then the which what could the heart of a man wiſh more? The ſtay of all men in their buſineſſe whatſoever, even the Lord, the Lord, and none but the Lord. For marke, I pray you, how God draweth Jacobs eyes from looking upon Iosephs honor and credit in the Land whither now hee was going, or yet upon the King, that ſo graciouſly had commanded to ſend for them; and his heart from truſting in theſe things, unto himſelfe and his protection, providence and power, ſaying, I will goe with thee, and I will bring thee thither, and backe againe, in thy poſterity: as if he ſhould have ſaid, This is thy ſafety, this is thy ſtay and ſtaffe that will hold, my preſence with thee, and my providence for thee, not thy ſonnes great honor, though indeed it be great, nor yet the Kings favour, though indeed very gracious. If we have eares to heare, then let us heare, and whatſoever comforts God granteth us in this world, of friends or children, yea of Princes themſelves, yet let our anker-hold be the Lord, and none but he, knowing that with him theſe comforts ſhall profit us, and without him faile us, as moſt fickle and uncertaine things, even haply then when we would be moſt glad to enjoy and have them: I, I will be with thee, is a word of truſt, and let it ever be looked to of us.

The true ſtay of a man ever.

To cloſe the eyes of our dead friends.

5. Further goeth the Lord with Jacob, and telleth him that Joſeph ſhould put his hand upon his eyes: that is, cloſe up his eyes when he dyed. Where we learne the cuſtome of thoſe times to have commited this matter to the chiefe of the kindred, or to one that was moſt deare to the party dying: whereas wee now adayes referre it over to ſome old woman, and hard-hearted keepers, void of love, void of affection, and oftentimes void of honeſty and good dealing; either in this or other things concerning the keeping of ſicke folkes, we our ſelves being ſo tender, ſo weake, or rather indeed wanton and forgetfull of true love and duty, that wee cannot abide to be preſent to the end with thoſe that have beene preſent with us in our comfort, but give them over, and forſake them unkindly, when we ſhould ſhew them our laſt love and office with a faithfull heart, taking ſuch Chriſtian courage to us in that reſpect, as is needfull. We may amend this fault by this example, and remember it ever, that God maketh it a matter of account here, that Jacob ſhould receive this comfort alſo, even to have Joſeph his ſonne to cloſe his eyes. Then what God reckoneth of, we may not thinke lightly of, neither wilfully nor careleſly withdraw that from them, whom we ought to comfort with all due and good duties, which God himſelfe accounteth a comfort to the father, and a duty to the childe. It is expreſly ſaid of young Tobias, that he buried his father and mother very decently, and comely, and orderly, when they were dead, that even by him alſo we might thinke of theſe laſt duties, and not careleſly commit them over to others, whileſt wee greedily and beaſtly regard their worldly goods they leave behinde them, as too many doe.

Verſ. 5.

6. In this Chapter followeth the manner of their going, and the perſons that went, whereof I need not to ſtand, only we muſt know, that the perſons are numbred, and the number noted, that the the accompliſhing of Gods promiſe might appeare but even now noted, that in Ægypt hee would make of him a great Nation. The perſons that went here, were in all but threeſcore and ten: the perſons that returned when God delivered them out of Ægypt, were ſixe hundred thouſand men of foote, beſide children. Great therefore was the bleſſing of increaſe in this people, and true was the Lord in his word to Iacob. As true was he ever, and ever will be in all his promiſes to his ſervants. I come to the laſt point, which was their entertainment in the land of Ægypt when they came. Ioſeph (ſaith the Text) having intelligence of his fathers comming by Iudah his brother, ſent unto him for that purpoſe made ready, his Charet, and went up to Goſhen to meet Iſrael his father, and preſented himſelfe unto him. No honour then nor preferment ever ſo high can make Ioſeph forget his duty to his aged father, but honour him hee will unto his end as a dutifull childe, that by him to the worlds end all children might learne to doe the like. What was that that Salomon did to his mother, when he roſe to meet her, bowed himſelfe unto her, called for a ſtoole, and placed her on his right hand, but even a patterne of like grace and dutie in a vertuous childe. When Ioſeph was come unto his father, ô the fountaines of affection! how were they broken up both in father and ſonne? There was a craſping and cleaving one to another, weeping and wringing for joy and comfort, that hardly with dry eyes any preſent could behold them. Ioſeph fell upon his fathers necke, and wept upon the ſame a good while, not able to ſpeake, till his heart was eaſed by a ſtreame of teares. And doe you thinke the father not wept to behold his ſon? The ſonne of his love, the ſonne of his deſires, whom ſo darely he had bewailed, as one rent in peeces with ſome wilde beaſt, and now ſaw with his eyes to be alive, and not onely ſo, but in ſuch honour as to him and his he might bee a father? GOD knew his heart full of affection, and what Rachel his mothers heart would have beene if ſhe had lived to ſee this day. Well, both of them weepe out of all queſtion abundantly, yet Jacob the father getteth the victory over his paſſions firſt, and ſpeaketh to Ioſeph: but how ſpeaketh he? I warrant you, his words, both for forme and matter, ſavour of affection alſo. Now (ſaith he) let mee die, ſince I have ſeene thy face, and that thou art yet alive. What is this but heate, and moſt fervent love in a kinde father? Hee now cares not for his life, having once beheld Ioſeph before his death. Such ſpeech uſed Simeon, or not much unlike, when hee had ſeene Chriſt, Now Lord (ſaith hee) let me depart in peace, ſince mine eyes have ſeene, &c. Who can then tell the hearts of Parents? O that children may more and more thinke of them, and requite them no worſe than Ioſeph did!

7. Then Joſeph having done his duty to his father, he remembreth himſelfe alſo towards the King, and telleth them that preſently hee will to the King, to give him intelligence of their comming. Where we are to marke the titles wherewith Joſeph will adorne his kindred withall when hee commeth to the King: ſurely hee will tell him that they are ſhepheards: what, plaine ſhepheards? Yea verily no more painting and colouring will Joſeph uſe, but confeſſe that they are ſhepheard: and which is much more, hee inſtructeth his brethren, if the King ſhould call them, that they ſhould ſay, that not onely they are ſo, but that their fathers before them lived alſo ſo. Where is this ſimplicity now become in theſe proud and ſcornfull dayes of ours, when every man almoſt, if he come to any place, is aſhamed of his Parents and kindred if their condition bee but meane, when we tumble, and toſſe, and rake up old Records day and night to fetch it about, that wee may bee Gentlemen? Surely it is gone, and our pride before wiſe men as ridiculous, as before a juſt God it is ſinfull and odious. What if our parents be but meane, with others of our kindred, the more is Gods mercy and goodneſſe ſeene towards us if wee be exalted. And ſhall wee grudge to the Lord the praiſe of his owne mercy in ſuch meaſure to us, by dawbing and painting our friends out with ſuch antiquity of blood, ſuch deſcent and alliances, and I know not what, as may darken in ſome ſort the Lords doings. Fie on this ingratitude, and fie againe upon this filthy pride. It is farre from Joſephs ſpirit, in whom this was vertue, neither to adorne his kindred with vaine colours, neither once to bee aſhamed of them as they were. If we follow Joſeph we follow him whom God loved, and even for this his vertue in this place noteth and commendeth ſecretly: If wee follow the world, and vanity of haughty mindes, wee take a courſe that hath no ſuch comfort either with God or good men. If a man ſee a peece of clay, know it to be clay, and eſteeme it but as clay, doth hee not well? But if he take it to be gold, and eſteeme it as gold, when indeed it is but clay, is hee not madde? So are theſe vanities that men ſo glory in, of ſmall value, who ſo thinketh ſo of them, and ſo reputeth them, he is wiſe, when others follies feeding but themſelves, are laught at of others very juſtly.

Joſephs humble minde not aſhamed of his kindreds mean eſtate.

8. The more yet appeareth Ioſephs vertue. For every ſheep-keeper (ſaith the Text) was an abhomination to the Ægyptians. And yet was not Ioſeph daunted with it, nor once goeth about to cover the matter. But his friends are to him ſtill as they ought to be, and the pride o the Ægyptian hurteth himſelf. What if the queſtion were asked, which of theſe two ſorts of people were the better in reſpect of God approbation, the Hebrewes that were deſpiſed, or the Ægyptians that did deſpiſe, would you not ſay the Hebrewes? Then wee ſee they are not alwayes unholy with with God, whom proud ſpirits eſteeme to be ſo, neither yet they ſo holy, as they take themſelves, who in reſpect of themſelves eſteeme others to be abominable. This is but an old tricke of a tempting devill, to make ſome people thinke both of themſelves better, and of others worſe than they ought, to eſteeme of others as abominable unto them, when indeed rather they themſelves ſhould be ſo to the other. This practice of Satan, and power of his venome is too too manifeſt even in our dayes, in ſuch as condemne our Church-meetings, our exerciſes of the Word and Sacraments, and whatſoever wee doe in compariſon of their owne ſuppoſed purity. Of whom it may juſtly be ſpoken, that Auguſtine ſaid, Finxerunt ſe nimis juſtos, cum totum vellent perturbare. They have fained themſelves over-holy, when in this ſort they would trouble all. For us who are ſo abominable to them, let us comfort our ſelves with the truth of our cauſe, and with this example of Gods people, whom yet God ſuffered thus to be judged of by filthy Ægyptians, knowing that in the end theſe proud cenſures ſhall hurt us as much as this contempt of the Ægyptians did the Hebrewes, when it cauſed them to be placed in the land of Goſhen, which was the very beſt of the land of Ægypt. Let this ſuffice of this Chapter.

Verſe 34. Proud hypocrites deſpiſe as unholy, who in Gods acceptance are holier than themſelves.

CHAP. XLVII.

The chiefe points of this Chapter are two.

{ The ſpeech of the King with Joſephs brethren, and his father.

Verſe 1. Joſephs modeſty and wiſdome.

TOuching the firſt, it is ſaid that Ioſeph went to the King to tell him of his friends comming, and withall tooke with him five of his brethren, whom he preſented to the King, as well that the King might be aſſured that they were come, as alſo ſee what manner of people they were. Wherein appeareth both the modeſty and the wiſdome of Ioſeph, that without the Kings knowledge and expreſſe direction he would doe nothing in this matter, though his favour were great with the King, and very extraordinary, well knowing, what meaner places then Princes Courts give tryall of, that many are the whiſperers, flatterers, and maligners of them, who with any ſpeciall favour uſe to be regarded of the chiefe. Soone might they, and peradventure ſoone would they have incenſed the King, both againſt Ioſeph and his friends, if this courſe had not warily beene taken. And what though the King before had given commandement touching this matter, yet ſafe it was to have direction againe in a matter of his owne, and of this nature, to bring ſtrangers into a Princes Land, to inhabite the very beſt place of the ſame. Who know the variety of great mens mindes, and what mountaines privie whiſperers can move ſometime, when a man is not admitted to his anſwer, but condemned unheard, will approve Ioſephs wiſedome, and ſay it was neceſſary. The King when he ſaw them, asked what trade they were of, taking it as certaine that they had ſome trade: So unuſuall was it then for men to be idle. But had he asked many a man in our dayes, their anſwer peradventure would have beene to ſeeke, unleſſe they ſhould have anſwered, that they uſed to walke from Taverne to Taverne, with a white rod in their hands to top Daſies withall. Theſe mens anſwer was not to ſeeke, but readily they told the King they were ſhepheards, both they and their fathers, that is, men that lived by keeping and breeding of cattell, a moſt profitable and good trade for the wealth and comfort of the Land. Would God this example might worke with us, to cauſe us to abhorre this ſinfull idleneſſe, the mother of infinite evils amongſt us, and to buckle our ſelves to ſome profitable ſervice in the Common-wealth. Surely it is for the dead to reſt from their labours, and not for the living altogether. But many times I have touched this matter, and therefore now no more.

Verſe 6. Moſt conſtant comfort to a true ſervant.

2 Then ſaid Pharaoh to Joſeph, the Land of Ægypt is before thee, in the beſt place of the Land make thy father and brethren dwell, &c. Wee ſaw the Kings gracious favour to his faithfull and true Ioſeph before, and now we ſee his conſtancy in the ſame. A moſt Princely vertue in him, and a moſt ſweet encouragement to the heart of Joſeph, as they know that wiſh and want. Bound was Ioſeph, if he had had a thouſand bodies and minds, to have ſerved ſuch a Maſter with them all. Farewell Pharaoh, thou King of Ægypt, and live being dead, in the pens of men, whileſt the world endureth for this clemency. Be thou to all men a mirror of ſweetneſſe to faithfull ſervants, and teach even them that know more than thou didſt of Gods truth in this behalfe. Ioſeph praiſe thy lot alſo, and ſay thou hadſt mercy not alwayes found to ſerve ſuch a Maſter, ſo kinde, and ſo conſtant in favour to the end, not onely to thy ſelfe, but even to all thy friends: O marvellous comfort!

Peeviſh denying to ſalute our brethren.

3. Not long after Joſeph brought his old father alſo to the King, that he might ſee him: Who being come into preſence, ſaluted Pharaoh, or bleſſed him. Teaching us thereby how peeviſh, not how zealous they be, that amongſt us meeting them who profeſſe the ſame truth, and relie upon upon the ſame God that themſelves ſeeme to doe, yet will not ſpeake to them a word, leſt they ſhould be defiled with ſaluting thoſe that are not ſo factious (to ſay no worſe) as themſelves be. O learned skill! Iacob may ſalute Pharaoh of Ægypt, and wee may not ſay good morrow to a true profeſſor of the Goſpell: But ſuch ſtraining at a gnat, and ſwallowing of a Camell will one day have his Judge, to whom I referre it with this little remembrance by the way.

4 The King alſo ſpake unto Iacob, and asked him of his age; to whom he anſwered, that the whole time of his pilgrimage was an hundred and thirty yeares, few and evill have the dayes of my life beene, and I have not attained unto the yeares of my Fathers, &c. Where we have a comfort both againſt ſhorter life, and more affliction than our Fathers have had, if the Lord ſo pleaſe to have it. He dealing no otherwiſe in that with us, than with Iacob his ſervant. That he alſo calleth this life a pilgrimage, hath his profit ever to admoniſh us of another place, and to plucke our affections from this ſinfull world. We have not here an abiding Citie, but muſt looke for one from above, ſetling our ſelves and our buſineſſe no otherwiſe in this world, than becommeth Pilgrimes that muſt along to another place. This doe not many, whoſe buildings and purchaſings, and unceſſant cares, give ſhrewd ſhew their hearts are, not as pilgrimes hearts, but rather as men that dreame of little good when this life is ended. 5 Then Ioſeph placed his father as Pharaoh had willed, and Ioſeph nouriſhed his father and his brethren, and all his fathers houſhold with bread, even to the young children. See the duty of a godly childe to his deare father, not to ſee him want the comfort of his abilitie any wayes during life. And ſee how cruelly Ioſeph now revengeth his brethrens wrong done unto him when he was young. Hee nouriſheth them and theirs with comfortable food during all the famine. Such remembrances of injuries, and ſuch revenges, are in the godly ſtill: and therefore let them weigh their eſtate, that take ſuch bitter courſes as we daily ſee, whether that ſpirit bee in them that was in Ioſeph or no. Nay, are they like unto farre worſe men than Ioſeph was, for knowledge in the truth that moderateth revenges? As unto Antigonus, who hearing with his owne eares certaine of the ſouldiers ſpeake evill of him, never revenged the matter, but patiently enduit, and bad them either goe further, or ſpeake ſofter, leſt the King ſhould heare them: unto Auguſtus Cæſar, who ſuffered one Timagenes, a writer of Hiſtory, abuſing notoriouſly both him, his wife, and his whole family, to live nevertheleſſe, and to live in good eſtate even in Rome under him. If ſuch men as theſe thus governed their affections when they had wrong, may wee carry the credit of Chriſtian profeſſors, boyling in malice, hunting for revenge, and even breathing out ſlaughter againſt whom we diſlike, as we ſee at this day? What the Lord hath ſaid againſt ſuch heats, ſundry times in theſe Notes I have obſerved, and our ſelves full well know his diſlike of ſuch dealing. Now doe but thinke of him, that in wiſedome ſaid it: Parciùs utendum poteſtate, quò ſemper ea uti poſſis: Sparingly ſhouldeſt thou uſe thy power, that ever thou maiſt uſe it: That is, revenge little, and live long, &c.

Verſe 12.

6 The greatneſſe of the famine is laid downe, and noted by the effects of it: when it conſumed all the money in the Land, and brought it to Pharaohs coffers; then all their cattell, being glad to give them for food, when their money was gone: thirdly, all their land, and even their bodies alſo, if hee would ſo have taken what they offered. VVhat a ſpectacle is this of Gods power, what eaſily hee can doe, and of his gracious favour what yet he doth not! Durum telum neceſſitas; A ſharpe dart, is need and want: And therfore a great mercy is plenty and ſtore. VVhere be our hearts to feele it, and to bleſſe God for it, uſing it well to his glory? But what when both money and cattell with land alſo were gone, and all become Pharaohs? See then a wiſdome, and a fatherly mercy in Ioſeph. Then gave hee them ſeed to ſow their land, yeelding the King but the fift part, and themſelves keeping foure to their maintenance: wiſedome, I ſay, becauſe elſe the land ſhould have beene waſte, and the food as yet holding out, would have decayed: mercy, for that if ſome had had them at ſuch a lift, they would have rather taken foure parts, and have left them one, than quite contrary, as Ioſeph did. Mercy againe, in that he regardeth their wives and children, &c. That is, their charges, and according thereunto dealeth with them, and alloweth them. VVhat bleſſing alſo this kinde dealing had in the hearts of the people, the ſtory noteth, when they thankfully attributed the ſaving of their lives unto him. Gracious dealing will ever have a gracious report with thankfull men, when ſighing groanes of whole families beggered and undone, will cry for ſpeedy vengeance from a juſt Judge;

musled that treadeth out the corne: Nay, who hath many similitudes and arguments proving the contrary; as first, That no man goeth to warfare on his owne charges: Secondly, that husbandmen eate of the fruit of such vineyards as themselves plant: Thirdly, that shepheards eate of the milke of their owne flocks, and cloath themselves with the wooll: Fourthly, that sowing spirituall things, which are the greater, we are well worthy to reape carnall things, being the lesser: Fifdly, that the ordinance of God was to have them live by the Altar, that served at the Altar, with other like reasons in that place, and to the Galathians, if you consider them, and gather them out. Had the Priests of the Law the tenth part, and shall the Ministers, of a better Testament have never a part? Such maintenance will have such Ministers in time, out of question, to the utter decay of learning, piety and religion, and to the bringing of all barbarisme and error, as Satan wisheth. Worthy is the vertue of Nehemiah, touching this matter, everlasting remembrance and imitation of them that have like authority and feare God. He finding that the Priest Eliashib, who had the oversight of that which belonged to the maintenance of the Priests, being joyned in affinity with Tobiah the Ammonite, an enemy of the Jewes, the portions of the Levites were not given them, but every man was fled to shift for himselfe amongst his friends: most zealously reformed it, as there you may see, threw out Tobias vessels, thrust out Eliashib, and placed them that were accounted faithfull, and brought the tithes of corne, and wine, and oyle into the house of the Lord againe. Marke the state of our times, and see if such Tobia's be not yet amongst us, and such Eliashibs, who dealing together in all unrighteousnesse, convey the portions of the Levites by little and little from the Church, that all may come to ruine and utter confusion in time. They must have the tithe corne, and the gleabe land, peradventure the house also for a dairy, and their cousin Eliashib the Minister there shall have the tythe geese, and the egges at Easter. But shall not God visite this great impietie? O Lord, O Lord, in mercy forgive the sinnes of the Land, and the iniquity of thy people, deserving justly the losse of thy word, and sweet liberty of their consciences, and yet, yet shew favour! For these mercies raise up workmen that are able to feed thy people as they ought, and either convert or confound these Church-robbers, that savour nothing but their owne gaine, that taking thus daily away the rewards of knowledge, endeavour the death of thousands thousands of soules, which thou hast created. Stirre up Nehemiah thy faithfull servant to redresse this sinne, and to settle things carnall as shall be fit to them that sow spirituall, that God be not mocked. So we that be thy people and sheepe of thy pasture, shall give thee praise for ever, for so great a mercy. Amen, Amen.

8 So Iacob dwelt in Ægypt in the best of the Land, grew and multiplied exceedingly, and had possessions, he lived in that land seventeene yeares, and saw his childrens children, hee enjoyed his sonne Ioseph in great honour, with Beniamin also whom hee loved, yea, hee enjoyed them all placed about him, and living in unity, peace and plenty. See then the comforts of God to his true servant after many afflictions. God is not changed. Cleave we therefore to him, and he ever shall dispose unto us for the best. If we now weep, he is able to make us laugh; if we now groane under any burden, he is able to ease our shoulders from it in good time, and to comfort our latter yeares with a sweeter measure, as he here did Iacob. Remember the great calme that followed after their great danger in the ship. Remember the words: you now are sad, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy. Remember the Prophet: for a moment in mine anger I hid my face from thee for a little season: but with everlasting mercy will I have compassion on thee, saith the Lord. Tobiah had his sight againe, and ended in comfort: Iob had all well againe in the end, and the Lord blessed the last dayes of Iob more than the first: David after many troubles hath a crowne of honor, and Iacob hath his Ioseph againe, that his spirit reviveth: Ionas commeth up againe all in safety from the bottome of the Sea. Feare not affliction therefore, but referre all to God: hee is not the God of these men alone, but of us also. All shall bee well in the Lords good time, all teares wiped away from our eyes; and what he hath promised any way, so true is hee, so good is he, so himselfe is he, and ever shall bee. Here then might I end, if it were not also worthy observing, how reverently Iacob speaketh to his sonne being in authority. If I now have found grace in thy sight, deale mercifully with me, &c. Teaching hereby all parents to regard also their childrens places, as their children ought to regard them. So such giving other what honor is due, God shall be honoured of them both, and in them both. Of this buriall here craved by Iacob in the Land of Canaan, we shall have occasion to speak hereafter. It respected Gods promise of that Land in time to be given to his posterity, which hee stedfastly beleeved; and for shew of the same his unwavering faith, and the confirmation of others, wished and sought that his body might thither be carried to take possession, till that time came. Such faith in other of Gods promises concerning us, becommeth it us ever to have, and God in mercy give it.

CHAP. XLVIII.

In this Chapter two things especially are laid downe:

{The adoption of the sonnes of Joseph to be Jacobs sonnes.
{The blessing that Jacob giveth them.

TIdings are brought unto Ioseph that his father was sicke. Sicke then are the godly, when it pleaseth God, as well as others, and worne and wasted with diseases and griefes, they passe away as other men: The Lord could doe otherwise, if it pleased him: But this course is best in his eyes, that being as others appointed to die, they also as others should have these common messengers and fore-runners of their death: that hereby receiving, as it were, a watch-word that the time is neare, they might renounce the world with all the flattering and fading glory thereof, they might lift up their eyes to the God of heaven, and consider the comfort of that company. They might dispose of their goods and affaires of this world, to the quiet peace of them that shall have them. And lastly, with more ease depart and make an end, the body being weakned and worne away by sickneese, that it cannot so stiffely startle against that separation. Ioseph visiteth his father in this sickneese, and taketh his two sonnes with him, Manasses and Ephraim, still shewing himselfe in all things a comfortable, carefull and obedient man towards his father, confuting all by his example that most sinfull softneese of some in our dayes, who cannot abide to come at any sick persons, as though themselves either never should be sick, or being sick, could rest contented to lie by the wals, not comforted nor visited of any body. That with him he tooke his two sons, he shewed that more highly he esteemed to have his children received into Iacobs family, which was the Church of God, than to enjoy all the treasures of Ægypt.

Verse 1. The godly are sicke.

The use of sickneese.

Visiting the sicke.

2 Then one told Iacob that his sonne Ioseph was come, and Israel tooke his strength unto him, and sate upon the bed, &c. See how the presence of deare friends comforteth the sicke and grieved in their beds: It even maketh their spirits revive, and their strength to come againe, that they are able to speake and deliver matters as whole men. How may a friend then answer it to God or man, to deny such comfort to the sicke?

Verse 2. The joy of friends.

3 Then Iacob called for Iosephs children, kissed them and embraced them, and breaketh into these words: I had not thought to have seene thy face, and behold God hath shewed me also thy seed. Shewing thereby what a full feeling he had in his heart of Gods infinite mercies unto him, receiving more than ever he could hope or looke for. Such, such feeling should we also have in our estates every one of us, weighing our case past, weighing our case present, weighing what once was likely, and what yet now we have, what once we could not dreame of, and yet now by God is done, and rising up upon it into all fervent feeling of a sweet and gracious God, which hath so done for us. This did Iacob here, and blessed he; this doe not some of us, as may be feared, and therefore sinfull we. But now let us amend, and write this saying of Iacob upon our hands, that we may ever see it. Ioseph then tooke away his children from his fathers knees, and did reverence downe to the ground. O dutifull childe! a very patterne of all vertue and true affection to parents whilst the world endureth. So great and so mighty, so honourable and so high, yet to his father he boweth, and doth reverence even to the ground, his father being but a shepheard, (as you heard before) that is, a man that lived by breeding and keeping of cattell.

Verse 11. A most full feeling of Gods mercies to be wished.

Verse 12. Reverence to Parents, be we never so high.

4 Then Ioseph tooke his two sons, Ephraim in his right hand towards Israels left hand, and Manasses in his left hand towards Israels right hand, so he brought them unto him. But Israel stretched out his right hand (crossing his hands) and laid it on Ephraims head, which was the younger, and his left hand upon Manasses head, directing his hands of purpose, for Manasses was the elder. Then hee blessed them, giving such title to his Father Abraham, as I wish us to mark, namely that he walked with God. To teach us not to delight so much either in honour, or powers, or policie, or any thing in our Ancestors, as that they were religious and feared God. But this manner of his fathers hands displeased Ioseph, & he sought to remove them, telling his father that Manasses was the elder, &c. Where we see a weakneese in good Ioseph, that he would goe about to tie God to seniority and naturall order, when as before that it had appeared how God disposeth of his blessing to the younger before the elder: as Ismael being elder, yet Isaac was blessed; Esau being elder, yet Iacob was blessed; Ruben being elder, yet of Iudah came Christ, &c. Now could Ioseph a good man thus erre, and thinke that amisse which his father did rightly and even of purpose; and may we no way be deceived? I wish them then to consider this, who are so wise in their owne eyes, that they never like of their Ministers course, but would gladly have their own devices followed as ever the better. Surely it may teach them modesty, and humble their spirits, if God will, to thinke more reverently of others, that for their places and divers circumstances are more like to see what is the best.

Verse 13. The best praise of Ancestors.

God not tyed to naturall order.

A good man deceived.

Verſe 19. Good men diverſly minded in a matter of Ceremony. We oppoſe our ſelves even to God.

5 But his father refuſed, &c. Then father and ſonne divided in a matter of ceremony, the father one way, the ſonne another, yet both godly. Let it ſchoole us ever to know what may be without breach of unity and common peace, if men themſelves be lovers of peace. Yet remember alſo that old Iacob had the right, and young Ioſeph was deceived. If father and ſonne then may differ, brethren alſo may doe the like. But yet goe further. We learne not onely by this example the difference often that is betwixt men of neare conjunction, but wee may take occaſion alſo by it, to think how we differ often even from God, ſetting our ſelves as it were againſt him, and eſteeming that better, that indeed is not. As when we are governed in matters of ſalvation, by the judgement rather of fleſh and blood, than by the Spirit that ſeeth truth. If hee lay the right hand, we wiſh the left hand; and if he lay the left hand, we like the right: what hee thinkes good, we judge evill; and what hee makes evill we make good. Know this corruption which is too true, and then begging ſtrength, let us ſeeke to amend it. The Lord gave Iacob a prophecying ſpirit, to declare to them what was to come. And no little account in thoſe dayes made godly children to be bleſſed of their fathers. What Iacob told alſo came all to paſſe, Ephraim was the greater, and yet both great. His name was likewiſe named upon them, that is, they were taken and reputed as his children, and not to be prayed unto, when hee was dead, by his poſteritie, as moſt fooliſhly Papiſts would reaſon here-hence. His aſſurance that hee giveth them of the Land of Canaan, was grounded upon the ſundry immutable promiſes of God, which he beleeved. That God ſhould be with them when he was dead, reſpected the promiſe that is alſo our comfort: I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed after thee. The portion that he giveth him above his brethren, giveth teſtimony how ancient it is to make a teſtament concerning worldly goods, when die we muſt. Finally, that he ſpeaketh of his dying ſo comfortably, and without any feare, it teacheth us the effect of a lively faith, how mightily it expelleth all feare of death. Thus ended this conference of ſicke Iacob with his ſonne Ioſeph: and thus end wee alſo for this time.

CHAP. XLIX.

Two eſpeciall heads there are of this Chapter:

Sweet ſpeeches of divers at their deaths.

THen Iacob called his ſonnes, and ſaid: Gather your ſelves together, that I may tell you what ſhall come to you in the laſt dayes. Written it is of the Swan, that before his death he ſingeth moſt ſweetly, and ſo did this holy Patriarke in this place. Never more ſweet ſongs have paſſed from the godly then toward their latter ends. Moſes in the 31. of Deut. and in the two Chapters following, Ioſhua in his laſt chapter, and even our Saviour himſelfe in the 14. chapter of Iohn, in the 15, 16, 17. and at his laſt Supper. The Apoſtle Paul, when the time of his offering was at hand, 2 Tim. 4. verſ. 7, 8. &c. The Apoſtle Peter, when hee told them he thought it meete while he was in this tabernacle to ſtirre them up, knowing that the time was at hand, that he muſt lay downe his tabernacle, &c. This Cygnea cantio, this laſt ſweet ſong of Iacob, becauſe Interpreters have ſeene to bee a moſt ſingular propheſie of things to come, they have thought that they did not adorne and ſet it out ſufficiently, unleſſe they deviſed ſome hidden myſteries and darke mater to be drawne out of it, ſwarving for this purpoſe from the true and naturall ſenſe of it in divers things. I will omit theſe dreams of theirs, and keep to the text, with ſuch matter as it properly and truly yeeldeth: Praying it firſt to be obſerved, how by their father Iacob it pleaſed Almighty God to informe theſe men, of whom thouſands after were to come, concerning their future eſtate, that they might hereby know and be moſt aſſured, that God cared for them, and not onely ſo, but that moſt extraordinarily he cared for them, governing them as his owne peculiar people, choſen from the whole world, and made his owne. If you aske or thinke, how could Moſes that wrote theſe books, know of this ſpeech of Iacob to his ſons, being made in a private houſe, in a place but obſcure, and about two hundred yeares before hee wrote. Anſwer your ſelfe with another queſtion againe, and aske how could hee ſo cunningly and ſo particularly deſcribe the Land of Canaan, bordering it, and diſtributing it unto ſome as hee did, himſelfe dying, and never entring into it: and if you muſt ſay, by Gods Spirit illuminating, guiding and directing him, he did this (as indeed you muſt ſay,) why not then did the ſame Spirit reveale unto him, being a choſen inſtrument to commit theſe matters to writing, what Iacob ſaid at his later end to his children? Yet probable alſo it is, that ſo famous a Propheſie as this, and at that time made when mens words are eſpecially marked, to wit, at their deaths, and before ſo many witneſſes, was right carefully remembred, and by tradition carried from man to man, and from time to time, even unto Moſes. It containeth in it the whole time from their going out of Ægypt unto the comming of Chriſt, as by diligent obſervance may appeare, I meane not every par-particular accident in that time, but the fixed and set order of the course of the Church till that time. Let us come then to the word, and observe how hee doubleth the word of hearing, saying first heare, and then hearken, all to note unto them that they must not with an ordinary care hearken unto him, but with very great attention, with very speciall care and regard, since the matter by him now to bee uttered was of weight, and concerned them most nearely. So noteth this repetition usually in the Scripture, as in the Psalme when he saith: Hearken O daughter and consider, incline thine eare, forget also thine owne people, and thy fathers house. Againe Heare this all ye people, give eare all ye that dwell in the world. In the Proverbs: Heare O yee children the instruction of a father, & give eare to learne understanding, with many such. Again, he giveth himselfe two names, Iacob and Israel, saying: Heare ye sonnes of Iacob, and hearken unto Israel your father: drawing from these names two good arguments to stir up in them this attention which he requireth, the one of nature, the other of religion: of nature, because he was Iacob their father; of religion, because fearing God truly & serving him ever, he found favor with God, even so far, as to receive from him his name of Israel, whereof you have heard before the full circumstance.

Verse 2.

Psal. 45. 10.
Psal. 49. 1.
Pro. 4. 1.

2 Ruben mine eldest sonne, thou art my might, and the beginning of my strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power. Thou wast light as water, thou shalt not be excellent, because thou wentest up to thy fathers bed, then diast thou defile my bed, thy dignity is gone. Comming now to particulars he beginneth with his eldest sonne, and as you see often repeateth his excellency, making great mention of it, that he was his might, the beginning of his strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power, in the end throweth him out of all, saying hee should not be excellent, his dignity was gone. And why thus? because hee had sinned against nature, and defiled his fathers bed. Then all these repetitions of his dignity tended but to this: to exaggerate his fault, and to make it appeare to his conscience and to posterity ever after, how great it was, & foule before God, as for which all his dignity was lost and taken away: Nothing more shaketh the heart of any one, not quite dead to God and grace, than this course. Therefore often God useth it in his Word; Heare O heavens (saith he by the Prophet) and hearken O earth, I have nourished & brought up children, but they have rebelled against me. The Oxe knoweth his owner, and the Asse his masters crib, but Israel hath not knowne me, my people hath not understood, amplifying their sin by this, that they had received this dignity to be nourished of him, and brought up as his children. In the 5. Chapter againe, My beloveds vineyard was in a fruitfull ground, hedged about, the stones gathered out, planted with the best plants, a tower built and a winepresse made, yet it brought forth wilde grapes. To David likewise, I annointed thee King over Israel, and delivered thee out of the hand of Saul, gave thy Lords house, and thy Lords wives into thy bosome, gave thee the house of Israel and Iudah, and would moreover, if that had beene too little, have given thee such and such things: wherefore then hast thou despised, &c. Still proving the greatnesse of sinne by grace and favour vouchsafed before. So here Ruben being vouchsafed of God to bee his fathers first borne, his might, the beginning of his strength, the excellency of his dignity, and the excellency of power, and yet sinning in this sort, his fault by these favours was made most great and therefore his dignity and the sequels of his dignity most justly translated otherwise. As the birth-right to Ioseph, the Priesthood to Levi, and the Kingdome to Iudah. Read Deut. 33. verse 6. Iudg. 5. 15. & 16. Take wee heed then of sinning ever, but especially when our consciences tell us God hath beene gracious, gracious unto body, and gracious to soule, gracious to our selves, and gracious to our friends. For this is as the dignity of Ruben, which shall increase our offence, and justly plucke downe from the hand of God a very sure and certaine punishment upon us, and haply even also upon our posterity, as here in Ruben, whose whole off-spring was deprived of honour. There is not one of us but hath received mercy from heaven in very great measure, if we be alive within to feele it. Therefore not one of us, but even in this respect bound with a carefull heart to avoid the thing that offendeth God. And happy wee if wee will doe it, remembring Ruben here and his fearefull losse, his dignity being gone, as his Father saith.

Verse 3, 4. Mercy received maketh sinne more grievous.

Gen. 49. 16. Note.

3 Simeon and Levi brethren in evill, the instruments of cruelty are in their habitations. Into their secrets let not my soule come, my glory be not thou joyned with their assembly, for in their wrath they slew a man, and in their selfe-will they digged downe a wall. Cursed be their wrath, for it was fierce; & their rage, for it was cruell. I will divide them in Iacob, and scatter them in Israel. To the self-same end tendeth this punishment inflicted upon these two brethren that the former did, even to humble themselves in themselves, and to teach posterity how God hateth evill. The Papists prattle of pœna and culpa, that the punishment satisfieth for the offence, &c. But farre otherwise doth the Word instruct, telling us ever that punishment is not imposed to make satisfaction (for that onely doth Jesus Christ and his stripes) but to purge the heart from all hypocrisie, humbling it faithfully and unfainedly, and to stirre up to repentance for the time passed, as also to carefulnesse for the time to come, keeping both body and soule in a godly feare as it were with a bridle. Therefore saith the father as you have heard before; Quod patimur unde plangimus, medicina est non pœna; castigatio, non damnatio. That we suffer punishment, it is a medicine,

Verse 5, 6.

The use of Gods punishments to the godly. Esay 53.

not a punishment; a correction, not a damnation: Non enim de peccatis sumit supplicium, sed in futurum nos corrigit. For God doth not take punishment of our sinnes (forgiven,) but chastiseth us fatherly for the time to come. Marke also in this place how fully, how plainly, how faithfully Moses layeth downe to the world in writing the shame and reproach of the tribe he came of, of his father Levi: which certainly declareth the power of Gods Spirit ruling and over-ruling in these writings, and that of him and from him, not from flesh and blood they are proceeded: for flesh and nature would have covered these blemishes in his ancestors.

An argument of the Scripture to be given by inspiration.

Vers. 8. 9 10 11 12

3 Thou Iudah, thy brethren shall praise thee, thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies, thy fathers sonnes shall bow down unto thee Iudah, as a Lyons whelpe shalt thou come up from the spoile, my sonne. He shall lie downe and couch as a Lyon and as a Lyoneſſe, who shall stirre him up. The scepter shall not depart from Iudah, nor a Lawgiver from betwixt his feet, untill Shiloh come, and the people shall be gathered unto him. He shall binde his Asse fole unto the Vine, and his Asses colt unto the best Vine. He shall wash his garment in wine, and his cloake in the blood of grapes. His eyes shall bee red with wine, and his teeth white with milke. Great is the blessing of Iudah then, and many favours are vouchsafed to him. Mighty in battell, and prosperous in warre shall he be. Of him shall come Kings, one after one, and many in number, till at last the Lord Jesus come, who is King of kings, and Lord of lords. Earthly blessings he shall also enjoy, as wine and milke, that is a country most abundant in Vines and pastures and all commodities. His brethren shall bow to him, and his enemies shall feare him, as men doe to stirre up a Lyoneſſe that is asleepe. What greater blessings? But I pray you let us remember, was not Iudah also faulty when he lay with Thamar his daughter in law, as we heard before? How happeneth it then that Iacob so sharply reproving Ruben, Simeon and Levi, passeth over in silence thus Iudah his fault, and speaketh of nothing but blessings unto him? Surely this thing was of God, that we might thereby learne, that sometimes he even passeth over and covereth the faults of his chosen in sweet mercy, as at other times hee openly toucheth them in unblamable justice. That in Iacob also we might take a lesson not ever to publish whatsoever we know. The discretion of a man passeth by an offence, and the same againe at other times doth it not: there are times to speake, and times to be silent, which this guider of Iacob here will also direct his servants unto as shall be fit, and heartily in prayer and for his glory beg the same.

Vers. 13. Zabulon.

4 Zabulon shall dwell by the Sea side, and he shall be an haven for ships, his border shall be unto Sidon. Here Iacob in the spirit disposeth to Zabulon what 200. yeares after by lot fell so out, as we see in Ioshua chap. 29. 10. &c. whereof came a double comfort. First, to incourage them very cheerefully when time should serve, to go into that land wherein their portion and inheritance was assured already. Secondly, to be content with it, when by lot it should fall unto them, knowing, that though thus the casting of lots was used: yet this was altogether the same which their father Iacob in the Spirit had foretold, and therefore no fortune or chance, but the very finger and providence of God.

Vers. 14. 15. Issachar.

5 Issachar shall be a strong Asse, couching downe betwixt two burdens. And he shall see that rest is good, and that the land is pleasant, and he shall bow his shoulder to beare, and shall be subject unto tribute. This is, as if Iacob should have said, Issachar or the tribe of Issachar shall bee for strength able to doe much, being like a strong Asse, or an Asse of great bones, as the Hebrew is, but to his strength hee shall not have courage to resist his enemies, and therefore shall couch downe betwixt two burdens, and bow his shoulder to beare, &c. A nature which we daily see in too many, to be content for their owne ease and earthly profit to carry sackes and coles too in them not a few, rather than they will intermeddle in any thing. In some men this is too bad, namely in Magistrates and men of place in their countries. Whose couching downe, and bowing to these burdens, because they see rest is good, will one day bee laid as hotly to their charge, as now it doth greatly disgrace them in the world with good men. In the meane time they are but like Asses, as Issachar was, fit to beare.

Thinke of this

Vers. 16. 17.

6. Dan shall judge his people as one of the tribes of Israel, Dan shall be a serpent by the way, an adder by the path, biting the horses heeles, so that his rider shall fall backward. The sense is this: Dan also shall have the honour of a Tribe, and shall in subtilty and craft abound, being that way like a serpent, also that way he shall pinch his enemies, and give them overthrowes, biting as it were the horse heeles, so that his rider shall fall backward, though openly and by hand-stripes (as we say) hee is not able to encounter or to doe any great matter. Subtill secret biters then and workers of their will by policy, craft, and cunning are hereby noted and resembled. Outwardly and openly they doe little, but covertly and craftily they are like serpents by the path, so biting the heeles (not the head) of the horse, that in the end the rider is overthrowne and falleth backwards, as well as if he had beene encountred, and peradventure rather. So over-reacheth hidden guile when a man thinketh not of it.

Craft and secret cunning.

Verse 18.

7 O Lord I have waited for thy salvation. An abrupt breaking from the matter in hand to a meditation, as if he should say; O Lord, whilest I thus speake of the estate of these my children, and the posterity that of them shall come, I see unto how many troubles and afflictions they shall ſhall be ſubject, and with what croſſes they ſhall bee exerciſed, but in this my faith ever was, and ſtill is, that thy gracious hand and helpe ſhall never be wanting to them, but what thou haſt promiſed to my forefathers, thou wilt performe moſt faithfully in the poſterity of them and mee, when thy good time ſhall bee. For this is thy ſalvation, O Lord, which I have ever waited for. A ſtedfaſt faith ſeeth a good end of all afflions.

8 Gad an hoaſt of men ſhall overcome him, but he ſhall overcome at the laſt. A prediction of them not unlike to that of our Saviour Chriſt, concerning his children: In the world you ſhall have tribulation, but be of good comfort, I have overcome the world. To that in the Apoſtle: For thy ſake are we killed all the day long, and appointed as ſheepe to the ſlaughter. Nevertheleſſe in all theſe things we are more than conquerours, through him that loved us. To that againe in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians: We are afflicted on every ſide, yet not in diſtreſſe, we are in doubt, yet deſpaire not, we are perſecuted, yet not forſaken, caſt downe, but yet wee periſh not, &c. Finally, to that of Iohn: All that is borne of God overcommeth this world, and this is that victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith. Who is it that overcommeth this world, but hee which beleeveth that Jeſus is that Sonne of God. Not therefore uncomfortable to Gad in the end: no more than this eſtate and lot of all Gods children, though for the time grievous and bitter. Verſe 19. Iohn 16. 33. Rom. 8. 36, 37.

9 Concerning Aſher his bread ſhall be fat, and he ſhall give pleaſure for a King. The meaning is this, a fruitfull part of the land ſhall fall to him, with aboundance, with corne and all good fruits ſhall make his bread fat, and his pleaſures many, even fit and convenient for a King in that kinde. A comfortable bleſſing in this world, and granted to mo than I feare mee feele Gods goodneſſe in it, and ſend from a feeling heart thankes to Almighty God for it. A bleſſing that this our native countrey hath had long, and many a particular member in it, if all were thought upon. Pleaſures upon pleaſures fit for a King, yea that many a King wants, in joy private perſons, if their ſpirits be not dead from all feeling. Pſal. 20;

10 Nepthali ſhall be a hinde let goe, giving goodly words. That is, this tribe ſhall be given to humanity, to ſweet ſpeech, and by peaceable meanes, rather than by force of armes, to defend themſelves, and to have their being and ſtay in the world. A courſe certainly not without great power, though it ſeeme outwardly to bee weake. What more pierceth than a ſmooth tongue? and what anger yeeldeth not in the end to a ſoft anſwer? Salomons teſtimony of this is knowne, that a ſoft anſwer putteth away wrath, and grievous words ſtirre up anger. In his 25. Chapter againe: A ſoft tongue breaketh the bones; Meaning the heart that is bent unto anger. As for example, how pacified Gideon the raging Ephramites, how ſtayed Abigail the fury of David comming with death in his heart to Nabal her husband and all his houſhold? What the towne-clarke did in the uproare of Epheſus, wee ſee in the Acts of the Apoſtles. Other examples wee may remember many. The ſaying is old and true, If a man will catch Birds, hee may not come towards them with a ſtaffe: But Fiſtula dulcè canit volucres dum decipit auceps: The Pipe goeth ſweetly, whileſt they are deceived: what daily experience ſheweth I need not tell. But thinke you whether the ſmiling Sunne, or the bluſtring winde, will cauſe you to lay downe your cloake firſt, ſurely with his kinde beames hee will take both cloak, and your coate from you, when the others puffes doth make you hold all harder. Great therefore is the power of a ſweet tongue. It comforteth the afflicted, it healeth the ſicke, it cheereth the poore, it ruleth the rich, it winneth the ſubject, it appeaſeth the King, and whatſoever it will have, it getteth in the end, neither anger nor ſtrength can reſiſt the force of it. Marke therefore well the bleſſing of Nepthali here in this place, and know it to be a bleſſing being uſed well, that he ſhall bee a Hinde let goe, giving goodly words. Verſe 21. Pro 15. 1. Verſ. 5. Iudg. 8. 1 Sam 25. 32. Acts 19. Note.

11 Ioſeph ſhall be a fruitfull bough, even a fruitfull bough by the well ſide, the ſmall boughs ſhall run upon the wall, &c. Great & comfortable is the bleſſing of Ioſeph in many verſes, which being ſufficiently lightned with the marginall notes in the Bible, I referre you to them, and pray you to marke them. Beniamin is the laſt, and of him ſaith his father, He ſhall ravine as a Woolfe, in the morning he ſhall devoure the prey, and at night he ſhall divide the ſpoile. Meaning that of him ſhould come a ſeed which ſhould be given to ſpoile, and to live thereby. So goeth not this bleſſing by affection and favour, but Iacob by the ſpirit ſpeaketh what he muſt, be he never ſo deare. So were theſe twelve tribes bleſſed of their father, with ſeverall bleſſings: Whereof if ſome ſeeme hard bleſſings unto us, we muſt remember, that for as much as they hindred nothing the covenant, but notwithſtanding them, they were all Patriarks, even them that were ſharpleſt ſpoken unto, as Ruben, Simeon, and Levi, &c. Therefore in deed and truth they were bleſſed, as daily yet it may be ſaid, that for as much as the croſſes, puniſhments and afflictions of Gods children be ſo farre from hindring their felicity in heaven, as that uſually they be helpes and furtherances thereunto, therefore even in the midſt of them, and in the thickeſt of them, they may bee ſaid to be bleſſed, yea with them and for them, I meane for that God thus vouchſafeth to chaſten them in the world, to the end they may not be condemned with the world. Blood-letting making for health, is not an evill but a good, and ſo worldly croſſes leading to God, change their nature and Verſ. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. Ioſeph. Beniamin. Croſſings be bleſſings.

and become no curſes, but bleſſings to the godly. What a faith had Iacob here ſo farre to ſee, and ſo cheerfully to hope? Let it teach us to ſee and expect with comfort what God hath promiſed, and will truly performe.

Verſe 29.30, 31,32.33.

12 The bleſſing thus ended, the ſecond part of the Chapter followeth, concerning the death of Iacob, which here was with great quietneſſe, and in great comfort, cheerefully charging them what to doe with him, and ſo taking his leave. Let it teach us the bleſſing of a ſtayed heart to the laſt end, with good memory and good comfort to preſcribe unto all what is our will, and ſo to bid the world without feare, farewell. Let it teach us the duty of all the children of a man to be this, joyntly to care for the honeſt buriall of their Parents, ſince here they are charged all together to ſee this done, and not ſome one or two of them. Let us learne, that faith makes death no worſe than a gathering of us to our fathers, though fraile fleſh oft ſtartle at it. And finally be ſure, that hee appointeth not his buriall in the Land of Canaan, for any holineſſe of ground, or ſuperſtitious conceit of one place to be better than another of it ſelfe, as blind Popery doth make a difference of the Church from the Church-yard, and of places in either of them before others, as nearer the croſſe, and nearer the altar, but onely for the promiſe ſake, as hath been ſaid before, that his faith might appeare how ſo conſtantly he beleved God, that that land ſhould be given in time to his ſeed, as that dead hee would take poſſeſſion of it with his fathers, and thereby incourage his poſterity unto like hope, patiently paſſing on towards the time, as became their knowledge. Iacob then dyeth a ſweet death: he plucked up his feet, having thus ſpoken, and gave up the Ghoſt. Many were his croſſes whileſt he lived, as you well know, yet thus he endeth and endeth them. Our time muſt come, and who knoweth how ſoone? The God of might and mercy, be unto us in that houre as here to Iacob, that end we may, and yet never end; die, and yet not dying live with him for ever in his kingdome. Amen.

Iacob dyeth a quiet death. Note.

CHAP. L.

The chiefe heads of this Chapter may be theſe.

The honour done unto Iacob before his buriall.
The honour done at his buriall.
Ioſephs ſweet placability towards his brethren.
Ioſephs death.

Verſe 1. Love to the dead.

THen Ioſeph fell upon his fathers face, and wept upon him and kiſſed him. Where we ſee the force of love loathed not his dead face, his pale lips, his earthly hue at all, but breaketh and burſteth through all impediments, and ſheweth it ſelfe by true tokens. So love where it was would never be hidden, and as yet it continueth the ſame nature.

Embalming.

2 The embalming of Iacob and others in thoſe dayes, ſheweth us the lawfull uſe of this honour then. It was unto them in thoſe dayes ſome ſigne of future corruption, their faith being then uſually helped with outward ſymbols. To us at this day it hath no ſuch need (though it may be lawfull in other reſpects) ſince the reſurrection of our Saviour and head, giveth full aſſurance he ſhall likewiſe change our vile body, that it may be faſhioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby hee is able even to ſubdue all things unto himſelfe.

Phil. 3.21.

Verſe 3. Dayes of mourning.

3 Forty dayes were accompliſhed, &c. The dayes differed as people and places differed. The Jewes here mourned forty dayes in this ſort. The Ægyptians ſeventy, others nine, and ſome one way, ſome another. A time ſet we cannot appoint, but ever remember that our griefe be moderate, and without hypocriſie.

Verſe 6.

4 When Ioſeph asked leave to goe bury his father, Pharaoh moſt willingly conſented unto it, and ſaid, Goe up and bury thy father, as he made thee ſweare. Thereby giving againe very great teſtimony of his Princely favour towards his good ſervant, and even therein alſo ſhewing ſome religion, that hee would not have a lawfull oath broken, to the juſt reproofe of thoſe now that have not ſo much in them. But mee thinke I heare you object againſt this, the example of our Saviour in the Goſpell: who ſaid to his Diſciple ſeeking leave to goe firſt and bury his father: Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead. But remember there the office that then that Diſciple was choſen unto, the preaching of the Goſpell, a worke of weight, and alſo of ſpeed. Remember that as yet that father of his was not dead but till that time hee would have beene reſpited. And laſtly, remember that his father was not yet of the family of the faithfull, and therefore the caſe with this nothing like.

Mat. 8.21.

Anſwer.

1 2 3

5 There went with Ioſeph to the buriall, all the ſervants of Pharaoh, both the Elders of his houſe, and all the Elders of the land of Ægypt. Theſe for honour. Likewiſe all the houſe of Ioſeph and his brethren and his fathers houſe. Theſe for nature and alliance. Laſtly, Charets and horſe-

Horſemen not a few, and theſe for ſecurity. So the company in all was exceeding great. And as their company ſo was their mourning alſo paſſing great, ſo that both the inhabitants of the Land wondred at it, and the place received the name therof, The lamentation of the Ægyptians. So his Sonnes did unto him according as he had commanded them. Which right well may admoniſh us ever to bee faithfull in dead mens wils when they are honeſt and lawfull. A vertue ſurely worth very much, yet not ſo honoured as it deſerveth, which worketh to ſome both ſhame and ſinne. Verſe 12.

6 When Ioſephs brethren ſaw that their father was dead, they ſaid, it may be that Ioſeph will hate us, &c. Where ſee the ſting and the continuall biting of an evill conſcience: what they had deſerved, now they feare, and a guilty minde wanteth ever reſt. See it alſo how parents lives keep may things ſtraight, that either goe awry, or are feared as likely, when they be gone. Eſau will hold while his father liveth, but when once he is gone, have at Iacob his brother for a revenge. Small cauſe there is then why children ſo eagerly ſhould wiſh their ends, ſince their life keepeth out much contention and evill. Their meſſage to Ioſeph was but fained, and ſo appeared, ſince eaſily it might be thought, that if Iacob had feared any ſuch thing, hee would have carefully ſpoken of it to Ioſeph himſelfe in his life time. But let us learne by it, that an untruth will bee peering out one way or other to ſhame us if we uſe it, and therefore take heed. The argument they uſe to move him to mercy, would bee obſerved, to wit, becauſe they were ſervants to his Fathers God. It is all one as if they ſhould have ſaid, they which have one God ſhould bee joyned in moſt ſure love together. To the great confuſion of them that ſo proudly, ſo maliciouſly, and ſo contentiouſly diſturbe the peace and moſt holy unity that otherwiſe would bee, and of right ought to bee amongſt brethren, brethren I ſay of one God, one faith, and one baptiſme, &c. They likewiſe came unto him and fell downe before him, confeſſing themſelves his ſervants, and at his direction. Verſe 17.

7 Then Ioſeph wept when they ſpake unto him, and ſaid unto them, Feare not, for am not I under God? When ye thought evill againſt me, God diſpoſed it to good, that he might bring to paſſe as it is this day, and ſave much people alive, &c. See the tenderneſſe of a godly heart, Ioſeph could not forbeare teares when he ſaw the feares of his brethren falling thus downe before him, but even with water upon his cheekes he moſt kindly ſpeaketh to them, comforteth them, and biddeth them not feare. Yea, he maketh arguments unto them, and by proofes will have their hearts aſſured that they need not doubt. Am not I under God, ſaith he: that is: Doe not I feare God, and therefore cannot deale hardly with you being my brethren; or am not I under God, that is, can I, or may I goe about to revenge that which God remitteth and forgiveth, being under him? but by the ſucceſſe of things, it appeareth that God hath forgiven you, therefore farre be it from me to controule the doings of his Majeſty. O that I were able with a word to wiſh, with ſpeech or prayer to effect in ſome the ſequell of this argument! we know how many times offences grow amongſt us, and how many times ſome being ſorry for their faults ſeek to ſatisfie them whom they have grieved, with an unfaigned heart. But it will not be taken, Revenge, revenge cryeth the ſpirit of venome, and leave him not while he is worth a groat. VVould that man now behold here Ioſeph, might he not learne, that if he feare God he muſt forgive, yea hee will forgive? or if you take it in the other ſenſe, that in revenging that which God forgiveth, he profeſſeth openly that he taketh not himſelfe to be under God. Now what a man is ſorry for, and willing to make amends for, God forgiveth; if therefore man will not, that man proudly exalteth himſelfe above God, in controuling his doings, and in puniſhing that which hee remitteth: which if it be horrible in duſt and aſhes, let that perſon know that the Lord will awake though hee ſeeme to ſleepe, and beate that bitter ſtomake even with iron rods, till hee have taught it to ſtoope to both him and his. O looke we therefore upon Ioſeph ever, and when the ſight of miſdoing moveth the grieved neighbour or friend to ſay forgive, then anſwer with Ioſeph in holy words, Am not I under God? That is, my brother, my friend, I ſee by this ſorrow that God hath forgiven, and if I ſhould keep, I ſhould make my ſelfe above and not under God, which farre be from me. Therefore feare not, I forgive and forget, and all is well. The very bones of Ioſephs brethren rejoyced at his clemency and kinde nature, no doubt bleſſed him, and bleſſed God for him: and ſo for you if you doe the like. Am not I under God? O ſpeech of a gracious heart, I cannot make an end to thinke of it. But I muſt be ruled. Let mee remember you therefore of this ſecond argument. VVhy, ſaith he, ſhould I be angry with you, ſince what you did evill, the Lord hath turned to good, and to the ſaving of many lives? No, no, I will looke upon him and not upon you, and his mercy ſhall blot out your offence. Therefore whilſt that is in mine eye which I truſt ſhall never from mine eye, whileſt I have an eye, feare not: I may not, I cannot, I will not hurt you. No I will nouriſh you and your children. And this ſhall be an argument unto you without all doubt, that I am your brother ſtill in all love & nature of a kind brother. Thus did he cheere them, and even make them to live, who were like dead men before him for feare. This laſt argument is worthy marking, namely, that by his deeds of love to them, he would ſhew that he had forgiven them. Should our forgiveneſſe be meaſured by this rule, Verſe 17, 18, 19, 20. Verſe 21.

rule, would it ſhew well? God knoweth all, and the world ſeeth this, that the tongue ſaying we have forgiven, yet our hand holdeth in the leaſt courteſie which may paſſe from us. This was not Ioſephs forgiveneſſe, but in token that all was faithfull, I will nouriſh you and your children ſaith he, that is, I will doe you all the good that I can. Sweet Ioſeph then ſweet are thy words, and ſweet are thy deeds, true is thy love, and thy favour faithfull, therefore tokens follow it, as the heate the fire, live thou in this to our example ever, and thy honor for ſuch arguments be never forgotten.

Love we muſt not in lips or in tongue onely, but in deed and in truth.

8 So Ioſeph dwelt in Ægypt, he and his fathers houſe, and Ioſeph lived an hundred and ten yeares. The Lord being merciſull to his people, continued the life of a good magiſtrate long unto them. The like mercy is with him ſtill to preſerve unto us our comfort and our head Governour, his faithfull ſervant our gracious Soveraigne, if wee intreat him by fervent prayer, framing our lives to his liking more and more, and thanking him truely for ſo great a good. If not, as mercy keepeth, ſo juſtice taketh, that the cries may ring when it is too late.

Verſe 22. Good Magiſtrates in mercy continued long.

9 Ioſeph ſaw Ephraims children, even unto the third generation, which was a great bleſſing, alſo Manaſſes childrens children. So dealeth God with his choſen when he will, and he will when to them it may be good. Be it therefore with us as he pleaſeth, and that is the beſt for us. If we live yet we muſt bleſſe, and if we die, yet neither he nor that power in him dieth to be favourable to our ſeed, and to bleſſe them in mercy when we are gone. His promiſe alſo is paſt already, I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed after thee: and what would we more, if our conſciences tell us we are in this covenant?

Laſtly, Ioſeph dyeth alſo, and taketh an oath of his brethren, to remove his bones when God ſhould viſite them by delivering them out of Ægypt, to carry them to the Land of Promiſe. Wherein his faith as his fathers before him did appeare, as the Apoſtle witneſſeth in the Hebrewes. Their faithfulneſſe in ſo doing, when they removed, wee ſee in Exodus. Thus ended Ioſeph the renowned ſervant of God, the faithfull ſervant of his Lord and maſter, and the nurſing father of all his kindred, with him ends this Booke, and with it my labour, which to the Lord of mercy I moſt humbly now commend, that it may finde a bleſſing with him, to the glory of his name, to the comfort of his people, and to the moving of others: whoſe leaſure is greater, and whoſe gifts be better, to conſider what wanteth to a multitude in this land, and to relieve them according to their reaches. Praying thee alſo good Chriſtian Reader, to whom there may be any uſe of this my poore labour, to goe forward with the holy exerciſe of reading the Scriptures, to take thy Bible into thy hands anew, and ever when thou haſt read a Chapter, to read theſe Notes over upon the ſame, and to conferre them with the Text.

And if thus both thy feeling and comfort encreaſe, to bleſſe God the Author of all mercies, and namely of this, and to pray for him truely who loveth thee heartily, and ſhall ſo continue.

Ioſeph dyeth.

COMFORTABLE NOTES
UPON EVERY CHAPTER OF THE BOOKE OF Exodus.

TOuching this Booke of Exodus in generall, wee may note two things in it. Firſt, the authority of it, and ſecondly, the profit wee may take by it. The authority of it very well appeareth by ſuch allegations, as are made out of it in the new Teſtament, for the confirmation of moſt weighty points of our Chriſtian faith, as the reſurrection of the dead, our free election by grace, not by merit, with other ſuch like. The profit of it is double, hiſtoricall and myſticall. Hiſtoricall, by notable examples of Gods wrath and mercy; Wrath, towards the Ægyptians, Malechites, and ſuch like: Mercy towards the Iſraelites, and thoſe that ſhew mercy unto them, as Rahab, the Midwives, and others. The former may teach the wicked to beware, becauſe God certainely payeth home at the laſt. The latter may confirme all true beleevers in Gods promiſes, which ever were and ſhall be performed in their time. Alſo, make us patient to endure the Lords good pleaſure ever, ſeeing he both ſo gratiouſly regardeth, and ſo mercifully moderateth the afflictions of his children. Both the points together may teach us, that Kingdomes and Governments are diſpoſed by God, even as ſhall pleaſe his holy will. For he ſetteth up, and he taketh downe, he eſtabliſheth and changeth, according as he is ſerved and obeyed by Princes and people, governing, and governed. Able to ſhiver in peeces the greateſt that ever was, and as able againe to ſupport the weakeſt when he pleaſeth. The myſticall profit of this Booke, is a declaration of our Saviour Chriſt and the merits of his Paſſion, which is moſt notably made herein by types and figures, and lively reſemblances, as will appeare in their places.

Marke 12.26. Rom 9.17.

Hiſtoricall profit.

Myſticall profit.

The whole Booke may be divided into theſe two parts: The birth, as it were, and the beginning of the Church, in the firſt fifteene Chapters: Then, the education and bringing up of the ſame, in the reſt of the Booke.

Diviſion of the Booke.

Chap. I.

The firſt Chapter hath theſe chiefe heads in it:

The multiplication of the Iſraelites.
The cruelty of the Ægyptians.
The vertue of the Midwives.

COncerning the firſt point, you ſee in the fift verſe, that all the ſoule ſ which came out of the loynes of Iacob into Ægypt with him, were but ſeventy ſoules: of which little flock God made ſuch an encreaſe, as the Ægyptians grew afraid of it: For they brought forth fruit, and encreaſed in abundance, ſaith the ſeventh verſe, and were multiplyed, and were exceeding mighty, ſo that the Land was full of them. Some make the Hebrew word ſignifie an encreaſe like corne, where one graine bringeth forth thirty, ſixty, or an hundred. Some, as fiſhes, which multiply in greater number than any creature. R. Salomon ſaith, the women had oft foure and ſixe at a burden, God ſo providing to fulfill his promiſe touching their encreaſe, Gen. 22. 17. In the Booke of Numbers, you may more particularly ſee what came of every one.

one. For Ruben, the eldeſt ſonne of Iacob, ſo increaſed, that his branches there are ſaid to bee ſix and forty thouſand and five hundred: Simeon, his ſecond ſonne, encreaſed to nine and fiftie thouſand, three hundred and fifty; Gad, his third ſonne, to five and forty thouſand, ſix hundred and fifty, and ſo for the reſt, reade their increaſe in that place. Whereof to make ſome good uſe in our ſelves, wee may note and marke firſt, the truth of Gods promiſe made to Abraham in the 15. of Geneſ. when he bade him looke up to the Starres of heaven, and number them, if he could, aſſuring him then, that even ſo he would make his poſterity and off-ſpring of a mighty people, and a great kindred, which wee all ſee here was fulfilled. So aſſuredly true are all other of Gods promiſes, and therefore thinke of what you will, your faith and comfort ſhall not faile you. That ſweet promiſe, that, at what houre ſoever a ſinner repenteth truly of his ſins, God in mercy wil forgive him, it ſhal never faile. He may as ſoone ceaſe to be God, as ceaſe to be true in any thing which he hath ſpoken. And for this particular he hath not onely ſpoken it, but ſworne it, that, as he liveth he will not the death of any true penitent and ſorrowfull ſinner. We may not therfore do him wrong, and doubt of it. It is no pride to take faſt hold of this word, but it is duty due from us to confeſſe his truth, and to be thankfull. Another promiſe he hath made to us, that, if wee ſeeke the kingdome and the righteouſneſſe thereof, theſe worldly wants of ours ſhall be ſupplied, as ſhall bee fit and good for us. This alſo will he as aſſuredly keepe, as he is God, to the great quietneſſe of our harts, if we wil beleeve him. In a word, that promiſe of al promiſes, that, if we beleeve in his Son, we ſhall never periſh, but have eternall life, hee will performe. So, both for this life, and that to come, we have his word: and, no more than he failed Abraham in multiplying his ſeed, will he faile us in any promiſe: Onely his time we muſt tarry, and haſty mindes learne humble patience: He knoweth when is beſt both for him and us: Tarry he may, but come he will: Never untruth paſſed from him, never any that beleeved in him was diſappointed of his hope. Secondly, wee may obſerve here the riſing of houſes and families, whence it is, even from the Lord, who bleſſeth where hee pleaſeth with increaſe of children, and maketh a name ſpread, as likewiſe drieth up, and cutteth off, as hee pleaſeth, others. It muſt make us ceaſe from envy, where wee ſee encreaſe, and ſtay raſh judgement, where we ſee decreaſe: For it is the Lords worke; in whoſe matters we muſt well beware how we meddle. A third uſe ariſeth from the time of this encreaſe, which was chiefly and eſpecially after Ioſephs death, whereupon S. Auguſtine giveth this obſervation: Ioſeph is dead, and the children of Iſrael encreaſe; what is this my brethren? As long as Ioſeph lived they are not ſaid to encreaſe, but after his death. Surely, brethren, theſe things figured in that Ioſeph were fulfilled in our Ioſeph: for before our Ioſeph dyed, few beleeved in him, but after his death and reſurrection, throughout all the world the Iſraelites encreaſed and multiplied, that is, the Chriſtians. So ſaid the Lord himſelfe in the Goſpell, Except the corne die that falleth into the ground, it remaineth but it ſelf alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit. Now, not in Iudea onely is Chriſt knowne, but from the riſing of the Sunne, to the going downe of the ſame, &c. Thus may we profit by their multiplication.

Non eſt hæc ſuperbia elati, ſed confeſſio non ingrati.

The ſecond uſe

The third uſe.

The affliction of the Iſraelites

2 The ſecond head in this Chapter, is the cruelty of the Ægyptians; by meanes whereof a very bitter and heavy affliction followed this great and glorious multiplication. The uſe to our ſelves may bee this, that even ſo doth adverſity follow proſperity, and therefore proſperity ſhould ever prepare for adverſity. A wiſe man in his good day thinketh of his evill, and daily beholding the Sunne overſhadowed at times with a darke cloud, maketh uſe of it to his good. Sorrow and joy will not dwell together, but by compoſition they were thus agreed, as the Poets faine, that as ſoone as the one hath had a time, the other ſhall enter and have his time alſo, the former paſſing away and giving place. Let no wiſe man therefore ſay as David ſaid, tuſh, tuſh, this eſtate ſhall never decay; for the Lord turned his face, and David was ſoone troubled. Iob on a day could not thinke of ſuch a change as after happened to him, and yet all to the glory of God and his good. No earthly father loving his childe doth forbeare to chaſtiſe him; much leſſe doth the Father of Spirits leave his children without fit correction, ſince both hee loveth more, and knoweth how better to correct for their good. The path to heaven is beaten out through many tribulations, and up muſt every man and woman take their croſſe, that will bee his in eternall comfort.

Let us note againe in this place, the cauſes of this their affliction and oppreſſion, as the Spirit of wiſedome, for our good, hath here laid them downe. The firſt is, their very encreaſing and multiplying. For the King ſaid, Behold, the people of the children of Iſrael are greater and mightier than wee: Come, let us worke wiſely with them, leſt they multiplie. Where wee ſee, that Gods favour beſtowed in mercy, where he liketh, is ſtill an eye-ſore to evill men, matter enough for them to grinde and grate their teeth at, and to cauſe them to enter into plots and conſpiracies againſt them. The eye of envy looketh ever upward; who is above, who riſeth, who proſpereth, who is well ſpoken of, well thought of, or any way favoured by the Lord? and as much grieved is a ſpightfull ſpirit at the good of another, as at the harme of himſelfe. Which Diogenes noted, when he ſaw a knowne envious man looke ſad: No man, ſaith he, can now tell, whether harme hath happened to this fellow, or good to his neighbour, for both alike vexe him. It was the blot of Athens, that renowned City, to have few of any excellent vertue eſcape the rage of envy in it, but that either they were diſgraced, or baniſhed, or put to death in the end. Thoſe whom no ſword of hating foe could daunt in the field, envy vanquiſhed at home in the City, depraving their ſervices, blotting their names, and breaking at laſt their guiltleſſe hearts: Which made the Philoſopher preſcribe this remedy againſt envy, when one asked him how he might avoid it: Even, neither to doe, nor ſay any good thing. Thus did envy rage againſt their multiplying here. And if Gods actions eſcape not mans malice, ſhall yours? ſhall mine? ſhall any mans? no, no: præmoniti, præmuniti, forewarned, forearmed, the ſtreame ranne ever ſo, and God make us ever patient and ſtrong to goe on in our duties.

A ſecond cauſe of this affliction is, a ſuſpitious feare which entreth into theſe Ægyptians, that if there ſhould be warre, the Iſraelites would joyne themſelves to the enemy, fight againſt them, and ſo get themſelves out of the Land. Such fruit groweth upon ſuch trees, miſdeeming thoughts, cauſeleſſe jealouſie, vaine feares, and all unjuſt opinions. Why? ſurely becauſe it is the curſe that God hath in his word threatned to wicked perſons, which feare not him as they ought to doe. Aſtoniſhment of heart, a trembling heart, feare both night and day, &c. reade the Scriptures, and you ſhall finde much proofe of what I ſay. Suſpect bewrayes our thoughts, betraves our words, ſuſpitious eyes are meſſengers of woe. Well fares that man, howſoever his meate doth taſte, that tables not with foule ſuſpition: better to die, than to be ſuſpitious: Truſt not too ſoone, nor yet too ſoone miſtruſt; for miſtruſt will treaſon in the truſtieſt raiſe. The heart being once infect with jealouſie, the night is griefe, the day is miſery. Jealouſie is the torment of the minde, for which no wit or counſell helpe can finde. Suſpition wounds, and jealouſie ſtriketh dead. Cauſeleſſe and undeſerved ſuſpition ſendeth many a one too ſwiftly to their end. Theſe ſayings of wiſe and true experience ſhould much move every wiſe perſon. We ſee what we nurſe, when we nouriſh this vice. And if all this ſhould not move us, yet let our owne credit move us, which by this meanes is ſhrewdly drawne in queſtion, the known verſes ſaying thus:

Too much ſuſpition of another is
A flat condemning of thine owne amiſſe.

Cauſeleſſe ſuſpition.

Deut. 28. verſ. 28. verſ. 65, 66. Pſal. 14 verſ. 5.

A third cauſe of their affliction was a new King, the former being dead, under whom they felt no ſuch miſery. Which may juſtly occaſion us to note carefully what danger often is in change of Governours, if the Lord be not mercifull. Salomon may have his wants, but when his ſonne commeth in his place he thundreth, and telleth the people that his little finger ſhall be heavier upon them than all his Fathers hand. This might we as deeply have taſted of, as ever did theſe Iſraelites, if Almighty God had not thought upon mercy in ſtead of judgement. The great neglect of thoſe gracious dayes, which under the bleſſed government of Queene Elizabeth, our late renowned Soveraigne, we comfortably enjoyed, deſerved puniſhment in a high degree, wee muſt needs confeſſe, if we will ſay truth; yet in ſtead thereof, our moſt ſweet God, whoſe goodneſſe knoweth neither bottome nor meaſure, hath raiſed up over us ſuch a King againe, as both ſo firmely is faſtned to the love of the Goſpell, and ſo enriched with all other princely vertues, either of nature or grace, as not onely we with bowed knees may ever praiſe the name of God, but all forrain Nations ſpeake and write of ſo admirable a mercy vouchſafed unto us; God for his Chriſts ſake make us thankfull. That the King knew not Ioſeph, Divines ſay, it was either for want of reading the Hiſtories, or becauſe hee unthankfully contemned the good that was done in other times, and to other men. S. Auſten here giveth a note, how men may know what King ruleth within them, to whoſe words I referre the Reader.

Change of Prince.

Aug. Serm. 34. de Tempore.

And let this forgetting of Ioſeph, that is, of the ſervice and good that Ioſeph did to all that Land of Ægypt, in the great famine mentioned in Geneſis, bee the fourth and laſt cauſe of this affliction. And this indeed, if you marke it, is a mother of great miſchiefe whereſoever it is, even this forgetting of ſuch benefits as wee ought never to forget. This maketh the childe undutifull to his parents, becauſe hee forgetteth what they have done for him: which made the old Father Tobiah call upon his ſonne earneſtly to remember what his mother ſuffered for him when hee was in her body, what care after when hee was brought into the world, to make much of her as long as ſhee lived, and when ſhe ſhould die, to bury her by him. The good father doubted not but due remembrance would worke gratitude, as hee well knew unkinde forgetfulneſſe would doe the contrary. This is the ſinne of ſervants to their Maſters, and of Maſters often to their ſervants: Of one neighbour towards another, and of all the world almoſt this day. But could ſuch ſervice, may you thinke, as Ioſeph did to Ægypt, be ever forgotten? Yea, yea, wee ſee it here noted by God himſelfe; and therefore we muſt know it for truth, that ingratitude will make no bones to ſwallow up any vertue, any merit, and goodneſſe whatſoever. Which cauſeth a ſaying to be moſt true, Si ingratum dixeris, omnia dixeris: if thou canſt truely ſay hee is unthankfull, in that one word thou haſt ſaid all the evill of him that may bee ſpoken. Honourable therefore was it, and thrice honourable in King Henry the third, King of this Land, ſo to remember the ſervices of his oppreſſed ſervant Hubert, Lord chiefe Juſtice of England, and thereupon to free him from the malice of his enemies, and to ſave his life.

I ſee no reaſon (ſaith he) why we ſhould deale ſo hardly with Hubert (when his enemies urged his execution, and expected the Kings commandement for the ſame,) for firſt, from the time of his youth he ſerved my Uncle, King Richard, and then my father King Iohn: in whoſe ſervice, as I heard ſay, beyond the ſeas, he was driven to eate his horſe, and in my time hee hath ſtood conſtantly in defence of the Realme againſt forren Nations, kept the Caſtle of Dover againſt King Lewis, and vanquiſhed the French-men upon the Seas; alſo at Bedford and Lincolne he hath done great ſervice: If he ſhould be guilty of any thing done untruly againſt me, which is not evidently proved, yet by me he ſhall never be put to ſuch a villanous death. For I had rather be accounted a King fooliſh and ſimple, than to be judged a tyrant and ſeeker of blood, eſpecially of ſuch, as have ſerved mee and my Anceſtors in many perils ſo dangerouſly, weighing more the few evils which yet be not proved, than ſo many good deſerts both to mee and to the whole Realme, evidently knowne unto all men. As then remembrance and forgetfulneſſe of a good are contrary, ſo you ſee the effects of them are contrary; the one bringing forth all honourable actions, the other oppreſſion and cruelty, as in this place. Theſe were the foure cauſes of this great affliction of Gods people, and let us never forget them, nor their uſe.

How the wicked uſe to worke.

3 In the next place, let us note the manner in bringing their purpoſe to paſſe: firſt, they have a meeting and conſultation, then an execution of what they have deviſed. Their meeting the King cauſed, when he ſaid, Come, let us worke wiſely, &c. In which we ſee the guiſe of the world, the wicked have a Come as well as the godly, but farre and farre differing: for the godly have their Come as a word of encouragement to religion, and the exerciſes thereof, as when they ſay: O come and let us ſing unto the Lord, let us heartily rejoyce in the ſtrength of his ſalvation. But the wickeds Come, is to conſpiracy and practiſe; in which they are more diligent than the children of light are in their good: for their bodies meete, their heads meete, their hearts meete, and both outward and inward they are earneſt in evill. Such a Come wee reade of againſt holy Ieremy: Come, ſaid the wicked, and let us imagine a device againſt Ieremie, let us ſmite him with the tongue, and not give credit to any of his words. Such another have Ruffians and Theeves and ſwaggering fellowes in the Proverbs: Come and caſt in thy lot with ours, for wee will have all but one purſe, &c. Such another hath the Harlot to the young man, Come, my huſband is not at home, &c. But againſt ſuch curſed Comes, let us ever remember what the Pſalme ſaith, Bleſſed is the man that hath not walked in the counſell of the ungodly, nor ſtand in the way of ſinners, and hath not ſit in the ſeate of the ſcornfull. And that Arnobius, an old Writer, well noteth upon theſe words, Primus Pſalmus unde ſcit beatitudinem periiſſe, inde recuperat. In conſilio impiorum abiit Adam, id eſt in ſerpentis & mulieris. Et nunc Adam noſter, id eſt, conſenſus noſter, beatus erit, ſi non abierit in conſilio ſerpentis & mulieris, id eſt, in conſilio carnis & diaboli, aut ſi abierit, non ibi ſtet, aut ſi ſteterit, non ſedeat, &c. The firſt Pſalme, ſaith he, where it knew happineſſe was loſt, there beginneth to recover it againe: for Adam walked in the counſell of the wicked, namely, of the Woman, and of the Serpent. And now our Adam, that is, our conſent, ſhall be bleſſed, if it doe not walke in the counſell of the Woman and of the Serpent, that is, of fleſh and the Devill; or if it happen to walke, yet ſtandeth not ſtill; or if it ſtand ſtill, yet ſitteth not downe in the ſame, that is, abideth not and tarrieth in it, but remembring the law of the Lord, taketh his delight therein, and in the ſame doth exerciſe himſelfe both day and night. This curſed conventicle and malicious meeting, albeit wholly it ſavoureth of cruelty and blood, yet, if you marke it, it is covered and ſmeared over with a vizzard and die of wiſedome: for Come, ſaith the King, let us wiſely worke. So ſtill is the Devill like himſelfe, if you marke it, and ever in his colours: His followers learne of him, and they alſo delight in colours. The proud man is cleanly, the covetous man is provident, the drunkard a good fellow, and ſuch like. But the day will come wherein all ſuch colours will be waſhed away: and the cleare ſunne breaking out, and diſperſing all clouds, ſinne will be diſcerned to be ſinne, and eternally puniſhed. Thus of their meeting and their counſell.

Pſal. 1. verſ. 1.

The wicked lay bruthens on the godly.

4 The concluſion and reſolution of their counſell, if you marke the Text, is to lay burthens upon this people, and to keepe them downe. Burthens of labours, as appeareth, and burthens of payments, as ſome write. So that by this way their ſtrength ſhould bee ſhaken, and their lives made wearieſome unto them, that thereby leſſe increaſing might bee amongſt them, and leſſe feare had of them. Where marke if you doe not ſee the devices of ſome in our dayes, wiſe, as they think, but herin wicked, as wee know, ſeeking by ſuch practices to breake both backes and hearts of thoſe that deſerve better than themſelves, as if they had beene Ægyptians borne, and not Chriſtians acquainted with the Booke of God: whom I make no doubt (if they hold on their way) but the Red ſea will devoure, as it did theſe, that is, the Juſtice of God will deſtroy them for their ſinne. Till then patience, and a continuall comfortable remembrance that God ſitteth at the ſterne, which ſurely is enough to any that knoweth how ſweet hee is to all that faſt and faithfully cleave unto him.

5 What is the event? to keepe them under is the plot, but will it hold? O comfort! O comfort I say againe! No, no, their device will not hold, for the Lord sitting in the heavens, laughed all their counsels to scorne: And the more they vexed them, the more they multiplied and grew, saith the text. A thing never to be thought of enough. So hath it beene, so shall it bee to the worlds end, with all faithfull servants of God as shall be fit. In those bloody persecutions after Christs death by the Romane Emperours, what strange torments were devised to keepe downe Religion and religious Professors, men and women? They plucked off their skinnes quick, they boared out their eyes with wimbles, they broyled them alive on Grid-yrons, they scaulded them in boyling liquors, they enclosed them in barrels, and driving great nailes thorow, tumbled them downe mountaines, till their owne blood so cruelly drawne out, stifeled and choaked them in the barrell; womens brests were seared off with burning yrons, their bodies rent, and their joynts racked with many, and many grievous paines. But would all this serve? No, no, even as here, so then the more they were vexed, the more they multiplied through the mercy and power of him that gave them strength to endure the paine, and scorne the malice. So that Saint Augustine saith of those times, Ligabantur, urebantur, cædebantur, & tamen multiplicabantur; They were bound, they were burned, they were beaten, &c. and yet they multiplied. The blood of Martyrs is the seed of the Church, and bringeth forth fruit as seed doth, some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold, as God pleaseth. His arme shortneth not at any time, wee all know, and therefore what hee will suffer the Devill and his instruments to doe, that they can, and no more. They have worne the crownes of Kingdomes at last, to the joy of thousand thousands, in despite of all malice, who were thrust sore at, that they might fall, and from an honourable rising could not the malice of all Iosephs brethren keepe him. Therefore saith the Text, they were the more grieved against the Children of Israel. And so usually falleth out to those that seeke their security by wicked wayes: God crosseth, and their devices turne to theire owne further woe and discontentment, according to the common proverbe, Malum consilium consultori pessimum, evill counsell is alway worst to him that giveth it.

Wicked devices against the godly, faile of effect when God will.

Verse 12.

6 Will they then give over their wicked wayes, and suffer them to encrease, whom God will have to encrease? No, but they adde unto their cruelty more and more; in such sort as the Israelites are weary of their lives, by sore labour in clay and bricke, and in all worke in the field, with all manner of bondage, which they laid upon them most cruelly, and that their iniquity might be full, they devise a cruelty never heard of before, to send for the Mid-wives, and to deale with them to destroy the male-children of the Israelites at the birth. VVhich may rightly teach us to beware ever how we begin to doe evill, for feare one evill pull on another, as here it did; and in David againe, when adultery drew on murder of an innocent man, and a faithfull subject. But did the Mid-wives obey his commandement? No, they feared God saith the Text, and did not as the King commanded them, but preserved alive the men-children; justly commended for that they rather obeyed God than man. They considered what stood with the Law of God, which to them was knowne, and not what pleased the mis-led mind of a Governour: Kings are to be obeyed and pleased, but in the Lord. And if further they will force us, our bodies are theirs to sustaine undeserved paine; but both body and soule shall die, if we sinne against God. This did those happy men know and follow, when they were threatned, and at last thrust into that fiery furnace by great cruelty, saying, as you reade there; Our God is able to deliver us, if it please him, but if not, yet know, O King, that wee will not doe this thing, being wicked Idolatrie, to worship the moulten Image. The reason of the Mid-wives refusall is alleaged, the feare of God. And surely wheresoever this banke is, the waters of ungodlines are held out from over-flowing, as where the banke is not, they doe. VVhen Abraham once entertained the thought, that in the King of Gerar his Court, the feare of God was not, straight hee doubted violence both to himselfe, and to his wife; and so offended in saying she was his sister. This feare made Ioseph that he durst not sinne against his Master, or against his brethren, when his father was dead. This feare is the beginning of wisedome, and a good understanding have all they that doe thereafter, the praise of it endureth for ever. Still then labour to keepe this feare in your heart, and you shall reape a comfortable reward of it at the last.

The wicked are obstinate in evill.

Verse 14.

Verse 15.

Acts 5.

7 VVhat then became of the Mid-wives? How escaped they the Kings wrath, disobeying his commandement? Surely, the text saith, the King sent for them, and they by an untruth excused themselves, saying: The Hebrew women were so strong, that they were delivered before any Mid-wife came. VVhere, in the King we may learne this good, not to condemne any before we heare them: for, if so wicked a man as the King was, had yet that Justice, to send for them, and to heare their defence, much more should wee that know more, doe the like. Many swelling tales and strange reports have feeble proofe when hearing is granted. Secondly, in the Mid-wives wee may see the weakneese of our natures, for they should not have lyed for any feare: and therefore though a good deed bee done, yet it is ill defended. VVee may not lie, saith the Scripture, to justifie God, much lesse for any other cause. This weakneese then in theſe good women, was like a ſpot in a faire face: as S. Auguſtine ſaith of them, Vivos conſervare natos fuit miſericordiæ, at pro vita ſua mentitas eſſe, opus fuit infirmitatis, quam Deus gratia condonat, Homines vero non niſi ingrati & protervi poſſunt ad exemplum imitationis ſibi proponere. To preſerve alive the children, was a worke of mercy, but to lye for the ſafetie of their lives, was a worke of infirmitie, which yet God pardoned by grace: and none ſaving unthankfull and crooked perſons, will ever propoſe it to themſelves to be imitated.

How the Mid-wives escaped the Kings wrath.

How God built houſes for the Midwives.

8 But the text ſaith, God proſpered the Midwives, and built them houſes: What is that? Domus nomine in ſcripturis, non ſolum habitationis locus, ſed & filij, quibus, tanquam lapidibus, domus ſeu familia conſtruitur & creſcit, & res etiam familiares intelligi poſſunt: unde quidam copioſam ſobolem eis dediſſe affirmant, ut Euſeb. & Hugo de Sto. victore. Hieron: innuit ædificaſſe eis ſpirituales domus. Thom. quod converſæ fuerunt ad cultum veri Dei. Euſeb. Caſarien: ædificaſſe domus non manufactas, ſed in cœlis ſitas, &c. The meaning uſually received is, he bleſſed their families, that they became of great reputation, which were deſcended of them. And he ſtirred up the hearts of the Iſraelites to build houſes which deſcended to their families, and were fit for them. By the phraſe then of ſpeech, let us learne thus much, ever to lift up our eyes to God for any thing that happeneth to us, albeit man be the meanes which he uſeth, for ever it is the Lords worke. Such a phraſe was that in Geneſis, God made them aprons or coates of skinnes, when themſelves were the workers, and God the Author of the device. Did wee thus ſee God in all we enjoy, it could not be, but thankfull thoughts would ariſe in our hearts, and more care to pleaſe him, then appeareth now in many a one. Proſecute this meditation, with your ſelfe, and thinke of your owne particular, what God hath done for you, and what you render to him againe, &c.

Note this well.

I will caſt my heart upon another thing, mee thinke here moſt comfortable, namely, how God rejected not the good that was in theſe women for the imperfection that was mingled with it, but pardoning what was weak, graciouſly rewardeth what was well. Feare not you then, though all be not in you as you wiſh, but pray as you can, reade as you can, heare as you can, and all other Chriſtian duties doe them as you can, according to that meaſure of grace which you have received: and if any infirmity thruſt it ſelfe in and trouble you, when you are moſt deſirous to be free from it, feare not; the Lord ſheweth in theſe women what his nature is. He knoweth our mould whereof we bee made, and hee turneth away his face from beholding our frailties, caſting a gracious countenance upon our good. Frailty is ours, our well-doing is his: and his owne grace he will reward. You are not greater than the Apoſtle was, who yet groaned (you know) under this burden, that he could not doe the good which he would, but ſtill ſlipt into the evill which he would not. Tyrannize not then over your ſelfe, but know it for a truth, that want to doe all, diſgraceth not a will to doe ſomething, with a ſweet God. Often remember that place in the Kings, ſo full of comfort: He onely (ſaith the Lord) ſhall goe to the grave in peace, becauſe in him there is ſome goodneſſe: ſome goodneſſe, I ſay againe, and ever have you it in your remembrance: for not, ſome goodneſſe, ſhall loſe his reward with God, though all be not there. Your will would doe better, and that he ſeeth, but you faile as a childe of Adam, and that he ſeeth alſo, yet will not ſee it, to ſtop any mercy from your ſome goodneſſe. If hee then bee ſo ſweet, be not you ſower againſt your ſelfe, but cheerfully doing what you can; ſay for your wants, with him in the Goſpell, which felt infirmity as you doe; Lord, helpe my unbeliefe: Lord, helpe my weakneſſe every way, for thy mercies ſake.

Rom. 7.

1 King. 14. 13.

When craft cannot, fury and force muſt.

9 Laſtly, when the King ſaw he could not have his will that way, then he commanded that every man-childe ſhould be caſt into the River, as ſoone as it was borne, and of like appointed bloody ſearchers for that purpoſe. So, when craft cannot, rage muſt, encreaſing their malice againſt the Lord and his poore members, never thinking how hard it is to kicke againſt the pricke. Such a like bloody attempt made Herod, when he ſlew the Children, but yet miſſed of his purpoſe, as did here this King. Let his power to prevent his foes, be the comfort of all his true ſervants ever. Thus may we profit by this Chapter.

CHAP. II.

In this Chapter conſider chiefely theſe three heads:

The birth of Moſes and his bringing up.
His flying away from Ægypt.
His mariage.

It is a ſtrange Kindred that hath none evill of it.

TOuching the birth of Moſes, it is noted, that both by father and mother he was of the Tribe of Levi: And what Levi the ſon of Iacob did, we reade in Gen. 34. 25. the blemiſh whereof clave unto his poſterity after: yet now you ſee, God honoreth it with this great honor, that of that Tribe ſhould come this famous Deliverer of the whole Nation from ſuch cruell bondage, as as now they endured. An honour ſurely very great, and we may well note in it the ſweet goodneſſe of Almighty God, who, though ſome of a Tribe have offended him, and left cleaving to their name, that blackneſſe and blot, which the reſt of their name never occaſioned, yet is not for ever alienated thereby from the whole blood, but extendeth mercy and favour, yea very high honour to ſome of them as he ſhall thinke good, wiping out by degrees what foule ſin had wiped on too wickedly. How many men pray then in comfort ever? O Lord, O Lord, remember not the offences of them that have gone before us, but let mercy reach, notwithſtanding their evill, to thoſe that heartily defied their evill. This example of God, both good Princes, and all good Chriſtians carefully follow, not hurting one for another, when like deſerving maketh them not in like ſort puniſhable. Nevertheleſſe, ſome there be, that, forgetting it, maintaine an evill name of deadly fewd, as they call it, a damnable revenge upon many, and for many yeares, againſt which is the forme of prayer taught us by Chriſt, Forgive us our treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſſe againſt us; with many Scriptures more.

2 It is ſaid, his mother hid him three moneths, and Origen maketh this uſe of it, that men bee carefull not to doe all things to bee ſeene of men, but as the Scripture teacheth, to ſhut the doore, and to pray in ſecret, not to let the left hand know what the right hand doth: for feare, leſt if theſe male-children bee expoſed to be the view of men, with a longing deſire to winne praiſe, the Ægyptians catch them and caſt them into the river. But rather thinke you by theſe words, of the woefull eſtate wherein this people of God then lived. What fulneſſe of fury was this, ſo bloodily to tyrannize over new-borne infants, were they never ſo ſweet and well-favoured, that their parents muſt hide them, if they would enjoy them but a day? O bitter times! O wofull mothers, when they ſaw themſelves once conceived with childe! For if it were a manchilde, their eyes muſt ſee the murderers take it, and though it wept upon father and mother, and lift up both little hands and eyes in the pitifulleſt manner that it could, thereby deſiring to be ſaved from the deſtroyer, yet could they not helpe, it muſt away to the River, to the River, it muſt be drowned without all remorſe and pitie. Let it worke in our hard hearts ſome true feeling of our happy freedome from ſuch miſery, and earneſt prayer to the God of mercy, that ever he would continue freedome unto us.

A moſt wofull eſtate of the Church.

3 It is ſaid alſo the child was faire. What God had appointed him for, you know: and now ſee, how the Lord gave, what with men might give him more grace. Vertue in a faire body is more acceptable: and often in children appeareth ſome ſigne of future vertue, wherewith God purpoſeth to endue them when they are men. Beautie or comelineſſe either in men or women is the gift of God, but a greater gift it is to have grace withall to live vertuouſly. Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, among women were very faire, and moſt vertuous withall. Salomon ſpeaketh of others beautifull alſo, but not good, Prov. 6.27. Prov. 11.21. Ioſeph, Saul, Abſolon, among men were goodly perſonages, but Ioſephs pietie was more glorious, than all his beauty. Thanke God for his mercy in your ſelfe and your children; and, to ſupply all defects, beſeech him in your prayer; you ſhall finde the comfort and the benefit of it. If favour be but hard, remember S. Bernard, It is a happy blackneſſe in body, which is accompanied with a whiteneſſe in minde. Many have beene hard favoured, and yet endued with excellent parts. Philopæmen, a Grecian Captaine, very deformed, excelled moſt men in Military matters. Æſope, very hard favoured, yet moſt witty. Socrates, full of imperfections in ſhape, and yet who more famous for wiſedome? Apollo his Oracle gave him preheminence. Thus might I tell you many ſtories, but you ſee the meditation ſufficiently, follow it further, as you ſee cauſe. Bleſſed be God, that every way giveth us comfort. Xerxes, that had that huge Army, yet is ſaid to have beene the godlieſt man of them all. Plutarch in the life of Demetrius, ſaith he was ſo paſſing in face and in countenance, that no Painter or Picture-maker was able to draw him. Of Scipio Africanus he ſaith, that the Barbarians in Spaine ſtood amazed at their comelineſſe. Suetonius writeth of the goodly Eye of Auguſtus Cæſar. VVhat an excellent perſonage Charles the Great had, Paulus Æmilius ſheweth in his third Booke.

Valer. Max. lib. 3. cap. 1.

Fœlix nigredo quæ mentis candorem habet.

Do pœnas deformitatis meæ. Plutarch in vita.

Herod. lib. 7.

Maximilian the firſt, had ſuch a Preſence and Majeſtie, that a ſtranger is ſaid, among thirty great Princes to have noted him out, having never ſeene him before. But I forget my ſelfe, out of a deſire to give you occaſion to thinke of more.

4 But was it onely the fairneſſe of the Child that made the mother hide him? No, every Creature thinketh his owne faire. This therefore is ſomewhat, but not all, Nature had a ſway; and yet, above all, Gods Spirit telleth us of another thing, which wee muſt marke; namely, of Faith: For, by Faith, ſaith he, by the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes, Moſes when hee was borne, was hid three moneths by his Parents, becauſe they ſaw he was a proper Childe, neither feared they the Kings commandement. Faith beleeved that God would one day releaſe them, and not any longer ſuffer them ſo cruelly to be oppreſſed. In hope therefore of the ſame, they uſed meanes, hiding him, as they could, and leaving the ſucceſſe to God. Their eyes could not ſee any way of ſafety, much leſſe that way, which after fell out: but their hearts hoped, their ſoules prayed, and upon him they fixed both heart and ſoule, who is Almighty, All-mercifull, All-ſweet and kinde: to his diſtreſſed Servants then neareſt, when hee ſeemeth furtheſt; then ſtrongeſt, when he ſeemeth weakeſt; then ſweeteſt, when he ſeemeth ſowreſt; and then up in wrath to revenge our wrongs, when the world doth thinke hee hath forgotten us. Such faith then let us marke, and pray for, in the evill day: doubt not the Lord, diſtruſt not his helpe, ſhift along in his holy feare with ſuch lawfull means, as you poſſibly can: commend the bleſſing of them to him, and let him ever doe his owne will.

An excellent Woman.

5 But (alas) ſhee could not long keepe him thus. Three moneths ſhee did it by ſecret hiding: but then ſaith the ſtory, Shee could no longer: ſo cruell were their hearts, and ſo narrow was the ſearch, that he muſt away, a caſe more than bitter, as hath beene ſaid. But what helpe now for this guiltleſſe Babe? See an excellent Woman, full of faith in her God: when ſhee could no longer hide him, ſhee deviſed for him a little arke made of reede, and dawbed it with ſlime and pitch, putting the childe in it, and ſetting it among the Bull-ruſhes by the River ſide, appointing her Daughter (the childes ſiſter) to watch the ſame: ſo committing that thing to her mighty God, which her ſelfe could not keepe from a bloody Tyrant, never yeelding, but in hope ſtill, even as it were paſt hope, depended faithfully and conſtantly upon her God, for the ſafety of her childe.

Womens wits have often great effects in extremitie.

6 And what did the father all this while, that the Scripture ſtill mentioneth the mother, ſaying; ſhee did, and ſhee did? Truely of like all vexed, amazed, and tormented with the woe of it, ſtood as a man ſhiftleſſe, not ſeeing what to doe. The VVoman enabled by God, is the better man, quicker and prompter for device in ſo touching an extremity: ſhe deviſeth what hee liketh, and ſhe performeth what God bleſſeth. In the weaker veſſell Gods ſtrength was more ſeene, and he doth enable them now and then for that purpoſe. The knowledge of it muſt yeeld them a fit regard, and men may not ever diſdaine to follow them, by whom they ſee God ſometimes doth worke. Many men have beene well adviſed by their wives, and the womans counſell not followed, you reade in Scripture, hath turned to the mans woe. You remember the particular, Have not thou to doe with that juſt man, with divers others.

7 The Childe thus placed by the Water-ſide, and his ſiſter watching a farre off, as though ſhee knew not of it, to ſee what would become of her little brother: VVhat falleth out? O depth of Gods mercy and goodneſſe! Downe commeth that way, to waſh her ſelfe in the River, Pharaohs Daughter, even this cruell Pharaohs Daughter, called of ſome Thermutis, and walking by the River ſide with her Maides, ſpies the Arke among the Bull-ruſhes, and ſent her Mayd to fetch it: when ſhee opened it, behold little Moſes in it, and the poore Babe wept upon her, begging by teares (as well as it could) ſome mercy and pity againſt the bloody law of her father. Shee had compaſſion, and conceived rightly, that it was one of the Hebrewes children. By all which, what may we learne, but firſt, that there is no Rocke more ſure, nor refuge more comfortable (when mans power faileth) then Gods gracious providence? For there is no temptation ſo great, whereunto that cannot give an iſſue. Secondly, how able God is, to diſpoſe of men and womens courſes, otherwiſe then at the beginning they intended? (For this Lady purpoſed onely to walke and waſh her, but God had a worke of mercy to doe by her; her purpoſe was one thing, and the Lords was another.) Often thus it falleth out in this world: God being ever able to worke us to his will. Yea, ſee more here, how, even by their hands that would deſtroy, the Lord is able to preſerve; which is a great comfort. Laſtly, where are they that talke of Fortune? VVhat more caſuall in mans eyes, than this Ladies walking that way? Yet you ſee, it was no Fortune, but diſpoſed wholly by the providence of God, for the life of the Childe, the joy of his Parents, and the deliverance of the whole Nation in time, from ſo bitter a bondage. Fortune therefore fitteth the mouth of a Heathen, and Faith in Gods providence, the heart of a Chriſtian.

8 But let us goe forward. VVhen thus ſhe had found a Childe, by the Lords appointment, and pitied the poore creature that wept upon her: out ſteps the Siſter, who watched there by, and asked her if ſhe ſhould fetch a Nurſe of the Hebrew women? The Childe utterly refuſing (as Stories ſay) to ſucke an Ægyptian woman then preſent; ſhe willingly conſented: and ſtraight commeth the mother to receive againe her own childe, and to nurſe it up for Pharaohs Daughter. O powerfull God, what a change is here? The mothers heart, when ſhee ſent her childe to the waters ſide, not knowing what ſhould befall it; and now, when ſhe received it againe, with authority to nurſe it up in ſafety, whoſoever ſaid nay; how differ they? VVhat woe in that? VVhat joy in this? VVhat weeping then? VVhat claſping now? Then farewell, and this meeting, Lord, Lord, how differ they? Stay your ſelfe here, a Lyon that reade it: and if you have affections, thinke of it; make the caſe your owne; and tell mee what you feele? Doe wee not ſee a powerfull God? And doe we not ſee a ſweet God? Is not his mercy as his power? And is not his power to deliver his Children out of all their feares? Cannot hee ſend comfort and bid ſorrow give place? Cannot hee turne Tragedies into Comedies, and croſſe the crueltie of all tyrants? Truely, that thing is not under heaven ſo heavie upon your heart, but he can remove it, and put joy in the place before the day be light. Still therefore put your truſt in him, and ſay with holy Iob; If the Lord ſhould kill me, yet would I hope in him. Iob 13.15.

9 You may marke againe here, how boldly this poore maide ſpeaketh to a Kings Daughter in thoſe dayes. Such was their ſimplicity then, from our hatefull pride now. Let her now adayes be as farre from the degree of a Kings Daughter, as ſhe is from the conditions of a vertuous woman (which is often farre enough;) yet up is the eye ſo high, that few may bee good enough to ſpeake with her much. And if any doe, his Coate (not his Cauſe) muſt get him acceſſe, But very Pharaohs daughter ſhall condemne theſe Peacocks one day. Humility raiſeth, and pride caſteth downe before God and man. Happy are they, whom holy advice maketh religious.

10 She called his name Moſes, that is, drawne up, becauſe, ſaid ſhe, I drew him up out of the water. Thereby giving him occaſion whileſt he lived, by his very name to remember Gods mercies when he ſhould have periſhed. Wee have ſtill our names given us at this day upon divers occaſions: ſometimes of events, as this was here: ſometimes for kindred that bee ſo called; ſometimes for affection to have us like our names, and ſo forth. What way ſo ever they begin, they are uſually given us at Baptiſme, and therefore rightly may remember us, both of the mercy of God in vouchſafing us Baptiſme, and of the holy promiſe, which we then made him by our ſureties: that we would forſake the devill and all his workes, the vaine pompe and glory of the World, with all covetous deſires of the ſame: the carnall deſires of the fleſh, ſo that we would not follow; nor be led by them: that we would beleeve in God, the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and Earth, &c. which being remembred religiouſly with feeling, would cut off a number of foule ſinnes, which not onely clog our conſciences before God, but diſgrace us greatly before men: As ſwearing, lying, whoring, ſtealing, and ſuch like. Truely ſo often as any man or woman heare their owne name, they are accuſed of theſe things, if they be guilty. A promiſe ſo broken, being made to God in the face of the Congregation, will trouble the ſoule ſore at the houre of death.

11 Finally, wee ſee plainly by this whole diſcourſe, how mans counſell cannot hinder that which God hath determined ſhall come to paſſe. For there is no counſell, no wiſedome, no ſtrength againſt the Lord. Moſes muſt live, and become a deliverer to that people, doe Pharaoh what he can. And though many poore infants were caſt away to prevent this feare, yet that infant which muſt effect what he ſo feared, is preſerved alive in deſpight of him; yea, nouriſhed up by his owne Daughter, in his owne boſome, to the wonder of all that reade it, to the worlds end. The like you may remember of Herod and thoſe infants; but this is enough of the firſt part of this Chapter.

The ſecond part.

1 NOw followeth the ſecond part; namely, of his departure both from Court and countrey, which happened when he was forty yeares old, as Stephen witneſſeth. And, if any marvell why it was ſo long; Of all the reaſons that are alleaged, it ſeemeth beſt, that, till that time he had not his calling from God to begin that worke. Hee might conſider his owne birth and parentage, his great preſervation and education, his nations miſery and bondage, and heartily pitty them; but, that he was of God appointed to them a deliverer, he knew not till God revealed it, and God revealed it not, till now, as it ſhould ſeeme; for Stephen ſaith, It came into his minde, when he was thus old to viſite his brethren; as if he ſhould ſay, he now felt his calling, and not before. Acts 7.21.

2 When hee did feele it, and that once the Spirit of God ſmote his heart, then marke wee, how no honours, no pleaſures, no riches could keepe him in the Court any longer, but hee rather choſe to ſuffer adverſity with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſinne for a ſeaſon, eſteeming the rebukes of Chriſt greater riches, than the treaſures of Ægypt. For hee had reſpect unto the recompence of the reward. A notable example for all Courtiers & men of high place, that they ſuffer themſelves not to bee ſnared with any thing incident to their places ſo, that they may not ſerve the living God as they ought. For ſurely, if either pleaſure or profit draw from him, it is too dearly bought, and will lie heavy upon their ſoules one day. Their diſſembling there, can never profit Gods people, as their owne profeſſion would doe. But in ſtead of profiting, it draweth many thouſands to death with them, who obſerve their ſteps, and depend upon them: which will be laid to their charge in that great day of the Lord, when Moſes ſhall live, and they dye: not all this glory they poſſeſſed in the world being able to procure them one drop of water to coole their tongues. Heb.11.25. Courtiers and great perſonages.

3 VVhen he came to his brethren, hee ſaw their bitter ſervitude, burdens, and ſlavery out of meaſure: he ſaw many great abuſes offered unto them, wherewith hee was ſo farre moved, that he laid his hands upon one of the Ægyptians, and ſlew him. Not ſo teaching private men men to doe without authority, what hee did warranted by a calling: but rightly teaching Magiſtrates, which have calling, to uſe their places to the reliefe of the oppreſſed,& inſtructing all men, as their places will warrant them, to helpe their brethren from unjuſt oppreſſors.

But his looking about him on every ſide, when hee did it, and hiding him that was ſlaine, argue, as you may thinke, an evill conſcience, and prove in him an unlawfull act. No indeed, no more than it doth in other Magiſtrates, that they execute Juſtice upon ſome early, or late, or privately, to avoid ſedition and tumult. This was in Moſes, and in them a godly wiſedome, providing warily, that whiles they indeavour a good, by ſome indiſcreet handling, there grow not an evill. Some feare, if you will, I deny not to have beene in Moſes, when he did it: and it may truly teach us the weakneſſe that ſometimes is in the beſt ſervants of God, in the very warranted workes of their lawfull calling, to our comfort, if wee feele the like. And, which is ſweet alſo, that God doth not caſt away obedience performed to him with ſome feare more than it ſhould. Wee are not greater than Moſes: and therefore (praying for ſtrength, and doing our beſt, if ſome unwiſhed weakneſſe ſhew it ſelfe) let this example be remembred.

5 It is ſaid in the Text, that Moſes came forth againe the ſecond day: and thereby all Magiſtrates may learne conſtancy and continuance in their care for their people. For it is not enough one day to come and ſee how all goeth, as at their firſt entrance upon their office, or otherwiſe, but even the ſecond day they ſhould do the ſame, and ſo day by day, as occaſion ſerveth, during the time of their Charge. The want whereof maketh many a one wring, that by more diligence would be righted and releeved.

6 But how was hee requited? Surely finding two ſtriving together, and admoniſhing them to ceaſe from ſuch unbrotherly ſtrife, ſtreight hee was reproched by one of them, in this ſort: Who made thee a Man of authority, and a Iudge over us? Thinkeſt thou to kill me as thou killedſt the Ægyptian? A cleare glaſſe for all eyes to ſee in the reward often given to good men, when they have performed ſome good duties to their brethren. But it may be no diſcouragement: for God is in Heaven, and will reward all obedience to him, paying home heavily ſuch unthankfull receivers of it.

Solent reges abundare auribus. Xenophon.

7 Was this all? No, marke more in theſe unkinde Iſraelites. The death of the Ægyptian is brought to Pharaohs eare: ſo that now Moſes, for his zeale and heart to relieve his Countryman that was abuſed, muſt either himſelfe fall into danger, or flie the country to his diſgrace. Not onely therefore the unthankfulneſſe, but the meaſure of it is to bee obſerved, for our good. For many times we can diſgeſt ſome ingratitude, but ſuch a meaſure, and ſuch a manner, as is haply offered unto us, wee cannot. This example will helpe us: for ſure the meaſure here was great, and the manner odious. Againe, for whiblers and pratling pick-thankes, tatlers, and tale-tellers, there may bee a Note of them. You ſee what an ancient weede in the world they bee: they were never wanting, nor will be, while the world endureth: neither Princes, nor meaner than Princes can avoid them: there is no newes ſtirring, but they are carriers of it, and they can greatly increaſe it in the carriage. No circumſtances can make them ſilent. Many good men have ſmarted by them: and now Moſes, you ſee, taſteth of them. Who is he or ſhe, that have not ſome way by theſe walking tongues beene wounded? I leave you to your owne experience of this venome.

8 Whither flyeth Moſes from this raging ſtorme of Pharaohs diſpleaſure, raiſed up againſt him by theſe pratlers? Into the land of Midian, ſaith the Text, where the Lord provided for him. Then marke with your ſelfe, how alwayes one place or other the Lord hath for his Servants. If Iudæa be dangerous for the childe Ieſus, in Ægypt he ſhall finde ſafety, till the time appointed, and ſo forth, reade 2 Cor. 4.8.

9 VVhen he was come thither, He ſate him downe by a Well: a place moſt like to bring ſome to him, of whom hee might inquire how hee might beſtow himſelfe. But God knoweth what thoughts the circumſtances of his caſe procured unto him. His calling hee ſaw not acknowledged of his Countrey-men: but in ſtead thereof his life brought in queſtion, and therefore might fall into ſome doubt of it himſelfe. All his worldly comforts were now departed from him, and hee a poore exile in a ſtrange countrey, not knowing which way to turne him. A great change from ſo high a place, as Moſes had in Ægypt, being eſteemed the Sonne of Pharaohs Daughter: and leſſer alterations, than this, we well know, have given good men ſhrewd plucks: yet reade we of no diſcomfort in Moſes, which we muſt obſerve, and be bettered by it. God humbleth him in his worldly eſtate, and bringeth him to this low ebb: yet forſaketh him not, but dearly loveth him, and hath great honours in ſtore for him againe, when time commeth. VVe are likewiſe the Lords, and we muſt be content, that hee doe with us his owne good pleaſure ever.

The third part.

1 THE third part of the Chapter followeth: concerning his marriage in that Land, the manner whereof you may reade in your Chapter, verſe 16. &c. Some blame him as matching with the unbelieving; others excuſe him, ſaying; they were not unbeleevers. The Scripture is ſilent, and therefore we neede not to be curious. To excuſe the godly Fathers ever, is more than can bee. To make Iethro and his houſhold ſuch beleevers as they ought to bee, with whom we joyne in mariage (howbeit happily he was better than thouſands there) is more than hath ſound proofe. Theodoret ſaith, Typus erat Chriſti Domini, qui, cum ex Iudeis ſecundum carnem natus eſſet, eccleſiam Gentium appellavit ſponſam ſuam. Moſes herein was a type of Chriſt, who, being borne of the Jewes according to the fleſh, maried himſelfe to the Gentiles, and called them his Spouſe. But leave we it as not profitable to us to ſcan what God hath pleaſed to conceale. And marke the heart of Iethro, when hee underſtood how Moſes had helped his Daughters at the Well, very kindly he conceived of that favour, and chid them for ſo leaving him, and not bringing him home to eate bread. Surely the Spirit of God doth not ſo ſtill in every place note this kindneſſe of heart in requiting of love, but that he exceedingly liketh it, and would have all his ever to follow it. Theod. in Ex. cap. 2.

2 Of his wife the Lord gave him a Sonne, whoſe name he called Gerſhon, adding the reaſon, becauſe, ſaith he, I have beene a ſtranger in a ſtrange Land. So then, that which many object oftentimes to Gods children by way of reproach, that they are ſtrangers, exiles, and ſo forth, that, Moſes taketh to be no reproach, and therfore giveth the title of it to his Sonne for his name. An example to teach us never to be aſhamed either of baniſhment, or any hard eſtate wherwith God ſhall exerciſe us for his glory, but rather to rejoyce in it, and comfortably to thinke of it, as Moſes doth here. The ſhame is theirs that reproach us, the glory is ours, if we rightly endure it.

3 In proceſſe of time this bloody Pharaoh dyeth, ſaith the ſtory, and this is a comfort to the godly, as likewiſe it ſhould be a warning to all oppreſſors of them, they ſhall die and be packing, and ſhall not continue to deale cruelly. Then ſhall they receive the wages of their wickedneſſe, and they whom they have wronged ſhall be comforted. The rod of the ungodly lighteth upon the faithfull, as God ſhall pleaſe: but the Lord hath ſaid, it ſhall not tarry upon them; and what ſweeter comfort? but the rod of Gods Iuſtice ſhall both light and lie unremoveable upon the ungodly that repent not of their evill; and what greater woe? Let them beware then whiles there is time.

4 But when was it that hee dyed? Surely, forty yeeres after Moſes fled thence. Moſes was forty when he fled, and eighty when he came as their Deliverer: Let it thus profit us. You remember before, how Moſes began to exerciſe that Office towards their reliefe, which hee was certified God had appointed him unto, and thought, that they would have acknowledged it with thankes to God for him. But they moſt unkindly requited him, and ſo endangered him, that hee was faine to flie to ſave his life. VVhen he ſo began, God offered them mercy: when they ſo rewarded him, what followed? Surely, forty yeares more the continuance of their bondage and miſery. A ſingular warning to all feeling hearts, to beware the rejection of Gods mercy when it is offered. For it ever hath a ſure puniſhment, and well worthy. Conſider you particularly Gods dealing with your ſelfe, what hath hee offered? VVhat doth hee yet offer you? VVhat have you done? Or, what yet doe you? Be wiſe and ponder. Surely God is kind to offer, but hee is juſt to revenge any wilfull contempt of his Offers, with continuance of bitter woe here, or for ever.

5 VVhen he was dead, The people cryed to the Lord, and ſighed, ſaith the Text. Such ſobbes in ſorrow were due to them that rejected and would not ſee what God offered them of eaſe. But O comfort! Yet what ſee wee againe? Surely ſaith the Text, God heard them, remembred his covenant, looked unto them, and reſpected them. Sweet father, ſo is it ever with thee, juſt to correct, but gracious to give over: not ever offended, but in due time entreated: pitifull, loving, and of endleſſe mercy. Many things more might this Chapter yeeld us, moſt worthy noting: but I remember for whom I write, and would not make the volume great, that I wiſh bought and uſed of poore ones: the abler perſons may have many better helpes. A taſte of the comfort of Gods word, and the uſe thereof, (to incourage to the buying of Bibles and reading of them) is the thing I deſire to give: and that is done, by ſomething upon every Chapter, though it bee not much, fitted, as God enableth me, for the feeling and comfort of them, for whom I labour. Let this much therefore ſuffice upon this Chapter.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

The chiefe heads of this Chapter be theſe.

The calling of Moſes.
His ſpeech with God.

Moſes kept the ſheepe of Iethro: and is not this a great change, from an adopted Sonne of a Kings Daughter, to become a ſhepheard to a meane man? From the raviſhing pleaſures of a Kings Court, to come to lie under a buſh, and behold but ſheepe? to talke with his flocke, and ſport with his dogge, in ſtead of all hee enjoyed before? To ruffle in his ruſſet, fit for that office, with adieu to garments of former honour? O ſweet experience, if need require, of the eſtate of one moſt deare to God! Sinke not (my heart) ſo low in my body for feare of a change. Feare not that fall, that hurteth not with God. Theſe earthly ſhewes, as the ſhining Sunne, flaſh their beames abroad, and flie upon the ſodaine into the Cloud, as if they had never beene: But thy God is all one with them, and without them: nay, oftentimes more neare thee, the further thou art from them, as this very example may aſſure thee, if thou marke it. For in all the glory of his earthly honour, Moſes had not ſuch a conference with his God, as now, that he is a poore Shepheard, guiding & leading another mans flock. David by cutting away a peece of Sauls garment, made him remember himſelfe a little better: and God many times, by cutting away ſome part of our former eſtate, maketh us profitably feele, what we felt not before, of ſweet conſolation in him, and his heavenly favour, that leadeth into eternall joy, when this life is ended. Lot lingred too long before hee would out of Sodome, and therefore the Angell caught him by the hand and plucked him away. So ſurely doth the Lord, for the good of his choſen, even catch them and pull them by ſome change of eſtate, when honours continued deceive and draw backe. Then feare not ſuch change (my ſhrinking heart) I ſay againe. For it is no harme, it is but Gods hand that catcheth thy hand, and draweth thee to him. VVe joy in the claſpe of a mortall creatures hand, and how much more in Gods? The King of Macedon his Sonne becommeth a Smith, and the rich King of Sicilie, Dionyſius the younger, becommeth a Schoolemaſter. So, many moe have felt a change, who might be named if need were. This taſte ſufficeth at this time, and I end with this:

Truſt not too much, if proſperous times doe ſmile,
Ne yet deſpaire of riſing, if thou fall:
The fatall Lady mingleth one with th'other,
And lets not Fortune ſtay, but round turnes all.

If the ayre be hot, our heate is leſſe within: if the ayre be cold, it doubleth inward heate. So ſurely worketh adverſity often zeale, when gladſome pleaſures have made us too too cold.

2 He driveth his flocke to the back-ſide of the Deſert, and came to the Mount of God, Horeb, as is thought, there to pray and powre out his heart to God in a remote place, begging mercy to his afflicted countrey-men in Ægypt, though never ſo unthankfull and unkinde to him: begging alſo Gods ſweet and comforting Spirit to himſelfe, that by the ſame his heart might bee ſtayed and ſtrengthened in all the changes and chances of this wretched life, ever to be content, ever to be thankfull for good and bad, and ever to ſpend his dayes in the feare and favour of his Majeſty; whoſe ſervice is perfect freedome, and whoſe love is life, joy and felicity for evermore. And ſurely this ſhould we all do both in wealth and woe, thinking no time ſo ſpent, as that which in conference and ſpeech with God we beſtow. But (alas) we doe not. No, in proſperity we are puffed up, and forget to pray; and in adverſity we are too weakly and wretchedly throwne downe, and we cannot pray. Remember Moſes, and if thy ſtate ſhould change from Court to Countrey, from glory to obſcurity, and from high to low, never ſo much; draw to the mount Horeb, the mount of God, that is, to ſome ſecret, private, and convenient place for that purpoſe: and comfortably, cheerefully, and like a ſtout Souldier of Chriſt, lift up to heaven both heart and hands, eyes and minde, and all thine affections, and ſhake the Throne of thy mercifull God with this or ſuch like prayer; O deareſt and ſweeteſt comfort of my ſoule, my rocke, my refuge, my ſtrength, and my ſtay, I bleſſe thee and praiſe thee, I thanke thee and honour thee, as well for this preſent eſtate of mine, as for any glory that ever thou vouchſafedſt me in this world. And I beſeech thee, deare Lord, that this ſinfull nature of mine may bee ever ſtrengthened to joy in thy good pleaſure, and ſo during the courſe of my dayes to cleave unto thee in love, duty, and all obedience of a true childe of thine, that I may bee made partaker of that true glory, which in the world to come, with thy owne ſelfe, is aſſured in heaven for evermore to all thine.

Amen,

Amen, Amen, my King and my God, bleſſed for ever and ever with ten thouſand ſoules, if I had them:

3 Then the Angell of the Lord appeared, &c. To this Angell is given the eſſentiall name of God, Iehovah. Therefore certaine it is, that he alſo was God, even our Saviour Chriſt, by whom and through whom the Lord communicateth himſelfe unto men, who otherwiſe could never have any acceſſe unto ſuch Majeſty. And hee is called an Angell, becauſe hee was to bee ſent to be our Deliverer, whereof this deliverance of the Jewes out of Ægypt was ſome ſhadow and figure. Theodoret is of the ſame minde, whoſe words are theſe, Vniverſus locus demonſtrat Deum eſſe qui apparuit. Dicitur Angelus, ut cognoſcamus, quòd is, qui viſus eſt, non eſt Deus Pater: (cujus enim Angelus eſſet Pater?) ſed unigenitus Filius, qui magni conſilii eſt Angelus, qui ſacris diſcipulis dixit; Omnia quæcunque audivi à Patre meo, nota feci vobis. Quemadmodum autem Angeli nomen poſuit, non quidem volens miniſtrorum quempiam innuere, ſed perſonam unigeniti demonſtrare: ſic iterum ipſius tum naturam, tum potentiam prædicat, inquiens ipſum dixiſſe: Ego ſum qui ſum, & Ego Deus Abraham, Deus Iſaac, Deus Iacob, &c. The whole place, ſaith hee, ſheweth it was God; but hee is called an Angell, that wee might know, that he which was ſeene, was not God the Father: (for whoſe Angell ſhould the Father be?) but the onely begotten Sonne of God, which is the Angell of the great counſell, which ſaid to his holy Apoſtles, All things which I have heard of my Father, I have declared unto you. And even as hee gave him the name of an Angell, not meaning therby to note any other Miniſter or Meſſenger, but to ſhew the perſon of the onely begotten Sonne: ſo againe, he ſetteth forth both his nature and power, ſaying, he ſaid, I am that I am, and I the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, the God of Iacob, &c. Hillary alſo ſpeaketh to this effect in his booke of the Trinity. Gregory thought it was an Angel in the perſon of God. Auguſtine varieth in his opinion, &c. Touching this manner of appearing, it may occaſion us to remember how God uſeth to apply himſelfe unto the purpoſe and intent of his appearing, whenſoever it pleaſeth him to manifeſt himſelfe unto men. For in the Prophet Eſay, he is ſaid to have appeared like a Iudge, ſitting upon a high Throne: becauſe as then, the judgement of Iſrael approached and drew neare. At the baptiſme of Chriſt it pleaſeth the holy Ghoſt to appeare like a Dove, becauſe that forme might ſhew the innocency and milde nature of our Saviour. In the Acts of the Apoſtles, like Tongues, becauſe now the tongues of the Apoſtles were to be framed as it were anew: like cloven tongues, becauſe the benefit was to be divided unto all Nations: like fiery tongues, becauſe their ſpeech, by the gracious working of Gods holy Spirit, ſhould hereafter kindle in the hearts of men, as it were a fire, that is, an hot and burning hatred of ſinne, and a love of righteouſneſſe, and all holy obedience acceptable to God. And now here, like a buſh burning, but not conſumed, that it might declare the ſtate preſent of his people of Ægypt, and the condition of his Church unto the end of the world. His people in Ægypt even burning in the furnace of Pharaohs cruelty and oppreſſion, and yet not conſumed for all that, through the mighty power and gracious goodneſſe of his ſweet favour that uphold them, yea, multiplied and increaſed them in the very flame of it. His Church militant in like ſort to expect trouble after trouble, and one woe to another, but not to bee overwhelmed and utterly deſtroyed by all the malice of Hell working in wicked inſtruments to the uttermoſt. Quid ſibi vult ardere rubum, & non exuri? Nempe, Iſraelem Ægyptiorum inſidiis appetitum non eſſe ſubjugandum, ſed adverſariis ſuperiorem futurum: What meaneth this ſaith Theodoret upon this place, that the buſh burned, and was not conſumed? Surely that the Iſraelites beſet with the wrongs of the Ægytians, ſhould yet not bee overthrowne, but even overcome their Adverſaries. Philo the Jew in the life of Moſes ſaith, there appeared in the middle of the flame a glorious Image, as a manifeſt teſtimony of the preſence of God, &c.

Acts 2. 3.

4 When Moſes ſaw this ſtrange ſight, he ſaid, I will turne aſide now, and ſee why the buſh burneth not. Where we may ſee the good diſpoſition of men and minds governed with Gods feare. They doe not contemne and lightly paſſe over ſuch things as they ſee, but they obſerve and marke, ſearch and ſeeke, what good they may poſſibly draw from them. They are of a docile and apt nature to be inſtructed, when as others, like deafe and dead people, are not profited by any thing, but finally periſh, whatſoever hath beene ſhewed to them by God or man. Learne we by Moſes, to doe as he did; and by the other to beware of their dulneſſe.

5 And when the Lord ſaw that he turned aſide to ſee, He called him unto Him, &c. No ſooner then can we ſhew willingneſſe to learne, but God is moſt ready to inſtruct and teach. If wee will, hee will ſpeake; and if we will know, he will declare. A ſweet encouragement, ever to be willing to be enformed. And now he is called Lord and God. as you ſee, who before is ſaid to be an Angell, as before alſo you remember I noted. Moſes, Moſes, ſaith he familiarly and kindly: for it was ever a favour to be called by our names of ſuperiour men, much more of God. Nathaniel marvelleth how Chriſt knew him when he ſpake of him, as you reade in Iohn: but Chriſt told him, that before Philip called him, he ſaw him under the Figg-tree: Our God, to our comfort, knoweth us all, and calleth his ſheepe by their names. Happy are wee, if as Moſes here, we may ever be ready to anſwer and ſay, I am here, Lord: or as another ſaith, Speake on Lord

Iohn 1. 47.

1 Sam. 3. 9. Pſal. 108.

Lord, for thy ſervant heareth: or, as David the Prophet ſaith, My heart is ready, my heart is ready, &c.

6 Then he ſaid, Come not hither: put thy ſhooes off thy feet: for the place where thou ſtandeſt is holy ground. First, the Lord hath a care of mans infirmity, and is willing to reveale himſelfe as that may endure to behold, not further, leſt man, by his Majeſty, ſhould be oppreſſed, when in his mercy he wiſheth him profited. Therefore, Come not hither, ſaith he, reſpecting his weakneſſe. Secondly, he endeavoureth to worke in Moſes that reverence and feare which beſeemeth Gods Children, when they approach unto God: which, although no doubt it was in Moſes much, yet more & more it is ever neceſſary for all men if they will indeed be touched effectually with that which is ſpoken and done, and be truly humbled to attend and remember. To the ſame purpoſe is that of putting off his ſhooes: for, Quare juſtus eſt Moſes calceamenta ſolvere? Certe, ut religioſiorem hac ratione illum redderet: Why was hee bidden to put off his ſhooes (ſaith Theodoret?) Even that he might make him thereby more religiouſly affected. It is alſo noted, how needfull it is (if ever we will performe unto God that reverence that is due) to put off that corruption and ſinne wherewith in this life wee are clogged. Which, as the duſt to the ſhooe, and the ſhooe to the foot, cleaveth to us. For the place where thou ſtandeſt (ſaith he) is holy ground. Not that the place of it ſelfe was better than others, but that reverence and a holy feare was due unto God in that place; both in regard of his incomprehenſible glory, and of Moſes owne naturall infirmitie. Holy, I ſay, in reſpect of Gods preſence, not otherwiſe: and therefore, nothing here favoureth any Popiſh ſuperſtition falſly aſcribing to places what is not in them. The like you read in Ioſhua and Ruth, which by this may bee underſtood, even to put away all hindring affections; and to reſigne our ſelves wholly up unto God, to heare and doe his will. This is to put off our ſhooes.

Ioſua 5. 15. Ruth 4. 7.

7 Then Moſes hid his face, for he was afraid to looke upon God. At the firſt he was bold, and went towards the buſh to behold this matter: but now hearing that God is there, hee covereth his face, and is afraid: plainly ſhewing, that the more God openeth himſelfe unto man, and the nearer man draweth unto God, the more hee feareth in a holy reverence, as more feeling and finding his owne wants and unworthineſſe to behold ſuch glory. For whilſt wee are farre from God, we can ſay and thinke with thoſe Laodiceans, I am rich, and increaſed with goods, and have need of nothing; but if the Lord anoint our eyes with his eye ſalve, then wee change our copy, and ſee, as there is ſaid, that we are wretched, and poore, and blinde, and naked: then we pray, that we may have of Gods gold to make us rich, and white raiment, that we may be cloathed, and that our filthy nakedneſſe doe not appeare. Then we cover our face, as Moſes did here, and we humbly and modeſtly come to heare him, trembling at his words with a contrite ſpirit: well underſtanding that they are juſtly overthrowne in their owne pride, who raſhly preſume they conceive Gods myſteries with their owne wits.

Apoc. 3. 17.

Eſay 66. 2.

8 Having then thus prepared his ſervant to humble attention, the Lord beginneth his tale, and ſaith, I have ſurely ſeene the trouble of my people, &c. Where every word hath vehemency and matter worthy noting. He ſaith, he hath ſeene, he hath heard, and he knoweth: And how hath he ſeene? Videndo vidi, ſeeing I have ſeene; that is, vidi certò & ſeriò, I have ſeene certainly and ſeriouſly: verborum enim geminatione, vehementia, certitudo & celeritas ſignificatur, by the doubling of the word, vehemency, certainty and celerity is ſignified, ſaith a Divine. I have ſeene, and ſo ſeene as that I can no longer hold my peace: yea, I have ſo ſeene, as that I will helpe, and endure no longer. Vidiſſe enim dicitur cõpaſſionis oculo & miſerationis aſpectu: For he is ſaid to have ſeene with the eye of compaſſion, & with a mercifull beholding, ſaith Beda. And what haſt thou ſeene, Lord? Even the trouble of my people which are in Ægypt. Firſt then, trouble and anguiſh is knowne to thee, and there is no ſorrow hid from thine eyes, be it never ſo ſecret and hidden in the heart, incloſed in the breaſt and bowels of man or woman, not daring to peepe out for feare of ſome circumſtance that might increaſe our paine: but yet thou ſeeſt it not ſo that thou wilt redreſſe it, except they be thy people. For ſo thou ſpeakeſt in this place, that Thou haſt ſeene the trouble of thy people. If then we would have griefe ſeene and helped, we muſt endevour with all godly care to be thine. Which if we doe, then ſighing and groaning in our ſeverall occaſions, as theſe did, we may be ſure in due time to finde our comfort, as they found. Affliction alſo, we may here learne, doth not ſhew that the party is diſliked of God (as Sathan often will ſuggeſt to men and women that are in trouble:) for God calleth theſe Iſraelites his people, which yet in moſt extraordinary affliction were plunged. He is not as the proud Peacockes of this world, that know a man in a gay coate and an high office, but in poverty and baſeneſſe know him not, though he be moſt neare, yea, almoſt their owne father or mother, ſiſter or brother. But in the pooreſt plight, when the backe is bare, or want of cloathing; the face leane with woe of heart, and quite altered with briniſh teares that guſhed along it, and hath worne furrowes in it, in ſtead of former hue; when the head hangeth for bitter cares, and all the bones are in a manner out of joynt, with racking tortures of bloody tyrants; Then, even then doth the Lord know his, and as ſweetly acknowledgeth them for his owne, as ever in any proſperity that they enjoyed, or the chiefeſt comforts they ever poſſeſſed.

9 From

9 From ſeeing then the Lord commeth to hearing, and ſaith, He hath heard their cry becauſe of their taskmakers; telling us, what the prayers of his children are in his eares, even loud cries, and cries that are heard to their good, in Gods due time, and to their adverſaries woe that ſo ſpitefully and wickedly have oppreſſed them. Which if thou wouldeſt in due time conſider, that wrongeſt any man, it would be good for thee, and God is mercifull: if not, conſider the vehemency of his moane that thou ſo dealeſt withall, how God calleth it a cry, a cry that awaketh him up unto judgement againſt thee, and thou ſhalt be deſtroyed. Thou art an oppreſſing, vexing Task-maſter, like theſe Ægyptians, and thou ſhalt be deſtroyed, as God is God, without amendment, in the Red ſea, or Black ſea of helliſh deepes: where the torment is intolerable, and from whence no man or meanes can ever deliver thee. Thy will in this world to be gained and gotten with ſuch a price; thinke of it.

10 The Lord is not ſatisfied to have ſaid, He ſeeth and Heareth, but he addeth the third, He knoweth. For I know their ſorrowes, ſaith he. It is our comfort that he knoweth, and it may be the wickeds terrour that he knoweth. Enough being ſaid of it, I adde but this, he that then ſaw, heard, and knew, is the ſame ſtill: No changeling in love to his deare choſen, no changeling in juſtice to the ſtubborne ſinner: and be inſtructed by it. Our heavenly Father knoweth what wee have need of. Here they had need of deliverance; and hee therefore, knowing as well as they, commeth downe to give it them acording to his ſweet mercy. Deſcendere dicitur Deus per affectum (loco enim non deſcendit) quando favet nobis & auxiliatur, &c. Vel, deſcendere dicitur, inquit Euſebius, quando aliquid novum, quod antea non fuerat in creatura humana operatum: God is ſaid to come downe, by his affection or love (for touching place he deſcendeth not) when he favoureth and helpeth; or, God is ſaid to come downe, ſaith Euſebius, when he doth any new thing, which before was not done among men.

11 Come now therefore and I will ſend thee unto Pharaoh, ſaith God to Moſes, &c. God was able to have done it himſelfe, without Moſes, or any man: but he will uſe meanes commonly to effect his will; that his mercy and goodneſſe may be ſeene in his creatures; as likewiſe his power and wiſdome, to his great glory. He might alſo have uſed a farre more excellent meanes then Moſes: as, ſome King or great Prince in earth, or ſome of his glorious Angels in heaven, (for ſo he did when by Cyrus he wrought their deliverance out of the Captivitie, and when by an Angell hee brought Peter out of priſon:) but his purpoſe was in their delivery, to make knowne his incomprehenſible power to Pharaoh and many more, unto the worlds end. And therefore hee would chooſe no ſtronger a meanes now than Moſes, Iethro his Sheep-keeper; knowing how apt man is to obſcure Gods glory with the quality of the meanes; and to aſcribe unto the ſecond cauſe, what onely hath beene wrought by the firſt cauſe. Againe, this was a figure that from the ſpirituall thraldome and bondage of death, ſinne, and the devill, he ſhould deliver his people under the Goſpell, not by the helpe of learned Philoſophers, or any glorious worldly Potentates, but by a company of poore Fiſher-men, unlettered and unthought upon in the world.

12 But Moſes ſaid unto God, who am I, that I ſhould goe unto Pharaoh, and bring the children of Iſrael out of Ægypt? (Smitten with a ſenſe and feeling of his owne weakneſſe, to doe ſuch a ſervice) which indeed is the very true and right way to make us fit in Gods eyes. For then we flie to him, and by faithfull prayer beg and crave, what in our ſelves we ſee not, till hee give it. Such as are not thus touched and humbled, but ruſh into callings raſhly, preſuming on their owne ſtrength and abilities, daily experiences ſhew, how often God confoundeth them and throweth them downe to their great ſhame. Who am I Lord, therefore let us ever ſay, that thou ſhouldeſt thus and thus thinke of me, chooſe me, and take me to that place that I have no ſtrength to manage, and which thouſands of my brethren are fitter for, by ſuper-excellency of gifts than I am? thus ſaid the Kingly Prophet David you know, when he looked upon Gods favours towards him; O what am I and my fathers houſe, that thou ſhouldeſt doe thus unto me? Now as this is moſt commendable humility in Gods ſervant, ſo is it true and ſound wiſedome not to looke at the honour and forget the burthen, but to ſee the one as well as the other. It was a great honour to be ſent for to ſuch a ſervice: but it was a waighty charge, and a heavy care as well as an honour. What? ſhall I goe to Pharaoh? Shall I deliver Iſrael? and ſhall I have the leading and government of ſuch a mighty multitude till God hath diſpoſed of them? Why? it is a thing that requireth great ſtrength and many parts that I have not. O Lord who am I? may not this then a little occaſion us to thinke of ſpirituall government? for is it ſuch a matter to ſtrive with Pharaoh for bodies and temporall ſervitude, and is it nothing to fight with Sathan and the power of hell for ſoules and freedome from eternall bondage? Is it not fearefull, I will require the blood at thy hand, &c. As Salomon therefore in the temporall charge ſaw a waighty burthen, and thereupon craved wiſdome to be able to goe in and out as he ought before that multitude: ſo ſaw Ieremy and Ionas a great matter when the one ſaid, Alas, I am a childe and cannot ſpeake: and the other flatly fled, & refuſed to goe. Others have done the like, and yet ambition pricketh forward, for all this, many a man: Simon Magus would have beene an Apoſtle in power for reſpects, be the charge what Mat.27. what it may be that troubleth not him. S. Peter jumpeth into danger, presuming of strength, but he faileth and falleth, hee lieth and denyeth and discovereth his weakenesse greatly. Once againe therefore looke we at Moses modesty and humility in this place, saying, Lord who am I?

Ero tecum. 13 Now see, what this lowly conceit worketh. It getteth him comfort and strength from God; for straight way God answered him and said, I will be with thee: as if he should say, look not thou at thy selfe and thy power, but looke at me and my power. And though thou art weake, yet know me to be strong & ever able to strengthen them whom I call to a service, to performe the same. And I doe not say to thee, that I will help thee now and then; but I wil be with thee; that is, ever and continually: I will aid thee in this worke, even I, not any Angels of mine, but I my selfe, and therefore feare not. What greater comfort might he wish? And who would not throw himselfe downe thus to bee raised up? or who would not see his owne wants thus to receive grace? Remember how in like sort he comforteth Ieremy and Ezechiel, with others of the Pro-

Ero vobiscum. phets, also his Apostles, after, in their time, saying: Bee of good comfort, I have overcome the world; and I will be with you to the end of the world. With God all things are possible, &c.

14 It contenteth not the Lord to make this mercifull promise of his presence with Moses, but hee further assisteth his weakenesse with a signe, saying: This shall be a token unto thee, &c. Where we may remember the signes used of God to confirme his childrens faith, sometimes goe be-

Iudges 6. Esay 31. fore, and sometimes follow after. Gideon had a signe going before, namely, the fleece of wool, first wet, and then dry. Ezechias had the like in the shadow of a dyall going ten degrees back. But in another place the same Ezechias had a signe that followed, to wit, when for assurance that hee

Esay 37.30. would deliver Jerusalem besieged by the Assyrians, he said: This shall be a signe unto thee, O Ezechias, Thou shalt eate this yeare such as groweth of it selfe; and the second yeare, such things as grow without sowing; and in the third yeare, sow ye, and reape, and plant Vineyards, and eate the fruits thereof. As if he should have said, whereas usually (and by reason) after warre commeth famine, because men cannot husband their grounds; yet it shall not be so with you: but for two yeares the ground it selfe shall feed you, and let this suffice for a signe of hope and comfort against this feare. So in this place, Moses feare not, for I will be with thee, and for a signe, thou shalt bring them forth and serve me in this Mountaine. This thou shalt see as truly as I tell thee, and then this will be a signe that I was with thee according to my promise. VVhat a nature now is this in our deare God thus to submit himselfe to mans weakenesse, and in stead of chiding and punish-ing man for it, to helpe it, and stay it with all comfortable tokens and signes? O who would not trust in this God, and beleeve what he promiseth? Nay, who hath not cause, that obserueth these things, to be of the Prophet Davids minde? Blessed is the man that putteth his trust in him.

15 This, as it ought, contented Moses, and therefore, leaving the matter of his owne infir-mity, he casteth his minde next upon the infirmitie of the Israelites, to whom hee must goe. And fearing (lest according to their former backwardnesse, whereof he had tasted) they would stand in doubt of the truth of his authority to deliver such matter from the Lord unto them, hee prayeth the Lord to instruct him what he shall say, if they aske him what his name is? which speech was allowable in Moses, because it had relation to others, not to himselfe. For when Ia-

Gen.32.29. Iudges 13.17. cob would know the Angels name that wrestled with him, for himself, that is, to satisfie his own curiosity, hee was answered, Wherefore dost thou aske my name? and it was not told him, yet hee blessed him. So Manoah Sampsons father asked the Angell the like question, and in like sort was answered, Why askest thou thus after my name which is secret (or wonderfull,) and told him not. The reason may appeare in the place, because Manoah askes that he might honour him, not with an eye to the profit of others, as Moses did here. Therefore the Lord answered Moses, and said, I AM THAT I AM: And thus shalt thou say unto the Children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you; That is, the God that is no changeling, but the same for ever; who as he hath done for them and their Fathers very great things, so can he againe, if they will bee obedient to his will, with like power, mercy and goodnesse, deliver them and free them from this bondage wherein they groane, as cruelly vexed and oppressed. See then a sweet comfort in all our feares, even his name I AM. Noting that as he hath beene to penitent sinners, so ever he will be without any change. If I turne unto him, call upon him, and with all faithfull trust of my inward soule depend upon him; I AM is his name, and I may not doubt of him. Have not I my selfe found him sweet, comfortable and good, ten thousand times, as well as other sinners? Have not your hearts beene touched by him sundry times of very good purposes? Hath not another man found him gracious and kind in his worldly estate and advancement to honor, when he might have passed him over, & have had choice enough? So let every man runne over his private favours. How then may ever any of us fall from him without most great reproofe, or ever faint and feare that he will forsake us. I AM, I say againe is his name, and we must be taught by it, that hee is a God without all change, towards such as stedfastly cleave unto him. The Lord then give us use in all our feares of this comfort, strengthen our weakenesse to beleeve, and ever in mercy looke upon us.

16 After this, he appointeth Moses his order of going, and publiſhing this meſſage: to wit, that firſt he ſhould goe to the Elders, and call them together, and make them acquainted with it, before he dealt with the common people. Where wee muſt take the name of Elder for a name of office (not of yeares) for ſo we know the Scripture ſpeaketh. Not ever the oldeſt men beare office either in Church or Commonwealth: but as God giveth gifts, and appointeth in his providence places unto them of government and charge; ſo in regard thereof they are called the Elders, that is, the Rulers and Governours, (though in yeares ſomething young) as Timothy and others were. Now marke wee to our good in this, firſt, that under the great tyranny of Pharaoh, yet ſome liberty was given theſe Iſraelites to meet for Religion and knowledg, inſtruction and underſtanding, according to the right way which the Lord had acquainted them with; albeit the ſame of theſe Ægyptians was not received nor allowed. And how doth this amplifie the bloody cruelty of Antichriſt, who yeeldeth not ſo much to his fellow-Chriſtians, I meane to people profeſſing Chriſt, (as hee pretendeth he doth) as bloudy Pharaoh yeelded to the Jewes, who joyned not in profeſſion with him? Secondly, obſerve the wiſedome, liked and preſcribed of God for a rule ever to guide our ſelves by, and our actions: to wit, when any new thing is to be publiſhed that concerneth any change in the Church or Commonwealth, firſt to acquaint the Magiſtrates, Rulers and Governours with it, to approve our commiſſion and matter unto them with all modeſty, humility, love and care of order and unity; and then with their conſents, approbation and ayde, unto the people and multitude. This is a right courſe, we ſee, and this ſhall have a bleſſing from the Author of it, as here it had. Then ſhall they obey thy voice, &c. ver. 18. id eſt, credent & acquieſcent tibi, ut prudentes, & qui promiſſiones Abrahæ & patribus factas norunt, maximè, Gen. 15. Quarta generatione revertentur huc, &c. That is, they ſhall beleeve thee, and yeeld unto thee as wiſe men, and ſuch as know the promiſes made unto Abraham and the Fathers, eſpecially Gen. 15. In the fourth generation they ſhall return hither, &c. Other vain-glorious, factious, and diſorderly dealings will have their confuſion, and will be ſtrangled with the halter of their owne diſobedience, even in their youth, that is, before they come to any perfection or ripeneſſe. For God is the Author of Order, Government and Rule: who appointed Elders and Superiors for the peace & quietnes of his Church, ever hindred with diviſions & tumults, will have them duly regarded and reſpected as they ought, not as far as we liſt. Think we then of it with a religious feeling, & the Lord give us underſtanding in all things.

17 Then, after thus thou haſt acquainted the Heads of the people of Iſrael with it, and they by my working inwardly with them, willing to obey; both thou and they ſhalt goe to Pharaoh the King, and ſay, &c. See againe, and ſtill, ſtill, more carefully note it, how God regardeth government. For now Pharaoh muſt be uſed as was fit for his place (he being the King of the land in which they were) wicked Pharaoh, I ſay, muſt not be diſorderly dealt with by ſuch as live under his government, and within his Territories, although ſtrangers, and not his naturall Subjects: how much leſſe then by naturall Subjects: But hee muſt be gone unto with all duty, and acquainted with all reverence, with their deſire: that neither themſelves may be judged factious, neither others by their examples moved to any diſorder. They muſt acquaint him with the Author of this deſire, not their own heads luſting after deſire of liberty or novelty, but the Lord God, that is, that Lord which is God, and that God which is the Lord and Lord of Lords, to worke ſome touch in Pharaoh of feare. Secondly, the Lord God of the Hebrewes, that is, that hath ever had care of them, and dealt for them as ſeemed good to his wiſedome. For as Theodoret writeth upon Exodus: Cùm Deus prænôſſet contumaciam Pharaonis, cur ab initio non punivit illam? Cum Deus bonus & humanus ſit, non vult punire ex ſola præſcientia, ſed expectat operum conſummationem, & ita omnibus oſtendit quam juſtè puniat. Alioque etiam longe æquius eſt Pharaonis nequitiam patefieri, quàm Deum crudelem appellari. Nam ſi puniveſſet antequã redarguiſſet, crudelis utique viſus eſſet & iniquus. Nunc autem perſpicitur Dei longanimitas, & Pharaonis impietas atque feritas convincitur. When God did foreknow Pharaohs hardneſſe of heart, why did hee not from the beginning puniſh him, but that of his goodneſſe and gentleneſſe, out of his onely præſcience he would not puniſh, but expect the end of our workes, thereby ſhewing to all how juſtly hee puniſheth. Otherwiſe it were farre more juſt to lay open the wickedneſſe of Pharaoh, than call God cruel. For if he had puniſhed before he had reprehended, it would have ſeemed cruell and unjuſt; but now Gods long ſuffering is perceived, and Pharaohs impiety and cruelty convinced. Thirdly, that their ſcope was Religion, not rebellion, nor any undutifull practice againſt the State. Shall not this move us to reverence authority, when God thus notably ſheweth his liking of it? It is enough in this place, if God be with us. Laſtly, obſerve the long ſufferance of God, who though by this Pharaoh very much offended, yet before he will ſmite, he will admoniſh, and doe all things ſo as his owne heart ſhall teſtifie his owne inexcuſable wickedneſſe. Certainly even thus the Lord dealeth with our ſelves, if we had eyes to ſee it, ſtill forewarning and calling to a touch, before hee determine judgement and juſt deſtruction. His Preachers and his Prophets, his rods and his croſſes, his favours and bounties be all admoniſhers of us to avoid his wrath.

18 But I know that the King of Ægypt will not let you goe, but by ſtrong hand. Therefore will I ſtretch out my hand, and ſmite Ægypt with all my wonders which I will doe in the midſt thereof: and after that ſhall he let you goe. How well doth the Lord ſee, what the wicked think is ſecret and hidden? to wit, their thoughts and purpoſes, their diſpoſitions and nature: yea, before themſelves know what they will doe, he knoweth, and ſhall not this move them? Their ſtubborne and ſtiffe hearts contemning admonitions, and all means of their reformation, the Lord knoweth and ſeeth before. How may this comfort the zealous Miniſter, that is wearied and waſted with longing after the life of them that wiſh his death, with praying, entreating, and crying upon men for their good, that they would hearken and conſider, that they would be reconciled to God, and ſave their ſoules? I ſay, how may this comfort him, that this blockiſhneſſe and hardneſſe, this ingratitude and unkindneſſe of theirs was knowne to the Lord ever? And therefore to content himſelfe, that he hath given warning like a faithfull Watchman, that hee hath loved like a faithfull Paſtor, and endevoured their good, as a true Miniſter: leaving the Lord, now, to his further pleaſure, even to ſtretch out his hand, and to ſmite ſuch Pharaohs with their land, that is, their poſſeſſions and goods, their friends and aſſociates, as here he did: for till Pharaoh feele it, he will not think of his might. The Preacher ſpeaketh in the aire, the friend privately loſeth his labour and honeſt advice: Pharaoh feeleth not, but thinketh himſelf wiſe, & them fools. Their love returneth therefore into their own boſome, being noted in Gods Book for a witneſſe againſt them: and that ſweet comfort ſheweth it ſelfe to bee taken hold of; We are a ſweet ſavour to the Lord in them that periſh. After this, conſider with your ſelf here again, in that it is ſaid, Pharaoh will not let them goe, but by ſtrong hand: How farre more eaſie is it to come into Ægypt, than to get out? So it is aſſuredly a ſmooth way to hell, by many pleaſant delights: but to returne and give over the ſinne once entred into, to forſake that pleaſant way: This is a worke, this is a labour, nay this is a grace indeed. Any man may leap into a pit at his pleaſure, but he muſt come out with more difficulty, if ever he come out. Therefore, in my conceit, the good woman dealt wiſely with the Frier that ſollicited her to ſinne, and told her he would ſing and ſay prayers for her that ſhould cleanſe her from all her offence, and deliver her preſently out of Purgatory (if ſhe ſhould happen to dye whilſt he was alive) when ſhe appointed a pit to be digged in the way where the Fryer ſhould come in the night, and to be covered with ſome graſſe that it might not appeare: into which, as ſoone as ever the Fryer came, he fell: and not able any way to get out againe. Anon when he had cooled himſelfe well, the woman came alſo, as though ſhe had come to meet him, to whom the Frier pittifully complaineth, that he was fallen into that pit, there, and could not get out; praying her to uſe ſome meanes for his deliverance. But ſhe wiſely told him, he ſhould remember what he ſaid unto her, to wit, that out of the pit of Purgatory he could ſing her or any that ſhould offend with him: and now there was a good place to try the power of his Muſick and Songs, that ſhe and others might beleeve him the better. If he would have his Porteſſe ſent for, ſhe ſaid ſhe would, but other help he ſhould get none of her: and ſo ſhe left him to ſing himſelfe out, if he could. So ſlight a matter made thoſe Hypocrites then of fearefull ſinne, eaſily purged and eaſily pardoned, were it never ſo wittingly and wilfully committed. But this figure of the hardneſſe to get out of Ægypt when once they were in, may ſhew us, as I ſay, apparently the contrary, and give us juſt and good cauſe to beware of ſin. The devill is not ſuch a fooliſh fowler, to let ſlip eaſily the bird he hath caught. Every mans owne experience telleth him how hard it is to leave a wonted wrying from the right way: and God grant we may thinke of it.

Verſe 21. 19 Laſtly, the Lord addeth, that He would make them favoured of the Ægyptians: ſo that when they departed, they ſhould not go empty, &c. Where to our comfort we ſee that all hearts are in the hands of God, even as the Rivers of water: and that he turneth them hither and thither at his pleaſure. He can make them love, hate they never ſo much: and they ſhall not be able to withſtand his will. Yea, he can make them ſo love, that fruits from thence ſhall flow to his people, of their love even as he beſt liketh. Be they jewels of ſilver, or jewels of gold, Raiment, or any thing needfull and wiſhed, they ſhall grant it and lend it, give it or ſend, with a favour, with a love, and with ſo willing a mind, as the party taking needeth to wiſh. This ſhall the Lord doe by a ſecret power of working grace and favour for his people to their good. This was that which he did for Iacob, the father of theſe Iſraelites: when Laban angerly purſued him, the Lord changed his heart. To Iſaac and Abraham before, the Lord gave favour in ſeverall places; To Ioſeph the like, to his owne comfort, and the good of many. And this is it which the Pſalmiſt affirmeth: The Lord gives grace and worſhip, & no good thing ſhall he with-hold from them that live a godly life. This is it which all of us have taſted of, even in our ſelves: and God make us thankfull. Thus may we profit by this Chapter.

CHAP.

CHAP. IV.

The generall heads of this Chapter are chiefly these:

Moses his power to worke miracles.
His excuses not to goe into Ægypt.
His comming to Ægypt at last.

BVt loe, they will not beleeve me, said Moses, &c. See first and formost the ingrafted weakneſſe of mans nature, when any great or difficult thing is to be taken in hand. It is ever fearing and doubting, ever quaking and ſhaking, ever caſting of perils, more than ſtand with that prompt readineſſe and willingneſſe which ought to be in all the ſervants of God, when he their Lord once ſpeaketh, and ſaith, Doe this. Such feare as this was in Ionas, when he was commanded to Ninive: in Ieremy, when hee was cauſed to propheſy; and in many others. Secondly, obſerve in theſe words alſo, what a powerfull pul-back even to the beſt minds, incredulity and crookedneſſe in the people is. Surely it pierceth deepe, and woundeth ſore, as you ſee in this place. For even the feare of it here daunteth Moſes, a man of ſuch faith, a man of ſuch grace, as we reade before this he had ſhewed himſelfe to be. What will it doe when it is not feared but found; not ſuſpected, but tryed and taſted of every day? Let that great Prophet of the Lord tell us, whom it ſo wounded, that he ſate him downe, and deſired to dye to be out of woe, ſaying, It is enough Lord, now, it is enough; take my ſoule, for I am no better than my Fathers. Let Eſay againe another famous Prophet witneſſe, whoſe words ſhewed woe, when hee ſaid and wrote, Who will beleeve our report? and to whom is the arme of the Lord revealed? as if he ſhould have ſaid (Alas! alas!) what comfort have we when ſo ungratiouſly our preaching is rejected, and the comfortable tidings of Jeſus Chriſt not beleeved? Let the ſighes of Ieremy, and the groanes of his ſoule, when he cryes Ah Lord, &c. witneſſe the like alſo to all readers: but moſt wonderfully, that ſpirituall battell that he tooke ſuch a fearfull fall in, as that hee ſaid, I will not make mention of him, nor ſpeake any more in his name: O fiery dart then, and piercing ſtroke to a tender heart of fleſh that meaneth well! an untoward and froward people, when ſo great a Prophet thus is ſhaken by it. I need to purſue this matter no further, wee ſee enough: yet could I remember you of other Prophets alſo, and many moe deare children of God, faithfull members and miniſters in the Lords buſineſſe, whom yet crookedneſſe of the people hath mightily agreeved, diſcouraged and diſmayed: yea it cauſed a ſigh in our very Saviour from the roots of his heart, that the people he ſpake unto, ſo fitly might be reſembled to children complained of for not dauncing when they were piped unto: not lamenting when they were mourned unto, &c. Conclude we therefore what we ſee here, the effect of incredulity in the people, to be bitter to the Lords Meſſengers, ſent or to be ſent unto them for their good. But ſo ſee we it, that our ſelves avoid it, and both day and night pray againſt it, remembring alwaies, as deare children, the Apoſtles words to the Hebrewes: Obey them that have the overſight of you, and ſubmit your ſelves: for they watch for your ſoules, as they that muſt give accompts, that they may give it with joy, and not with griefe, for that is unprofitable for you, &c. The like Scriptures there are many moe, all which may comfort us if we obey them, and juſtly judge us unto the Lake of Hell, if wee contemne them. God that biddeth will never be abuſed finally, but will repay. Ionas had rather commit himſelfe to the wide ſea and raging gulfs, than goe to preach to a people that he could conceive no hope of, that they would beleeve and be turned to God.

Ionas 1. Ier. 1. Heb. 11. 1 King 19. Eſay 53. 1. Ier. 20. 9. Micah 7. 1. Mat. 11. 17. Heb. 13. 17.

2 This infirmity in Moſes the Lord mercifully cureth, when in juſtice hee might have rejected him for it. So good and gracious is our God. He cureth it by a power given him to work miracles ſo great and fearfull, that if not to move Pharaoh to true repentance, yet abundantly to ſhew his authority from God to conduct that people, they ſhould ſuffice. His rod is turned to a Serpent, and back again to his owne nature. His hand put into his boſome is become leprous, and by and by whole again. The water is turned into bloud, and other great things wrought when he came before Pharaoh. Thus can the Lord; and thus will the Lord enable ever to the worke that hee appointeth and calleth unto. A great comfort to Magiſtrates and Miniſters, it it bee well conſidered.

3 Then flyeth he to another excuſe, and ſaith, he is not eloquent. But the Lord alſo provideth for that, as you ſee in the Text, and promiſeth helpe: Still ſo weake and wayward is man, and ſo good and gracious is God. The Jews have a tale amongſt them, how Moſes came by this infirmity of ſpeech: And ſay, that when he was a child, and brought up by Pharaohs daughter before her father the King: the King playing with him, and offering him his golden crowne, the child tooke it, and threw it under his feet: wherewith the King being offended, and ſome lookers on judging it fatall (as if that Child ſhould overthrow the King) the Nurſe to ſhew the Childs want of wit, put an hot coale to his mouth, which hee ſtraight licked with his tongue, and ſo hurt his ſpeech. But the Scripture telleth us not any cauſe, and therefore ignorance is beſt. Theodoret upon this place writeth, Cum omniũ Dominus Moſis miniſterio uti velit, cur tardioris linguæ fecit illum, &c. Quia hoc Potentiam Divinam magis illuſtrabat. Quemadmodum enim Piſcatores, Publicanos, & Cerdones veritatis prædicatores, & doctores pietatis creavit: ſic per vocem infirmam, & linguam tardam confudit ſapientes Ægypti. Seeing the Lord of all other would uſe the miniſtery of Moſes, why did he make him ſlower of ſpeech than any other, but that it might the more illuſtrate the divine power? for as he did make Fiſhers and Publicans to be Preachers of the truth, and doctors of piety, ſo by a ſlow and weake tongue he confounded the wiſdome of the Ægyptians. This rightly we may note, that God chooſeth men in mans eyes not ſo fit, that his glory may more appeare: and therefore take we heed how we cenſure our Calling for ſome defects, ſince God could have made Moſes eloquent, and did not. In our owne ſtories, how Maſter Tindal complained for want of utterance we ſee: and yet what a notable member and Martyr in Gods Church was he?

4 Laſtly, when theſe excuſes ſerve not, Moſes breaketh out even to an height of weakneſſe, and prayeth him to ſend ſome other. A ſtrange thing that a man ſo full of Gods Spirit, after ſuch comforts, ſhould yet be ſo backward. But this is, againe I ſay, the mighty diſcomfort of incredulity, and want of the taſte of good things: when a man, before he goeth to doe his meſſage, cannot conceive that his ſervice ſhall prevaile. And I would all Gods people might marke it with feeling: for then ſhould they ſee how Preachers hearts conſume to duſt within them, by griefe conceived of backwardneſſe, and waywardneſſe, and incredulity of their hearers, to whom God hath ſent them. O! it biteth and wringeth day and night, it lyeth gnawing and grinding the whole inwards, when others comfortably feed upon joy and mirth. It maketh a great Prophet fearfully to paſſe the bounds of patience, and forget himſelfe. For, Curſed be the day wherein I was born, (ſaith that worthy Ieremiah) and let not the day wherein my mother bare me, be bleſſed. Curſed be the man that ſhewed my Father, ſaying, A man-child is born unto thee, and comforted him. And let that man be as the Cities which the Lord hath overturned, and repented not: and let him heare the cry in the morning, and the ſhouting at noone-tide, becauſe he hath not ſlaine me, even from the womb, or that my mother might have been my grave, or her womb a perpetuall conception. How is it that I came out of the womb to ſee labour and ſorow, that my daies ſhould be conſumed with ſhame? Ier.20.14. 15 16 17 18

And ſhall this be good for ſuch people as cauſe it, thinke you? No, no, ſaith the Lord: But Obey them that have the overſight of your ſouls, as they that muſt give accompts; that they may give it with joy, and not with griefe; for that is unprofitable for you. Unprofitable for you, I ſay again, and marke it. Now then mourneth the Preacher: but the day commeth when ſuch hearers ſhall mourn, yea roare and cry in the wound of their conſciences for ſuch diſcomforts given to Gods Meſſengers ſent unto them. O what are we in this age, to Moſes the great Servant of the Lord? And yet hee, for feare of this, is ſo out of heart, that hee prayeth God plainly to ſend ſome other. We feare it not, but feele it, finde it, and ſee it: and have not the Spirit in ſuch meaſure as Moſes had. Alaſſe! how can it bee, but ſometimes our weakneſſe ſhould appeare? Heb.13.17.

5 Doe we not juſtifie Moſes in this? No, the Lord doth not juſtifie him, and therefore we cannot. For, Then the Lord was very angry with Moſes, ſaith the Text: not angry onely, but very angry. So that we ſee moſt apparently here, that there muſt be a meaſure, at leaſt, in our paſſions and tenderneſſe: or elſe God is provoked to great anger. If the Lord appoint us, we muſt goe: if we feare or find diſcomfort we muſt beare, and continue ſtill obedient to God in our ſervice, who will give an iſſue to his pleaſure. And in the meane time, to our unſpeakable comfort, hath ſaid, That we are a ſweet ſavour to him in them that periſh. Yet the Lord caſteth not away his ſervant for all this: but telleth him again, that Aaron ſhall be his Spokeſman to the people, &c. Setting the authority in Moſes, and making Aaron, as it were, his Interpreter. Not unlike that example of Flavianus in the Hiſtory of Theodoret. Moreover, ſaith he, Thou ſhalt take this rod in thine hand, and doe miracles. Where we may not dreame of any vertue in the rod, but caſt both eyes and heart upon God: who is able to make his ſervant with a poore Rod, to match a Kings glorious Scepter. Verſ.14. Verſe 16. Lib.4. Cap 25. Verſe 17.

6 Then Moſes yeeldeth to Gods commandement, and returning to Iethro his Father in law, prayeth him to let him goe, &c. Yeelding us therein theſe obſervations: Firſt, that hee will give no offence to Iethro, by departing, otherwiſe than was fit: Servants & ſubjects may profit by it. Secondly, he concealeth as it ſeemeth the matter from him: leſt to a man not ſo fully yet taſting heavenly things, it might ſeeme unlikely, and ſo he be aſſaulted with new pulbacks. Thirdly, he delayeth not, but ſpeedily addreſſeth himſelfe to his buſineſſe. And laſtly, though outwardly he appeare but the ſame man, yet inwardly he hath thoughts concerning Gods glory, which is a very patterne for all good hearers of Gods Word. Verſe 18.

7 Iethro hindreth not, though no doubt it was to his great griefe (according to nature) to part with him and with his daughter, and their children. So is it every one of our duties to to yeeld unto the will and working of God in all things. For his we are, and for his glory and ſervice wee have beene created: where, when, how, and how long, they are circumſtances knowne and directed by him ever to the beſt, if we beleeve and obey. Moſes taketh the Rod of God in his hand, ſaith the Text, his wife and his ſonnes upon an Aſſe, and away he goeth. Huſbands, ſee the heart of a good man, to have his Wife and Children with him. Wives and Children, ſee a duty due, to be followers willingly of their husbands or fathers calling, even into any country. And when I looke at his Rod, me think I ſee lively little David, marching cheerfully with his ſtaffe and ſcrip againſt huge Goliah. Good Lord! what weapons were thoſe againſt him, then, in mans eyes; or this ſtaffe now in Moſes hand, againſt mighty Pharaoh of Ægypt; But God is the ſame, both here, and then, and for ever; ſtrong in weakneſſe, and able, as I ſaid before, to match a Kings Scepter with a ſtick, or a ſtaffe, or a ſtone, or a word, in the hand or mouth of one ſent and appointed by him, unto his Glory. Bleſſed bee his Majeſty for evermore for his goodneſſe: Amen. And deare Lord, give faith to depend upon thee in all comfort, whenſoever thou calleſt to any duty, not looking to our ſelves, or ſecond meanes; but above all, and over all, at thy mighty power, that ſhalt ever give teſtimony, as in theſe examples, of thy ſtretched-out arme in the midſt of weakneſſe and contemptible ſhew, to effect thy will. Bleſſed is that man, ſaith the Kingly Prophet David, whoſe ſtrength is the Lord, and in whoſe heart are thy waies. I will love thee dearely, O Lord, my ſtrength: For thou art my Rocke and my fortreſſe, and he that delivereth me, my God and my might, my ſhield and my buckler, tha horne of my ſalvation and my refuge, in thee will I truſt, &c. Goe wee then forth, if the Lord ſo call againſt the States of this earth, armed but in ſhew, as Moſes was, or little David: and wee ſhall taſte the ſtrength of the Lord, to his glory and our comfort, as they did.

Verſ. 20.

Sed Deus eſt idem, qui fuit ante, mihi.

Pſal. 18. 1, 2.

8 And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, when thou art entred and come into Ægypt againe, ſee that thou doe all the wonders before Pharaoh, which I have put in thy hand: but I will harden his heart, and he ſhall not let the people goe. This was done, that the Tyrant might ſee by theſe mighty works, how he had not to doe with man, but with God, and ſo be void and naked of all excuſe. But this, that the Lord ſaith, He will harden his heart, troubleth ſome: and they ſeeke to temper it according to their fancies, leſt it ſhould ſeeme injuſtice in the Lord; firſt to harden, and then deſtroy: not remembring what the Apoſtle ſaith, God will have mercy on whom hee will have mercy, and whom he will be hardneth. And if any object and ſay, why doth hee then complaine? for who hath reſiſted his will? His mouth is ſtopped by the ſame Apoſtle, in the ſame place with this, O man, who art thou that pleadeſt againſt God? Shall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? Noting, that no reaſon is to be demanded above Gods will: for who will goe farther, ſhall taſte the reward of his raſhneſſe, and the Majeſty of God ſhall over-whelme him. Hath not the potter power over the clay, to make of the ſame lump, one veſſell to honour, and another to diſhonour? And ſhall leſſe authority be given to God? Ask the Potter a reaſon, and it is but his will: and yet duſt and aſhes will demand more of God. Againe, if we be all of one Lumpe of corruption (as we muſt needs confeſſe we are) if it pleaſe God to exempt ſome from the death due to ſinful wretches, doth he any wrong to others that he vouchſafeth not the ſame unto, leaving them but to their owne natures? No, hee may doe with his owne as it pleaſeth him, and what he doth ſtill is juſt, holy and good. Let the wicked then accuſe themſelves, and not God: for ſtill in themſelves they ſhall find the cauſe, if rightly they look into their owne will.

Exod. 33. 19. Rom. 9. 18.

How God calleth his church.

9 It followeth in the Text: Then thou ſhalt ſay to Pharaoh, thus ſaith the Lord; Iſrael is my Sonne, even my firſt borne. Wherefore I ſay to thee, let my Sonne goe, that he may ſerve me: if thou refuſe to let him goe, behold, I will ſlay thy Sonne, even thy firſt born. Mark then the Title God giveth to his Church, and meditate on it earneſtly. He calleth it his Sonne, yea, his firſt borne, noting therein to all fleſh, that it is to him as a man-child to the Father, yea, as the firſt borne, which commonly is loved moſt tenderly, and in greateſt honour. Now then thinke with your ſelfe, what heart is in you to the fruit of your body, and to your firſt borne: think how you could endure to ſtand and looke upon the abuſe offered by any to the whole or any part: as to ſee but a leg or an arme cut off injuriouſly by bloody butchers, and then thinke of God to his Church, and every part of it: whoſe affection ſo much excelleth yours, as God excelleth man: and holineſſe and perfection, miſery, ſinne, and corruption. What a comfort is this, when the devill roareth, and Tyrants (his inſtruments) rage, breathing out bloud at their noſtrils, and nothing but death and deſtruction at their mouthes, with furious phraſes and ſpeeches of pride, as though there were none that could ſtop them, or controule them in what they will? Think on the difference of God and man in this point, that many harmes may be done to our Sonnes and our firſt borne, which we ſee not, neither know of, and therefore at the inſtant feele not any ſuch touch for it, or by it: But God ſeeth ever and every where all actions, all intendments and purpoſes, all thoughts and ſecret attempts whatſoever, and ſtill is above man in his tenderneſſe of love to his ſonnes and children, as farre as God excelleth duſt and earth and ſinne and corruption, as

I ſaid. O, what a touch give theſe raging cruelties, then, againſt his Church unto him? What a feeling hath he of them, and how doe they pierce his gracious bowels, wherein he hath wrapped up his people as his ſons and as his firſt borne? Still think of your ſelfe, what heart would be in you, and then try the difference of God and you. But, you will ſay unto mee, it is comfortable to conſider this tender love that you note indeed: but why then doth God ſuffer ſuch injuries and oppreſſions, being able to avert them, as man is not, for the moſt part. This is the love of a Father, that he neither can ſee nor ſuffer to be done to the child he loveth, any outrage and cruelty, his power being able to ſave his child from it. To which if I anſwer, I muſt pray you to continue even ſtill in your own reſemblance, and to tell me if you daily ſee not moſt tender Fathers, perceiving cauſe for a further good, to ſuffer their children to lye in priſon, to bee toſſed in law, to be ſchooled many wayes by ſuffering want, and biting upon the bridle for a time; and yet in the midſt of all theſe things have an eye to them, a love to them, and a ſetled purpoſe, (when they know themſelves and their ſtrength, the world and his practices, men and their humors, and many ſuch things, not otherwiſe of many well learned, often, but by theſe meanes,) then to ſet hand and to help them; that then a love may be knowne a love, and a good a good, with a lively taſte, in compariſon of that which would have beene, if ſooner the father or friend had ſtepped in. So, ſo is it with the Lord for our capacity, (though indeed no compariſon betwixt him and us) He knoweth his times and turnes, and our wants perfectly, fitting the one to the other moſt mercifully, that both our corruption and his goodneſſe may beſt appeare to the greateſt benefit unto us. Therefore let him alone in his owne waies, and Pſal. 17. 14. tarry we, as the Pſalme ſaith, his bleſſed leaſure, Be ſtrong, and he ſhall comfort our hearts, and put we our truſt ever in him. Of the earthly father or friend the Proverb ſaith, well hee may ſee his childe or kinſman need, but he cannot endure to ſee him bleed. So our ſweet God, well hee may ſee us humbled, and ſchooled, and tamed and wained from the love of this wretched world, but undone and caſt away finally and for ever, he cannot endure it, he will not ſuffer it, hee will not ſee it. O bleſſed be his Name for ever and ever for it! Have this in your remem-
Verſe 22, 23. brance therefore as a ſweet comfort, the occaſion of this Note. Iſrael is my ſonne, even my firſt borne. And therefore tell Pharaoh, he were beſt take heed what he doth: for I will make his ſonne and firſt borne feele it, if he hinder mine, and will not let them goe to ſerve mee. The world you know contemneth and deſpiſeth us, counting us the refuſe of the people, and what may bee baſe or vile: but this love is life, and this regard with God is honour moſt high: in the comfort whereof, wee may ſup up theſe earthly ſcornes, if his Grace be with us. The Pro-
Eſay 43. 1. phet Eſay in his ſpirit taſted this, when ſo ſweetly he propheſyed and publiſhed (to this day to be ſeene and heard) Thus ſaith the Lord that created thee, O Iacob, and he that formed thee, O Iſrael, feare not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine. When thou paſſeſt through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the flouds, that they doe not overflow thee: when thou walkeſt through the fire, thou ſhalt not be burnt, neither ſhall the flame kindle upon thee. For I am the Lord thy God, the holy One of Iſrael, thy Saviour: I gave Ægypt for thy ranſome, Ethiopia and Seba for thee, &c. Reade the Chapter your ſelfe, and I ſtay here.

Verſe 24. 10 Now ſee an accident in the way. When Moſes was in his Inne, the Lord met him, and would have killed him. That is, by either a ſore ſickneſſe, or ſome other way, the Lord made him know his wrath conceived againſt him: as alſo the cauſe, to wit, the omitting of the circumciſion of his ſonne, as by the event wee may ſee: although it be not expreſſely named. Where, to our profit, let us ſtay a while, and conſider divers things. Firſt, why Moſes, ſo well acquainted with the law of God in this behalfe, ſhould omit or neglect to doe it. And, for anſwer hereunto, marke with your ſelfe, how, of two ſonnes which Moſes had, and carried with him, the circumciſion of one is onely here mentioned: whereby you may well ſee, the other was before, and already circumciſed, or elſe Gods wrath would not have ſtayed in this place, upon performance of duty onely to one. Now the one hauing before beene circumciſed, why ſhould he not have done the like to the other, but that (out of all queſtion) his wife being not ſoundly perſwaded in this point, tooke offence at the firſt, grew unquiet, offered unfit ſpeeches, and haply ſtirred up her father alſo, Iethro, to joyne with her to rattle Moſes for ſuch cruelty (as they eſteemed it) to his ſonne. Whereupon the good man, mild and ſoft of ſpirit, in humane frailty choſe rather to forbeare the ſecond ſonne to have his peace, than to circumciſe alſo him, and pleaſe God. A notable example to teach us this doctrine, how needfull it is even to the great Doctors and Divines, to the great Maſters and Teachers, and rulers and leaders of others, ſtill continually to be underpropped and held up by Gods powerfull ayde and bleſſed Spirit, in their duties: when as otherwiſe, even they, I ſay, that ſeeme ſo ſtrong, play Moſes part here, and faint in the way, to the offence of God, and danger of themſelves. Nay, if Moſes faint, how much more fall they flat downe, that never had ſuch meaſure of grace as Moſes had? Pray therefore, and pray continually for increaſe of ſtrength, for courage and fortitude, for conſtancy and power, to repell all the darts that Satan ſhall throw at us: and prepare we to buckle with men and women and devils that ſhall aſſay to quench or coole our zeale in our places, and to bring us to omit this and that,

that,and every day ſomewhat which God expreſſely requireth,and will not abide to bee omitted. See, you diſcouragers and diſcomforters of Gods ſervants in neceſſary duties, what venome is in your darts, and poyſon in your doings. Moſes (this great man) is overcome and brought into danger by them: and, O, how ſhall a thouſand others of farre weaker ſtrength be turned out of the way by you? Will God be angry with Moſes for yeelding? and ſhall you ſafely eſcape, that are the cauſes of his ſinne, the cut-throats of his zeale, and the overturners of his well-doing? No, no, aſſure your ſelves the wrath of the Lord ſhall conſume you,when it hath profitably corrected his childe, unleſſe you repent and leave off ſuch deviliſh dealing. See you alſo, you brawling and unquiet women, what your ignorance and obſtinacy bringeth your husbands unto, though they be (as Moſes) holy and vertuous? they cannot ſerve God aright for you, they cannot doe what God requireth,but you breake their hearts, you coole their zeale, you turne them out of the way, and in the end you bring them to a fearefull danger of Gods deſtroying of them. For the Lord met Moſes here, and would have killed him, ſaith the Text. Verſe 24. Shall this ever bee unpuniſhed in you? no; your husbands ſhall bee ſchooled for their frailty, and you ſhall bee conſumed for your arrogancy, ſo proudly and ſo diſobediently contemning both their religious inſtructions, and holy actions. If GOD bee with you, this will bee a warning.

11 Then Zipporah tooke a ſharpe knife and cut away the fore-skin of her Sonne. Verſe 25. The two things that here might be conſidered, (namely, the doctrine of Popery concerning the danger of children dying unbaptized,and ſecondly of ſuch an abſolute neceſſity of Baptiſme,as that women muſt adminiſter it in time of ſuppoſed need) I forbeare to ſtand upon now: I have ſufficiently touched them in my Notes upon Geneſis. Therefore doe but remember with your ſelfe (touching the firſt) that we make a great difference betwixt want of Sacrament, and contempt of the ſame; contempt, damning; and want, not, through the ſtrength of Gods promiſe; meaning, by want,when God ſo preventeth by death, that it cannot be had, according to the manner allowed in the word. And, touching the ſecond, obſerve, that this act of Zipporah,here,in circumciſing her childe,was meerely extraordinary, and doth no way warrant women to baptize now a dayes. Her bitter words to her husband (that he was a bloody huſband to her)ſhew but what ſpeeches are often given by women that have their tongues a little too much at liberty. His wiſedome,in not anſwering her, is to this day his praiſe; and her fact her fault, in ſo undutifully ſpeaking. Let this ſuffice for this Chapter: and now reade the Text over in your Bible,and ſee how theſe Notes have helped you. My drift you ſee, and I leave it to God. I would have all men inconraged to reade.

CHAP. V.

The chiefe heads of this Chapter are theſe:

The comming of Moſes and Aaron to the King.
The grievances of the people.
Their impatiency.

TOuching the firſt, here wee ſee,that, although Moſes was very backward a while to obey God, and goe to this King upon this errand; yet at laſt he yeelded: faith overcame feare, and all conceits ſtooped to the obedience of God. A happy thing! and happy is that man and woman ever,which can likewiſe ſay truely, I have had my feares and fancies, mine errours and mine ignorances, my pride and my prejudice againſt that which was good and right, but they are all gone (I thanke God,) and I much joy that they are gone, as likewiſe that I am now ſincerely his whoſe I ought to be,and in this obedience doe not doubt but I ſhall end my dayes,by his grace.

2 Wee may againe thinke here, why God ſhould thus ſend Moſes and Aaron to pray deliverance for his people, when he was able with out-ſtretched arme to have delivered them at his pleaſure? and we may anſwer our ſelves in this ſort,even for the reaſons following,and ſuch like. Firſt, that theſe ſundry bickerings with this Tyrant for his Church might notably ſhew his love and affection to his Church, which is every mans great and ſpeciall comfort. Secondly, that patience might bee taught by this example to all Gods Children, if their troubles and oppreſſions receive not an end by and by. Thirdly, he thus taketh all excuſe from this obſtinate enemy (a thing of good uſe, if we obſerve it.) For even as here by Moſes and Aaron the Lord dealt with Pharaoh; ſo by his Miniſters ſtill the Lord dealeth with us: leaving us as naked without excuſe, if we continue diſobedient,as ever he did Pharaoh. Fourthly, hee thus diſcovereth the great darkneſſe of our underſtanding untill it bee lightned, and the damnable waywardneſſe of our will, till it be changed by him. Fiftly and laſtly, by this manifeſting of the enemies malice, malice, he openeth (to our unſpeakable comfort, and ſo of his Church unto the end,) what a victorious hand he hath to ſave and deliver when and whom he ſhall ever pleaſe, be the rage never ſo ſtrong and great. For Pharaoh cannot hold out, but whileſt God will, we ſee here; no more ſhall any Tyrant to the worlds end. Thus you ſee why God uſed this way, by meſſage and entreaty, rather than the other, by his power and might. Let it profit you, and ſo I leave it.

3 You ſee alſo here againe, how God calleth them his people, although oppreſſed and in miſery under a wicked, wayward, and prophane governour. It is a ſweet comfort to thoſe that taſte of like griefe; and ſheweth, as I have noted before, that affliction ſeparateth not from God: but in the middeſt of all woe, hee regardeth, and ſaith, mine, mine: although inſtantly he rebuke not either winde or weather, &c.

4 Pharaoh his proud anſwer, ſaying, Who is the Lord, that I ſhould heare him? pictureth out the hardneſſe of an unregenerate heart, and biddeth all beholders to pray againſt it. O duſt and aſhes! dareſt thou ſay thou knoweſt not him that made thee, and not tremble for thy ignorance? This unfeelingneſſe was in Pilate, when he ſaid: what is truth? And what is that which ſome amongſt us utter every day, what new doctrine is this? Sed non impune recuſat Pharaoh quod ſcienter ignorat. But to his woe doth Pharaoh refuſe what wittingly and willingly hee knoweth not. And ſo ſhall all that delight in ignorance. Hence commeth waywardneſſe and wilfulneſſe, obſtinacy and frowardneſſe, rage and madneſſe, that men will not heare and know. But in Pharaoh ſee what will follow one day, when by voyce and words no good is done. Hee in the Sea, thou in the Lake that ever burneth ſhalt periſh and ſinke to eternall confuſion.

5 I will not let them goe, ſaith he. Then, his reaſon is, his Will: ever the refuge of the reprobate, I will not, I will not: and ſtill in the end, I will not. A ſhort reſolution, but as dangerous a reſolution as man can make againſt his owne ſoule, many times. In the 6. of Ieremy ſee the like anſwer, We will not walke therein. Againe in the 44. Chap. The word that thou haſt ſpoken to us, in the name of the Lord, we will not heare it of thee, &c. And many mee like anſwers there bee in the Scriptures, but whoſe be they? Even ſuch, I ſay, as rebell againſt God and his good motives made to them by his Miniſters and meanes, wiſhing them well. Wherfore the end is Gods wrath upon them, and fearefull deſtruction. Such anſwers wee heare too often amongſt our ſelves, ſaying, I am ſetled, &c. and I will not heare you. God grant in any due time we may learne by other mens harmes, and leave them. For true and true ſhall wee finde that Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Religio ſtulta non prodeſt, ſed obeſt, A fooliſh religion doth not profit, but hurt: and God is juſt to all men in his time, I meane, in puniſhing their proud diſobedience. This is confirmed even in that which followeth in the next verſe in theſe words: Leſt he bring upon us the peſtilence or ſword. Noting, that this is ever the end of the contempt of divine worſhip, accordng to the preſcript of God, ſome fearefull plague and judgement. Surely this one place would ſuffice to many to awake them, and ſhall no places profit us? Were this people of Iſrael in danger, and we in none? Have we the Lord bound, that we may doe what we liſt, and yet bee ſafe? If they goe not out to ſacrifice to the Lord, that is, to ſerve and worſhip him in that ſort and manner that then he commanded, the Lord will bring upon them the peſtilence or ſword: and if we ſtifly and ſtubbornly, proudly and preſumptuouſly refuſe to goe out but of our doores to the Church by us, to ſerve him as now he commandeth, ſhall nothing follow? God touch us, and move us: the knife is upon our throats, and we feare not. Whole houſes and manors are rooted out and ruinated, not onely abroad in the Land, but even in the Country (peradventure where we dwell) for this rebellion, and yet we thinke our poſterity ſhall abide, and nothing happen upon our heapings for them, when hee is deſpiſed that doth but blow upon lands and livings and they are gone. Cathedram in cœlo habet, qui corda movet: His Chaire is in heaven, that moveth hearts: and he, for his mercies ſake, I ſay againe, move us, that we may enquire, ſeeke and ſee whether we doe well or wrong, and doe as we ought when we ſee it. The Lord hath promiſed to take away the ſtony heart, and to give a fleſhy in the place, if we will urge him with his promiſe by humble, hearty and earneſt prayer. So did David when he cryed, O let mee feele, let mee feele: knowing even then, that this Gods mercy, if it were ſought, ſhould be granted.

Pſal. 51.

6 Then ſaid the King of Ægypt unto them, Moſes and Aaron, why cauſe ye the people to ceaſe from their workes, &c? See the lot of the juſt; to be quarrelled with, nipped, quipped, ſlandred, and even laden many times with falſe and moſt injurious imputations. To Prophets, Apoſtles, Martyrs, and Jeſus Chriſt himſelfe, this meaſure hath beene meaſured, and they have borne it. Deus videt, the Lord ſeeth, and in his due time he will make the truth appeare. Fero, ſpero; I endure and hope: let it be thy meditation when none ſeeth but he that ſeeth in ſecret. Againe, marke here, how when God draweth neere to yeeld us comfort, then Satan in his members rageth more, and ſeeketh to encreaſe our troubles, ſorrows, and griefes: but yet all in vain, God in the end will deliver his Servants in deſpite of all their enemies, as here he did. Be of good comfort, and lay it up in thy heart.

Verſ. 4.

Injurious imputations.

7 They

7 They be idle, therefore they crie, saying, Let us goe to offer sacrifice, &c. And truth it is, that nothing is worse than idlenesse, the mother of all vice, as discord, slander and slaughter, and such like: but that here they were idle, was an errour in the King, and a malicious lie in those that so informed him. By which wee may learne and see, how wicked men have no eyes, often, to see the true causes of a thing, but most apt and ready to devise a false. Let a man or woman be grieved extraordinarily with the burthen of their sinnes, and with groanes and sighes travell under the bitternesse of it, leaving thereupon those recreations which erst they used, and delighted in; what say the wicked? Oh, it is a melancholy, and the body would bee purged, &c. But, oh! they are blinde, and have no eye-sight into the combates of the godly, may we truly say, and so leave them. Festus imagineth Paul is mad, when he speaketh the words of truth and soberne sse: and that much learning maketh him mad, when learning is wisedome, and maketh wise. Yea, Heli himselfe mistaketh Anna, a vertuous woman, and deemeth her to be drunke, when ravished in her holy feeling, she was crying to God with fervent prayer. Wherefore the Apostle teacheth, To the end Christ might be mercifull, and a faithfull High Priest in things concerning God, it behooved him in all things to be made like unto his Brethren. And in another place, We have not an High Priest, that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all things tempted in like sort, yet without sinne, &c.

8 And let them not regard vaine words, saith Pharaoh. Such taste, and such conceit have vaine persons, of Gods word. Examples of use, to give us contentment in patience, when like ignorance in our dayes bringeth forth like blasphemies. Be stayed and strong.

Verse. 9.

9 Then went the Taske-masters of the people, and their Officers out, and told the people, saying, Thus saith Pharaoh, I will give you no more straw. Goe your selves, get you straw where yee can finde it, yet shall nothing of your labour be diminished. Then were the people scattered, &c. See againe what was said before, how the nearer that God draweth to his Church and Children to doe them good, the more rageth Satan, in and by his members against them. Hard, hard therefore are the beginnings of deliverance out of Ægypt, spirituall Ægypt I meane, as well as out of this earthly Ægypt. And therefore, when the Lord shall touch thy hand, and open thine eyes to see where thou art, how farre out of the way that leadeth to eternall life, and give thee a desire to returne and be saved: Remember what the Wise-man saith, and be comforted with it: My sonne, if thou wilt come into the service of God, stand fast in righteousnesse and feare, and prepare thy soule to temptation, &c. Reade the place to the end: Remember that example in the Gospell, how the foule spirit being commanded to depart, rent and tare the party more and worse than ever before. Wee cannot leave any sinne wherein we have continued, but by and by some contrary winde will blow, and we shall be discouraged, if it may bee, sometimes with threatnings and bitter words, sometimes with shew of perils and losses that may ensue, sometimes with mockes and taunts in very spightfull manner: and in a word, if we have done evill, wee must doe evill still, and so be cast away, or else Satan will want his will: But be strengthned with this example and others in the Word. Here, now, their burthen and misery is greater than ever before. For now they must have no more straw, but gather it where they can, and yet make up the tale and number of their brick as before: which was a great extremity, yet the end is still as the Lord hath decreed: his purpose is to deliver them from this slavery: and, when his time commeth, they shall be delivered, and let goe, whosoever saith nay. Though discomfort encrease for a little while, to draw sighes out of the heart, to him that can helpe: yet it shall end with joyfull comfort, put in the place of it, and so much the sooner, by how much it groweth the sharper. O, stand then and shrinke not; and say in your heart, now, now is my God at hand. For now I feele and see the enemie maddest to oppresse me, if hee could. Come therefore, sweet Lord, I humbly beseech thee, stay not: and till thou commest, vouchsafe thy hand to stay mee, that I faint not. Thou art strong, and I am weake; thou art good, and I am bad: but thou art mine, and I am thine. O Blessed, Blessed, support thine owne, that I may ever praise thee.

10 And the Task-masters hasted them, saying, Finish your dayes worke, &c. And they beate them. Then they cryed to Pharaoh, &c. A story to shew you, if you note it, how the Law worketh without the Gospell; even roughly, and sharpely, and rigorously. For, doe this, doe this; and finish, finish the worke, is still the voyce of it. Whereby sinne and the Devill rageth, as here Pharaoh doth. For, Sinne, saith the Apostle, tooke occasion by the Law, &c. So, sinne revived, But I dyed: and the same commandement which was ordained unto life, was found to be unto me unto death, &c. Then cryeth the true Israelite, O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this Death? As here they cryed unto Pharaoh, to be delivered from their misery. Blessed therefore be the Lord for his sweet Gospell, which helpeth all this rigour, and giveth us comfort and deliverance in his Sonne, from this great rage, to our endlesse comfort. See also, how Tyranny once begun, encreaseth more and more, from words to blowes, verse 14. And when they cry unto Pharaoh, in hope of remedy, verse 15. shewing him the iniquity of their usage; and, and, how their offence in not making up their tale of bricke, grew by other mens faults, that gave them no ſtraw, verſ. 16. this pittifull complaint which ſhould have moved him to commiſeration, worketh but a confirmation of tyrannie in the wicked King: firſt, mocking and ſcoffing at their Religion, (as wicked men uſe to doe) verſe 17. and uttering his cruelty with his own mouth, There ſhall no ſtraw be given you, yet ſhall you deliver the whole tale of brick, verſ. 18. Wherefore how happy Kingdomes bee, to which the Lord hath granted mercifull and gracious Princes, full of pitie and clemency, flowing from a true taſte of holy Religion, and from an immoveable love of their true Subjects, I leave the Reader, if he have any bowels in him, to feele and conſider; ſending up his thankes where it is due, for what he enjoyeth in abundant meaſure.

11 Then the Officers of the Children of Iſrael ſaw themſelves in an evill caſe, &c. And they met Moſes and Aaron, who ſtood in their way as they came out from Pharaoh. To whom they ſaid, the Lord looke upon you, and judge, for ye have made our ſavour to ſtinke before Pharaoh, and before his Servants, in that ye have put a ſword in their hands to ſlay us. A third event of the Ambaſſage of Moſes and Aaron is, this bitter expoſtulation of theſe Officers; wherein, as in a glaſſe moſt bright and cleare, you ſee the condition and lot of faithfull Miniſters in this wretched world. Firſt, the King, and now the people accuſe them as worthy of great reproofe (both grievous to good minds:) but eſpecially, to be accuſed of their brethren, when they doe as their duty requireth, O! it is double grievous, and ever was. But thus was it ever, and will bee ever: and therefore, Præmonitus, præmunitus, forwarned, forearmed, and præviſa jacula minus feriunt: Darts eſpied before they come hurt leſſe. God give us patience and love ſtill to them that love not us. Here is great bitternesſe (and yet undeſerved) in this their ſpeech, if you marke it; and here is great inconſtancy, compared with the Chapter before, where they worſhipped, and welcommed theſe happy Meſſengers of a gracious God, who ſaw their oppreſſion and miſery, and ſent to helpe them. But, quæ nocent docent, Things hurtfull inſtruct and give wiſedome. While all is well, good is the Miniſter; and when the croſſe commeth, he and his doctrine (though the truth of God is cauſe of all) away with that, and away with him. The word which thou haſt ſpoken to us in the name of the Lord, we will not heare it of thee. But we will do whatſoever thing goeth out of our owne mouth, as to burne Incenſe to the Queene of Heaven, and to powre out drinke offerings unto her, as we have done, both we and our Fathers, our Kings, and our Princes in the Cities of Iuda, and in ſtreets of Ieruſalem: (now marke their reaſon) for then had we plenty of victuals, and were well, and felt no evill. But ſince we left off to burne Incenſe to the Queen of Heaven, and to poure out drinke-offerings unto her, we have had ſcarceneſſe of all things, and have beene conſumed by the ſword, and by Famine. This is the ſtay of the multitude, & this is the line they meaſure all things by, their proſperity in worldly matters, and immunity from trouble and affliction any wayes. But it is a crooked rule, if we hearken unto God, and he that will follow him, muſt take up his croſſe and follow him, when his good pleaſure ſhall be ſo. Take heed alſo by theſe mens example, to expect deliverance from any calamity ſooner and faſter than God pleaſeth. For, becauſe of this, they breake out in this ſort againſt Gods ſervants: they will not tarry the leaſure of God, but when themſelves will, and as they will they muſt be delivered. A dangerous dealing, and no way fit for them that are ſeekers and cravers.

Schola trucis, Schola lucis. Ier.44.16. &c.

12 Wherefore Moſes returned to the Lord, and ſaid, Lord, why haſt thou afflicted this people? Wherefore haſt thou thus ſent me? For, ſince I came to Pharaoh to ſpeake in thy Name, he hath vexed this people, and yet thou haſt not delivered thy people. See, ſee the right remedy in all affliction, even to returne unto the Lord, as Moſes did here. For, he woundeth, and he healeth, He killeth, and he maketh alive, he bringeth downe to the grave, and raiſeth up againe. But, Moſes manner of returning with ſuch expoſtulations, here, is not to be commended: for he pleadeth with the Lord, as though he did contrary to his promiſe, becauſe as yet there appeared no fruit of his Ambaſſage. He alſo complaineth as though his calling were in vaine, ſince worſe and worſe was the condition of the people from his firſt comming. Wherefore, ſee and marke the weakneſſe of the ſtrongeſt ſometimes, and eſpecially when of ſuch they are vexed as they have deſerved wel, and indeed ſhould receive a kinder courſe from them. O gall of friends! how bitter art thou? How ſtrikeſt thou to the very bottome of a fleſhy heart, and leaveſt a ſting behinde thee, that killeth with the poyſon and venome of it, if God ſuccour not? Neither the fury of Pharaoh, nor the cruelty of the Ægyptians moved Moſes any thing: but, his owne to wrong him, whoſe good hee ſought, and with all perill to himſelfe endeavoured, it moved him ſo, that his weakeneſſe breaketh out even before his God. This ſhould move men, and all that looke to be liked and live with God, to forbeare and flie from the like unkindneſſe toward thoſe, whom God hath ſent to them for their good: and this muſt remember ſuch Meſſengers to pray for ſtrength; and as Moſes yet forſooke not his Office for all this, ſo neither they to doe; but ſtill going on, to expect the Lords mercy, which here to Moſes now ſhewed it ſelfe, and gave him comfort, as followeth in the next Chapter.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

The parts of this Chapter are two.

First, a repetition of things done before: from the first verse to the twelfth.
Secondly, a short story, by way of digression, of the names and families of the Israelites: from the twelfth verse to the end of the Chapter.

Verse 3.

First then for use of this Chapter, let us consider these words of the Lord, Verse 3. And I appeared to Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, by the Name of Almighty God: but by my Name Iehovah was I not knowne unto them: and understand the true sense and meaning of them. Wherein wee may not thinke that this name Iehovah was unkowne before this time, (for expressely hee named himselfe thus to Abraham, Gen. 15.7. and to Iacob, Gen. 28. 13. as also in the 26. Chapter, verse 24, where Iacob prayed unto the Lord by this Name.) But the Lords meaning is, by this kinde of speech to prefer, by way of comparison, this manifestation of himselfe, which now he intended to make, before all others made to the Fathers in former times, because those contained but promises, this should have the effect & performance of the promises: so as the words are, as if the Lord should have said: I appeared to Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, by the Name of Almighty God: that is, I gave them promises, which they by Faith layd hold on and beleeved, moved with the assurance they had of my Almighty power and all-sufficiency: But by my Name Iehovah was I not knowne unto them: that is, I gave them not the accomplishment and matter of my promise, as now at this time I will doe to you. For now as my name Iehovah signifieth an existence by my selfe, of whom, in whom, by whom, and for whom, whatsoever is, is, and hath beeing: so shall you see it come to passe in your Deliverance from this raging Tyrant, and cruell bondage. I will performe what I have said, and I will now cause it to be, what heretofore I have onely said should be. S. Bernard hath a good saying touching this matter, when hee teacheth us thus: That the calling of God by severall Names, as Father, Master, or (as here) Almighty, Iehovah, and the like, ariseth not of any variety in his nature, which ever was, and shall be invariable; but of, and from a manifold variety of affections in us, according to a divers profiting, or not profiting of our soules, whereby he seemeth to be changed with us that change. So may I profit in the way of godlinesse, that his Name toward mee may be a Father: and so may I not profit, as his Name may be a Judge, a Revenger, mighty and terrible, &c.

Iehova qui est, & esse facit quod promisit.

Verse.5.

2 Let us observe these words, I have heard the groaning of the Children of Israel, whom the Ægyptians keepe in bondage, &c. Are they not sweet & comfortable? Miserable man remembreth and heareth his friends when they are in prosperity, and if adversity come unto them, neither hearing nor seeing then, but a proud, scornfull, and bitter forgetting. The Lord is not so: but when we are at the worst, then he remembreth us, then he heareth our groanes and sighes, and pitying helpeth, to our unspeakable comfort. O kinde, O gracious and deare God! still continue this care of mercy towards thy poore afflicted Servants, and give that deliverance, ease, and freedome, that ever, ever may bee matter of thy praise to all succeding learners, how sweet thy Nature is. Amen, Amen.

Verse.7.

3 Also, I will take you for my people, &c. Behold the end of all deliverance, and of all benefits received from God, even that we should be his people, that he might rule in us and over us, and his praise be ever in our mouthes. Wherefore see how carefull we should be alwayes to answer this our Calling, and never to bee found unmindfull of such favours. For, if this plainer manifestation of his goodnesse to them, more than to their Fathers, was matter to them justly to stirre them up to thankfull feeling: how much more should his manifestation of himselfe to us in his owne Sonne, in whom he hath opened all the treasures of mercy and loving kindnesse, move us to an eternall and never-ceasing care to please him, serve him, honour him, and love him? And then more particularly, that he should accept me, me, for one of his people: O, what can I say for such a love, but beseech him ever to make me thankfull? Amen, Amen.

Verse.8.

4 And I will bring you into the Land which I sware that I would give to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Iacob, and I will give it to you for a possession: I am the Lord. Sweet and comfortable was this promise, as often as God repeated it: but many were the difficulties that appeared to mens eyes against this hope, all which, how great so ever or many, the Lord, if you marke it, easeth with this one word, Ego Dominus, I am the Lord. Thereby teaching, that as long as our hearts hold this perswasion of him, that he is the Lord; so long wee must ever rest assured without fearefull fainting, that hee can performe his promises in mercy made unto us, bee there never such stops and lets in our eyes. What then is thy case? Are thy sinnes many and great? Remember hee is the Lord, and play not Cains-part, to say, they cannot be forgiven. Are thine enemies strong and fierce, and bitterly bent against thee? He is the Lord, and therefore can stop and stay them, they shall not hurt thee above his pleasure, which shall be no hurt, but profit to thee in the end. Are thine thine infirmities many? He can heale them, hee is the Lord. Are thy children untoward, or unkinde? He can change them: He is the Lord. Finally, whatsoever grieveth thee, remember this, and be comforted; Hee is the Lord, he shall ever be the Lord, and he shall ever be thy Lord to care for thy woes, and to send thee helpe. Onely beleeve.

Verse 9. 5 So Moses told the Children of Israel thus, but they hearkned not unto him: See, see how hard it is, as your Marginall Note saith, to shew true obedience under the Crosse. Neither the word of God, nor his miracles, wherewith heretofore they justly have beene moved, and wondred, have now any place with them: but all dulled and deaded with conceived griefes, they suffer themselves to be carried away beyond the measure that Gods Children should ever hold in their adversity: which, as it is a very dangerous thing, so ought it carefully to bee avoided. It is often a penalty that hee layeth upon the contemners of his Graces, that cleaving altogether, to the externall favours and fawnings of this life, they taste not comfort in any affliction: whereas the godly, the more they are pressed and nipped by the schooling hand of their God, the more vehemently they sigh unto God, and looke to his promises with patience and hope. This may teach the Ministers of God, also, not to be cast downe and discouraged, if their words ever bee not hearkned unto and regarded, since so worthy a man as Moses was in the house of God found this measure. I know, I know the bitternesse of it to a heart than hungreth for their good: but wee must bee content, wee are but like to them that have spoken in vaine to deafe eares before we were borne. The world will bee the world, crooked and crosse, froward and unkinde, though we breake our hearts in labouring to winne to a better course. O, what a thing is it to come out of Ægypt, &c.

Verse 10. 6 Then the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Goe speake to Pharaoh King of Ægypt, that he let the Children of Israel goe out of his land. Before you saw how hee was bid goe to the people, now we heare him sent to Pharaoh: so is there never any time for men of place and publike function to be idle. Ever, ever, there is some service for them, and an use of their care, paines, and labour. Now they must defend the oppressed and wronged, now they must punish the evill doers, now they must comfort, now they must chide: that ever they may see and finde honour to be a burden and an unceasing carefulnesse. Private men also may make use of it: for either in flying evill, or in doing good, there is alwayes a care in good mindes. But I leave it to your meditation. I note and see here the bottomelesse mercy of the Lord, who although hee might justly have given over to favour so froward a company, that would not hearken to his words and messages sent unto them: yet hee doth not, but still continueth to have mercy upon them, verifying that speech of the Prophet David: Even as a Father pitieth his Children, so is the Lord mercifull to his people. Psa. 103. I see it also here (not without my good) that when Moses had received this discomfort, that the people would not regard his words, and might stand in a maze what more to doe, the Lord helpeth him out of this doubt, and sendeth him to Pharaoh. Surely, surely, if the Lord helped us not in many mazes that this unkinde world will drive us into, it would be ill with us. But blessed be God that yeeldeth both consilium & auxilium, counsell and helpe, when wee can doe neither our selves. Let it strengthen us to call upon him in all our needs: if some will not heare us, he can send us to others, and his will be done, say wee ever.

Verse 12. 7 But Moses spake unto the Lord, saying, Behold the Children of Israel hearken not unto mee, how then shall Pharaoh heare me, who am of uncircumcised lips? See weakenesse and wants in the best men still. If Israel will not heare, he thinketh it cannot be that Pharaoh should heare: and a second stop hee maketh his owne infirmity of speech. But what is not God able to doe that his pleasure is to have done? Can he not make some heare what others would not? The Scripture and our experience are full of examples. The Ninevites, Ionas 3. the Samaritans, Iohn 4. the Gentiles, Acts 13. with many moe confute this feare in Moses. And as for speech, who ruleth hearts, and blesseth speech but God? Wherefore all this will not serve, wee should obey and doe what God biddeth. But O! what effects hath the hardnesse of hearers hearts in good men often? Surely it maketh those that were ready even to have spent their lives for them, to desire to be spared, as Moses here, that no more, no more they may meddle with such ingratitude. And certainly this is a just plague, to bee deprived of such men, with all the favours of God offered by them. Long doth God beare, but ever he will not beare, if men continue wayward to receive the comfort he sendeth to them by his Ministers.

8 The Genealogie following in this Chapter, I leave to your owne reading, it being added, Vt Salvatoris Genealogia apte texeretur, ut temporis ratio haberi posset, utque Deus fidelis in promissis appareat, qui quarta generatione ad liberandum Israel se venturum promiserat: That the Genealogie of our Saviour might aptly be described, that time might bee distinguished, and that God might appeare faithfull in his promises, which foretold that in the fourth Generation he would come to deliver Israel. Aug. q. 15. in Exod. And so I end this Chapter, with the Note in the Margine, Verse 30. That the disobedience of Moses and the people, sheweth that their deliverance came onely of Gods free mercy.

CHAP.

CHAP. VII.

The chiefe points in this Chapter are two.

{ A miracle done before Pharaoh.
{ The first of the ten plagues.

1 TOuching particulars, wee may obſerve theſe words, I have made thee Pharaohs God: whereby the Lord comforteth and ſtrengthneth Moſes againſt this ſhaking feare to goe in ſuch a meſſage, telling him that there was more cauſe for Pharaoh to feare, than for him. For hee ſhould be a God to Pharaoh, that is, hee ſhould have authority in Gods name to ſpeake unto him, and to execute Gods judgements upon him. Deus datus eſt Pharaoni, non quem adoraret Pharao, ſed quem ut judicem timoret & formidaret: He was made a God to Pharaoh, not to be worſhipped of Pharaoh, as God, but to be feared as a Iudge, ſaith a Divine: Deus Pharaoni datus eſt dum timetur, dum oratur, dum punit, dum medetur. Aliud eſt igitur deum dari, aliud deum eſſe. He was made a God to Pharaoh whileſt he is feared, whileſt he is entreated, whileſt he puniſheth, and healeth againe, ſaith Hilary. Therefore it is one thing to be made a God, and another thing to be a God. Men are made Gods (ſaith Thomas Aquinas) by participation, ſimilitude, and adoption, onely becauſe they have ſomething Divine, and above their owne nature vouchſafed unto them. Moſes therefore having here granted him a power to worke ſuch great miracles, to bring in, and take away ſuch great plagues; hee was rightly ſaid unto Pharaoh to be made a God. Surely a great authority, and a great encouragement to a weake man. Looke then we may not at our ſelves ſo much, and what we are in our ſelves, and of our ſelves, as at the calling and Office committed to us of God, whoſe power is ever able to make good his gracious Commiſſion vouchſafed to his creature, againſt all fighters and frowners, ſtrivers and ſpurners at it. Truſſe up thy loynes therefore (O Ieremiah, ſaith God to him) and ariſe, and ſpeake unto them all that I command thee: be not afraid of their faces, leſt I deſtroy thee before them. For I, behold, I this day have made thee a defenced City, an yron pillar, and walls of braſſe againſt the whole Land, againſt the Kings of Iudah, and againſt the Princes thereof, againſt the Prieſts thereof, and againſt the people of the Land, For they ſhall fight againſt thee, but they ſhall not prevaile againſt thee: for I am with thee to deliver thee, ſaith the Lord. The Prophet his feare appeareth before in the ſixt verſe: and now this comfort drawne from the authority and function committed to him, muſt take away that feare, and give him ſtrength and courage to doe what the Lord calleth him unto. The like ſee in Ezechiel, when God ſaith unto him, Son of man, Behold, I have made thy face ſtrong againſt their faces, and thy forehead ſtrong againſt their foreheads. I have made thy forehead as the Adamant, and harder than the flint: feare them not therefore, neither be afraid at their lookes, for they are a rebellious houſe. At this day the Lord doth give to his Miniſters the power to binde and looſe, and hath publiſhed this ſpeech of unſpeakable comfort, He that receiveth you, receiveth me: and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. All which both then and now, had and muſt have the uſe I named; even to draw men from themſelves, and the regard of their owne power, to the conſideration of their places and offices vouchſafed of God, and of the ſtrength of him who is all in all, and hath laid that charge upon them. Not once did it enter into the Lords thought, to eſtabliſh hereby a Title to the Biſhop of Rome, above all others to be called Deus in terris, a God on earth, as his owne authenticall and allowed booke calleth him, ſaying, Credere Dominum Deum noſtrum Papam non poſſe ſtatuere prout ſtatuit, hæreticum cenſeretur. To beleeve that our Lord God the Pope may not decree as he decreeth, would be judged hereſie. Such an impudent boldneſſe, as a man would not think any ſhould ſuffer, had not the Spirit of God foretold us by his bleſſed Apoſtle, that the Man of ſinne ſhould ſit in the Temple of God, and ſhew himſelfe as if he were God. Whereunto adde that good ſaying of S. Gregory, who writing of Antichriſt, ſaith thus: Cum ſit damnatus homo & nequaquam ſpiritus, Deum ſe eſſe mentitur: Whereas he is a damned man, & not a ſpirit, by lying he faineth himſelf to be God. Alſo that of Anſelmus, Simulabit ſe religioſum, ut ſub ſpecie decipiat pietatis, imo ſe deum eſſe dicet, & ſe adorari faciet, atq; regna cœlorum promittet: Antichriſt ſhall faine himſelf to be holy, that he may deceive men under the colour of holineſſe: yea he ſhall call himſelfe God, and ſhall cauſe himſelfe to be worſhipped, and ſhall promiſe the Kingdome of heaven. Things which wee all know the Pope doth, and no man ever but the Pope. And heare you what a Note Euſebius maketh of this, Hoc eſt argumentum eos odiſſe Deum, quod velint ſeipſos appellari deos. This is a token that they hate God, becauſe they will have themſelves called by the name of God. Irenæus, that ancient Father ſaith, Antichriſtus exiſtens apoſtata & latro, quaſi Deus vult adorari: & cum ſit ſervus, regem vult ſe præconiari: Antichriſt being a Renagate and a Theefe, yet will be worſhipped as God: and being but a ſlave, yet will be proclaimed and publiſhed as a King. But you will imagine they have ſome ſhift for this ſhame, or elſe it is too ſhameful. Surely all the ſhifts they have cannot make it otherwiſe thã a moſt odious insolency, such as might fully open mens eyes, who are yet deceived, to discerne the error of their course in following his law and love against God, Prince and Country, as many doe; but that the Lord being angry with their contempt of his truth, letteth them still remaine in their blindnesse, as a just punishment of their frowardnesse. Their shift is this, they doe not meane he is absolutely God, but in some sense or respect, For by their Glosse it is said, Papa nec Deus, nec homo: The Pope is neither God nor man. And is not this a worthy qualification? Might not all those, who (as vainly as he) have challenged the title in like sort, defend it as hee now doth? Proud Antiochus King of Syria, honoured himselfe by the name of God. So the Emperour Domitian used in his Proclamations, Dominus Deus vester Domitianus, Your Lord God Domitian. So the Emperour Caligula called himselfe, Deum optimum maximum, & Iovem Latialem: The best and most mighty God, and the great Iupiter of Italy. So Sapores the great King of Persia, called himselfe Fratrem Solis & Luna: The brother of the Sunne and Moone. The peevish Physitian Menecrates, called himselfe Iupiter. Nicagoras made himselfe a paire of wings, and would needs be called the god Mercury. Manichæus the Heretike, called himselfe the holy Ghost. The Romans erected up an Image in the honor of Simon Magus the Sorcerer, with this poesie, Simoni sancto Deo, To the honor of Simon the holy God. And did all these well, if the distinction be added of God absolute, and God not absolute? I thinke not. Yet which of all these were comparable to the Pope in this arrogant vanity, considering the knowledge that he either hath, or ought to have above them. Nevertheless Pope Nicholas said, Constat summum Pontificem à pio Principe Constantino Deum appellatum: It is well knowne, that of the godly Prince Constantine, the Pope was called God. So in the Councell of Lateran, this proud Antichrist suffered one of his Parasites to say, Tu es alter deus in terris: Thou art another god in earth. Many other such stories there are which I passe over, wishing in my heart, that men would observe and see what is so manifest before their eyes: that although the Pope by their distinction be not absolute God, or an absolute Christ, yet certainly he is a very absolute Antichrist. I end then this Note with that exposition of Alexander of Hales our witty Country-man: Scriptura non dicit de Mose, constituite Deum, sed deum Pharaonis: hoc est, potentem super Pharaonem divinitus: The Scripture saith not of Moses, I have made thee God, but I have made thee Pharaohs God: that is, of power and strength above Pharaoh, through the hand of God which is with thee. Nothing therefore, I say, doe Moses words help the Pope, to justifie his blasphemous pride and insolency.

Dist. 96. satis evidenter.

2 And Aaron thy brother shall be thy Prophet. That is, as hee said in the fourth Chapter, thy Mouth, thy Interpreter, thy Speaker, to utter that eloquently, or in good words, which thou shalt appoint him. Thy Prophet, saith Theodoret, as if God should have said, Look how I speake to the Prophets, and the Prophets to the people, so shalt thou speake to Aaron, as to thy Prophet, and he unto the people. Where wee see the incomprehensible Counsell and wisdome of God, who, though he could have given to Moses, as well a rowling tongue, as a wise heart; yet he would not, but to the one brother giveth one gift, to the other another, that either might have need and use of another, and neither of them be exalted in contempt of the other. This is that which the Apostle speaketh, when he saith, Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit: For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdome, and to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit: to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit: and to another the operations of great works: and to another, prophecie: and to another the discerning of Spirits: and to another diversities of tongues: and to another, the interpretation of tongues: And all these worketh one and the selfe-same Spirit, distributing to every man severally as he will. The holy use whereof we should take, if reverently we esteeme one anothers gifts, envying none, despising none, carping, cutting, nipping no man, but with an humble heart glorifying God to our selves, & beseeching him, that in allour brethren also, together with their severall charges, he would glorifie his great Name. A Grace so much the more precious, by how much it is rare, and too rare in these last dayes, wherein the Spirit hath foretold us, Men shall be lovers of themselves, covetous, boasters, cursed speakers, disobedient to parents, unthankefull, unholy, without naturall affection, Truce-breakers, false accusers, intemperate, fierce, despisers of them that are good, Traytors, heady, high minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God.

2 Tim. 3. 2, 3, 4.

Verse 2.

3 Thou shalt speake all that I command thee. So will God ever have his Ministers faithfull, to keepe nothing back of his will delivered to them, for feare or flattery of any man; but truely to discharge the credit reposed in them, leaving the successe to him that sent them, and disposeth of all hearts at his pleasure. Thus protesteth the Apostle very carefully, wee see, when he tooke his leave of the Elders of Ephesus, saying, I have kept back nothing that was profitable, but have shewed you all the Counsell of God. Thus running our race, we shall rest one day in eternall comfort, delivered from a bitter world, from evill men, and evill natures, taking alwaies our best endeavours in the worst sense, and rewarding true affection with black envy, (most unfit for Christians.)

Acts 20. 20.

Vers. 3.

4 But I will harden Pharaohs heart. Heathens could say, à Deo perfecto nihil malum, nihil turpe est: From a perfect God no evill, nor foule thing commeth. Againe, Deus malorum causa

non

non eſt, cum bonus ſit: God is not the Author of evill, when as he himſelfe is good. Therefore concerning this hardning of Pharaoh, ſome underſtand it by permiſſion; that is, hee ſuffered him to be hardned: as wee ſay in the Lords prayer, Leade us not into temptation: that is, ſuffer us not to be led. Gregory ſaith, Non duritiem contulit, ſed exigentibus ejus meritis, nulla infuſa timoris ſenſibilitate mollivit. He did not impoſe hardneſſe, but his merits ſo deſerving, he ſoftned him not by any infuſed ſenſe of feare. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, God did it, ratione pœnæ, For a puniſhment. And wee all know, the Lord is not tyed to give grace to any man, but it is his mercy, it is his love, and moſt free he is to doe with his owne what hee will. The conſideration whereof, ſhould ever worke in us care and zeale, to crave at Gods hands fleſhie hearts, which may tremble at his judgements, and taſte his mercie, ſaying with Samuel, Speake on, Lord, thy Servant heareth: and with David, O my God, I am content to doe it, yea thy law is within my heart. Marke alſo here how God foretold them againe, That Pharaoh would not heare them. A thing ſo bitter to the faithfull Miniſter of God, as many fore-warnings are needfull to him, to give him ſtrength againſt this temptation. O therefore, that we may ever have patience, who labour in the Word, and Doctrine! God will doe his will, God ought to doe his will, our duty is knowne, we may not preſcribe to him: if we performe what is our part, Sweet is our ſavour (ſaith the bleſſed Apoſtle) as well in them that periſh, as in thoſe that are ſaved: and it is enough. O Lord, let it be enough to every groaning heart of thy true Miniſters, wiſhing and ſeeking to have them ſaved, whom thou haſt created, and bought with ſuch a price. Thou canſt make it enough, if it pleaſe thee to bleſſe with thy holy Spirit the remembrance of it to them that are ſliding to impatience.

Verſe 4.

5 Thus warned and thus armed, theſe two brethren, Moſes and Aaron, went unto Pharaoh, and did even as the Lord had commanded them: and Aaron caſteth forth his Rod before Pharaoh, & it was turned into a Serpent. The uſe of which miracle hath beene told before, even to ſtrike a feare into Pharaohs heart, that he might the better attend to what was ſpoken, and to give him aſſurance, that, though with eyes hee ſaw but the perſons of two men, neither glorious nor terrible in themſelves: yet, with them was the power and ſtrength of the Almighty God, whoſe hand could ſhiver him in pieces if he rebelled. So ſtandeth it with Gods Miniſters, that faithfully doe their duty to the flocks committed unto them: and it would be thought of, though the perſons of ſuch Meſſengers may be thought contemptible, yet he that ſent them will beare no contempt in the end.

Verſ. 10.

6 But Pharaoh by this miracle was made nothing better. Therefore evidently it appeareth, that albeit ſignes and miracles bee required of ſome men, to ſatisfie an itching humour to ſee newes, and under a pretence, that if they ſaw ſuch things, they would beleeve: yet indeed theſe meanes will not reforme them, but even more and more they become rebellious againſt the truth, as here was Pharaoh. Wherefore the Lord doth not yeeld to the fooliſh fancies of men in this behalfe, but anſwereth in the Goſpell to ſuch humours: This adulterous and crooked generation ſeeketh a ſigne, but none ſhall be given them more than the ſigne of Ionas the Prophet. The conſideration whereof ſhould make us wiſe, and to ceaſe from vaine ſpeeches, as, What ſigne ſhew they? what miracles worke they? with ſuch like: and to keepe in the knowne way, To the Law, and to the Teſtimony: that is, to the written Word of God, extant among us, confeſſed and acknowledged by both ſides: and if our doctrine and perſwaſions bee according to that, then are they aſſuredly right, then is there light in our doings, and the Sunne of true underſtanding ſhineth upon us. For the Word is truth, the Word is old and oldeſt, a Lanterne, a Rule, a Guide, a Teacher not to be excepted againſt ever. This way doth God chuſe, and try miracles by it, if you remember in the thirteenth of Deut. not admitting of all the wonders in the world, if they leade contrary to this: neither rejecting this, though there bee no daily wonders added to it, ſince (the doctrine being the ſame) the ſigns and wonders already done by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, mentioned in the Scriptures, abundantly ſerve. But how doth Pharaoh ſhift off this great ſigne, ſeeing he is not diſpoſed to yeeld to it? Surely, if you mark it, even in the very ſame ſort that ſome now adayes doe, who talking of Religion, and ſeeming as if they were willing to be reſolved, when they heare a reaſon which they cannot anſwer, in ſtead of yeelding, ſay, were ſuch and ſuch here they could anſwer you, &c. So playeth Pharaoh, hee thinketh of his Wiſe-men and learned men, whereof Ægypt had ſtore: and though he cannot tell himſelfe what to ſay to ſo manifeſt a Signe, yet he perſwadeth himſelfe they can: and ſend for them he will, to ſee what they can ſay, rather than yeeld to the work of God. They being come, as they were blind themſelves, mingling with good learning vaine errors of Magicke, incantation and invocation of ſpirits: ſo, in the juſt judgement of God, they became inſtruments of blindneſſe unto Pharaoh, to hold him ſtill in diſobedience and hardneſſe of heart, againſt the Lord and his true Meſſengers. A thing worthy marking, and due remembrance whileſt we live, to the end we may learn to affect truth better, and to give place to reaſon in our hearts and ſoules, when it is laid before us, without pinning our ſelves to other mens ſleeves: who erring themſelves in that which is ſought, though otherwiſe haply learned, and to bee liked, can never do any better office to us than theſe Enchanters did to Pharaoh; namely, ſtill & ſtill with their juglings make us ſtiffe and ſtubborne againſt our God, and againſt our good, till we periſh in hell, as Pharaoh did in the Red-Sea. S. Paul therefore rightly (naming two of theſe Enchanters) compareth all falſe whiſperers unto them, ſaying, And as Iannes and Iambres withſtood Moſes, ſo doe theſe alſo reſiſt the truth, men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they ſhall prevaile no longer, &c.

2 Tim. 3. 8.

Verſe 9. 22. 7 But how did theſe Enchanters keep Pharaoh in his blindneſſe? The Text ſaith, They did the like: and ſo abated the credit of Aarons miracle. Whereupon queſtion is made, whether in deed and truth they did the like, or onely in ſhew by deceiving the ſight? Anſwer is given by ſome, that if wee affirme God, in anger and judgement towards Pharaoh, to have changed the rods alſo of the Enchanters into true Serpents, there is no abſurdity, but other (much better) like to ſay, there was a deceiving of ſight, and whatſoever ſhew they made, it was but falſe and phantaſticall: Non fuiſſe veros dracones, ſed ſic apparuiſſe virtute damonis, ex aëris tranſmutatione: That they were not true Serpents, but ſo only ſeemed to be, by the power of the devill changing the Aire. This then eſpecially is to be noted, that falſe ſignes and wonders can bee done by Satan and his members, God ſo permitting: and therefore, that wee ſtand faſt in the truth, which wee have learned out of Gods Booke, and try miracles by truth, not truth by miracles, according to the Rule of God taught us in his Word. For were it never ſo ſtrange and admirable a thing, if the drift of it bee to leade from truth to error, the worke is taught, the worker is a deceiver. Antichriſt (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſhall be powerfull in lying ſignes and wonders. In regard of which admonition Saint Auguſtine ſaid, Contra mirabiliarios cautum me fecit Deus meus, &c. Againſt wonder-workers and miracle-mongers my God hath made me warie: fore-telling me, That in the latter dayes there ſhould be ſuch, which (if it were poſſible) ſhould deceive the very Elect. The Schoole-men ſay here, Moſes & Aaron fecerunt miraculum, Magi autem mirum, non miraculum: Moſes and Aaron did a miracle, but the Enchanters did a marvaile, no miracle: meaning, becauſe what they did was counterfeit. But I ſtand not upon it. It is further moſt worthy marking here, that Aaron his Rod devoured their Rods: for thereby we are notably taught the end of falſhod and error: at the laſt, Truth ſhall devour it in Gods good time: for, Magna eſt veritas, & prævalet: Great is truth, and prevaileth. If you continue in my word, ſaith our bleſſed Saviour, you ſhall know the truth, and the truth ſhall make you free. Yet Pharaoh could not ſee, but his heart was ſtill hardned: even as in our times wee know the fearefull blindneſſe of ſome, in the greateſt light that may be given them. A wiſe heart will note this earneſtly: and neither be moved to ſuch obſtinacy, nor ceaſe to feare the like judgement, if unthankfully Gods favour vouchſafed be paſſed over. Much doth God for either man, or place, when hee graciouſly giveth good Teachers: and where ſuch Enchanters as theſe are received and harkned unto, what can follow but Pharaohs hard heart to eternall woe? Beware, beware whilſt God giveth you time: To day if you will hear his voice, harden not your heart. How know you what judgement and wrath to morrow day may bring upon you? Truth may be oppreſſed for a time, God ſo pleaſing, either to puniſh or try the people: but finally ſuppreſſed it ſhall not be: God being ſtronger than all his enemies, and able to diſperſe all duskie clouds, bringing his glorious truth out, to beare ſway again at his good pleaſure. Simplex & nuda eſt, ſed efficax & magna. It is ſimple and naked, ſaith one, but powerfull and ſtrong. Splendet cum obſcuratur, & vincit cum opprimitur. It ſhineth even when it is darked, and overcommeth when it is oppreſſed.

Verſ. 17. &c. THeſe things ſo paſſed over, the holy Ghoſt commeth to ſhew the firſt of thoſe ten plagues, which the King and his people taſted of: namely, of the turning of their waters into bloud: whereby their fiſh dyed, and both man and beſt were perplexed. Of this plague there is a Denunciation, verſe 17, 18. &c. Secondly, an Execution. verſe 22, 23. Thirdly, an Event, which againe is threefold: Firſt, a Converſion of the waters into blood. Secondly, An Imitation of this miracle by the Inchanters, who did the like, verſe 25. And laſtly, an Encreaſe of hardneſſe in Pharaohs heart, when he had ſeene all this, verſe 25, 26. Concerning ſome profitable uſe of all which to our ſelves, thus may we meditate and think of them.

Verſe 15. 1 God telleth Moſes, that Pharaoh in the morning will come to the water, to wit, unto the River Nilus, and there he ſhould meet him. Whereby wee ſee the truth of the Pſalmiſt his ſpeech, O Lord thou haſt ſearched me out, and knowne me, thou knoweſt my downeſitting, and mine upriſing; yea, thou underſtandeſt my thoughts, and that long before, thou art about my bed, and about my pathes, and ſpyeſt out all my wayes. What care then ſhould wee have of our actions, when every ſtep of ours is thus knowne to God? He knoweth, you ſee, which way wee will walk in the morning, before ever we goe out of our houſes: and he knows all, to goe no further in this matter.

2 We ſee againe, how the Lord ſmiteth the waters here, that the Ægyptians might know, as alſo all the world beſides, how the Lord our God hath power over all his creatures, to give the uſe of them unto us, and to take the uſe of them from us at his good pleaſure. Interpreters upon this place ſay, Hanc plagam intulit Deus propter pueros Iudæorum in aquis immerſos, fluvius enim mutatus in ſanguinem conqueritur de cæde puerorũ per eos commiſſa. This plague God brought upon them for the children which were drowned, and the river thus turned into blood, complained to God for that ſlaughter, ſaith Theodoret. Origen & Auguſtine ſay it was pœna culpæ, the puniſhment of ſinne, meaning the drowning of the children. That which is added in the Text, And it ſhall grieve the Ægyptians to drinke, Auſtin ſaith of it thus, Bibentibus erat exitiũ, non bibentibus pœna, ob ſitim quam ſuſtinebant. Vnto them that dranke, it was death; unto them that dranke not, it was a great puniſhment for the thirſt they ſuſtained. Ioſephus in like ſort, Si bibebant, confeſtim acri dolore corripiebantur; & hoc forſan Textus innuit, cum dicit, affligentur Ægyptii. If they dranke, by and by they were taken with a bitter griefe: and this peradventure the Text meaneth, when it ſaith, It ſhall grieve the Ægyptians to drinke. Philo ſaith, hominum ſiti enectorum magnus numerus acervatim jacebat in triviis, non ſufficientibus domeſticis ad ſepulturæ officia. A great number of men dead with thirſt lay by heaps in the ſtreets and high-waies, their houſhold friends (or ſervants) being not enow to bury them. Such a plague was this turning of their waters into bloud.

3 Wee may further note an encreaſe of terror in this miracle, above the former of the Serpents. For as you plainely ſee, it was farre greater and more fearefull. And wee may thereby learne this good leſſon, that where milder means will not ſerve, God both can, & will add ſharper and heavier. The Serpents before were a faire warning; but yet becauſe they hurt no man, they profited few men. Now therefore he will touch them a little neerer, he will ſtrike the water, which neither man nor beaſt may want, and ſo ſee if their hearts will yeeld obedience to his will. Thus aſſuredly dealeth hee with men and women at this day, but (peradventure) it is not marked: Hee encreaſeth his croſſes, from goods to body, from body to minde, from our ſelves to our children, and ſtill maketh us abound with more want and woe, in greater and ſharper meaſure, that we may repent and turne, if we will be perſwaded: if not, in the end, he can make an end, and finally deſtroy us with miſery that ſhall never end. O that we may have then wiſe hearts, to obſerve the ſteps and degrees of Gods dealing with us, profiting by the leſſer, and ſo preventing the greater, to his good contentment, and our everlaſting comfort and ſafety! Nilus was a river wherein they much gloried, receiving by it great riches, and great defence: wherefore, to ſee this river turned into bloud ſo fearfully, might well have ſmitten their hearts, and made them humble themſelves to God; but nothing will humble ſome men: neither entred all this into Pharaohs heart: which hardneſſe is ever a fearfull ſigne, and to be prayed againſt. Marke it alſo, how, if we ſtoope not to God, but continue obſtinate, by degrees he will come to our neereſt and deereſt comforts. Thus, I hope, if you reade this Chapter over againe in your Bible, you ſee ſome meaſure of the uſe of it, which is the thing I ayme at, to encourage you to the reading of the Text: and then daily more and more reading, with godly prayers, and meditation, ſhall yeeld further uſe and profit in many things: the holy Scripture being as a deepe water, wherein the greateſt Lyon may ſwim, and the greateſt veſſell touch no bottome. Let this much therefore ſuffice of this Chapter.

CHAP. VIII.

In this Chapter are ſet downe three fearefull Plagues more.

The plague of Frogs.
The plague of Lice.
The plague of Flies.

1 WHereof to make uſe to our inſtruction and reformation, let us conſider this gracious Admonition in the firſt verſe, vouchſafed to Pharaoh again: Let my people goe that they may ſerve me. Can there any thing be ſweeter to the child of God, than to mark how ſlow the Lord is to puniſh, and how deſirous of amendment without puniſhment? O how may my ſoule aſſure it ſelfe of mercy, if penitentially I ſeeke it, where ſuch a nature is? Cannot hee endure to puniſh Pharaoh, a proud and haughty rebell againſt his Divine will? and will hee willingly ſmite my poore ſoule, your poore ſoule, or any poore ſoule, bruiſed and broken with the ſenſe of ſinne, and groaning, and ſighing for one drop of mercy at his hand? No, no, there is mercy with the Lord, and therefore ſhall he ever be feared: He is ſlow to anger, and of great kindneſſe. He will not alwaies chide, neither keep his anger for ever. He hath not dealt with us after our ſins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities. For as high as the Heaven is above the Earth, ſo great is his mercy toward them that feare him. As far as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, ſo far hath he removed our ſins from us. As a Father hath compaſſion on his children, ſo hath the Lord compaſſion on them that feare him. For he knoweth whereof we be made: he remembreth that we are but duſt. Therefore he admoniſheth, as we ſee in this place, againe and againe, before he will let his rod fall upon very Pharaoh. Who will not hearken then unto this ſweet Voice, and be admoniſhed by ſo loving a Father, ſo merciſull a God, and ſo powerfull a Creator? Surely if we ſmart, wee muſt needs approve his Juſtice, for his Mercy is manifeſt, wee cannot deny it. Yet, yet, ſaith this gracious God, goe to Pharaoh, and warne him againe, that he may be wiſe, and let my people goe.

Verſ. 1.

Pſal. 103. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14.

2 And if thou wilt not let them goe, ſaith the Lord, behold, I will ſmite thy Country with Frogs. Giving us herein again to obſerve, that if mercy be refuſed, he is alſo juſt, and the rod ſhall fall with ſtripe after ſtripe, till either wee cry penitently, Peccavi, I have ſinned, or be conſumed in his wrath, from the face of the earth. Remember that place of places in Deut. And if this people will riſe up and goe a whoring after the gods of a ſtrange Land, and will forſake me, and break my covenant which I have made with them; my wrath will waxe hot againſt them at that day, (O note) and I will forſake them, and will hide my face from them: then they ſhall be conſumed, and many adverſities and tribulations ſhall come upon them: ſo then they will ſay, Are not theſe troubles come upon me becauſe God is not with me? but I will ſurely hide my face, &c. A place never to be forgotten, if we deſire to feare God. Remember alſo among many moe the fit example of Haman, that proud enemy to Gods truth and people, to whom it was thus ſaid, If thou begin to fall, thou ſhalt ſurely fall. As if they ſhould ſay, fall upon fall, and ſtill more and more falling will follow, when God is once angry. Happy, happy then is the heart that feeleth, yeeldeth, turneth, and cleaveth faſt unto the Lord.

Deut. 31. 16, 17, 18.

Heſt. 6. 13.

3 Mark alſo, and conſider in this place, how the caſe is altered with Gods people, and their enemies. For till now we have heard but of the Iſraelites afflictions, how ſtill they ſuffered, and were ill intreated, having ſore burthens laid upon them, and moſt bitter griefes daily heaped unto their hearts. But now we ſee a change, they are ſpared, they are comforted, and they are defended, when theſe dreadfull plagues light upon their enemies one after another. So, ſo ſhall the ſorrowes of the godly be ever turned into joy, when the Lord ſeeth his time, and the fading comforts of the wicked turned into weeping, and wofull lamentation. Your ſorrow (ſaith our Saviour Chriſt) ſhall be turned into joy; and, woe be to them that laugh now, for they ſhall waile and weepe. Be of good comfort then in your ſelfe, when you reade this, and profit your heart with this Note of meditation. The changes of this world are many, but with Gods faithfull people it ſhall ever be well in the end.

Luke 6. 25.

4 It is further to be obſerved in this your Chapter, how the Lord with variety and vehemency of words doth amplifie this plague, not onely ſaying, He will ſend Frogges (which yet had beene fearfull) but that the rivers ſhould ſcrawle full of Frogges, that they ſhould goe up, and come into the Kings houſe, and into his bed-chamber where he ſlept, and upon his bed, and into the houſe of his ſervants, and upon his people, and into his ovens, and his kneading troughes, yea ſaith he, the Frogs ſhall climbe up unto thee, and on thy people, & upon all thy ſervants. The like vehemency doth he uſe in that notable Chapter, the 28. of Deuter. amplifying both ſides with many words, and great variety of phraſe, full of force & edge, all aſſuredly to move, and pierce, but it would not be. Thus dealeth hee at this day with his people, hee giveth unto them ſometimes Paſtors and Teachers, who rightly may be called Sons of Thunder, in regard of their earneſt and vehement exhortations, threatning and denouncing Gods wrath and judgements due to diſobedience and ſtubbornneſſe: and even as Pharaoh here could not be touched, no more will many at this day: no vehemency moveth, but all is one. If the fervent ſpirit of the Preacher ſhould breake and teare his inwards in pieces, all is one: men ſnort and ſleepe, and goe on in a moſt damnable dulneſſe of mind, till the Lord himſelfe ſtart up, and revenge his owne contempt upon them, and their poſterity. The old world would not beleeve the threatned Flood, neither the ſtubborne Jewes, that the Chaldean King ſhould come upon them. But when they cryed to their ſoules, pax, pax, peace, peace, (for all this earneſtneſſe of the Preacher) then came ſudden and fearfull deſtruction upon them as they deſerved. So ever, ſo ever let us be ſure, firſt or laſt. And therefore make uſe of vehemency, when God directeth his Preacher to it.

Verſ. 4.

Ier. 2;

5 But what an army is this againſt ſuch a Prince? Had God neither men, nor Angels to command? Yes, yes, it needeth no proofe: wee know both men and Angels commanded by him at his pleaſure. But here he would uſe neither, deeming it fit to confound the pride of ſuch a conceited King by an hoaſt of Frogges, rather than by either of the other. So ſhall the Lord by contemptible and baſe things, caſt downe our high lookes, if wee ſwell againſt him. Hee would alſo have Pharaoh hereby ſee how eaſily he could deſtroy him, if he liſt, when ſuch heaps of loathſome creatures, ſo ſuddenly could be raiſed to torment him. And the ſame hee would have all high minds at this day ſee, making uſe thereof unto humility, before they finde it is too too late. For as eaſily can the Lord now raiſe up ſtrange plagues as then: Varro writeth that a City in France was driven away with this very plague of Frogges. A towne in Theſſalica rooted up and overthrowne with moules. A whole land forced to remove with Mice, and many ſuch things have Stories left to our remembrance. There was a time, when the French diſeaſe was not ſo common, nor our Engliſh ſweat knowne. That plague of the Philiſtines with the Emerods in their hinder parts is in Gods Chronicle. That conſumption of Herod with Lice, and and that fearefull example of Antiochus, they ought both to be marked; but nothing ſhall profit, except grace be given from above. And therefore a feeling heart of fleſh, the Lord for his mercies ſake, ever grant unto us.

1 Sam. 5. 6. Acts 12. 23. 2 Mac. 9. 9.

6 And the Sorcerers did likewiſe with their Sorceries, and brought Frogges up upon the land of Ægypt. Out of which words, beſide that which hath beene noted before, this meditation may ariſe, how Gods adverſaries ſeeke often to oppugne the truth by the ſelfeſame meanes whereby he doth teach it. As, if Scripture be alledged, Satan will doe the like: if the true Prophets uſe a ſigne, then will Ziakia make him hornes too, and ſay, when went the ſpirit from me, to thee? All which God doth ſuffer, to draw us forward to true and ſound knowledge, without which wee cannot ſtand, but ſhall be ſhaken to and fro with doubts and feares, and wavering conceits, moſt unfit for beleevers. (The words of the Apoſtle calling upon us to bee ſtedfaſt, unmoveable, abounding alwayes in the worke of the Lord; Not to be carried about with every blaſt of vaine doctrine, but to continue grounded and ſtabliſhed in the faith, not moved away from the hope of the Goſpell, &c.) S. Peter in like manner admoniſheth to beware of being plucked away with the error of the wicked, and of falling from ſtedfaſtneſſe: noting thoſe that forſooke the right way, and followed the way of Balaam. Labour wee therefore to know how we ſtand, and building upon the Rock indeed, though ſuch jugling Sorcerers as theſe ariſe in the world, and apiſhly follow that courſe to ſubvert, which Gods Miniſters follow to ſtrengthen, yet they ſhall not ſhake us, but we patiently abiding a time, ſetled upon our true grounds, the falſhood ſhall appeare at laſt, and all their follies be diſcovered in the end, to the honour of God, the glory of his truth, the comfort of his Children, and the confuſion of ſuch Ægyptian Juglers for ever. Gamaliel could note it, that Theudas had his time, yet in the end fell with all his followers; That Iudas of Galilee had his time, and drew away much people after him; but at the laſt he periſhed, and the people were ſcattered. Let not Gamaliel be wiſer than we, to obſerve good things for his inſtruction.

7 Then Pharaoh called for Moſes and Aaron, and ſaid, pray ye unto the Lord, that bee may take away the Frogges from mee, and from my people, and I will let the people goe, &c. Why doth hee not make his Wiſemen take them away, his inchanters and Sorcerers, that could ſet a ſhew of making the like: Could they cauſe Frogges to come, and not goe? Or, why doth he not call to his gods and Idols to helpe him to take them away? Can none helpe him but Moſes and Aaron, by praying for him? See then how the Lord (when hee pleaſeth) is able to force the wicked to the acknowledgement of him, and his true Miniſters; and let it comfort us in the middeſt of all contempts, either of our God, of our Faith and Religion, or of our perſons. He can bring them downe that looke ſo coy, by touches of body, pinches in minde, loſſes in goods, and infinite wayes. And if therefore it pleaſe him a while to endure their pride, we alſo muſt endure it, and not grieve at it. Theſe examples muſt be ready in our mindes ever, when wee ſee ſuch things. Not long ſince this proud Pharaoh ſaid, WHO IS THE LORD? But now he ſeeth, and muſt confeſſe, that there is no helpe but in the Lord. His gods are weake, and the Frogges crawled in deſpight of them. Moſes therefore muſt pray to his God to helpe and take them away. And who now, but Moſes and Aaron, with Pharaoh? Ah wee deſpiſed Miniſters by the proud worldlings! let us marke it, and beare their contempts. In their extremity they ſhall acknowledge our callings, juſtifie our love, and wiſh our prayers: they ſhall ſtoupe, they ſhall ſtoupe, when our God pleaſeth, and it is enough. Remember that great Nebuchadnezzar, how the Lord ſtouped him, till he ſhould know, that the Lord ruleth: Pray, pray for us (O Samuel) ſaid the ſtubborne Iſraelites (when God would,) and ſo they came to him, whom they erſt neglected. Men and brethren what ſhall we doe? ſaid they, being touched, that before thought much to be adviſed by ſuch men. Ieroboam ſendeth to the Prophet, whoſe doctrine he would not follow, and no worſe a meſſenger, than his owne wife, and in his heart hee acknowledgeth that truth is with him. The great Turke in theſe dayes will ſeeke the prayers of Chriſtian men, when yet he fighteth againſt the truth that they embrace. And many (which at other times regard them not) either going to Sea, or to battaile, or being ſicke, and vexed at home, will ſend, and ſeeke for the prayers, and comfort of Gods Miniſters. And what is this, but a ſigne of Gods Omnipotent hand over all Pharaohs whatſoever, and that hee can revenge our contempts, and give our truth, and carefull walking in our places, a due regard and reverence, when hee will, with them, and in them? Let the ſweetneſſe of it joy us, and make us poſſeſſe our ſoules in patience. Dives, that rich glutton, ſhall ſee Lazarus right, and himſelfe wrong, one day.

8 But

8 But why doth Pharaoh now call, rather than in the former plague, for Moſes and Aaron to pray? Surely becauſe this plague more nipped him than the former. For when the rivers were blood, he might have wine to drinke, and by that meanes not finde the ſmart ſo much. See wee then, howbeit other mens harmes ſhould affect us, yet unleſſe the Lord touch our ſelves, we are dull, and dead without ſenſe. Which certainly maketh God reach us a blow many times, when otherwiſe hee would ſpare us, did wee make good uſe of our brethrens harmes. Apply therefore ever to your ſelfe Gods doings, ſaying in your heart, and why, Lord, am I not ſo alſo? Doe not I alſo offend thee? Father of Heaven, and God of all mercy, make me wiſe by other mens harmes, and thankfull unto thee, that I am ſo ſchooled, rather than with mine owne woe.

9 See how ready Moſes is to pray for Pharaoh, when hee biddeth him to appoint the time himſelfe of his prayer: and let it make us thinke with our ſelves, whether wee bee thus hearted, to pray readily and willingly, for Prince, for Countrey, for friends, and family: yea, let it open unto us, what I feare is too true, that in our lives ſcarce once wee have beene upon our knees, for any of theſe, but even goe on in a common courſe, haling and pulling with the world all the week long, and on the Holy day goe to Church, rather for faſhion, than devotion, praying with lips, not with heart, a few words, and then ſpending all the reſt of the time, either in ſleeping, or gazing, or thinking of matters little belonging to God. O that we may profit by this readineſſe in Moſes, to pray for ſuch a wicked King! Remember the Scriptures, where you ſee how fathers and mothers have gone to Chriſt for their Children, maſters for their ſervants, and neighbours for their friends: Chriſt is the ſame, and why ſhould not wee alſo bee the ſame, and Morning and Evening goe unto God for our ſelves, and ours, as here did Moſes for Pharaoh?

10 It may be moved for a queſtion, why Pharaoh being offered to appoint the time himſelfe, appointed the next day, ſaying, To morrow, rather than preſently, the Frogges being ſo ugly, and no place free from them, no not the Kings Chamber: Who would not have cryed now, now, even forthwith, pray that I may be delivered from this plague, rather than to have ſtayed till the next day? It is anſwered, firſt, that hee ſtill doubted, whether it was the finger of GOD, or an enchantment: and therefore was content to deferre the time, to try whether of it ſelfe it would paſſe away, and ſo diſcredit Moſes and Aaron. Such hollow holes are in Hypocrites hearts, when they ſeeme religious, and carefull of Prayer, or other good things. Secondly, herein he ſhewed the nature of the wicked, who not onely deferre their owne duties from day to day, but (as much as they can) put over others alſo, that offer good things unto them: As for example, if a Preacher tender his ſervice this Sabbath, hee is told, the next will be farre more fit: and if he come alſo the next Sabbath, then is either the Maſter from home, the Gentlewoman ſicke, the weather too hot, or too cold, or ſome ſuch thing; that be Moſes never ſo ready, yet Pharaoh is not ready, but cras, cras, to morrow, to morrow, is ſtill the ſong, till the Lord ſtrike, and all Morrowes end, we paſſing away to woe without end, for our deferring. That Moſes taketh his owne time, and ſaith, Be it as thou haſt ſaid, it is to teach him, that at all times the Lord is the Lord, his miracles no enchantments, but a powerfull working for his owne Glory, and the gracious deliverance of his Church.

Verſe 12. 11 Then Moſes and Aaron went out from Pharaoh, and Moſes cryed unto the Lord concerning the Frogges which he had ſent unto Pharaoh. Why went Moſes forth? might not hee have ſtayed in the Court, and have prayed there? God forbid but wee ſhould thinke Courts to bee places of prayer, for ſuch as have a conſcience, in every place to lift up hands and heart to God, yet, would God alſo, the hindrances and impediments ſo to doe in thoſe places, were fewer! Surely, great Courtiers have found, that a meaner place hath yeelded their hearts more heate to good things, than thoſe gliſtering places have, as ſometimes a countrey-houſe, and ſomtimes a darke hole in a cloſe priſon. Moſes cryed unto the Lord, ſaith the Text, and prayer doth what neither doores, nor lockes, nor any ſtrength, or wit of man could doe: the weapons of Gods children are ſuch, and ſo mighty. The word of Crying noteth the vehemency of Moſes prayer, againſt cold formality, too common in moſt prayers. It noteth not any loudneſſe of voyce (although that alſo bee lawfull at times) ſince the ſame Moſes is ſaid to cry in another place, when he ſpake not a word, but from his inward Spirit. Ezechias thus cryed unto God, and eſcaped, both a mortall diſeaſe, and the huge hoaſt of the Aſſyrians. But what prayer can do, I hope you know, and therefore goe no further.

Exod. 14. 15.

Verſe 13. 12 And the Lord did according to the ſaying of Moſes: ſo the Froggs dyed, &c. See the credit that Gods ſervants have with their mercifull God: they aske, and hee giveth without any ſtop. Can you thinke, God heareth Moſes alone? no, ſaith the Pſalme, God is neare unto all that call upon him; yea, to all, all, and ever remember it. He will fulfill the deſire of all them that fear him: he will heare their cry, and will ſave them. The Lord preſerveth all them that love him: but he will deſtroy all the ungodly. Wherefore, my mouth ſhall ſpeake the praiſe of the Lord, and all fleſh ſhall bleſſe his holy Name for ever and ever. Daily experience ſheweth the like, and therefore as

Moſes

Moſes here (even deſpiſed Moſes) was ſtronger with God, and by his God, than all Ægypt, to remove a plague, ſo ſhall we ever be more ſtrong than our enemies in what God ſhall ſee us fit to be enabled. Wherefore one Moſes is better for a Kingdome, than many others, that are judged to be of greater vertue, &c.

13 So the Frogges dyed in the houſes, in the townes, and in the fields. And they gathered them together on heapes, and the Land ſtanke of them, ſaith the Text. Had it not beene as eaſie for the Lord to have taken them quite away? aſſuredly to the Lord all was one: but this was done, to ſhew the truth of the miracle that they were frogges indeed, and no enchantments; thereby to meet with the unbeliefe of the King and all his Courtiers, who either openly in words, or ſecretly in heart thought otherwiſe. And by one meanes or other, the Lord ſhall ever in his good time deliver his truth from falſe ſurmiſes, his faithfull Miniſters from falſe imputations, and write the wickedneſſe of Atheiſts and carnall men upon their faces, to their confuſion. Onely be we patient to tarry his will, to like of his way, and be we aſſured we ſhall both ſee his glory and receive comfort. Verſ. 13, 14.

14 But when Pharaoh ſaw that he had reſt given him, he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto them, as the Lord had ſaid. See the corruption of our nature, if God worke not. No ſooner is the rod off, but as the Dog to his vomit, and the Sow to her mire, ſo wretched man returneth to his old bias, and falleth to his former ſinne againe. When we are ſicke or diſtreſſed any way, we pretend repentance, we pray, we cry, we vow, and what not (in ſhew?) But for as much as all ariſeth from feare, and not from love, it vaniſheth againe, as ſoone as the feare is paſt, and the devill returneth with ſeven worſe than himſelf, making our end more odious than ever our beginning was. This hath beene touched before, but yet ever marke it and feare it your ſelfe, as you have a care to pleaſe God. For if you forſake God, you can never blame God if he forſake you: and if, after God hath given you reſt, you become wretchleſſe, as Pharaoh was here: then if, as he in the Sea, ſo you in eternall Woe be drowned for ever, you have your deſert, and God is juſt. Verſ. 15.

15 The Frogge is (as we all know) as foule and filthy creature, abiding in foule places, as bogges and miery plaſhes all the day long, and at night peeping out with the head above the water, making a hatefull noyſe with many others of his ſort, till the day appeare againe. Wherefore Divines have thought, that by theſe foule creatures fitly might be reſembled ſuch crooking Crues, as hiding themſelves all the day in an Ale denne, or ſuch like place of uncleanneſſe, as ſoone as night commeth, put out their heads, and make a hatefull noyſe againſt Governours and Superiours, neighbours and honeſt perſons, till all that heare them bee weary of them. Which filthy Frogges the Lord aſſuredly will deale withall in his good time, as here hee did with theſe Ægyptian frogges; namely, kill them, deſtroy them, and make the ſtench of them knowne to many. Till then let patience and righteous dealing bee the armour of the godly: and withall, how many of ſuch ugly creatures this world hath, let it bee conſidered, that thereupon may ariſe this fruitfull meditation, how little cauſe good men and women have to be in love with this world, to build tabernacles in it, and to ſay and thinke, It is good being here; but rather to ſigh, and wiſh to be looſed, and to live there, where the Elect of God, having the harps of God, ſing the ſong of Moſes, where they cry Hallelu-jah, ſalvation, and glory, and honour, and power bee to the Lord, &c. O difference of places, if we had eyes, or heads, or hearts! God, God for his Chriſts ſake give us feeling, Amen. Apoc. 15. 2, 3. Apoc. 19. 1.

The third Plague of Lice.

THis is the third Plague which the Lord by his mighty power brought upon this hard hearted King and his people, ſeeking thereby their good, but prevailed not. In which alſo (for our inſtruction) we may obſerve divers things: As firſt, why the Lord did not bring againe upon them his former plagues either of Frogges or Bloody water, letting them reſt upon them till they were ſtouped; but ſtill bringeth new, and others than the former? Whereunto wee may anſwer, that the Lord did thus, to ſhew that his power was not tyed to any one thing, but by infinite wayes able to puniſh ſinners, if they will be ſtubborn, and more and more ſo to feare them, and by them us to the worlds end: which happy we, if it doe to amendment, that his many, and ſtrange, and dreadfull plagues, may be ever and ever farre from us. Verſ. 16, 17.

2 Wee may note that as eaſie it had beene for the Lord to have turned the duſt into Lyons, and Beares, and Wolves, both of ſtrange greatneſſe, and cruell fierceneſſe; but that rather hee choſe to confound pride by weakeneſſe, and a rebelling humour by ſo baſe a creature, as at other times often he uſed to doe. And more it fretteth a high minde, as you may note in Abimelech, who ſought of his ſervant to ſlay him, rather than it ſhould be ſaid, that a woman had overcome him. In us let it worke thus much, that if ſuch a vile creature may (by God) be made too ſtrong for a kingdome, what reſiſtance can I one man, or one woman, make againſt the Lords wrath, if I pull it upon me by my ſinnes, by my proud, haughty, and careleſſe heart? His wrath can Iudg. 9. 54.

arme all the creatures in Heaven and earth againſt mee: and yet the leaſt of them is thus farre above my power, as you ſee here. Wicked are the words of ſome prophane mouthes at times, ſaying, Let us have our will now, and we will ſhift then. O vaine heart! what ſhift can it thinke of againſt ſuch a God? Shake and tremble at this dulneſſe betimes, leſt the plague of it ſhiver thee in peeces for evermore. The water cruſheth Pharaoh and all his people in the Kingdome: the earth now alſo ſendeth vermine upon him, and he cannot ſhift againſt ſuch a vile and contemptible creature. Follow this meditation in your minde, and let it profit you: for before the face of his wrath who can ſtand?

Nahum 1. 6.

Verſe 18. 3 Now the Enchanters aſſayed likewiſe with their Enchantments to bring forth Lice, but they could not. Powerfull then is the Devill when God will ſuffer him; but when God will reſtraine him, what can he doe? Adde this to the ſtory of Iob, to the ſtory of the heard of Swine in the Goſpell, and ſuch other places: and grow wee in comfort againſt this deadly foe of ours. For we ſee his weakneſſe, and the bridling hand of God at all times over him, when God pleaſeth. Feare God, and feare not Satan; but contemne God, and then ſhake to thinke of Satans fierce rage, when once he hath leave given to torment thee.

4 Behold againe a good thing: before the Enchanters did the like, but here now they cannot for their lives. As then a time there is of tryall betwixt contrary opinions, and croſſing miracles, that they which are of God may bee knowne: ſo is there a time, even a joyfull happy time, when the Lord will cut off that difference and miſ-maze, that doubting, that jugling, and deceitfull working, and give his truth victory over all enchantments: Iannes and Iambres withſtood Moſes, ſaith the Apoſtle, and ſo did ſome then, & yet now with us, reſiſt the truth: Men of corrupt mindes, and reprobate, concerning the Faith. But Moſes had victory over thoſe of his time: and the Apoſtle ſaith, the other of his time ſhall no longer prevaile, their madneſſe being manifeſt to all men: therefore for them of our time, wee may not doubt of like ſucceſſe againſt them: onely let us have patience (as I often ſay) till the time come. Wayes can he never want to overthrow them, when in ſuch weake creatures as theſe were, he is ſo ſtrong. A ſilly ſimple man in the famous Councell of Nice, without Logicke or Rhetoricke, or any helpe of the Arts, gave that vaunting Philoſopher an overthrow; and gained him from his vanity unto God: the ſtory is knowne, and I paſſe it over. In our times women and children have foiled Doctors, that even out of Babes and ſucklings mouthes, the praiſe of God might be ordained. In ſome thing or other ſhall falſhood ſtill faile, that ſuch as have eyes may ſee the truth. Amplifie it further as you ſhall pleaſe, for (God be thanked) there be many proofes.

2 Tim. 3. 8.

Verſe 19. 5 Then ſaid the Enchanters to Pharaoh, This is the Finger of God. Wherein obſerve, how the wicked, who for a time may ſhew, as though God were on their ſide, in Gods good time ſhall be forced to acknowledge the contrary, to his glory and the great comfort of his Church and children. For what are theſe words other in ſenſe, than (as if they ſhould have ſaid) wee have hitherto deluded the eyes and ſenſes of the beholders by our enchantments; but now wee are no more able to doe ſo? This which is now done paſſeth our skill, and albeit the creature bee vile and baſe, yet is the power of God ſuch over us and our Art, that wee cannot doe the like, but give him the victory, and acknowledge our ſelves ſinfull, weake, and wicked men? Thus were Nabuchadnezzar in Daniel, and Antiochus in the Machabees, drawne to confeſſe Gods power over them, and all their greatneſſe. Which certainly is an unſpeakable comfort to all that depend upon him in their troubles. For what can any man doe againſt you, againſt mee, or any other, more than this God, (ſo potent and puiſſant) will give him leave to doe? and what leave will he give him more, than in the end ſhall turne to our good, for whom he hath not ſpared to give his deareſt Sonne to death, that ever we might be aſſured of him?

Dan 2 3.
2 Mac. 9.

6 Yet Pharaohs heart, ſaith the Text, remained ſtill obſtinate, and hee hearkned not unto them, &c. So laying before us a notable example of the rooted wickedneſſe in mans heart, being left of God unto it ſelfe. For as now you ſee not his owne Enchanters move him any thing at all, though they acknowledge before him the power of God. It maketh me thinke of ſome men in our dayes, who by no meanes can be wonne to the truth, no not by their owne men, (who ſometimes have erred, as now they doe, but in the mercy of God have received light) both ſpeaking and writing what ſhould profit others. This is a fearefull hardneſſe to be prayed againſt by all that have a care of their owne ſalvation.

The fourth Plague of Flies.

Verſe 24. THeſe things thus paſſed over, the Lord haſteth to another plague, ſeeing the former could not move: and as Pharaohs malice encreaſed, ſo ſharper and ſharper is the Lords hand. For now commeth a plague moſt bitter to him and all his: even ſwarmes of very noiſome creatures, Flies, Waſpes, Hornets, Canker-wormes, Locuſts, Scorpions, and ſuch like: ſo that now moſt fearefully they were vexed in every place. Divines meditating upon this plague, have reſembled it unto thoſe cares and thoughts wherewith worldly men are uſually vexed vexed: for as the Flies did never ſuffer the Ægyptians to ſleepe or take any reſt, ſo doe theſe cares torment all day and night. Others have reſembled thoſe bitings and touchings of conſcience, which men ſo grievouſly often feele, to theſe Flies; becauſe as in the one, ſo in the other, the griefe is greater than can be expreſſed. Againe, becauſe as theſe Flies were a puniſhment, fore-running the deliverance of Gods people: ſo theſe agonies of minde going before, great and heavenly comfort doth uſually follow. A thing worthy of remembrance to troubled minds, and full of contentment, if they will hold faſt by him, that is alwayes mercifull, and calleth unto him all that travell and are heavy laden. Others conſidering the nature of theſe Flies, have compared Tyrants and oppreſſors of their weaker brethren unto them. For as theſe Flies ſucked out the Ægyptians blood with biting and ſtinging, and cauſing of ſmart: ſo doe ſuch evill men, till they have gorged themſelves with ſinfull ſpoiles of their Chriſtian brethren. There be great Flies, and thoſe be great men, that tyrannouſly rule, not ſhearing, but ſhaving to the very skinne, if they take not skinne and all. There bee leſſer Flies, and thoſe be Vſurers, and other biting binders, who with their Noverint Vniverſi, make an univerſall ruine of many a mans eſtate, and doe fetch him in ſtill with the Condition of the Obligation, that in the end his condition is wofull, and his heart breaketh with the bitter griefe of Be it knowne unto all men. Surely theſe are curſed Flies indeed, the ſuckers of our ſap, the bibbers of our blood, the pinchers of our hearts, and the ſtingers and wringers of our very ſoules. The Ægyptian Flie was nothing like unto them, but yet you ſee was a great plague of God ſent to puniſh the ſinne of men. But let them remember that theſe Flies of Ægypt had but a time: God ſent them in wrath, and tooke them away in mercy, upon entreaty. Some Moſes or other ſhall ſtand up, and the Lord ſhall ſend a ſtrong Weſt winde to take theſe Canker-worms away, and caſt them into the red ſea, that in our coaſt they may torment no longer. Philo the Jew in the life of Moſes ſaith, That becauſe the Ægyptians did (as it were) ſting the Iſraelites with many biting and bitter words, ſcoffes and ſcornes, taunts and jeſts; therefore the Lord ſent theſe Flies and Hornets among them, that one might bee puniſhed with another. And moſt certaine it is, that ſuch Stingers ſhall bee puniſhed, as God ſhall thinke good, in his due time.

2 Theſe Flies were not in the Land of Goſhen, and that (ſaith the Text) becauſe God made a ſeparation. Wherin we profitably learne, that whenſoever wee are free from any calamity or griefe which happeneth to others, it is not by our owne vertue or policy, but by that gracious ſeparation which the Lord maketh: whoſe mercy and love, that we might more fully ſee, he ſaveth us from that evill. Wherein how may we runne into particulars, ſince we were borne and had dealing in the world? Others ſickly, we healthy: others want, wee have ſufficient: others in continuall paine and labour, we in reſt, and eaſe, and comfort: others in priſon, we at liberty: others in blindneſſe, we in light: others ſlandered, wee not touched: others croſſed in their children and friends, wee comforted: others wake, we ſleepe: others weepe, we ſing: and, which is the top and height of all miſery, others are ſo tempted that they violently caſt themſelves away, when we in the meane time feele no temptation. O bleſſed God, what a ſeparation is this! Let us ever thinke of it, and be thankfull for it. Verſe 22, 23.

3 When Pharaoh and his people were vexed with this plague, Moſes and Aaron, according to his former manner were called for, and licence given them to goe and doe ſacrifice, but with limitation (in this land,) and when that would not ſatisfie Moſes, (for the reaſons mentioned in the twenty ſix verſe) then it is enlarged to the Wilderneſſe alſo, but yet againe limited, (Goe not farre away.) Where we are to marke the faſhion, not onely of worldly Princes, but of worldly and earthly minded men, how they can upon urgent neceſſity, bee content to tolerate religion, ſo it might ſtill be joyned with their profit: but if it bee once contrary to that, O how bitter then, how hard then to endure it, and give it free and loving paſſage! For theſe Jewes wholly to depart from Ægypt, was not for Pharaohs profit (for from their labours he had great gaine) and therefore by no meanes may they goe out of his Land to ſacrifice to their God, but in the land hee is content to endure them, ſo he may be freed from theſe plagues, that ſo fearfully God ſent upon his people. Or if it needs muſt be that they muſt goe forth of the Land, yet not farre away in any caſe. Thus was hee, thus are many at this day, and to the worlds end theſe wretches will not want, who have their gaine for their god, and no other Religion will ever like, than what may ſtand with the ſame, as much as poſſibly they can procure. Let us ſee it, and marke it, and hate it: for it is not that which can pleaſe God. If we be riſen with Chriſt, wee muſt ſeeke the things that are above: and if we love any thing more than him, we never can enjoy him. His Kingdome is not of this world; and if our joy and glory be in it, wee are not his followers. Love not this world, ſaith Saint Iohn, neither any thing in this world. For if the love of the world be in us, the love of God is not in us. That builder of great barnes for his large commings in, was but a foole in his eyes, who onely is wiſe: and when his ſoule was taken away, whoſe were all his toyles and travels? That purple pampered Glutton went to the Devill, and with all his worldly wealth could not procure one drop of water to coole his ſcalded tongue. The gaine of gold makes many loſe their ſoules. The greedy wretch that for himſelfe ſtill ſpares, doth hoord hoord up nothing but continuall cares. Hermocrates lying at the point of death, bequeathed his goods to none but himselfe. The fire burneth fiercer the more it hath, and so the worlds wormes. The Bees doe flocke to the honey dew, and so these wretches unto gaine. The greatest fish devoure the smaller frie, and so these wretches their weaker brethren. In a word, as you never see the Sea without waves, so shall you never see these wretches without woes. And as the clouds doe hide the Sunnes light, so their greedy hearts repell Gods grace. But let this suffice touching some use of this Chapter.

CHAP. IX.

The chiefe heads of this Chapter are these three plague more.

The { Fift. / Sixt. / Seventh. } Plague.

WHereof that we may make like use as before, let us first note from whence any murren of cattell doth come, when we are that way punished in a Countrey; surely even from the Lord, as we see here. Not simply from Witches and Sorcerers, set on by malicious neighbours, as we usually thinke: for what can a whole legion of Devils doe unto one swine, without leave granted from the Lord? you know the place, and it ought to be thought upon. God sometime tryeth by this affliction, and so did hee Iob. God sometimes punisheth by his affliction: and so teach the Scriptures, Cursed shall be the encrease of thy kine, and the flocke of thy sheepe. The beasts and birds are consumed for their sin that dwell in the Land. Every way then it is the Lord, and every way therefore we ought to seeke the Lord, and not to Witches and Sorcerers.

All the Cattell dyed communiter, non universaliter.

2 But still the Lord spareth the Israelites. True, and see the use of it. First, God in his justice this way more tormenteth the mindes of the wicked, who (for their rebellion against him) deserve all punishment: so saith the Psalme, The wicked shall see this, and consume away. Secondly, the Lord assureth his Chosen in all the world, that albeit in lesser matters hee tryeth them, or chastiseth them as hee doth others; yet when his great plagues come of judgement unto death & destruction eternall, he will surely make a separation to the unspeakable comfort of his own, and to the eternall praise of his mercy. The words of the Prophet are plaine: For a little while have I forsaken thee, but with everlasting mercy have I had compassion on thee, saith the Lord, thy Redeemer. Againe in the Psalme, If his wrath be kindled but a little, blessed are they that put their trust in him. Meaning because there is ever (as I say) a partition betwixt the Lords wrath and his chosen. Good therefore is that prayer of David, ever to bee in our minde, whersoever wee are: O knit my heart unto thee, Lord, that I may feare thy name, that I may ever cleave unto thee, ever be thine, and never be drawne away from thee by any temptation whatsoever.

Verse 5.

3 And the Lord appointed a time, saying, To morrow the Lord shall finish this thing in this Land; So that not onely the Judgement, and affliction which happeneth, is of the Lord; but the very time also when it shall begin, and when it shall end: before which time, no malice of man or Devill can bring it, no power of any creature can take it away. Tempus præfixit, ut non casu factum putent: & ut certitudinem Divinæ virtutis ostenderet, cui nemo potest resistere: He appointed the time, saith Theodoret, that they might not thinke these things came by chance: likewise to shew the certainty of Gods power, which no creature can resist. Againe, the truth of his comminations and threatnings you see here, when it is said, So the Lord did this thing on the morrow, and all the Cattell of Ægypt dyed: but of the Cattell of the Children of Israel dyed not one. Learne therefore to tremble when the Lord threatneth, and to feare the event: for as here, so ever he will bee true, unlesse hearty repentance step in betwixt, and turne away his wrath from us.

Theodoret. q. 22. in Exod.

Verse 6.

Verse 7.

4 Then Pharaoh sent to see, and found all as hath beene said: yet, saith the Text, the heart of Pharaoh was obstinate, and he did not let the people goe. Marke it well, and thinke with your selfe whether any Preacher or Teacher can bee plainer in words, than God was here by workes: or whether any man can ever bee made to see a truth by teaching more evidently and manifestly, than Pharaoh here saw the hand of God smiting Ægypt and sparing Israel? yet though God bee the Teacher himselfe, and the matter subject to his eyes without denyall, Pharaoh still is obstinate, still the same, still a striver against God and his grace. How then doe we wonder, that where the Word is preached, truth soundly and plainly taught, yet all be not reformed, and reclaimed from their errors? Is there any fault in the Word or Teacher? are not things plaine? how then commeth this to passe? but even as here it did, from the fearefull wrath of God, hardning such hearts, and closing such eyes, that they neither can see, feele, nor understand to salvation? All because thee have not a love to the truth, but are Hypocrites, scorners, deriders, and such as heare onely for fashion, thinking themselves abundantly skilfull, when indeed they are most ignorant,

ignorant, and when as they may ſee the Lord (by his Prophet) affirming that he will looke unto none but ſuch as are poore, of a contrite ſpirit, and tremble at his words: That is, humble in their owne eyes, receiving the Word with reverence, hungring and thirſting after the ſame, as the Spirituall food of their ſoules, and ſaying in their hearts as Samuel did, Speake on, Lord, thy ſervant heareth. Surely neither true matter nor plaine manner will ſerve, unleſſe God ſtrike a holy ſtroke within us, by his powerfull Spirit, that wee may be moved. Therefore as it is a bleſſing to have truth told us, ſo is it a double bleſſing to have a ſoft heart given us, moved and yeelding to the truth. Otherwiſe, as you ſee in the Smiths ſhop, as many hard blowes laid upon his Anvile as upon the Iron he worketh, and yet the Anvile remaineth all one, and the Iron turneth to the Smiths deſire, becauſe in the one there is heat, and in the other none: So in the ſame Auditory, as many proofes and reaſons are laid open to one as to another, and yet one moved, and not another. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Non verbis hominis fit ut intelligatur verbum Dei, facit Deus ut intelligatis: The words of man cannot make man underſtand Gods word, but it is God that maketh them to underſtand. Joy therefore in the Lords mercy towards you, when you have feeling: know that it is a grace not given to all: you ſee Pharaoh here, and ſuch hath the world many, whom no preaching can reforme, &c.

Eſay 66.2.

5 Verſ. 8. unto the 13. you ſee the ſixt plague of Ægypt, even a foule ſcab breaking out into bliſters upon man and beaſt. Whereof Ioſephus ſaith, no ſmall number dyed: yet could not this move them to ſee the hand of God. Such ugly ſores and maladies our age alſo hath, and as farre from leading to true repentance, as theſe here. That grievous diſeaſe began in Spaine, but afterward crept into France, and there ſo abounded, as ever ſince it hath carried the name of that Country, and not of Spaine. Be it that by divers meanes it may happen; as by a cup, a combe, a ſtoole, and ſuch like, ſo that every one is not guilty of lewd life who haply is ſpotted with it; yet which way ſoever it commeth, the Lord toucheth, and it is ever good to ſee his hand diſtinguiſhed from other cauſes, and fall downe before him, in humble acknowledgement of our ſin, making our peace by true ſubmiſſion, and beſeeching him either to remove ſuch puniſhment from us, or to ſeal up our hearts in the aſſurance of his love, notwithſtanding all earthly tryalls. Let us alſo in this place marke how the Sorcerers were ſmiten with this plague, ſo that they could not ſtand before Moſes. They had ſeene many things before to make them give place, the devouring of their rods, their inability to make that baſe vermine (ſpoken of before) yea, their owne mouthes then ſaid, it is Gods finger: yet they will not give over their gaine-ſaying, and croſſing of Gods Miniſters, till the plague of God light upon their owne perſons, in theſe ugly ſores, which ſurely is a very effectuall warning to all Rebellers againſt good things, that they give over betimes, and yeeld to God, ſo avoiding his wrathfull ſtripes, either upon themſelves or their goods. God is the ſame, as juſt as ever, as ſtrong as ever: and will fleſh and bloud provoke him? A better courſe ſhall be our wiſdome.

Verſe 8. The 6. plague. Verſe 9. 2 Antiq. c. 13.

6 This ſeventh plague now following, verſ. thirteenth, hath alſo his Denunciation, his Execution, and his Effect. Which in order obſerved will yeeld us ſundry meditations. And firſt, the Denunciation will more and more beate into us the wonderfull hardneſſe of Pharaoh and his people, who neither by any, nor all the Plagues before mentioned, of Blond, of Frogges, of Lice, of Flies, of Moraine, of Boteh, could be moved and turned to the obedience due from man to God. Can we wonder at wayward creatures in our times, when wee ſee this? No, no, the heart of man and woman is a moſt wonderfull perverſe thing when God worketh not; and theſe often repetitions are made by Gods Spirit, that wee ſhould mark it, know it, and continually pray againſt it.

The 7. plague.

7 You ſee God willeth Moſes to riſe up early in the morning, and ſtand before Pharaoh. Let the uſe of it be to teach with what diligence and care God would ever have his buſineſſe, how hee hateth negligence, and looſe ſlubbering over what belongeth to our charge, ſaying in plaine termes, Curſed be he that doth the work of the Lord negligently. Miniſters then foraſmuch as their calling is to doe the work of God, and to ſtand before Pharaoh; they muſt be diligent, zealous, carefull, and painfull, doing what lieth in them ever. Magiſtrates alſo muſt doe the like, for they execute not the judgements of man, but of the Lord: and he will be with them in the cauſe and judgement. For there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, neither reſpect of perſons, nor receiving of reward. Parents and maſters doe the work of God, and therefore they muſt be diligent, calling upon their children and families, with bleſſed Abraham to fear the Lord. There be alſo in Pariſhes Church-officers, Sworne-men, with ſuch like: who for their yeare have Gods worke in hand, and therefore they ſhould have a great conſcience to doe their duties diligently, for feare of the curſe above mentioned. But ſurely their groſſe dulneſſe cryeth for great vengeance, and I pray God it reach not to their poſterity alſo, and to all that they have gathered together for them. For ſo good offices, to ſo good uſe both of the Church and Common-wealth, cannot bee ſo wilfully and wittingly, ſo careleſſely and preſumptuouſly neglected as they are, but it will ſmart one day. When thou ſeeſt a theefe, ſaith God in the Pſalme, thou runneſt with him, and thou art a partaker with the Adulterers. When thou ſeeſt a theefe, that is, an evill doer any way, thou conſenteſt

Verſe 14. 8 Obſerve againe the word All in the 14. verſe, when God ſaith, I will at this time ſend all my plagues upon thine heart, meaning many ſundry and ſeverall plagues: for God did not bring All (according to the Letter) divers others following after, as the 8.9.10. Plague. The uſe of this, that we conſider the perill of rebellious obſtinacy againſt God: For firſt hee will puniſh it with one rod, then with another, (haply) with a third: and if theſe ſingle chaſtiſements will not ſerve then will hee goe to many plagues, heaping wrath upon wrath, and woe upon woe, with a fierce hand: yea, he will lay even All his plagues upon us at once, as hee here ſpeaketh, to our great fall and confuſion. Adde unto this proofe here thoſe words in Deut. But if thou wilt not

Deu.28.15,16, 17,18,19,20. obey the voice of the Lord thy God, to keep and to doe all his Commandements & his ordinances which I command thee this day, then all theſe curſes (not one or two, but all theſe curſes) ſhall come upon thee and overtake thee. Curſed ſhalt thou be in the town, and curſed in the field. Curſed ſhall thy basket be, and thy dough. Curſed ſhall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the encreaſe of thy kine, and the flocks of thy ſheep. Curſed ſhalt thou be when thou commeſt in, & curſed when thou goeſt out. The Lord ſhall ſend upon thee curſing, trouble, and ſhame in all that which thou ſetteſt thine hand to doe, untill thou be deſtroyed, and periſh quickly, becauſe of the wickedneſſe of thy works, whereby thou haſt forſaken me. Take we heed therefore, we were beſt, of Pharaohs obſtinacy & diſobedience againſt God, againſt his word, and againſt his ſervants and meſſengers ſent unto us for our good: leſt the heape of curſes light upon us, and even All the Lords plagues puniſh us. We may note againe, how he calleth them his plagues, ſaying, all my plagues: and learne thereby that neither Fortune nor Chance ruleth rods and croſſes laid upon us: but theſe things ſtill are Gods tooles whereby hee either boweth or breaketh men and women that are warped and caſt aſide, being

Mat.26. (by him) laid on and taken off at his pleaſure. So ſaid our Saviour to his Perſecuter, Thou couldeſt have no power over me, except it were given thee from above. This well remembred, will make us ſee and diſcern God in our ſickneſſe, in our loſſe of friends, or goods, in our woes and wants whatſoever they be, the ſooner ſtoope under his hand, and be turned to his will. Our hearts will ſay within us, This is Gods hand, this is his blow: O ſoule, turne, turne, turne, and bee reformed, thou maieſt go no further in this way, thou maieſt not reſiſt him that is too ſtrong for thee. Witches, Sorcerers, Theeves, Robbers, Slanderers and Oppreſſors whatſoever, that have done mee wrong, I looke not at them otherwiſe than at God his rods: for all plagues I ſee in this text are his plagues, and he ruleth all, caſting theſe rods into the fire when his child is humbled and reformed. Bleſſed therefore is the man that feareth alway: but he that hardneth his heart ſhall fall into evill.

9 God ſaith, he will ſend all theſe plagues upon his heart: which (beſides the Note in your Bibles margine) may ſignifie that they ſhould touch him inwardly, and deeply: So doth God daily, where he is angry, and ſo can God doe with us, if we provoke him: To ſmite us in arms, hands, legges, or the like parts is grievous unto us and bitter; but when ſorrow is laid upon the heart,

Prov.28.14. Pro.17.22. and cap.15.13. it ſtingeth indeed, and moſt bitterly, which hee would expreſſe that ſaid, Sorrow hath pierced my head, ſhewed it ſelfe at the windowes, and ſunk down to my heart. Degrees of woe all bitter, but the laſt moſt of all to be feared: for look what the moath is to the garment, and the worm to the wood, ſuch is the ſorrow of the heart. And therefore ſaith Solomon again, Sorrow or heavineſſe in the heart of man doth bring it downe: and in another place, A ſorrowfull mind dryeth the bones: And by the ſorrow of the heart the mind is heavy. Poets would expreſſe as much, when they tearmed ſorrow and care, eating and biting. The way to prevent this dolefull ſorrow of heart, laid on by an angry God, is to take our ſinnes to heart betimes, and (by true repentance) to fly from them, which God for his mercy ſake grant we may doe.

10 The 16. and 17. verſes, to our great good, inſtruct us concerning wicked men: that indeed, as Pharaoh here, ſo are they appointed of God, and they can doe but what hee will have them, howſoever yet they not conſidering thus much, exalt themſelves againſt Gods people often, as here did this tyrant. Fear not therefore their fear, but ſettle this doctrine ſoundly in your hearts, and leave all to God. He that raiſed them for his will, can keepe them within the limits of of his will, and that will to us can never be hurtfull, if wee dutifully commend our ſelves to it.

11 Thus God hath given Pharaoh warning, what judgements are hanging over his head, ready forthwith to fall upon him, unleſſe he yeeld to diſmiſſe his people out of Ægypt. Yet ſee and never forget it whilſt you live: In the midſt of all this wrath, the Lord remembreth mercy; and biddeth them to be warned, to ſend for their cattell into the houſe, for fear of the hayle which was to come. For upon all the men and beaſts which were found abroad, ſhould the haile fall, and they dye. Why? what then? ſhould not all this have been moſt juſt in God, they being ſo rebellious ſinners? It is very true, if they had all died it had bin moſt juſt. Nevertheles, even to ſuch ſinners the Lord would have his mercy extended. And therefore if ever any man or woman ſhal doubt of mercy from ſuch a God, it is a wrong, it is a ſin intolerable. For he that is thus to Lions, raging and roaring againſt him, can he be hard to his little Lambs, that religiouſly truſt in him? Shall you and I be caſt away, when Pharaoh is reſpected? No, it hath not been, it ſhall not be, it cannot be ſo with the Lord. Quick is the eye of him to ſee the fears of his children ever, & with a tender heart he ſendeth comfort in his good time. Dear and gratious Father confirm the hearts of thy little flocke, in the ſweet aſſurance of this thy goodneſſe evermore, and in my bleſſed Saviour thy beloved Son, accept the hidden thankfull thoughts of my ſoule for what I have found at thy gratious hand, in mine owne particular, and pardon my wants, Amen. Amen.

12 Such then as feared the word of the Lord among the ſervants of Pharaoh, ſaith the Text, made his ſervants & cattell fly into the houſes: But ſuch as regarded not the word of the Lord, left his ſervants and his cattell in the field. Quare grandinẽ illaturus, denunciavit illis, uti pecora domum cogerent? Dominus cum ſit humaniſſimus, miſericordia temperat ſupplicia. Alioqui etiam noverat quoſdam eſſe venia dignos, quod non tacet Scriptura Divina. Qui enim, ait, ex ſervis Pharaonis timuit verbũ domini, pecora ſua domũ coegit, &c. Why did the Lord (being purpoſed to bring haile upon thẽ) admoniſh them to fetch their cattell into the houſe? Even becauſe he being moſt gentle, would temper puniſhment with mercy. And again he knew there were ſome differing frõ others, more to be reſpected, which the Scripture doth not conceal, when it ſaith, So many of Pharaohs ſervants as feared the word of the Lord, fetched their cattell into the houſe, &c. As followeth in Theodoret & S. Auguſtine upon this place. Such, and ſo diverſe is the fruit of the ſelfe ſame word of God, ſpoken at one time by one man, to one people. Some regard it, and doe thereafter; ſome neglect, and doe contrary. The greateſt Adoſes muſt reckon of this, and being forewarned, be alſo forearmed againſt the diſcomfort that followeth of it. Let the people alſo obſerve that ſuch only are ſaid here to fear the word of the Lord as did obey it, and fetch their cattell in, according to it. Look therefore ever at obedience, and judg thereby of your heart: at the leaſt, look at the willingnes of your heart to obey, though humane frailty cauſe ſome imperfection. When Ioſiah his heart melted, when thoſe Iewes hearts were pricked, & when thoſe travellers hearts burned in the way of Emaus; then was it well, you know, with all of them: and ſuch feeling muſt ever make us well alſo. For there be too many that (ſay Moſes what he can) will fetch neither ſervants nor cattel into the houſe, to whom it ſhall happen one day as aſſuredly, as here it did to the Ægyptians. Vengeance ſhall come down one way or other, and light upon them, as here did thunder, and haile, and fire, and lightning, upon the deſpiſers of Moſes warning. For with an hard heart, ſaith the Wiſeman, it ſhall never be well in the end. If a condemned man ſhould refuſe his Princes gracious pardon, died he not juſtly? If a beſieged city ſhould refuſe offered aid, periſhed it not worthily? So ſtandeth it with the conteners of the word, which is a gratious pardon for all our offences, & a ſaving aid to our beſieged ſouls. When a ſick man refuſeth meat we doubt of his well-doing; but if he feed well we hope of life. So is it with us if we receive the word, or we refuſe the word. For he that is of God, ſaith our Saviour, heareth Gods word; & whoſo will not, as ſure a ſign it is on the other ſide. For you therefore hear not becauſe you are not of God. A Fiſh freſh and ſweet is knowne by the eare being freſh and ſweet; and ſo is ever a good Chriſtian. Search then your ſelfe by this Rule, and you ſhall profit either to prayer for what you miſſe, or to thankſgiving for what you find. In the eye of Chriſt it was ſo bleſſed a thing to hear and obey the Word, that he pronounced happines rather to ſuch, than the womb that bare him, & the paps that gave him ſuck. A moving ſpeech if we have any life in us.

Verſ. 20, 21.

Luke 11.28.

13 Then Moſes ſtretched out his hand towards heaven, and the Lord ſent thunder, and haile, and lightning upon the ground: & the Lord cauſed hail to rain upon the land of Ægypt. So there was hail, & fire mingled with the hayl, ſo grievous as there was none throughout all the land of Ægypt ſince it was a Nation. Of which ſtrange plague many things are written, which I wil cut off, ſeeking only to make ſome profitable uſe of it: Grandinẽ & fulgura immiſit illis, oſtendens quod ipſe ſit Dominus omniũ elementorũ. Etenim tam Ægyptii, quam Græci æſtimabant quoſdã deos eſſe cœleſtes, alios ſubterraneos. Et hos quidẽ imperare terra, illos vero mari; & alios in mõtes, alios in agros imperiũ habere. Quapropter etiã Syrus dicebat, Deus montiũ Deus Iſrael, & non convalliũ. Hee ſent upon them Hayle and Lightning, to ſhew that hee was Lord of all the Elements. For both the Ægyptians and Grecians had a conceit, that there were ſome Gods of the heavens, ſome of the earth, and ſome under the earth: that one ſort ruleth the earth, another ſort the ſea: one ſort the mountaines, another ſort the fields. Wherefore that Syrian ſaid, the God of Iſrael is the God of mountains, and not of vallies. Wherefore God rightly here chaſtiſed them not onely by the waters and the earth, but by the ayre alſo, and the ſea: and ſent Thunder and Lightning from Heaven upon them; that ſo he might teach and ſhew, that he is Lord and Creator of all things. Which bleſſed Moſes ſaid in thoſe words to Pharaoh, that thou mighteſt know how the earth and thou, and thy ſervants are in the Lords power. Let it make us ſoundly ſettle our hearts ever, both what here we ſee, and what other Scriptures teſtifie of him. He raineth down ſnares, fire, brimſtone, ſtorm and tempeſt: And, it is the Lord that commandeth the waters; it is the glorious God that maketh the thunder. Fire and hayle, ſnow and vapours, wind and ſtorme, fulfill his word. Whether therefore we be hindred or furthered by weather, let us ever caſt up our eyes to heaven: for it is the Lord ſtill that ruleth theſe things, and by his will they come and goe. Nature is his ſervant, and the Devill is his rod, neither of them working but as hee appointeth. The very Heathens had a glimpſe of his truth, when they taught, Æolus to be god of the wind, and Neptune god of the ſea: ſuppoſing that by ſome God theſe things muſt be governed. Thinke then of the yeare 1588. and poure out his praiſe, that ſo governed theſe things for our comfort. On the other ſide, whenſoever they ſhall croſſe our affaires either by Sea or Land, ſtoope we to him in humility, ſearch out our wayes, what we know amiſſe, and amend it ſpeedily, that the Lord may rebuke both wind and ſea for our profit. Furthermore in this, that the Lord ſent the plague of thunder and lightning upon the Egyptians, let us learn how he commeth not ſtealing to wrath and judgement againſt rebellious ſinners, but ratling and ſhaking both heaven and earth. The fruit whereof ſhould be to make us fear to offend. For I will make the eares of whoſoever heareth to tingle, ſaith the Lord, at that which I doe: ſo noting a fierce and fearefull publique proceeding againſt ſinne and ſinners, as it were upon Stages and houſe tops, not in darkneſſe and in ſecret. Againe, fire was mingled with haile, to teach that his judgements ſhall not be ſingle, but even one upon the neck of another, untill we be either humbled or deſtroyed, according unto his will. One example of many that are in Gods Book, and other hiſtories, may ſuffice. Haman that wicked enemy of the Church and true religion, was at length to taſte of Gods juſtice for his ſinnes: and how commeth the Lord againſt him? cloſely and covertly? No, but even with thunder and lightning, as here againſt Pharaoh: that is, with open and great ſhew to all men of his wrath. For firſt, he is made to leade his horſe in honour of him whom of all men he moſt maliced: Secondly, hee falleth juſtly into his Princes heavy indignation, and when hee humbly ſued at the Queenes feet for pardon, he was taken by the King, as intending high villany, which increaſed the Kings wrath mightily: Thirdly, hee is diſpatched away to be hanged upon that Gallowes, which (in his greatneſſe) he had prepared for another: Fourthly, his houſe and land, his honor and offices were all given away, where he leaſt wiſhed them: and yet the Lord ſtayed not here, but fearfully deſtroyed alſo his poſterity. Was not this thundring? was not this lightning? and was not this judgement as upon a ſtage? O let it ever be remembred of all that reade it with their eyes; and God for his mercy ſake make it more profitable.

Verſe 26. 14 Onely in the land of Goſhen (where the Children of Iſrael were) was no hayle. In which words as heretofore, ſo ſtill, ſtill is noted the unſearchable goodneſſe of God to his Church, together with his Almighty power, to doe ever what he will. He can ſave and he can ſpill: he can make ſuch a wall about his Children, that no ſtorme or tempeſt, no calamity or evill ſhall come neere them, though it compaſſe them round about, and others periſh with it on every ſide. Two ſhall be in the field, the one received, the other forſaken: two ſhall be grinding in the mill, the one accepted, the other rejected, &c. Bleſſed therefore is that man and woman, who have the Lord for their God: And ſay unto my ſoule, I am thy ſalvation, ſaith David in one of his Pſalmes: noting thereby the comfort of this above ten thouſand worlds. Let us therefore ever be carefull to be of the number of thoſe that abide in Goſhen, where the ſaving hand of God ſhall deliver from all evill.

Verſe 27. 15 In theſe ſmooth words of Pharaoh, verſe 27. (That he had ſinned, that the Lord was righteous, and he and his people wicked; That Moſes ſhould pray for him, &c. returning nevertheleſſe to his old bias when the Plague was gone:) ſtill obſerve (as you have done before) the deep falſhood of mans heart, making faire ſhewes without fruit; and if God be thus glozed and diſſembled withall, think whether it ſeeme ſtrange to mortall man to taſte of it? No, no, we muſt reckon of it to be praiſed to our face, to be ſlandered at our backs, by one and the ſame perſon. Yet let it not diſcourage us to doe any good, but only let it make us carefull to give no juſt cauſe, and ten thouſand times thankfull when we are releaſed out of ſuch a world, and taken into his kingdome.

16 Laſtly, that often repeated ſentence of Pharaohs hardned heart, let it remember us of that ſaying in Saint Auguſtine, Corda mala, patientia Dei, dureſcunt: Evill hearts waxe hard by Gods long-ſuffering and patience. Alſo of that in Saint Bernard, Cor durum dici, quod non compunctione ſcinditur, nec pietate mollitur, nec movetur precibus, minis non cedit, flagellis duratur, ingratum ad beneficia, ad conſilia infidum, ad judicia ſævum, inverecundum ad turpia, impavidũ ad pericula, inhumanum ad humana, temerarium ad Divina, præteritorũ obliviſcens, præſentium negligens, & futura non prævidens. It is called a hard heart, which is neither rent with compunction, nor ſoftned with piety, nor moved with prayers, which giveth no place to threatnings, is hardned with ſtripes, in benefits unthankefull, in counſell unfaithfull, in judgement cruell, unſhamefaſt in foule things, not fearfull in perils, in humane things moſt inhumane, in divine things raſh, forgetting things paſt, neglecting things preſent, and not foreſeeing things to come. Surely ſuch a deſcription (if we our ſelves have not Pharaohs hardneſſe) will ever move us earneſtly to pray againſt ſuch hardneſſe. Thus endeth this Chapter, and thus end I, having given you ſome taſte how we may profit by reading of it.

CHAP. X.

Here you have following two Plagues more, to wit, the eighth, and the ninth. The eighth, from the beginning of the Chapter, to the twentieth verſe: and the ninth from thence to the end. Concerning the former, the Holy Ghoſt layeth downe:

1. A Commaundement to Moſes to goe.
2. A Denunciation.
3. An execution.
4. The effect, and that in the { Servants. / King.

TOuching the firſt, the Text ſaith, Againe the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, goe to Pharaoh, &c. Divers times, you know, he had ſent before, and all in vaine: yet ceaſeth not the bottomleſſe and incomprehenſible mercy of God, ſtill, ſtill, againe and againe to ſend. This was ever his gracious dealing with miſerable ſinners, and ſweet comfort it is to a troubled mind to think of it. The Goſpell ſaith in like ſort, He ſent again and again, other and other ſervants to thoſe wicked husbandmen, to remember them of his due and their duty: At laſt he ſent his own Son unto them, ſaying, they will reverence my Son. Againe, to Hieruſalem, how often, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not? O tender Father! what a certaine Seale is this thy goodneſſe in theſe examples, that true repentance ſhall never be rejected? A ſorrowfull ſinner never repulſed, a broken and contrite heart never deſpiſed? Let it profit us unto increaſe of faith, for his ſake that dyed for our ſinnes. Our own experience hath taught us as much, if we did obſerve it. For how long have we been ſinners? have not ſome of us beene twenty yeeres, ſome thirty, ſome forty and more, (all of us too long) walking the way that leadeth unto death? And what have our ſins beene? Surely great, foule, ugly, odious to God, dangerous to our ſelves, and offenſive to the world: yet hath the Lord neither ſwept us away in his moſt juſt wrath, neither ceaſed to ſend Moſes againe and againe unto us for our reformation. Should not this infinite goodneſſe much move us to returne to ſo ſweet a Father? Knoweſt thou not (O man) ſaith the bleſſed Apoſtle, that the long ſuffering of God leadeth thee to repentance? How entertained hee the Prodigall ſonne when he returned? How rejoyce the Angels in Heaven over one ſinner that repenteth? Far be it ever then from us, ever to reſiſt a God ſo powerfull to confound us, and ſo mercifull to receive us.

Luk 13.34.

Rom. 2.4.

2 But the Lord ſaith here, that he hardned Pharaohs heart, and the hearts of his ſervants, how then was the fault in them, that they yeelded not? for anſwer, let me aske you another queſtion: whether you thinke it not lawfull, that God ſhould puniſh a ſinner as himſelfe liketh? And whether hardnes of heart be not a puniſhment? If both be true, then might the Lord puniſh him this way. Yet all men doe not think this ſuch a puniſhment as it is: for if we be ſick, we looke for help, if the eye faile, the eare grow dull, or any ſenſe be weakned, we quickly feele it, and readily wiſh for remedy: onely if our heart grow dull, and our underſtanding, feeling, and profiting in Gods Schoole be taken from us, we are not moved, neither think it goeth ill with us, preferring the outward ſenſe of body far and far before the light of the mind. But let it be lawfull, you ſay, with the Lord thus to puniſh: yet it muſt needs excuſe the party ſo puniſhed: for how can a man feele and relent, whoſe heart God ſmiteth with hardnes? no, it excuſeth not, becauſe a man may ſin neceſſarily, and yet not conſtrainedly, but willingly: which conſent of will maketh him guilty: as in common experience, you ſee one in great heate drink neceſſarily in reſpect of heat: yet not conſtrainedly, but very willingly. Looke not therefore at Gods ſecret decree, but at mans willing approbation of what is evill, and in this matter remember the modeſty and reverence of S. Paul, when he ſaith, O man, who art thou that pleadeſt with God? ſhal the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? &c. O the deepnes of riches, both of the wiſdome and knowledg of God! how unſearchable are his judgments, and his waies paſt finding out! Remember alſo how

Saint Auguſtine imitateth him in this vertue, ſaying, O man thou lookeſt for an anſwer of me, and I alſo am a man my ſelfe: therefore let us both heare him that ſaith, Who art thou that diſputeſt with God? Better is holy ignorance than raſh knowledge. Seeke thou for merit, thou ſhalt find but puniſhment. O deepneſſe! reaſon thou, I will marvaile: diſpute thou, I will beleeve: and he that liketh not of this anſwer, let him ſeeke one more learned, but take heede, hee finde not one more preſuming.

Verſe 2.

3 That thou maiſt declare in the eares of thy ſonne, and thy ſons ſonne, what things I have done in Ægypt, &c. A notable place to teach us, as the end of Gods works and wonders, ſo the duty and office of all Chriſtian Parents and Governours: even to teach their children and charge, carefully and zealouſly by them, and in them to know the Lord. The like place you have againe in Deuteronomy: Theſe words which I command thee this day, ſhall be in thine heart. And thou ſhalt rehearſe them continually unto thy children, and ſhalt talk of them when thou tarrieſt in thine houſe, and as thou walkeſt by the way, and when thou lieſt down, and when thou riſeſt up, &c. Thus is God himſelfe the Author of the Catechizing and inſtructing of youth, in his holy feare and true religion, which ſo much is neglected in our daies, and whereunto not onely youth (who know not their owne good) are hardly drawne: but even their elder Parents and maſters are very unwilling to have them drawne. But can the ſtubborn and head-ſtrong contempt of ſo holy a Commandement of him that made us be ever unpuniſhed? No, no, it both hath, and ever ſhall have his due correction, both in thoſe that ſhould come, & thoſe that ſhould ſend them and ſee them come, parents, maſters, god-fathers, and god-mothers, and the like.

Deut. 6. 6, 7.

Hence it commeth, that Children are often diſobedient to their parents, wanton, wilfull, wicked, and in the end dye a ſhamefull death. Parents can get for their ſonnes the Landlords cloath, thereby to have countenance and ayde in the world: but they never caſt, nor care to get them Gods holy feare in their hearts, who is Land-lord of all lands, and lords, thereby to have both the promiſe of this life, and of that to come. O blindneſſe! Doe we not ſee how great and how foule, how groſſe and how ſinfull? If wee doe, let us hereafter amend this fault, and aſſure our ſelves, that all the countenance in the world is not like his favour, that made both our poſterity, and the world: ruleth them, and the world: deſtroyeth them, and the world. Wherefore he promiſed it to Abraham, as a thing above all the riches of the world, That he would be his God, and the God of his ſeed, if he walked before him in uprightneſſe. Follow this meditation further in your mind, and you ſhall find it work to a carefull courſe, touching ſuch as are committed to you.

Verſe 3.

4 How long wilt thou refuſe to humble thy ſelfe before me? Theſe words tell us the drift of all croſſes and afflictions in this life: even to bring downe the ſwelling pride of our ſinfull hearts: that yeelding God what is due to him, wee againe from him might reape mercy and goodneſſe more and more, to our endleſſe comfort: for hee would us good, and the death of a ſinner hee never deſired. We our ſelves diſlike haughty pride in others towards us, but eſpecially in ſuch as owe us duty, and humble and meeke ſpirits we take great pleaſure in. He that yeeldeth when we chide, and ſtoopeth to us when we are angry, wee quickly obſerve, and readily receive to favour againe. How much more, thinke you, are theſe things due to God from duſt and aſhes? Follow then what to him is pleaſing, and to your ſelfe ever profitable. Never forget that ſaying to Ioſiah the King, Becauſe thy heart did melt, and thou diddeſt humble thy ſelfe before God, when thou heardeſt his words againſt this place, and againſt the inhabitants thereof, and humbledſt thy ſelfe before me, and tareſt thy clothes, and weepeſt before me, I have alſo heard thee, ſaith the Lord. Behold, I will gather thee to thy Fathers, and thou ſhalt be put into thy grave in peace, and thine eyes ſhall not ſee all the evill which I will bring upon this place, and upon the inhabitants of the ſame. The like you reade of Ezechia, that he was ſick unto the death, and yet upon his prayer the Lord prolonged his life: but he did not render according to the reward beſtowed upon him: for his heart was lift up, and wrath came upon him, and upon Iudah and Ieruſalem. Notwithſtanding, Ezechia humbled himſelfe (after that his heart was liſted up) he and the inhabitants of Hieruſalem, and the wrath of the Lord came not upon them in the dayes of Ezechia. Moſt acceptable therefore, you ſee, is an humble caſting downe of our ſelves before him, and ſhall ever bring unto our ſelves mercy and comfort, when proud rebellion and ſtiffe ſtanding out with Pharaoh, ſhall procure plague upon plague, till we be deſtroyed out of the world. Downe then at night, and down in the morning before your God, ſend up unto him the true ſighes of an humble heart, and aſſure your ſelfe (as you live and breathe) he will reſpect them with a ſaving grace.

5 But if this religious humbling would not be had from Pharaoh, then ſee in the 4, 5, 6. verſes what ſhould follow: even another ſtrange Plague of Graſhoppers, ſo to fill the land, and to annoy them, as in the Text you ſee deſcribed. Ever therefore obſerve it, and in your ſelfe reſt as aſſured of it, as you are of your very life; That mercy offered and deſpiſed, repentance called for and not yeelded, will have fierce wrath and vengeance follow it, as here, and in all the former plagues it did. The proud rebelling ſinner ſhall bee ſtooped at the laſt, doe what hee can: for the Lord is able. The performance of vengeance, beginning at the foure-teenth verſe added to this denuntiation, aſſureth what I ſay. Wherefore, the man and woman are moſt happy, that know their time, having eyes to ſeee, eares to heare, and wiſe hearts to underſtand the grace offered unto them for their good. See alſo and conſider with your ſelfe, the infinite wayes and meanes, which the Lord hath to puniſh either kingdomes or townes, or particular perſons by, when every baſe creature (by his commandement) is as a mighty man of war, nay, more ſtrong than any ſtrong man living.

6 When Moſes had denounced this great Plague, the Text telleth us, Pharaohs ſervants (and Courtiers) were moved with it, and ſaid unto Pharaoh, how long ſhall this Moſes be an offence unto us? That is, as your marginall note ſaith, an occaſion of ſo many evils unto us. Wherein, I pray you, note with me, how old and ancient that accuſation is, which to this day remaineth both in the hearts and tongues of wicked perſons, aſcribing unto religion, and the profeſſors thereof, whatſoever evill happeneth among men, be it dearth, ſickneſſe, unſeaſonable weather, warres, famine, or the like. Achab telleth Elias that it was he that troubled Iſrael, by whom indeed, all Iſrael had a bleſſing, if they had knowne it. The like blame laid upon the firſt Chriſtians, the Apologies of the Fathers, made in that reſpect, doe ſhew. But in ſtead of all, thinke you at this time (for proof of the contrary) of the ſtory in Geneſis, where, for tenne righteous, if they could have beene found, the whole City had beene ſaved. Houſes and whole Kingdomes have beene favoured for one righteous man dwelling therein, proofes are many, both in Scriptures and all ſtories, Ioſeph, Daniel, and ſuch like.

Verſe 7.

Gen. 18.32.

7 This ſpeech of Pharaohs ſervants prevailed ſo farre, that Moſes and Aaron were ſent for to Pharaoh, and had an offer made them, to depart if they would, with ſome company, but not with all, unto which Moſes anſwered, that they muſt needs all goe, Young and old, ſonnes and daughters, ſheepe and cattell, or elſe none. Wherein I profit thus, by the grant of Pharaoh of ſome to goe, and not all; I obſerve the malice of Satan, and his members againſt the Church and the true ſervice of God: if they cannot wholly deſtroy it, hurt it, and hinder it; then in part, as farre as they can, they will doe it, ever valuing much, but a little gaine herein. By the anſwer of Moſes I obſerve againe on the other ſide, that wee muſt not yeeld an inch to theſe plots and fetches of the wicked, but zealouſly muſt ſtand upon the full obſervance of all Gods Will, according to his commandement, and not according to the fancies either of others, or of our ſelves. Where the Lord diſpenſeth not, we muſt not diſpenſe: where all are bound to depart out of Ægypt, we muſt not capitulate, for ſome to goe, and ſome to tarry. Whereof, would God, men in our dayes had due conſideration: where the husband goeth to Church, but not the wife: the father, but not the ſonne: the ſervant, but not the maſter: Moſes would not doe thus, in this place, but (knowing all to be bound) requireth all: leaving us therein a fearefull aſſurance, that this playing at halfe ſtake with the Lord, as it is moſt odious to him, ſo moſt dreadfully by him it will one day be puniſhed.

Verſe 8.

8 The words following in the eleventh verſe, are not to be paſſed over without ſome profit, Then they were thruſt out from Pharaohs preſence: For they notably ſhew the too common entertainment of Gods Meſſengers in this wicked world: namely, to be thruſt out, and very unkindely entreated without any fault. So were the Prophets and Apoſtles in their times, yea, the great Maſter himſelfe, when they forcibly carried him toward the top of a Mountaine with a purpoſe violently to have caſt him downe. But let it comfort us, and ſhake the hearts of ſuch wicked wretches ever, that the very duſt of our feet ſhall bee a witneſſe for us againſt them in the great day of juſt judgement and due revenge for ſuch ſinne: He that receiveth you, receiveth me, and he that refuſeth (and thruſteth you out) refuſeth and thruſteth me out. Vengeance is mine, and I will repay.

Verſe 11.

9 By occaſion of theſe Groſhoppers, ſent in the wrath of God, as a plague to annoy the Ægyptians, covering all the face of the earth, (by their multitude) till their land was darke with them, and eating up all the hearbs of the land with the fruits of the trees, &c. You may take occaſion to remember what you read of Graſhoppers in the Scriptures, and you may heare alſo what others have ſaid of them. Firſt, you finde in Leviticus a kinde of Graſhopper among the cleane beaſts, which the Iſraelites might eate of: whereunto referre that in Matthew of Iohn Baptiſt, how his meate was Locuſts, that is, Graſhoppers and wilde honey. This kinde of Graſhopper, to us, at this day is not well knowne, as neither to others before our time. For Theophylact upon Matth. ſuppoſeth Iohns Locuſts to have beene hearbs ſo called, and Euthymius upon Matth. certaine wilde fruits, ſuch as the wilderneſſe wherin Iohn lived, yeelded unto him. Chryſoſtome and Athanaſius before him, were of the ſame opinion, ſaith Hermolaus Barbarus. But Saint Hilary thinketh they were, Animalia quædam apta ad comedendum, Certaine living creatures good for meate. Thomas Aquinas upon Matthew hath the ſame words. Albertus Magnus upon Matthew, That they were not our uſuall Graſhoppers, for they (ſaith hee) are venomous: but they were certaine birds in the Wilderneſſe, which upon ſimilitude of their leaping and hopping rather than flying, were called Graſhoppers. Pliny in his Naturall hiſtory writeth, that Graſhoppers or Locuſts to the Parthians, were moſt acceptable meate: againe in another place, that a part of Æthiopia liveth onely by Locuſts made hard by ſmoake and ſalt. But they live not, ſaith he, above forty yeares. Saint Hierome ſaith, that the Eaſterne people, and inhabitants of Libya eate much theſe Graſhoppers: becauſe in the Deſert, and hot vaſtneſſe of the wilderneſſe there are found clouds of them. Pliny againe writeth of them, that there are of three foot long in India. The word alſo, Locuſta, we know, is ſometimes taken for a fiſh which we call a Lobſter. In the Apocalyps you reade, that the bottomleſſe pit was opened, and out of the ſame aroſe a ſmoake like the ſmoake of a great fornace. And out of the ſmoake came Locuſts (or Graſhoppers) upon the earth, &c. Where you may conſider what is meant by theſe Locuſts, and then the reaſon of their reſemblance. Theſe Locuſts prefigured and foretold to the Church of God all that rabble of the Popiſh Clergy, which afterward, in time, covered (as it were) the face of the earth, their Prieſts, their ſwarmes of Monkes, Friars, Nunnes, and other Orders, almoſt without number. For here is mention made of a Starre that fell: now Starres (in this booke) doe ſignifie the Angels of the Churches, who ſhine by the light of Heavenly doctrine, and Holy life, as Starres in the Firmament by their brightneſſe; and who truely may be ſaid to ſtand, whileſt they doe their duties: and to fall from Heaven, when (forgetting life, and doctrine) they thinke, ſpeake, and follow earthly things. The Starre therefore, that is here ſaid to fall from Heaven to Earth, was ſome great Miniſter in the Church, of ſuch authority, and high eſtimation, as the power aſcribed unto him plainly teacheth. But who, in all the world, can be named ſuch a One, ſaving the Biſhop of Rome? for, by all ſtories we ſee and know, that they were excellent men at the beginning, many of them, yea, unto Conſtantine the Great, as I remember, thirty two ſucceded one after another, good, and learned men, holy, and reverend Martyrs, for the ſelfe-ſame truth, which we at this day hold, & their ſucceſſors have forſaken. From Conſtantine againe to Gregory the Great about two and thirty more, good men, though not altogether as the former. For even now began ſome declination in the Church, yet not ſuch, but that Gregory deteſted the proud Supremacy which now is challenged, and told the Biſhop of Conſtantinople (then ambitiouſly ſeeking for it,) that whoſoever ſought to be called Vniverſall Biſhop was (out of queſtion) the Fore-runner of Antichriſt. But, when Boniface the third came, hee little paſſing for Gregory his opinion, obtained of Phocas, (that bloody Traitor, who had killed the Emperour his Maſter, his Wife, and his Children, and ſo got to bee Emperour) that Rome might bee the Head of all Cities, and the Biſhop there, Vniverſall Biſhop over all. Here then fell the Starre from Heaven to earth, when it left Heaven, and clave to Earth, hunting continually for earthly honour ſince that day, and plotting earthly trouble to all Nations. The brightneſſe of Doctrine, and holy life, which former Biſhops of Rome had, and thereby did ſhine as Starres, was now loſt: and all idle inventions of mans ſinfull braine brought in to worſhip God with them, in ſtead of his owne Commandements. Great power to hurt retained, having not now Peters Keyes (as they boaſt,) but the keyes of the bottomleſſe pit given them, to bring out thence into the Church Doctrines of Devils, darkneſſe, ignorance, ſuperſtition, and all wicked abominations, like foule thick ſmoake hiding the brightneſſe and light of Chriſt our Saviour from the eyes of men, even ſo ſtrongly, that ſuch ſmoake is reſembled to the ſmoake of a great fornace, for the ſtrength of it.

Nubes Locuſtarum.

Apoc. 9. 2, 3.

Apoc. 9. 1.

1 Tim. 4. 1. 2, 3.

What groſſe lyes, what palpable fables, have their Legends, their elder Maſſe-Bookes, and Primers, printed long ſince? Surely even ſuch, as themſelves at this day are aſhamed of, and leave out of their new Bookes. Then out of this filthy foggy ſmoake, aſcending out of the pit when it was opened, came the ſwarmes of Locuſts mentioned, Monkes, Friers, &c. No Papiſt in the world can ſhew where (under any Starre fallen) there is ſuch a reſemblance as under their Pope hath beene, and is at this day ſtill: which being the ſecond point I prayed you to marke, now caſt your eyes upon it, and marke it much.

Firſt, Graſhoppers doe moſt of their hurt by their mouthes; and ſo doe Romiſh Locuſts by their curſed ſpeaking, teaching, Charming, and alluring Chriſtian people from GOD, from Prince, and Countrey, to their damnable opinions, and reſolutions. This Speech of their mouthes maketh mee remember Saint Bernards Speech, Beſtia illa cui datum eſt os loquens blaſphemias, & bellum gerere cum Sanctis, Petri cathedram occupat tanquam Leo paratus ad prædam: That beaſt unto which there is given a mouth to ſpeake blaſphemies, and to warre with the Saints, poſſeſſeth the Chaire of Peter, as a Lyon prepared to his prey. A great ſpeech in thoſe dayes, if you marke it.

Secondly, Graſhoppers uſe to ſwarme in great abundance, whereupon came the Proverbe, As thicke as Graſhoppers. So theſe Romiſh Locuſts did they not overſpread (as it were) the whole earth, when under Pope Pius the ſecond, one Order of Fryers (called Minorits) ſo abounded and ſwarmed, that the Maſter of the Order offered the Pope, either againſt the Turke, or any other ſervice, thirty thouſand able fighting men, and yet would leave ſo many more? What Swarmes, thinke you, were amongſt all the Orders, if one were ſo great? very fitly therefore did the Similitude of Locuſts foretell this rabble, in time, to come into the world.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, Graſhoppers doe eate up and deſtroy all greene things, and fruits of the earth: And even ſo theſe Antichriſtian Locuſts, ſwarmes of Romiſh Friers, and ſuch like, left not a greene thing undevoured, that is, not a good ſoyle, and ſeate in any Land, wherein they clapt not downe themſelves, had a houſe built, and poſſeſſed the pleaſure and profit thereof, till God (in mercy to his Church) ſent a ſtrong winde, and blew them away. Ioel 2.

Fourthly, Graſhoppers are ſaid, and written of, to be inſatiable, ever hungry, whileſt they live; Locuſta enim quaſi tota vena eſt, & ideo inſatiabilis; quam diu vivit, ſemper eſurit. And were not the Romiſh Locuſts ſo too (I pray you) in their time, and yet ſtill are, where they have place? The world with many woefull complaints, hath left their inſatiable devouring teſtified to all poſterity.

Fiftly, one Graſhopper, alone, is very contemptible, and no man feareth him, but (in ſwarmes) they are as terrible on the other ſide, to a whole Land. Even ſo Romiſh Locuſts, Prieſts, Fryers, and ſuch like, one of any ſort, alone, without dread: but beware heapes and ſwarmes of them, for by their multitude they have dared, and wronged great Princes.

Sixtly, the Graſhoppers leape, and ſing, and play all Summer long: ſo did theſe rabble plentifully take their pleaſure all the time of their Summer, lived in idleneſſe upon mens labours, ſinging and ſaying, ſporting and playing, and who durſt ſay nay?

Laſtly, Locuſta eſt animal parvulum, inter volatile & reptile medium, peſtis tanta, ut ab Ethnicis Deorum ira dicatur. The Graſhopper, ſaith Chryſoſtome, neither properly flying, nor creeping, but (as it were) a middle thing betwixt both, ſuch a plague, that the Heathens have called it, The wrath of God. So write the Papiſts, or Romiſh Locuſts, of their Head, the Pope, that he is neither meerely a man, nor abſolutely a god, but a middle creature betwixt both: and then wee dare adde, that he is ſuch a plague, as truely we may terme, The wrath of God.

Thus might I goe forward in this reſemblance, and ſhew you how fitly the holy Spirit of God fore-told theſe ſwarmes, under the name of Locuſts: but this much ſheweth you the way, and you your ſelfe may thinke of more agreements.

Now marke you the words in the Revelation: and as, by this which I have ſaid, you have ſeene, how like the Popiſh Clergy is to Graſhoppers in ſome conditions; ſo (there) ſhall you ſee, how like they are to the deſcription of Locuſts (there) made by Saint Iohn: that every way you may be ſure, the Prophecie in the Apocalyps noted out theſe creatures.

Firſt it is ſaid, unto them was given power, as the Scorpions of the earth have power. Now wee reade, that the Scorpion is a flattering beaſt, and in the middeſt of his flattery with the ſting of his tayle woundeth to death. So were and are theſe Popiſh Locuſts ever full of flattery, and fawning, and in the middeſt thereof full of poyſon, ſtriking to death (with their ſtings of falſe doctrine,) as many as they can faſten the ſame in. Againe, the Scorpions ſting (at the firſt) maketh no great paine, but after it hath crept abroad, and diſperſed his venome in the body, it killeth moſt cruelly, and without remedy: ſo the ſtinging perſwaſions of Romiſh Locuſts appeare not (at firſt) ſo dangerous, but (when they have gotten ſtrength) the party hardly ever recovereth. The doctrine of Free juſtification in the blood of Chriſt, is hid from Gods people, and condemned as hereſie. All aſſurance of Gods favour, all peace of conſcience, all joy in the holy Ghoſt quite deſtroyed. Men are ſent to ſeeke eaſe in the merit of their owne workes, in Popes Pardons, and Indulgences, in running on pilgrimage to this Idoll and that, in puniſhing their bodies by faſtings, whippings, and ſuch like inventions; and yet are they not eaſed hereby, but torments of conſcience (as the venome of their Scorpion-like Locuſts, which have ſtinged them) ſtill remaine bitter and heavy upon them. Then muſt they build Abbies, give money for Trentals of Maſſes; then ſing, ſing, ſing, ſing, ring, caſt Pardons into the grave, call for the poore, give almes, and what not? Judge now if this kinde of power of theſe Locuſts bee not as the power of the Scorpions upon earth, as S. Iohn ſpeaketh: and be you moſt aſſured, that God pointed at them in this Prophecie, that we might be forewarned, and ſo fore-armed againſt them. Apoc. 9. 3.

Secondly it is ſaid in the Apocalyps, how to thoſe Locuſts was commanded that they ſhould not hurt the graſſe of the earth, neither any greene thing, neither any tree, but onely thoſe men which have not the ſeale of God in their fore-heads. And how fitly agreeth this to the Romiſh Locuſts? For there bee in the world two ſorts of people: one, that wittingly and willingly will run after their owne woe, and are bitter profeſſed enemies of the Truth, whom God in his Juſtice hath rejected and not ſealed: the other ſort, is of them which (not maliciouſly, but of meere ignorance) goe awry, being deſirous to doe well, yet in their ſimplicity deceived, and abuſed by crafty Juglers. The former ſort onely are thoſe whom theſe Locuſts can hurt. The latter (in Gods infinite goodneſſe) is exempt, as greene things which he will not have harmed, and as perſons ſealed in their foreheads, which the former wanted. A ſweet teſtimony of the power and mercy of our moſt gracious Father, who in the very middeſt of darknes, and even when Antichriſt is at his height, can preſerve his choſen from any hurt by thoſe ſwarmes of Locuſts, which have great power given them to hurt others. The obſerving whereof, much doth enable us to anſwer that ſtale objection, Where was your Church before Luther? Surely, in the middeſt of theſe Locuſts, Scorpions, Apoc. 9. 4.

and Hornets, yet by the power of an Almighty God preſerved from hurt, as you ſee here, theſe greene things were. But you may thinke, how can this be? Are all thoſe whom theſe Romiſh Locuſts ſting with any falſe and erronious opinion, caſt away and damned? This were hard; and if not, how hen is it ſaid, that they ſhall not have power to hurt the Elect? The next verſe in the Revelation anſwereth the matter: where (leſt any ſhould miſtake the word of hurting,) the Holy Ghoſt ſheweth what he meaneth by it; namely, that they ſhould not kill the Elect, but onely ſuch as were not ſealed. Hurt then the Elect may be, or (as it is there) vexed five moneths, and their paine ſhall be as the paine that commeth of a Scorpion which hath ſtung a man, but killed they ſhall not be: that is, finally overthrowne and caſt away touching eternall life. Graſhoppers come in Aprill, and live till September; five moneths, and then are gone: ſo may the Elect bee afflicted for a time, and hurt in their goods, and bodies, and friends, as Iob was, but September will come when the Locuſts ſhall away, and their Deliverance be brought by a gracious God. Thus comforted Paul the Church in his time, ſaying: As Iannes and Iambres withſtood Moſes, ſo doe theſe alſo reſiſt the truth. But (now marke) they ſhall prevaile no longer; for their madneſſe ſhall be evident unto all men, as theirs alſo was. An end therefore will bee of all troubles, which theſe Locuſts ſhall worke unto the Church and Elect of God. Five moneths is not long (in reſpect of that eternity which followeth;) and therefore in comfort be we patient: their time is ſet, and they ſhall have an end. Againe, this place may notably aſſure you, and every one, that all which dyed in the time of Popery, were not caſt away, but that at one time or other, by one way or other the Lord gave them light, and a holy departure in his truth: and Stories tell us how ſtill (in the time of darkneſſe) God raiſed up ſome zealous and able Teachers of their brethren, by whoſe miniſtery and helpe, many received light, and overcame the power of error. Whereunto agree the words of Primatius, Illi hic intelliguntur, qui licet falſis fuerunt irretiti doctrinis, circa finem tamen vitæ compuncti, divinam recipiunt veritatem: They here are underſtood, who, though they have beene abuſed by falſe doctrine, yet in the end of their life having remorſe, they entertained the heavenly truth. The words following, (that, in thoſe dayes men ſhall ſeeke death, and ſhall not finde it, and ſhall deſire to die, and death ſhall flie from them) very effectually ſhew forth the tortures of conſcience, which Popiſh doctrine calleth men into, ſo well knowne by fearefull examples, as I need not to ſtand upon it. Alſo the miſeries of the Time wherein the Locuſts ſhould ſwarme, fully expreſſed in Stories, which indeed made many a man and woman weary of life. The little ſhort time of Queene Mary her raigne, how full it was of vexation and griefe, is not, nor cannot be forgotten.

Apoc. 9. 5.

2 Tim. 3. 8.

Apoc. 9. 6.

Apoc. 9. 7. Thirdly, in the place of the Revelation it is ſaid, the forme of the Locuſts was like unto horſes prepared unto battell. And ſee how it reſembleth Romiſh Locuſts, Horſes are proud, ſo are they: Horſes are bold and ſturdie, fierce and cruell, not turning backe, but ruſhing forward; ſo are they bold and bloody, ſturdie and mercileſſe, not looking backe by repentance, but ruſhing forward in hardneſſe of heart. Horſes are fat and faire, and full of neighing; ſo are they. And for being prepared to battell, all Hiſtories ſhew, that warres they have cauſed, and ſtill doe, in the world; themſelves being Leaders, Captaines and Generals in them: whereas wee know, that the true Church of God (by the rule and example of the Goſpell) ought to be a Daughter of peace, not a Mother of debate; A forgiver of injuries, not a revenger of her ſelfe, or ſeeker of wars. The tragicall ſtory betwixt Fredericke the ſecond, and Gregory the ninth may ſerve (in ſtead of many) to prove, that wars and treacheries come from Rome. That horrible ſlaughter betwixt both ſides of thirty thouſand (the moſt Citizens of Rome) whom will it not move that readeth? This Pope was in the dayes of Henry the third, King of England. The open warres proclaimed againſt the Greeke Church, ſhew much. But I will lay down the very words of Pandolphus, who wrote in Italian the life of this Frederick the ſecond, that ſuch as have not the ſtory, may ſee this point fully; and I pray you mark them well. Truly, ſaith he, when I conſider with my ſelfe, that Chriſt (whoſe Vicar the Roman Biſhops boaſt thẽſelves to be) ſaid unto his Diſciples, that they ſhould follow him, & imitate his Example, as of their Maſter and Teacher; and commanded them further, that they ſhould not draw the ſword, but put the ſame into the ſcabbard; & gave thẽ in precept, that they ſhould not only forgive injuries ſeven times, but ſeventy times ſeven times, to thoſe that offended thẽ: & when I now compare the lives of the Biſhops of Rome, how neare they follow him, whoſe Vicars (they ſay) they are: and conſider ſo many, and ſo great conſpiracies, treaſons, rebellions, diſloyalties, lyings in waite, and treacherous devices; ſo many Legates of the Popes, being Eccleſiaſticall perſons, which will needs be called the Shepheards of Chriſt his Flocke, to be ſuch Warriors and Captains of Souldiers in all the parts of Italy, Campania, Apulia, Calabria, (being the Emperours Dominions,) in Picenum, Æmilia, Flaminia, and Lumbardie, to be ſent againſt him; Alſo, when with my ſelfe I meditate the deſtruction of ſo many great and famous Cities, the ſubverſion of ſuch common weales, the ſlaughter of ſo many men, & the effuſion of ſuch Chriſtian blood: Laſtly, when I behold ſo victorious, proſperous, and fortunate Emperors to be, and ſo many miſerable, infortunate & vanquiſhed Popes to be put to flight; I am perſwaded with my ſelfe to think and beleeve, that the judgments of God are ſecret and marvellous, and that to be true that Æneas Silvius writeth in his Hiſtory of Auſtria; that there is no great and marvellous clade, Matth. Paris, pag. 9.

Pandolphus his words.

no

no notorious and ſpeciall calamity (that hath hapned either to the Publike-weale, or elſe to the Church of God) whereof the Biſhops of Rome have not beene the Authors. Adde unto this that notable place in Micah, where ſpeaking of Gods true Church, it is ſaid, They ſhall breake their ſwords into mattocks, and their ſpeares into ſithes: that is, their fierce affections ſhall (by the power of the Word) be mortified, and brotherly love encreaſed, with deſire of peace and quietneſſe. But theſe men (even contrary) breake their mattocks into ſwords, and their ſithes into ſpeares, being ſo great, ſo fierce, ſo ambitious, and common Warriors, as they are. The ſtrange cruelties of Vrban the fift, making bloody and great warres upon many, and bringing them, by force, in ſubjection to him, I omit. Theſe things ſhew, how truely this Prophecie of the Apocalyps, (concerning Locuſts like unto horſes prepared to battell) agreeth to theſe Remiſh Locuſts, Popes, Cardinals, Legates, Monkes, Fryers, Prieſts, Ieſuites, and ſuch like. Nicholas Machiavel ſaith, all the ruinous calamities, and miſerable clades, that either Italy or whole Chriſtendome hath ſuffered, have been brought in by the Popes of Rome. A faire warning to all Gods people, to know them, and avoid them.

Fourthly, On their heads were (as it were) crownes like unto gold, and theſe have Shaven crowns, tokens (as they ſay) of their Prieſtly and Kingly dignity. Such Crownes are rightly ſaid by S. Iohn, to bee like Crownes, or Crownes indeed. Surely, right notes they are of Romiſh Locuſts, and that may ſuffice as many as will be warned by any thing. Apoc. 9. 7.

Fiftly, And their faces were like the faces of men, So are theſe: not terrible in ſhew, but courteous, kinde, fawning, flattering, watching, catching with ſmooth wiles to effect their purpoſe. They pretend all good, making men beleeve that they can bring them to true bleſſedneſſe, that they will teach them true Religion, true Devotion, and give them pardon for all ſinnes. So in Daniel it is ſaid, that to Antichriſt are given the eyes of a man, ſtill therefore marke how theſe properties hit. Apoc. 9. 7. Daniel 7. 8.

Sixtly, Their haire as the haire of women. So are theſe: they are delicious and wanton, full of light allurements, to trick and trim in ſilke and ſuites of their faſhion, that the very Perſians may ſeeme to give place unto them, when they are in their Pontificalibus, and gay attire: in a word, nothing may be ſaid more truely, than that their haire is like the haire of women: Their looſe life hath too much proofe. Apoc. 9. 8. See Auguſt. in Apocal.

Seventhly, But their teeth were as the teeth of Lyons. So are theſe: paſſing cruell, and beyond all the butchering Tyrants that Stories ſpeake of. No mercy, no bowels, no reſpect of age, ſexe or circumſtance, uſually reſpected of men that have any remnants of pitie. Their Inquiſition, Oh how mercileſſe? their new deviſed torments, (Oh) how ſtrange? Againe, their teeth may bee well ſaid to bee like Lyons, becauſe they devoured and eate up ſuch great things. Looke upon their Abbeyes, Priories, Nunneries, and all Religious Houſes; judge what teeth they had, and when there was not enough to ſatisfie them (of temporall Lands) then they preyed upon the Church, making Impropriations, the venome whereof remaineth yet. So that one way or other, they were planted and placed, ſeated and ſetled in the very fat of the earth: and had they continued ſtill, and not beene limited to five moneths, who, or what ſhould have eſcaped their Lyon-like teeth? Apoc. 9. 8.

Eightly, They had Habbergions, like to Habbergions of yron. And ſo have theſe, if you well mark them: for by theſe yron Breſt-plates are noted two properties, found in the Romiſh rabble. Firſt, a moſt obſtinate ſtubborneſſe, and inflexible frowardneſſe, not enduring any perſwaſion, not yeelding any way, but crying ever, The Church, the Church, I am ſetled, I am reſolved; and as a Captaine of theirs (an Engliſh Apoſtata) ſaid once; Heave at us whileſt you will, and whileſt you may, you ſhall never remove us. This is to have an Habbergion, or Breſt-plate of yron, or, even to be turned into yron. Bleſſed bee God who hath thus foretold us of this ſtiffe contumacy of theirs, to the end we ſhould take no offence, that they are not converted unto the Truth, but ſtand, and die in their wilfulneſſe. Secondly, they are defended by that Antichriſtian power, as it were by an Habbergion of yron, claiming an impunity, and immunity from all ſecular power and authority, and having (in readineſſe) curſes and threates of excommunication, even againſt the greateſt Princes, againſt all their ſubjects, who ſhall obey them; whereof many a wofull Tragedy hath followed. Againe, (themſelves) many of them have beene Princes yonger ſonnes, Noble-mens yonger ſons, greatly allyed and friended, ſo that (in regard of this power and ſtrength) they might truely be ſaid to have Habbergions of yron. Apoc. 9. 9.

Ninthly, The ſound of their wings was like the ſound of Chariots, when many horſes run unto battell. So have theſe wings, when they flie aloft by the name of Moſt Holy Fathers, moſt Bleſſed, moſt Excellent, and ſuch like; themſelves giving out, That they are more bleſſed than the Holy Virgin Mary, becauſe ſhe bare Chriſt but once, and they make him and beare him in their hands every day at the Altar. Thus flying with their light wings of proud Titles, they make ſuch a noiſe and ſound as Chariots drawne by many horſes into the battell. For, deny any of theſe things, and how violent, how vehement are they, by Diſputations, Excommunications, Suſpentions, and Sentences of death it ſelfe? Surely, no wheeles of Charriots can flaſh out fire ſo, as theſe men doe, if their Apoc. 9. 9.

their flickering wings of flattering Titles be touched. Fitly therefore the words of Saint John hit them. Their Scorpions tailes and power to hurt was touched before, therefore I omit it now.

Apoc.9.10.

The tenth marke is, Thoſe Locuſts have a King over them. And ſo have theſe Romiſh Locuſts their Pope, acknowledging no Magiſtrates authority over them, but exalting him, and exempting themſelves from all others. This King of the Locuſts is here called The Angell of the bottomleſſe pit: and in the eleventh Chapter, The Beaſt that commeth out of the bottomleſſe pit. Words of weight, to move all Popiſh mindes, if the Lord had not a purpoſe to deſtroy them. For they muſt needs acknowledge, ſuch a King is not worth the following: and, that their Pope is this King, that which hath been ſaid, and may further bee noted of him, clearly ſheweth. For he that croſſeth and cruſheth (to his utmoſt power) His doctrine that came from heaven, hee is the King that commeth out of Hell, in whom Saint Hierome ſaith, the Devill dwelleth bodily. But the Pope doth ſo, as proofe enough will manifeſt, and Ergo the concluſion followeth as I ſaid. His name alſo is told here, which giveth againe great light: For albeit the Pope bee called Holy Father, and ſo forth; yet indeed hee is a bloody Deſtroyer, and ſo his right Name in Hebrew is Abaddon, and in Greeke, Apollyon, that is, Deſtroying. Thus in the Prophecie of the Revelation hath God, you ſee, deſcribed a fearefull kinde of Locuſts, unto the conſideration whereof, by reaſon of theſe Ægyptian Locuſts or Graſhoppers wee have ſlipped, I hope, not without ſome encreaſe of feeling, how dreadfull their ſteppes bee, that continually walke in Romiſh wayes, and will not be reclaimed by any meanes. Our owne ſafer judgement God make us thankfull for, and continue the bleſſed helpes of our confirmation in this Truth, ever unto us, his holy and heavenly Word, a freedome to uſe all the profitable exerciſes thereof, (as preaching, hearing, reading, writing, praying, conference, and whatſoever elſe) without feare, under the ſweet ſmelling government of a gracious Prince, our dread Soveraigne. Amen, Amen.

Dan.7.6.12. Zach.11. Apoc.9.11.

Verſ.16.

10 Therefore Pharaoh called for Moſes and Aaron in haſte, and ſaid, I have ſinned againſt the Lord your God, and againſt you. And now forgive me my ſinne onely this once, and pray unto the Lord your God, that he may take from me this death onely. Thus the wicked in extremities ſeeke to Gods Miniſters, whom in their heart they hate and cannot abide. But this hypocriticall holineſſe of this diſſembling King, we have divers times noted before, and therefore may paſſe it over now. Yet marke the great vehemency of his words, and conſider in your minde, what a deepe ſinne Hypocriſie is, how diſagreeing from the nature of God, who is all Truth, and from that bleſſing in the Goſpell, of pure heart. Moſes yeeldeth againe to pray to God; And by a mighty ſtrong Weſt-winde the Graſhoppers were taken away, and violently caſt into the Red-ſea, ſo that there remained not ſo much as one in all the coaſt of Ægypt. But when it was done, Pharaoh ſhewed himſelfe in his old colour, and would not let them goe.

Matth.5.8. Verſ. 18,19.

The ninth Plague.

1 WHereupon the Lord ſpake againe to Moſes, and ſaid, Stretch out thine hand towards heaven, that there may be upon the Land of Ægypt darkneſſe, even darkneſſe that may be felt. Then Moſes ſtretched forth his hand towards heaven, and there was a blacke darkneſſe in the Land of Ægypt three dayes, no man ſaw another, neither roſe up from the place where he was for three dayes. The manner of this darkneſſe is deſcribed firſt in theſe words, even that may be felt: whereby either literally a very vile groſſe matter is meant (which indeed might be felt) or at leaſt ſo thicke, foggy and filthy, as was moſt noyſome, and might be ſaid (as it were) palpable. Secondly, ſuch it was as no man ſaw another, neither roſe up from the place where he was, which if it be taken literally (as is ſaid) was a moſt ſtrange and fearfull thing: and if figuratively, that it diſabled them to goe to worke abroad, (according to the Pſalme, The Sunne ariſeth, and man goeth forth to his labour) even that way alſo it was a great Plague. Thirdly, the time is noted, for the ſpace of three dayes: a great while to bee in ſuch a caſe as (were wee but one houre in) it would make the ſtrongeſt naturall man ſhake and bee amazed. Fourthly, in the booke of Wiſedome it is deſcribed by much feare in theſe words: When the unrighteous thought to have thy holy people in ſubjection, they were bound with the bands of darkneſſe and long night: and being ſhut up under the rooſe did lie there to eſcape the everlaſting providence. And while they thought to be hid in their darke ſinnes, they were ſcattered abroad in the darke covering of forgetfulneſſe; fearing horribly, and troubled with viſions. For the den that hid them, kept them not from feare: but the ſounds that were about them troubled them, and terrible viſions and ſorrowfull ſights did appeare. No power of the fire might give light, neither might the cleare flames of the Starres lighten the horrible night. According wherennto is that in Philo writen, Ignem domeſticum quo quotidie utimur, vel extinctum fuiſſe turbato aere, vel craſſiſſimis tenebris victum, ut nullum lumen caligo illa admitteret: That fire and candle was either quite extinguiſhed, or ſo overcome with the troubled ayre, that no light could be admitted in that darkneſſe. This then was the fearfull, and moſt fearfull manner of that darkneſſe: which maketh mee remember that great darkneſſe, which is ſaid to have beene

Wiſd.17.2,3,4,5.

Philo in vita Moſis in Exod.

bin in Hiſpaniola, when Columbus came thither the ſecond time, about the yeere of Chriſt 1493. And that which Tully writeth of to have bin in Sicily, Vt per biduum homo hominẽ non agnoſcere; that by the ſpace of 2 daies one man could not know another. All ſhould make us with thankful hearts acknowledge the mercy of God in this one benefit of light (amongſt infinit moe) that we enjoy, and humbling our ſoules under him, as the Lord of Light and darknes, Life and death, hell and Heaven, ſerve him in reverence and feare according to his will, all the daies of our life. S. Auguſtine and others goe further in the meditation of this darkneſſe of Ægypt, and ſay, that it was a ſigne of the darknes of their minds then, and a plaine ſhadow of their wofull night of ignorance and blindneſſe, that is over ſome men in all times, and admitteth no light. For the Ægyptians, it is manifeſt, that extreame was the fogge in their hearts, when ſuch wonders wrought no more. Such deepe ſecurity before puniſhment, ſuch inflexible obſtinacy in and under puniſhment, ſuch high pride after puniſhment, and ſuch a monſtrous diſſembling of repentance ever (which both deceiveth the beholders, and hurteth the uſers, as One well ſaith) argued darkneſſe of minde, thick and black, vehemently to be prayed againſt by all that wiſh to have ſaved ſoules in that great day of God. And for us in theſe times, and ſo ever to the worlds end, we are all to conſider, that our Ignorance is darkneſſe indeed, and that very great darknes, ſo termed by God himſelfe, more dangerous than this of Ægypt, in that the ſoule is hereby deſtroyed, and by that only the body was annoyed. Whereupon, by this horror in Ægypt, we may take occaſion to conſider of our ſelves, and by that darkneſſe (noted to be ſuch a plague) to thinke whether our darknes be a vertue? The light of the body is the Eye (ſaith our Saviour Chriſt:) If then the eye be ſingle, thy whole body ſhall be light. But if thine eye be wicked (or evill) then all thy body ſhall be dark. Wherefore if the light that is in thee be darkneſſe, how great is that darkneſſe? Now as the Eye is to the body, ſo is the judgement of the mind to the whole life; and therefore darkneſſe in judgement, moſt dangerous. Saint Paul in like ſort noteth Ignorance by the name and fruit of darkneſſe, when he ſaith of the Gentiles to the Epheſians, that their underſtanding was darkned, and they ſtrangers from the life of God, through the ignorance that was in them. And of the Epheſians themſelves, Ye were once darkneſſe, but now are ye light in the Lord; walke as the children of light. Many other places in the Scripture ſay the like, terming ſtill and ever ignorance to be darkneſſe, and noting an inward darkneſſe in man, of his minde, as well as an outward, of his eye. Which may make us thinke, why God ſhould ſo ſpeake, and by conſideration thereof (he ever ſpeaking moſt fitly) draw us to the obſervance of certaine properties, wherein there is agreement betwixt inward and outward darkneſſe. Firſt, outward darkneſſe hindereth our eyes from diſcerning the outward objects, which by them ſhould be diſcerned, and therefore have their name tenebra, à tenendo, becauſe they hold the eye from doing his duty; ſo doth Ignorance (our inward darkneſſe) hold and hinder our judgement (which, as an eye, ſhould guide our actions) from diſcerning things fit to be done, and fit to be left undone; whereby, as blinde men, we fall into many ditches, that is, we commit and omit, doe and leave undone many things contrary to our duties, both to God and man.

Mat. 6. 22, 23. Luke 11. 34.

Epheſ. 4. 18. Epheſ. 5. 8.

Secondly, outward darkneſſe hindereth our going and walking about our worke, or for our health and comfort: For he that walketh in darkneſſe cannot tell whither he goeth, ſaith Chriſt; and it is true in this ſenſe: ſo Ignorance (the inward darkneſſe) hindreth our judgements, our hearts and minds from going and walking through the ſweet fields of true comforts, true knowledg, and heavenly meditations; for in this ſenſe alſo our Saviours words are true, A blind man (thus) knoweth not whither he goeth. A darke judgement, and a blinde heart knoweth not, feeleth not, taſteth not the pleaſant pathes of knowledge, either in matters Humane or Divine. Miſerable therefore is this darkneſſe, and a wofull effect of our fall in Adam, to be prayed againſt, and laboured againſt, as much as we poſſibly can, although (whileſt we live) we ſhall groane under part of it, knowing but in part, and ſeeing but in part, in this life, as the Apoſtle teacheth us.

Iohn 12. 35.

1 Cor. 12. 9.

Thirdly, outward darkneſſe maketh men fall, and that often with great hurt, even unto death: ſo doth inward darkneſſe of the mind make men fall with ſo much perill, by how much the fall of ſoule is worſe than the fall of body, and death eternall worſe than temporall. Let their way be dark and ſlippery, ſaid David in the Pſalme, as a meanes (both the one way and the other) to bring men to confuſion.

Fourthly, outward darkneſſe worketh in ſome horror and feare (we know it by experience:) even ſo with inward darkneſſe, if you obſerve either Scripture or experience: Scripture, when it is ſaid, They ſhall feare where no feare is, (meaning by the darkneſſe and ignorance of judgement:) Experience in Caine, who (through ignorance) cryed with horror and feare, My ſinne is greater than can be forgiven; and in many deare children of God, who quake and quiver under the taſte and touch of ſinne, not yet able to reach by the light of mind (becauſe God will exerciſe them) to the ſweetneſſe and riches of Gods mercy, revealed in his promiſes. Examples are many, but a ſecret meditation in your ſelfe of what you know, may beſt ſerve.

Fiftly and laſtly, outward darkneſſe in ſome others (cleane contrary) worketh boldneſſe and ſecurity, and is the deadly bane of modeſty and honeſty. As when the man that breaketh wedlock thinketh thinketh thus in his heart, who ſeeth me? I am compaſſed about with darkneſſe, the walls cover me, no body ſeeth me, whom need I to feare? the moſt High will not remember my ſins, &c. So doth inward darkeneſſe of judgement and heart (in ſome men) make boldneſſe above meaſure to aske, to ſpeake, to defend and publiſh what were better paſſed over and buried with peace of Church and Common-wealth. They ſee not in darkneſſe what they doe, but pleaſing themſelves in a miſ-conceit, for want of true judgement, build up the Tower of Babel very violently, to their great ſhame and reproofe, both with God and man. Fitly then you ſee (in regard of theſe properties, and many others) is Ignorance called darkneſſe by the holy Ghoſt, and thereby wee admoniſhed to pray and labour againſt it, as a plague of God, not unlike to this of Ægypt: which juſtly may occaſion your next meditation to be, How it groweth, that we may the better eſchew and prevent it. This will likewiſe appear by conſidering the cauſes of outward darkneſſe, and ſeeing whether there be not the like of inward darkneſſe. Firſt then, outward darkneſſe (or blindnes of the body) groweth in ſome by birth, as the blind man in Iohn, healed by our Saviour Chriſt, and many daily experiences before our eyes: even ſo doth inward darkneſſe grow in us all, from our birth, by the fall of Adam, that moſt excellent light and knowledge (wherein he was created) being loſt by him, both to himſelfe and all his poſterity, untill the Lord renue us in knowledge after his Image, as he created us at firſt according to the ſame by knowledge.

Syrach. 23. 18.

Coloſſ. 3. 10.

Secondly, outward darkneſſe groweth ſometimes by too much gazing upon bright and gliſtering things, as (in experience) we finde by white ſnow, white paper, and the like: ſo doth inward darkneſſe grow alſo by fixing the minde too much upon the gliſtering glory of this world, the pompes and pleaſures that ſhine in it. Proofe hereof that rich Glutton, that rich Barne-builder in the Goſpell, and that Turne-coate Demas, of whom Saint Paul ſpeaketh, who all were blinde, you plainly ſee, with gazing too much upon this tempting world. And how many amongſt us, men and women, be in this ſort blinde, hee knoweth who ſhall judge both quicke and dead, and who cannot be deceived by any colours. Good it is therefore to take heed betime, and to turne away the eye from ſo hurtfull an object, duly and truly conſidering the nature of it. It is tranſitory and abideth not, it is vaine and vile, pleaſe it never ſo much; ſo have all found it that have gone before us, ſo ſhall we find it, and all that ever ſhall follow after us. A Map of the world hath Kingdomes and Countries very beautifully ſet out in it, Cities, Churches and Towers were deſcribed lively in variable colours, yet all but paper, and one drop of water will deface the greateſt Princes Palace in it: So is this world (which men love ſo much) indeed very Paper, that is, very vain and fickle: And that heart which hath furniſhed it ſelfe with all theſe Caſtles and Towers (through a wicked love and longing for them) one fit of an Ague will ſhake & ſhiver in ſuch ſort, as no pleaſure ſhall remaine of all theſe things. In the meane time, Religion there is none where this love is, neither any fellowſhip with the Almighty. For as hot Summer-weather maketh our inward heat leſſe (by ſuffering it to evaporate) than Winters cold doth, which keepeth it in; ſo doth this world fawning upon us, and the love of it living in us, eat out all zeale and piety, leaving us colder within, than adverſity and the want of the world doth. And, Love God and the world too, we cannot, ſaith Saint Iohn: David clogged with Saul his Armour, ſaid, He could not goe: and therefore put it all off againe: Even ſo aſſuredly can no man march towards heaven, if his heart be buckled and faſtned to this world, till hee lay aſide that hinderance from him. That ſpeech of Saint Cyprian ſhould much be marked in this point, Arridet mundus, ut ſæviat; blanditur ut fallat; allicit ut occidat; extollit ut deprimat. Vna hæc placida, ſolida, firma, & perpetua ſecuritas, ſi quicquid in rebus humanis ſublime & magnũ videtur, oculis ad cœlum elatis infra conſcientiam tuam jacere, poſſis gloriari. This curſed world fawneth, that it may be cruell; flattereth that it may deceive; allureth that it may kill; and lifteth up that it may throw down. Wherefore this only is ſweet, ſound, firme, and during ſecurity, if thou canſt truly avow, that whatſoever ſeemeth great and glorious in this world, with thine eyes lifted up to heaven thou haſt caſt and throwne under thy heart; ſo that it ſhall not preſſe downe thee, but thou wilt tread upon it in a religious contempt thereof, by compariſon with heaven and heavenly joyes. Saint Auguſtine his ſpeech alſo is worthy remembring, Vnicuiq; tempeſtas eſt ſua cupiditas. Amas Deum? Ambulas ſuper mare. Amas ſæculum? Abſorbebit te. Amatores ſuos vorare novit, potare non novit: Every mans luſt (or vehement deſire) is a tempeſt to him (like unto that in the Goſpell, whereof Peter being afraid, began to ſinke;) Loveſt thou God? Then thou walkeſt upon the ſea. Loveſt thou the world? then thou ſinkeſt, and this ſea will ſwallow thee up. The world knoweth how to devour her Lovers, but not how to refreſh them and doe them good. I might goe further in this cauſe of darknes (if it were needful) but this ſufficeth to ſhew you the way how to meditate further on it

1 Iohn 2. 15.

A third way, whereby outward blindneſſe groweth, is by long being in darkneſſe, as in priſon, or elſewhere: for (by experience) it is ſo found often. Even ſo by long cuſtome of walking and living in the outward works of darkneſſe, groweth a ſtrong and thick inward darkeneſſe in the heart of man and woman. Proofe hereof, Ahab, Manaſſes, Herod, Iudas, and ſuch like, too many alſo (in our dayes) who having long uſed Swearing, Lying, Uncleanneſſe, &c. are growne ſo blinde in them, that they neither will leave them, neither be perſwaded they tend ſo to their deſtruction as they doe. Theſe blind creatures ſhrinke to heare of this Ægyptian darkneſſe, and yet their owne ten thouſand times worſe, they never ſhake at. Let it make us remember the words of wiſe Syrach, A man that is accuſtomed to opprobrious words, will never be reformed all the dayes of his life. Why? Becauſe Cuſtome of ſinning taketh away the ſenſe of ſinning, and long abode in darkneſſe maketh ſtarke blind: Accuſtome not thy mouth therefore, ſaith he, to ſwearing, neither take up for a cuſtome the naming of the holy One. Where ſtill marke the word Cuſtome, cuſtome, and ſee what a deſtroyer it is of the ſight (the inward ſight and light, I meane) of our hearts and minds. Syrach. 23. 15.

Fourthly, over-much heat may hurt the bodily eyes, as we all know the hot dung did Toby his eyes: Even ſo over-hot deſires of gain hurteth the inward light, as we know, both by that which hath beene ſaid touching the world, and by that which Saint Paul ſaith, that they which will be rich, fall into temptations and ſnares, and into many fooliſh and noyſome luſts, which drown men in perdition and deſtruction: For the deſire of money is the roote of all evill, which (while ſome luſted after) they erred from the Faith, and pierced themſelves thorow with many ſorrowes. They that will be rich, I ſay againe, and (I pray you) mark the Apoſtles words, that is, they which have reſolved with themſelves, ſet their hearts upon it and concluded it, that by hab or nab, by one way or other, whatſoever it coſt them they will be rich, and have the wealth they poſſibly can attaine to. Theſe, theſe men with this Will, (this reſolved Will) fall into temptations, and ſo forth. For this is a kinde of peſtilent heat within, which as powerfully thruſteth out the inward eye and light of the minde, as ever any outward heate did the eye of the body. And then the inward eye being out, nothing but darkneſſe is there, and ſo a falling into all dangerous courſes, that may leade to deſtruction and perdition. Then Vſury is no ſinne; no, not uſury upon uſury; oppreſſion and deceit be no ſinnes, ſtealth and robbery, (if it may be any way coloured) is wiſdome, and well; yea, murther and bloud bite not. But is the Lord of heaven pleaſed with this ſinfull Will to be rich, and with theſe exorbitant wayes? Or is this heate a pleaſing heate unto him, becauſe he is ſlow to wrath and vengeance? No, no, and that ſhall the end declare, both upon the wealth and the houſe, that this dealing is in appointed time. In the meane while we are taught by this place to Timothy, to beware of ſuch a Will, and of ſuch an inward heate, as cauſeth ſuch inward blindneſſe. Soone enough, if well enough, ſay wee ever; and for theſe tranſitory things, as we brought them not into the world, ſo ſhall we not carry them out of the world. Balam, Gehezi, Iudas, and ſuch like, preach unto us to beware of goods evill gotten. A darkneſſe then you ſee there is within, as well as without; and more dangerous farre is the inward, becauſe it hideth from us things of greater conſequence, than doth the outward. Not to ſee credenda, agenda, & cavenda, things to be beleeved, things to be performed, and things to be avoided, is a horrible darkeneſſe. Caine ſaw not the firſt, and Solomons fooliſh yong man led as an Oxe to the ſlaughter, and as a foole to the ſtockes, ſaw neither the ſecond, nor the third. Wherefore the Lord (in great mercy) hath ever beene carefull to furniſh us with meanes and helpes againſt it. Firſt, he created us (as hath been ſhewed) with light and knowledge moſt excellent; hee provided a great Book (even the Book of the world, created by him) wherein the inviſible things of him, that is, his eternall power and Godhead might be ſeene, and much excellent knowledge might be had: And this Booke remaineth ſtill, if we will reade in it, an enemy to darkneſſe. Of which Booke Clemens Alexandrinus ſpake, when he ſaid, Creatio mundi Scriptura Dei, The Creation of the world is Gods writing. Alſo that Antony (mentioned in the Story) unto whom a Philoſopher comming, and aſking him, what he did without bookes, he anſwered, O Philoſophe, meus codex eſt Natura creaturarum: qui adeſt cum voluero, verbaq; mihi relegit Dei: O Philoſopher, my booke is the Nature of all creatures: which book is ever preſent with me when I will, & delivereth to me the words of God. Here we ſee the moſt admirable quantity of the Sun and Stars; here we reade the variety, the qualities, the motion, and the continuance in order appointed of all creatures in Heaven, in Earth, and in the Sea; ſo as no man can be either weary of reading, or reade without great profit in this Booke. Nevertheleſſe, the Lord hath not here left us; but as unto the Star manifeſting the birth of his Son, he pleaſed to adde the Scriptures alſo, which witneſſed more particularly the time, place, &c. ſo hee hath over and beſides the Book of the Creation, given us another (more excellent by much) to drive from our hearts this damnable darkneſſe, and to keepe us in light, pleaſing to himſelfe, and profitable unto us. Of this Booke, far better we may uſe Da mihi Magiſtrum, Give me my Maſter; then Cyprian could uſe then, of Tertullians works. For this Booke paſſeth all Books that ever were or ſhall be, I mean, The Booke of Gods holy Bible, which Booke, ſaith Hierome, ſhall remaine with us, till wee be as the Angels in heaven. Goe we forward, and conſider how alſo to this Book he hath added Prophets, Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, Paſtors and Doctors in all times, to open and expound the ſame unto us, that by all meanes wee might be endued with light, love light, live in light, and die in light. Adde againe the appointing of the Sabbath day, wherein men ſhould reſt from their labours, and hearken to this Booke, together with the many precepts given to heare, to reade, to ſearch, to know, and underſtand, and not to be as Children, perceiving nothing. Thinke with your ſelfe often, how the little Infant groweth to ſtrength, able to goe by it ſelfe: is it not by ſucking and plucking his mothers breſt? Even ſo doth the childe of God grow to ſtrength of grace, and from grace to grace, by hanging continually upon theſe two breſts, the Old and New Teſtament. And as all men differ from bruite beaſts by reaſon and knowledge; ſo differeth one man from another, by more and more knowledge in this Booke. Woe be to thoſe Teachers then that lull us aſleep, and tell us that Ignorance is the mother of Devotion, that give us not leave either to reade or pray, or to doe any duty in a tongue that we know, but like thoſe curſed Scribes and Phariſes, thoſe Hypocrites, ſhut up the Kingdome of Heaven before men, neither going in themſelves, nor ſuffering others that would enter, to come in. Let this now ſpoken make us ſee their fault, and that miſery ſo to live; as alſo this moſt ſweet bleſſing of knowledge now vouchſafed to us by the mercy of God, through the happy government of his annointed Servant, our deare and dread Soveraigne; and ſending up to God our thankfull thoughts, both for it and him, and begging the continuance of both long and long unto us.

Mat. 23. 13.

Verſe 23. 2 It followeth in your Chapter, But all the Children of Iſrael had light where they dwelt. Which ſurely was a very admirable thing, the houſes of Ægyptians and Iſraelites joyning (as it ſhould ſeeme) one cloſe to another, as ours in theſe dayes doe. For elſe why ſhould the bloud be ſtriken upon the door-poſts of the Iſraelites, for a ſign to the deſtroying Angell, where to kill, & where to paſſe over, if all the Iſraelites had dwelt by themſelves, and had not beene mingled with the Ægyptians? This mind was Gregory Nyſſen of, and therefore he ſaith, Non tantum in Goſen, ubi communiter morabantur, ſed cum inter Ægyptios promiſcuè etiam habitarent; & in hoc maximum miraculũ: Not only in Goſhen, where only Iſraelites (for the moſt part) dwelled, but among the Ægyptians being mingled and dwelling together; the Iſraelites had light, and the Ægyptians darkneſſe: and herein was the greateſt miracle. The good wee may take by this ſtrange work of God, is, firſt to learn how able our heavenly Father is to make a ſeparation betwixt his children and the wicked, when hee executeth wrath and juſtice, if his good pleaſure be ſo to doe: though they be in one field together, in one houſe together, and in one bed together; yet can hee chooſe the one, and refuſe the other. Wherefore true is that ſaying of the Pſalme; If his wrath be kindled but a little, Bleſſed are they that put their truſt in him. Feare wee not then in the time of Plague, of Warre, or other publique calamity, leſt wee ſhould periſh with the wicked, hand over head: but remember this place, and ſay in your heart with comfort and faith, O Lord my God, and gracious Father, I know thine able hand to make a ſeparation (if thou pleaſe) in this calamity, betwixt thy poore Lambes and the Goates, as thou diddeſt in that darkneſſe betwixt the Iſraelites and Ægyptians: therefore I flye unto thee in humble acknowledgement of my ſinnes, I begge that (if thy good pleaſure may be ſo) thou wouldeſt vouchſafe to ſave me from this Sword of thine, to let the light of thy mercy and loving countenance ſhine about my dwelling, as thy cheerefull light did about the Iſraelites: So ſhall my ſoule and heart ever praiſe thee and thank thee: But if otherwiſe, Lord and Father, thy will be done, and not mine; onely in the world to come acknowledge me, as I doe not doubt but thou wilt, and it ſhall ſuffice.

Mat. 24. 40, 41. Pſal. 2. 12.

Secondly, let this place be obſerved, as a very plaine Figure of that which wee ſee amongſt us every day. At one houſe dwelt an Ægyptian, and it was all dark; at the next an Iſraelite, and it was all light: ſo now at one houſe dwelleth a ſuperſtitious Recuſant, or a profane Atheiſt, and all is dark: at the very next houſe dwelleth a zealous Profeſſor of the truth, who readeth the Scriptures, heareth them preached, frequenteth the Sacraments, and faithfully laboureth, that himſelfe, with his whole family, may live according to the Word; and here is all light, which ſhall leade to the Light eternall with God and all his Hoaſt, when the good hour commeth. God ſtrengthen our hearts evermore in the love of this Light, and make us truly thankfull for theſe lightſome dayes. Amen.

There is nothing more common both in these Bookes of Moses, and other Bookes of Scripture, than to set that after, which (in precise order) was to goe before; so is it in this place. For what now is said in these first eight verses of this Chapter, (by due order) should be put before the 28 vers. of the former Chapter; which if you doe, and bring in the 28. verse after those words in the 8. verse, (And after this I will depart) then the 29. verse of the former Chapter will follow well, and after that, the end of the 8. verse of this Chapter, to wit, So he went out from Pharaoh very angry, &c.

1 Sam. 23.
Esay 38.
2 King. 18.

The chiefe heads of this Chapter are these three.

1 A Denunciation of a new plague.
2 An admonition to the Israelites what to doe.
3 The Plague it selfe.

CONcerning the first, it is contained (as you see) in these words, Yet will I bring one plague more upon Pharaoh and Ægypt. And to make use to our selves of it, you that are acquainted (by your private reading) with the Course of the Scriptures, very well know the manner of Gods dealing in this matter, from the beginning to the end. First, how mild it was, then how (by degrees) it encreased to sharper and sharper, till the deliverance of his Church and people were effected. At the first he appointed Moses and Aaron with the Elders of Israel, to goe to Pharaoh, and to entreat him mildly and dutifully, saying; The Lord God of the Hebrewes hath met with us, we pray thee therefore let us goe three daies journey into the Wildernesse, that we may sacrifice unto the Lord our God. But this praying would not serve, wherefore the Lord went neerer them, and by great and powerfull wonders, yet by degrees touched them, and not with the greatest at the first. He caused Moses rod to be turned to a Serpent, &c. A thing that hurt them not, yet in all reason should have moved them. Then he turned their waters into bloud, which did somewhat touch them. After, when that prevailed not, he annoyed them with filthy Frogs, and so still, you know, by degrees, untill he had brought nine fearfull plagues upon the Land. But as you also know, none of them all would work the deliverance of the Church, but still with an hardned heart, as soone as any plague was removed, Pharaoh returned to disobedience against the Lord. Whereupon at length God came to these words, Yet will I bring one plague more: as if he should have said, notwithstanding that all these former works can prevaile nothing with Pharaoh, yet let him not think that he can be too hard for me; for he shall well finde that I both can and will be too hard for him, I have yet one plague more, which I will bring upon him, and that shall so stoope him, that hee shall not onely let my people goe, but shall be most glad of the dispatch of them. See we then in these things for our own use, the course and proceeding which ever (from the beginning) the Lord hath used, and ever will unto the end, as he shall see occasion: even first in mercy to intreat, and in mildnes (by more gentle means) to allure; then in the end, by power and judgement to compell, when the former course will not serve. In the first age, when the old world would not be reformed, but more and more provoked him to wrath, by taking wives descended of wicked parents, more regarding in a fleshly sensuality outward beauty, than inward vertue, the Lord said, His Spirit shall no longer strive with man, meaning, with lenity & gentlenes, as unto that time it had done, but now he would bring upon them his one plague more, as here upon Ægypt, which should be indeed a stooping plague, (as here this was) & should suffice to crush crooked disobedience, and to pull down haughty pride, as was meete; That was, the Great flood which destroyed man, womon, and child, saving eight persons appointed to be saved. When Sodome and Gomorrah would not be warned by any way of mercy and patience, used by a gracious God unto them many yeers, then that one plague more of fire and brimstone from heaven came, and stooped them, and burnt them to ashes as they deserved. Iezabel had faire warnings to amend her life, to love religion, to leave Idolatry, and to become a better woman both to God and the world, many a yeere before her fall came, (Eliah that worthy Prophet living by her, and doing great workes to shew that God was with him) yet nothing would serve. Therefore, at the last, came the stooping plague, and she was thrown down at the window, where the dogs did eat her up all, saving the scull, feet, and palms of her hands. A dreadfull example of Gods wrath upon a sinner, when mild and mercifull waies to amend him, will not serve. Manasses, a King of great ungodlinesse (as you see in the story) at length was brought by the stooping plague of Iron fetters and bondage, to be humbled and repent, as was fit for him. What gracious dealing did God first use towards Nebuchadnezzar in forewarning him by a dream, what should be the end of his wicked life, then to provide Daniel for him, both to expound the same unto him, and to give him that good advice ſpecified in the Text, even to break off his ſins by righteouſneſſe, and his iniquities by mercy towards the poor, and that there might be an healing of his error? yet all would not ſerve, but he went on, and offended God more and more, as you ſee in the 27. verſe. Wherefore God brought upon him his ſtooping plague, and drave him from among men, to have his dwelling among the beaſts of the field, to eate graſſe as the Oxen, & to have his body wet with the dew of heaven, till his haire was growne as Eagles feathers, and his nails like unto birds claws. By which one plague more, the Lord, as you know, brought him home and humbled him. Let us come unto that fearefull example of Jeruſalem, the wofulleſt ſtory that ever pen committed to paper. What preaching and teaching had they firſt vouchſafed unto them? What Prophets and men of God, full of grace and power lived among them? Yea, even the Sonne of God himſelfe, Chriſt Jeſus, they had in the fleſh to converſe with them, who both by Doctrine and miracles moſt admirable, offered them life and comfort, and laboured to draw them from their danger; but all would not ſerve, They killed the Prophets, and ſtoned them which were ſent unto them, they deſpiſed all, and with bloudy hands crucified the Lord of life himſelfe, in a moſt high contempt of God, and all his offered grace. What remained therefore, but that the Lord ſhould draw forth his laſt plague, his one plague more, his ſtooping plague, as here he did againſt Pharaoh, and to make ſuch a rebellious people know themſelves? So hee did, and ſent againſt them Titus the ſon of Veſpatian, with the Romane power, who beſieged their City at ſuch a time as the greateſt concourſe was there, brought them to famine, and ſuch miſery as never befell any people in this world but them, and in the end utterly overthrew them all, their City, and glory, and whatſoever had exalted it ſelfe againſt God. O miſery! Who can reade it, or ſpeak of it with dry eyes? When once they began to iſſue out, compelled with famine, they were ſtill taken and crucified upon croſſes, and Gibbets ſet up before the wals, that they which were within might ſee them, and give over, but yet they would not. Five hundred a day were thus hanged up, till there were neither trees to be gotten, nor any more ſpace left to ſet them in; amongſt whom, no doubt, were the children of thoſe that cryed againſt our Saviour, Crucifie him, crucifie him, his bloud be upon us and upon our children. They regarded not God his Sonne, and God regarded not their ſons when time came. The number of dead bodies unburied, and the multitude of other miſeries was ſo great, that Titus himſelfe ſhaked at it, and lifting up his hands to heaven, cryed, O Lord, O Lord, this is not my doing, as if he ſhould have ſaid, it is thy wrath and judgement, thy juſtice and vengeance purſuing this people, or elſe it could never be thus. Certaine of them getting meat, for compaſſion ſake, in the Camp of the enemies, were yet ſo proſecuted with this anger of God, that when they hoped their lives were in ſome ſafety, ſuddenly in the night, by the bloudy ſouldiers, imagining that ſure they had gold and jewels within them, which they had ſwallowed to convey them for their uſe, were miſerably ſlaine, and ſlit up, their bowels raked in, for that which haply was not there, to the number of two thouſand in one night, which ſore grieved the Generall Titus when hee heard of it. There was a deſire to know the number of the dead carkaſes carryed out of the City, for want of buriall to be throwne in ditches, as dung upon the earth, but the number was numberleſſe, and no way to know it certainly; but out of one gate, the Keeper had noted to be carried out a hundred and fiftie thouſand dead bodies. Which miſerable creatures before they dyed, were driven to eate the leather of their ſhooes, the leather of their girdles, the leather of their bucklers and targets, the dung of the ſtable, and in the end, their very children. A ſtooping plague indeed, and never to bee forgotten of Gods people that heare it, but to bee uſed as a mighty motive to ſtir up their hearts ever, to a due feare of that power, that can thus cruſh them, if they will rebell againſt him. Now appeared an uſe of our Saviours words, when going to his paſſion, he ſaid, Daughters of Hieruſalem, weep not for mee, but for your ſelves and your children. For behold, the dayes will come when men ſhall ſay, Bleſſed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave ſuck. Then ſhall they begin to ſay to the mountains, fall on us; and to the hils, cover us, &c. which was now verified in a moſt wofull miſery. Let never ſinners then provoke the Lord in this manner, but ſo profit by his eaſier croſſes laid upon them, and by his long ſuffering patience vouchſafed towards them, as theſe great and terrible teſtimonies of his anger may be ever far and far from them. For, if not, aſſuredly hee is the ſame ſtill, as mighty as ever, as juſt as ever, and he hath his ſtooping plague remaining for every man and woman which will rebell.

Math. 27. 25.
Luke 23. 28, 29, 30.

Thus have you ſeene the Lords manner in former times. Come now to our ſelves, and theſe times. Surely the Lord is all one, and his dealings all one even with us. For he firſt entreateth us by his Word, the mildeſt way that poſſibly can be, when a man or woman ſitting in the Church ſhall feele God by the Preachers ſpeech in his or her boſome, and yet no man living know it, no not the Preacher himſelfe, that hee hitteth upon them. Then if this doth not ſerve, the Lord commeth neerer, and layeth upon us his eaſier croſſes, yet greater and greater by degrees. Our friends grow unkinde, our ſervants unfaithfull, our children undutifull, our goods abate, and our health changeth to ſickneſſe and griefe. And if theſe alſo become unprofitable (as too often they are) then the Lord goeth to his Quiver, and taketh out a ſtrong arrow to ſhoot at us; as The ſweating ſickneſſe, The devouring plague, or ſuch like, which ſhall at once ſweepe the earth cleane from ſuch rebelling ſpirits, and ſtoope us unto Hell, becauſe unto Heaven we would never be brought, this you have ſeene to be true in ſome part with your owne eyes, and therefore wee ought to thinke of it earneſtly for our amendment. Happy is the man who taketh his time to turne to his God, that he may be ſaved!

I reade of One, that ſaid, he had but one Booke, and the ſame booke had but two leaves, a white leafe, and a red; yet could he never reade quite over thoſe two leaves, though hee lived many yeares, and reade diligently, ſo much matter was contained in them. For, in the white leafe, hee ſaid, were laid downe all the mercies and favours of God vouchſafed to mankinde, either in generall, or particular: And in the red leafe all his fearfull judgments powred out upon ſinners, which were diſobedient, and would not be reformed. This Booke hath beene in all ages, and godly perſons have made a care to reade in it. David looked upon the White leafe, and ſaw (firſt) ſuch heapes of mercies towards mankinde in generall, that he cryed, Lord, what is Man that thou art mindfull of him? And the ſonne of man that thou viſiteſt him? For, thou haſt made him little lower than God, and crowned him with glory and worſhip, Thou haſt made him to have dominion in the works of thy hands: thou haſt put all things under his feet; All ſheep and oxen; yea, and the beaſts of the field; the fowles of the ayre, and the fiſh of the ſea, with that which paſſeth through the pathes of the ſeas Then in particular towards himſelfe, he ſaw alſo ſuch goodneſſe, as that he likewiſe cried, Who am I ô Lord God, & what is my houſe, that thou haſt brought me hitherto? with all the reſt that followeth in the place worthy your reading fully over by your ſelfe. In the Red leafe, he read ſo many judgments of God as that he prayed; Enter not into judgment with thy ſervant, ô Lord, for no fleſh living can be juſtified in thy ſight. If thou Lord ſhalt mark what is done amiſſe, ô Lord, who may abide it? Have mercy upon me, ô Lord, according to thy loving kindnes, & according to the multitude of thy compaſſions put away mine iniquities. Iacob reade in this Booke, and ſeeing in the white leafe Gods gracious goodneſſe towards him, ſaid; O Lord, over this river did I come with my ſtaffe, and now have I gotten two bands. I am not worthy of the leaſt of all the mercies, & all the truth, which thou haſt ſhewed unto thy ſervant. In the red leafe alſo he ſaw ſuch grietes as it had pleaſed God to exerciſe him withall, and told the King that his dayes had bin but few and evill, and he had not attained unto the years of the life of his Fathers; yet was he then an hundred and thirty yeares old. Others alſo have done the like, ſeeing the infinite favours of God, and theſe fearfull puniſhments, Two and thirty thouſand deſtroyed for the Golden Calfe, to teach men to beware of Idolatry: threeſcore and ten thouſand deſtroyed with the plague for Davids numbring the people, to teach men to beware of pride and vaine confidence in any earthly thing: Corah, Dathan, and Abiram with their families ſwallowed up alive with the gaping earth; to teach men to take heed of murmuring againſt authority: and that which is in the Goſpell, Bind him hand and foot, to teach us that what parts are joyned in vitio, they ſhall aſſuredly be joyned in ſupplicio. Sinne together and bee puniſhed together, is a reckoning that ſhall not faile. Wherefore, ſince things are thus, as well in our dayes, as in former times, what remaineth but that this knowledge humble us under his mighty hand, that can ever ſtoop us at his pleaſure. Let us remember the words of David, and uſe them as our owne, Agnoſco iniquitatem, &c. I know my iniquities, and my ſinne is ever before me. Lord rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chaſten me in thy diſpleaſure, &c. Let us remember that good ſaying of the Father, Non litigando, ſed flendo Deum vincimus; We overcome God not by ſtriving with him, but by weeping before him. The ſtubborne oake is torne by the rootes, when the bowing reede ſtandeth ſtill. Never can the lower part of the wheele come upward, unleſſe the upper part goe downward: neither ever can a man in his death bee glorified, unleſſe in his life he be truely humbled. You remember the fable of the wiſe foxe, who would not viſite the ſicke Lyon, becauſe he ſaw not any come out that went in; Let it profit you much to beware of Hell, from whence you knew never any returne that went thither. Now is the time to thinke of theſe things, the continuance in Hell is for ever, and the paine there is without meaſure. Better late than never to thinke of it. Our Bookes tell us of a light woman, who ſpending her time in ſinne, deſired her wicked Aſſociate to beſtow on her a new gowne, which when hee did ſticke at, ſhe inſtantly anſwered, Doe I deſperately caſt away both body and ſoule for ever to content thee, and doſt thou miſerably deny ſo ſmall a requeſt to me? I will looke to my ſelfe hereafter better, and avoid thee in this wicked life; which if ſhe did, it was a happy denyall made unto her. But certain it is that God hath many waies to pull ſuch out of the fire, as he will have ſaved. The like wee reade of a covetous Father, who raking up richer very diſorderly, ſuddenly (God purpoſing mercy towards him) called for his eldeſt ſonne, and for a chafing-diſh of coales, requiring his ſonne to put his finger in, and to burne it off. At the firſt he thought his father had but jeaſted, but perceiving in the end his ſetled reſolution, he prayed to bee excuſed, hee might not doe it. To whom then earneſtly his Father anſwered, and ſhall I to make thee a great man in the world, ſo heape up riches by all unlawfull meanes, that I am ſure eternally to burne both body and ſoule, & thou not endure the loſſe of one finger for me? I will alter my courſe in time, and conſider of that which hereafter cannot bee redreſſed. Were it true, or were it a fiction, to to a wiſe man it carrieth a morall with it. Sweet is our God if we will returne; and as yet it is day, that we may returne. Were thy ſinnes as red as ſcarlet, ſaith he, I will make them as white as ſnow. The ſacrifice of God is a troubled ſpirit; A broken and contrite heart hee ſhall never deſpiſe. Ioſiah his heart melted, and he found it ſo. Ezechias ſorrowed, and he found it ſo. Peter wept bitterly, and he found it ſo. Never any ſorrowing ſinner but he found it ſo. God then (in mercy) ſo ſtoop us by his Spirit, that his outward Stoopings may ever be farre from us. This example of Pharaoh preacheth unto us to be wiſe.

Verſe 1. Secondly, conſider theſe words, When he letteth you goe, he ſhall at once chaſe you hence. That is, he ſhall haſte you away without condition, ſtop or ſtay at all. It is ever ſweet to the ſervants of God, to obſerve this mighty power and out-ſtretched arme over all his enemies, when once hee ſetteth on to doe a thing. As here how hee was able not onely to give his people paſſage; but to make Pharaoh as glad to rid them away, as ever he was deſirous to hold them. So in Geneſis Gen 20.2,7,8. when Abimelech had taken Abrahams wife, (ſuppoſing ſhe had beene but his ſiſter) God cauſed him not onely to reſtore her without any injury, but he waas up very early in the morning, ſaith the ſtory, to ſee it to be done, that is, hee haſted to doe it, and had no reſt in his minde till it was done. What comfort then in this God ever? what reſt and peace in relying upon him? what aſſurance of that end, iſſue, victory, and deliverance that he (in his wiſedome) ſhall know to be beſt for us, ſeeing he is thus able? Lord make us patient then, willing to tarry thy leaſure, and ever contented with thy pleaſure. For thou canſt doe for us what thou wilt, and when thou wilt, all 1King.13.4,6. earthly pride muſt ſtoope to thee; and if Ieroboam ſtretch out his hand againſt thy Prophet, thou canſt make him never pucke it backe againe till the Prophet pray for him. Who hath reſiſted him and had peace, (ſaith Iob?) The Lord of Hoaſts hath decreed it, and who can diſappoint it (ſaith the Prophet?) God would have Ioſeph exalted, his brethren ſtorme at it, and practiſe againſt it; but all in vaine, when time commeth it muſt bee ſo. Saul grieveth that David is likely to ſucceed him; but all in vaine, it muſt be ſo. The Jewes worke againſt Chriſt, yet to no end: for the Lords purpoſe muſt come to paſſe. The farther you to goe in this meditation, the ſweeter ſhall you finde it.

The ſecond part.

1 THe ſecond generall head of this Chapter (I ſaid) was an Admonition to the Iſraelites, what to doe betweene the Denunciation of another plague, and the execution of the ſame; Verſe 2. Even every man to require of his neighbor, and every woman of her neighbour Iewels of ſilver, and Iewels of gold; Which they did, and were greatly inriched by them. Concerning which matter, remember with your ſelfe what was foretold foure hundred yeares agoe to Abraham: namely, That his ſeed ſhould be ſtrangers in a ſtrange land ſo many yeares; but in the end ſhould come forth Chap. 2.36. with great ſubſtance. Now was it fulfilled (as you may ſee) in the next Chapter, (So they ſpoyled the Ægyptians: Noting by the word of (ſpoyling) a very great meaſure of riches in things deſired. We may rightly ground this comfort upon it: that bee the time never ſo long before he doe it; yet ever in the end God will performe what he hath promiſed, and never faile. Foure hundred yeares ſpace ſhall not hinder, but that at laſt his truth ſhall appeare. Apply it then to what moſt may eaſe you, and be aſſured he is the ſame. In matter of ſinne you have his promiſe, As I live, I will not the death of a ſinner, &c. He ſhall never breake it, and therefore be comforted. In matter of want you have his promiſe, All theſe things ſhall be miniſtred unto you; And you are better than many ſparrowes, &c. Reſt upon it, He is ever true. In matter of triall you have his promiſe, He will never lay more upon you than he will make you able to beare. Joy in it, and know, that he cannot lie, his word ſhall ſtand, and you ſhall finde it.

2 But a Queſtion is moved, whether it was lawfull for the Iſraelites thus to doe, or no? and, whether we may imitate them and doe the like? whereunto divers men make divers anſwers, and we may take profit by them all. Baſil ſaith, Hebræi honeſta aſtutia ad Ægyptijs mercedem operarum ſuarum receperunt, qua hactenus defraudati fuerunt. The Hebrewes by an honeſt craft received of the Ægyptians recompence for their labours, whereof hitherto they had beene defrauded. Which ſpeech (without reference to the commandement of God) cannot well 1 Theſſ.4.6. ſtand. For the Apoſtles rule is plaine, That no man oppreſſe or defraud his brother in any matter: for the Lord is an avenger of all ſuch things. To lend is a duty neceſſary, when wee can doe it, and not arbitrary, as appeareth by the Law made for recompence in caſe of hurt done to the thing lent: which would never have beene done, had it beene at our pleaſure. It is alſo a part of our love to our neighbour, and a breach of the eighth commandement, to deny when I may lend. Wherefore that which Auguſtine ſaith of the rich man may be truely alſo ſaid of one that will not lend, Dives ille non dãnatur quod aliena tulerit; ſed quod egenti ſua non tribuerit; & ad petenda minima pervenit, qui hic parva negavit. That rich man was not condemned becauſe he tooke frõ others what was not his own, but becauſe he gave not to others what was his own; & he was driven to aske leſſer things, who here denyed little things. But it is withall a duty againe (on the other ſide) truely truely to reſtore what is borrowed; and kindly to make recompence for any hurt done. Craft and cunning (in matter of borrowing and lending) I like not to call honeſt. Ioſephus hath another opinion in his Antiquities, namely, that the Ægyptians did freely give theſe things to the Iſraelites, partly to be ridde of them without any further death, for they ſaid, we ſhall dye all, and partly in a remorſe for the paſſed wrongs which they had done unto them ſo long. The firſt reaſon may teach us to prefer our lives before any worldly traſh whatſoever; (which yet many among us will not doe;) but ſparing money in meate, in apparell, in Phyſicke, in healthy dwelling, and ſuch like, caſt away the maine chance, which is their life, and loſe all. Mezentius his cruelty is ſaid to have beene this, To tie a quicke man to a dead, till the dead ſhould kill the quicke. And ſurely it is Satans cruelty (at this day) to locke ſome ſo faſt to their dead treaſure, that in the end they periſh by it, and that eternally. Saint Auguſtines ſpeech is too true, Mundus clamat, Ego deficiam; Caro clamat, Ego inficiam; Diabolus clamat, Ego decipiam; Chriſtus clamat, Ego reficiam, &c. The World crieth, I will faile thee; the Fleſh cryeth, I will infect thee; the Devill cryeth, I will deceive thee; Chriſt cryeth, I will refreſh thee; and yet for one that will follow Chriſt, the other three ſhall have many. The ſecond reaſon may draw us to the like remorſe when ever there ſhall be the like occaſion. For it was a grace of God in David that his heart ſmote him when he had ſinned; and in thoſe Jewes that they were pricked: In the King, that he would aske what had beene done for Mordecai in recompence of his faithfull ſervice, then read of in that Chronicle. Our injuries are many, and our favours few, but thankfull requitals pleaſe God and man. An aged Maſter and Miſtris (under whom you grew up to be able to live) ſhould not be forgotten when God maketh you rich and them poore. Among the vertues of David this was not the leaſt, that he carefully enquired for ſome of Sauls houſe to whom he might ſhew kindneſſe, for Ionathans ſake, &c. The third opinion in this Queſtion is Saint Auguſtines, whereof I like beſt, becauſe expreſly it mentioneth the commandement of God, which indeed was all in all in this point. Hoc Deus juſſit, qui noverat quid quemq; pati oportebat, nec Iſraelitæ in hoc furtum fecerunt, ſed Deo jubenti miniſterium præbuerunt: This God commanded, who well knew what was fit for every man to ſuffer, neither did the Iſraelites in this commit any ſtealth, but yeeld their obedience to God commanding. To the ſame end ſpeaketh Nazianzen alſo: Rapuerunt ſpolia ab eo, qui dicit, meum eſt argentum, meum eſt aurum: They tooke theſe ſpoyles by the warrant of him, who ſaith, ſilver is mine, gold is mine. Rupertus ſaith, Mercedem quam illi injuſtè detinuerunt, hi juſtè abſtulerunt: The wages which they unjuſtly withheld, theſe Iſraelites juſtly tooke away. But that could not be without warrant of Gods commandement, and therefore that muſt neceſſarily be underſtood. Which being ſo, we plainly here ſee (to our comfort) how carefull God is to have his Children well recompenced for either the wrongs which they have ſuſtained, or the faithfull ſervice which they have performed. The Ægyptians, when they leaſt thinke of it, ſhall recompence them here, and that fully. Iacob was thus regarded alſo, you know, by God for his honeſt ſervice to Laban, when the ſheep brought forth young of party colour, till he was encreaſed exceedingly, and had many flocks, Maid-ſervants, and Men-ſervants, Camels and Aſſes. Neither ever ſhall any Servant, Artificer or painfull man finde it otherwiſe, if hee walke in his place, as in the ſight of God, doing his duty. God can doe it, God will doe it, and men ſhould be ſtaid with it both from idleneſſe, and untruth in their dealings.

Chap. 12. 33.

Acts 2. 37.

Gen. 30. 39. 43.

3 Another ſweet thing wee may alſo ſee by this point; namely, how croſſes and loſſes (by a gratious God) are turned in time to his childrens joy and gaine. Abraham had no Child in many yeares, and to him it was a great griefe; but in the end he had one given, of whom came the bleſſing of all Nations, and a multitude like the ſtarres of heaven (for number) ſo was griefe turned into joy to Abraham. Iacob loſt his Ioſeph looking upon his bloody coate brought home by his brethren, and ô woe of woes! but Iacob had afterward his Ioſeph againe, with which joy the Scripture ſaith, the ſpirit of Iacob revived. Anna likewiſe was barren, to her great griefe; but in the end ſhe had a Samuel, to her unſpeakable joy. David endured many ſharpe ſhowres, but at laſt he hath the Crowne, and many comforts. Mordecai his feare, and Queene Heſters feare, how ended they with joy to themſelves and the whole Nation? Tarry then Gods time, and live in his feare: you ſee what a ſweet Regarder hee is in time of his Childrens woes.

Gen. 45. 27.

4 But how came it to paſſe that the Ægyptians ſo willingly parted with ſuch things, when they were asked? The Text anſwereth, and telleth you, becauſe the Lord gave the Iſraelites favour in the ſight of the Ægyptians. So are all hearts in his hand, and he turneth them ever as hee pleaſeth, for his Childrens comfort. To Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob, he wrought favour in ſtrange places with the greateſt, and with the ſmalleſt. Nehemia found grace with the great King by his working: Ioſeph, Daniel, and many moe. And the Lord giveth grace and worſhip, ſaith the Pſalme, withholding no good thing from them that live a godly life. Flattery and bribery may get fading friends; but when the Lord worketh favour, the comfort is great, and the favour is permanent.

Pſa. 84.

5 For our imitation of this Act, the matter is ſoone anſwered: what they did here had warrant warrant from him, whoſe will is Regula juſtitiæ, the Rule of right, and they did well. But ſuch extraordinary things may not bee followed, when the like warrant is wanting. Yet in ſome ſort we may learne of them, namely, to borrow of the Heathens, Philoſphers, Orators, Aſtronomers, or the like, the beſt jewels they have, and to apply them to the ſervice of God, as theſe Iſraelites did (afterward) theſe Ægyptian jewels. For Divinity is a Lady and Queene which ought to be ſerved by all other Sciences, and ſo, as ſervants to her, they to be uſed. Where I remember the ſaying of our old Countrey-man Beda, writing upon the Kings: Turbat acumen legentium, & deficere cogit, qui eos à legendis ſæcularibus libris omnibus modis exiſtimat prohibendos, in quibus ſi quæ inventa ſunt utilia, quaſi ſua ſumere licet. Alioquin Moſes & Daniel ſapientia & literis Ægyptiorum Chaldeorumque non paterentur erudiri, quarum tamen ſuperſtitiones & delicias horrebant; nec etiam ipſe Magiſter Gentium aliquot verſus Poetarum ſuis vel ſcripturis, vel dictis indidiſſet, &c. He troubleth the minde of the Readers, and maketh them faint, who thinketh they ſhould be altogether inhibited from reading of humane writers, in which if there be any profitable things found, a man may take them as his owne. Otherwiſe Moſes and Daniel ſhould never have ſuffered themſelves to bee inſtructed in the wiſedome of the Ægyptians and Chaldeans, whoſe ſuperſtitions and delights they abhorred: Neither would the Doctor of the Gentiles, (S. Paul) have interlaced ſome verſes of the Gentiles, either in his writings, or in his ſpeeches. More of which matter if you deſire to ſee, I referre you to S. Auguſtine, who ſpeaketh at large of it, with many others. Onely let there be no vaine oſtentation in the uſe of them, but remember ever S. Bernards words, Sunt qui ſcire volunt, ut ſciantur, & vanitas eſt: Sunt qui ſcire volunt, ut ſciant, & curioſitas eſt: Sunt qui ſcire volunt, ut lucrentur, & cupiditas eſt: Sed ſunt qui ſcire volunt, ut edificent, vel edificentur, & charitas eſt: There are that deſire to know, that they may be knowne, and it is vanity: There are which deſire to know, that they may but know, and it is curioſity: There are which deſire to know, that they may gaine by their knowledge, and it is covetouſneſſe: But there are which deſire to know, that they may edifie others, or may be edified, and it is charity. Thus uſing humane Writers we ſhall no more offend, if wee robbe them of ſome jewels, than theſe Iſraelites did in ſpoiling the Ægyptians.

6 Laſtly, concerning the words, (that Moſes was very great in the Land of Ægypt, in the ſight of Pharaohs ſervants, and in the ſight of the people.) They firſt anſwer the Queſtion, why Pharaoh did not kill Moſes? Even becauſe he durſt not, in reſpect of the opinion held of him by the multitude, as often is ſaid in the Goſpell, they forbare to doe ſuch things, becauſe they feared the people: beſides the ſecret over-ruling hand of God. Againe, they ſhew how God can make his ſervants dreadfull, and honoured of as many as he will, notwithſtanding any contempts offered them by others. Yea ſo he honoured Moſes here, as ſtories ſay, Pharaohs Daughter was accounted in the number of the gods, for bringing ſuch a man up. Thirdly, they ſhew that as wicked men ſtand in awe of God often, and outwardly profeſſe affection to him, yet doe not ſubmit themſelves to his will; ſo often are his ſervants honoured alſo of men with an inward conceit of them that they are honeſt men, when yet their doctrine will not be yeelded unto. So doth God inwardly imprint their owne damnation in their hearts, making them void of all excuſe in not obeying them whom they did approve for Gods grace in them, and with them. Remember what you reade in the Goſpell of Herod, touching John Baptiſt, namely, that Herod feared Iohn, knowing that he was a juſt man and an holy, and reverenced him, and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly. Many things, ſaith the Text, not all things, for he would not put away his brothers wife for all the reverence he bare to Iohn: and therefore in himſelfe he condemned himſelfe by this reverence, &c.

Mauke 6.20.

The third part of this Chapter.

THe third generall head of this Chapter, I ſaid, was the plague it ſelfe denounced. Wherein (firſt) we may conſider the time; namely, that it was in the night. For at midnight, ſaid God, I will goe forth into the midſt of Ægypt, and all the firſt borne in the Land of Ægypt ſhall die. Why in the night? but that we might learne how as well in the night as in the day the Lord executeth both Iudgment and Mercy. Iudgment, as we ſee in Ioſhua his direction againſt Ai, whereby their fearefull overthrow followed: many thouſands of them being devoured by the ſword, and their City conſumed with fire: So when they ſlept, the wrath of God waked, and marched towards them ſpeedily. So againe the five Kings, in the night God directed his ſervant againſt them, who came upon them ſuddenly, and deſtroyed them with a great ſlaughter. Thou foole, this night ſhall they take away thy ſoule, and then whoſe are all theſe, &c. Other Kingdomes and Countries about us what fearefull night-cries have they had, when wee ſleepe in peace, wiſedome and thankfulneſſe ſhould conſider. Then for mercies in like manner you ſee the Scriptures. Salomon had that comfortable conference with God in the night, wherein God granted him the thing he ſought for, appearing to him in a dreame, and ſo forth, as you read there. Daniel in the night found mercy with God to have the Kings dreame revealed unto him. Peter in the night was delivered from from danger: and Paul and Silas in the night finging a Pſalme, found the comfort there ſpoken of. So both judgement and mercy wake and walke in the night. The uſe whereof unto us ſhould be ever to ſtirre us up both to goe to bed as we ought, and to uſe the night as the godly have done. For the firſt, take Davids example, I will lay me downe and take my reſt, for it is thou Lord onely that makeſt me dwell in ſafety. And for the ſecond, hee alſo in many Pſalmes may inſtruct you. For every night, ſaith he in one Pſalme, waſh I my bed, and water my couch with teares: yea, I make my bed ſwim with teares, for ſo will the words beare, which David did not for any puſillanimity or weakneſſe: (for you know he was a man of valiant courage;) but onely out of a ſweet feeling hee had in his right meditation of the great goodneſſe of God towards him many wayes, and his owne too great inability to doe to him againe for the ſame, as he deſired. And what better time can wee take to plow up the fallow ground of our hearts before him, and to conſider his favours and our faults: opening even all our woes and griefes unto him? that as the night naturally is moiſt and ſhowry more than the day; ſo we likewiſe may raine downe abundance of teares, praying for our ſinnes, and thanking him for his goodneſſe, knowing it as a moſt aſſured truth, that no dew of the night can ſo glad the earth, as this ſweet moiſture of thy wet eye in theſe reſpects doth pleaſe thy God. Good therefore was that counſell of a moſt honourable Father to his Child, that above all other times hee ſhould have a care in the quiet night to talke with his God. David goeth on in another Pſalme, and ſaith, I have thought upon the Lord in the night ſeaſon, and remembred him when I was waking. At midnight will I riſe to give thankes to thee, becauſe of thy righteous Iudgements. In the night I commune with mine owne heart, and ſearch out my ſpirits. With my ſoule have I deſired thee in the night: ſaith the ſong of the faithfull. And all theſe things ſhould be our inſtruction. In Iob it is ſaid, God giveth ſongs in the night, and it is a place much to be thought on. Therefore I ſay againe, ſince mercy and judgement thus ſtirre in the night; the one for his children, the other for his enemies: awake thou that ſleepeſt in moſt dull ſecurity, going to thy bed as the dogge to his kennell, without any thought either of God or of Devill. Full little knoweſt thou what may happen unto thee before it bee day. It may bee with thee as with theſe firſt borne, with the five Kings, with the City of Ai, &c. Thy ſelfe may be dead, thy houſes on fire, thy goods ſpoiled, thy children deſtroyed, and a thouſand wofull miſeries upon thy friends. Wherefore goe to bed with prayer, awake with prayer, and ariſe with prayer. Let God and grace be in my firſt thoughts, and not anger and wrath, not ſheepe and Oxen, not money and mucke, which ſhall all periſh with thee when God is angry. Wee ſee how the faithfull have done before us, and let it ſuffice in this point concerning the time when this plague was executed.

2 The ſecond thing is the Plague it ſelfe, which was the death of the firſt borne. To make uſe of it to our ſelves, let us conſider how great a griefe it is to have any child die; and that to have the eldeſt and firſt borne to die, is commonly a griefe much greater; but yet this was not all the griefe of the Ægyptians. For beſides the particular griefe of any one, to have it generall through the whole Land, and not to know whether God would there ſtay, or extend his wrath upon them all (for they ſaid, we all ſhall die) this was a thing moſt full of feare and woe. So by all theſe circumſtances the judgement was terrible upon them, and to them, paſt our feeling and conceit, except the Lord aſſiſt our underſtanding and feeling. But why, will ſome ſay, ſeeing wee all owe a death to God firſt or laſt, young or old, and all degrees? I anſwer, that death (in it ſelfe) to any grounded upon God is neither hurtfull nor fearfull, (yet nature is nature when the ſeparation commeth, and we are all allowed to mourne for them that die:) but when death commeth with a circumſtance or ſhew of Gods anger, in manner, or ſuddenneſſe, or ſuch like, then is there not that comfort which we otherwiſe have. For example ſake, Lot knew well his wife muſt die, but to ſee her changed ſo ſuddenly and ſtrangely into a pillar of ſalt, was very fearfull and diſcomfortable both to him and all her friends. Thoſe ſonnes of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, their father knew full well muſt have a death, but to ſee them both together ſuddenly ſlaine by a fire from God, judge in your heart what a griefe it was. Corah, Dathan and Abiram muſt have died, and no friend of theirs but well knew it, yet to have the earth open and ſwallow them up with all their families, ô what a dreadfull ſpectacle was it? Adde unto theſe thoſe tormentors which dyed with the flames flaſhing out of the fiery furnace, whereinto they had caſt the three ſervants of God; thoſe accuſers of Daniel, who were caſt into the Lyons den, & ſhaken in peeces ere they came to the ground; Ananias and Saphira his wife ſuddenly ſmitten by the hand of God. This Pharaoh here, and ſo many of his Nobles and people drowned and overwhelmed in the red ſea, were they not all full of woe & griefe to friends, more than if they had dyed orderly without any circumſtance of Gods anger? Surely they were. And the beſt learned are of opinion, that David ſo doubled his cry for Abſolon, more in regard of the manner of his death, than of the death it ſelfe. For he dyed in rebellion againſt his natuall father & King, he was hanged by the haire of his head betwixt heaven and earth in a tree, till his enemies came and ſtabbed him through again and againe: There was no ſignes knowne of his repentance. Which all laid together and conſidered of a wiſe father, made his heart turne and overturne within him, crying, O my ſonne Abſolon, my ſonne, my ſonne Abſolon: would would God I had dyed for thee, O Abſolon, my ſonne, my ſonne! Conclude we therefore that though naturally wee muſt all dye, and there is nothing more ſure; yet either the kinde of death, or ſuddenneſſe may deprive friends of much comfort. So was it here in Ægypt for theſe firſt borne in every houſe.

3 But yet you will not judge (may ſome ſay) all that die a ſudden or extraordinary death. No indeed: For things revealed belong to us, and the Lords ſecrets appertaine to himſelfe. The Lords mercy is reſtrained neither to time nor manner: and the Apoſtle ſaith, What ſhall or can ſeparate a man or woman once grafted into Chriſt? Shall tribulation, or anguiſh, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſſe, or perill, or ſword? No, no, Neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things preſent, nor things to come, Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature can doe it. No ſuddenneſſe of death then, or extraordinary manner which may happen to the beſt, either by naturall cauſes in their bodies, or otherwiſe, as God ſhall pleaſe in his unſearchable wiſedome. But in ſuch caſes we are to remember (for our comfort) what Teſtimonies of Faith and Religion, of vertue and piety, they gave in their life time, and not reſt upon thoſe. The Lord is no changeling, but loveth to the end whom hee once loved, although ſuddenly they depart, and ſay nothing. Neverthleſſe we entreate the Lord (if it may bee his bleſſed will) to deliver and ſave us from ſudden death, and to give us ſpeech, memory and hearing to our laſt breath. Becauſe the laſt part is all in all of this tranſitory life, and being once gone, cannot be reſtored againe, (as a Carpenter can pull downe his houſe, if he diſlike it, and make it new againe.) Alſo becauſe it fareth with us in this point, as with the Archer, who though hee ayme at the marke never ſo right, and draw up his bow never ſo ſtedfaſtly; yet, if his looſe bee not good, but his hand ſtarteth aſide, and ſwerveth at the point, hee miſſeth. So wee in death (which is our laſt looſe) not guided by Gods holy Spirit, may marre all. And therefore wee pray, and ever ſhould pray, that till our end, and in our end the Lord would uphold us in our ſtrength, and give us a gracious departure in him. For, as for that vaine Fable of helpe after death in Purgatory, it ſerved to rake up the fat of the earth to thoſe idle bellies, and to ſhift away (with faire words and promiſes) thoſe poore ſoules which ſhaked and quaked after all their workes, not finding any ſufficiency in them to appeaſe Gods wrath; who could never returne being dead, to tell them they lyed in ſo teaching the people that Maſſes and Trentals could help after death. But for us, we know the Scriptures; that as the tree falleth either towards the North, or towards the South, in the place where it falleth, there it ſhall be. Heaven we reade of, and Hell we reade of, but a third place we finde not. Lazarus was carried into Heaven, and the rich Glutton into Hell. They that have done well, ſaith the Catholike faith, ſhall goe into life everlaſting; & they that have done evill, into everlaſting fire. There is no third place there mentioned to be beleeved, and it is the Catholike faith, which except every man keep whole and undefiled, without doubt he ſhall periſh everlaſting. Let counterfeit Catholikes hold what they liſt, they heare the danger. S. Auguſtine agreeably hereunto ſaith, Repentance is only in this life. S. Cyprian alſo, Hic vel accipimus, vel amittimus vitam æternam, Here we either hold or loſe life eternall: meaning that if wee die well, we hold it; and if we die ill, we loſe it; there being no more helpe after death. S. Baſil again prettily ſaith, Poſt mercatum ſolutum nullus negotiatur: After the market is ended, there is neither buying nor ſelling; & whē I am dead, the market is ended with me. Wherefore let all our care be to take time while time ſerveth, to live well and doe well according to the rule preſcribed, and not according to our fancies or any mans invention, that a good life may have a good death, in Gods great mercie and goodneſſe. Then for the place, leave it to God, as alſo the manner; and remember well, that from every Kingdome and country, from every Towne and houſe, yea from all corners and places whatſoever, there is a ready way to heavē. To which agreeth that pretty conference betwixt the Husbandman and the Sayler; wherein the Husbandman asked whether the Sailers father lived or no? He anſwered, no. Where died he, ſaid the Husbandman? At ſea, ſaith the Sailer. And where your Grandfather? At ſea alſo. And where your great Grandfather? At ſea, ſtill ſaith the Sailer. Good Lord! (then ſaith the Husbandman) and doe you not feare to goe to ſea, ſince ſo many of your Anceſtors dyed there? I pray you, ſaith the Sayler, let me likewiſe know of you, before I anſwer you, whether your father live or no? And he anſwered, no. Where then dyed he? In his bed ſaith the Husbandman. And where your Grandfather, and great Grandfather? In their beds alſo, (ſaith hee) I thanke God. And, good Lord! (then ſaith the Sailor) are not you alſo afraid to goe to bed, ſince ſo many of your Anceſtors dyed there? So one queſtion quit another wittily; and both of them ſhould teach us, that no place can hurt a ſetled Chriſtian; but as well from ſea as land, the Lord can give a gracious paſſage to his Kingdome, which he in mercy grant us ever.

Rom. 8. 35, 38, 39.

In morte non eſt locus viciſſitudini.

4 In the death of the firſt borne, note againe the degrees of Gods puniſhments in theſe plagues. Firſt, he touched their water, ſent them Frogges, Flies, Lice, and ſuch other things, grievous indeed, but not ſo neare them as their goods. Secondly, the Lord touched their goods: A greater plague than the former, yet not ſo neare them as their owne bodies. Thirdly, therefore he touched their very bodies, by biles and bliſters, botches and ſoars, very grievous and ugly, yet he ſpared their lives.

But

But now, when all the former would not ſerve, He commeth to life it ſelfe, and ſmiteth all the firſt borne, that there was no houſe wherein was not death, and that of the deareſt. What may wee then ſee but a continuall encreaſing of Gods wrathfull ſcourges and rods, as long as we ſhall ſpurne againſt him, and not obey his holy will? Let it touch us and turne us, awake us and warne us to take up betimes. How long we have followed our owne waies, and caſt behind us the wayes of God, the Lord knoweth well, and we muſt alſo conſider, What croſſes and loſſes have likewiſe been impoſed upon us hitherto, ſhould be remembred. For they have all bin Gods Meſſengers as theſe plagues were to Pharaoh, to draw us to obedience, and if they will not ſerve, the Lord will write (as ſome Judges doe) ad graviora; that is, the Lord will encreaſe his wrath, as he did here, till it come to very life it ſelfe. Which being once loſt in his diſpleaſure, the ſoule alſo is loſt with the body, and both of them ſent to during woe for ever. Urge him then no further, as this curſed Pharaoh did, but to day if you will hear his voice, turn unto him in true amendment of life, and he ſhall turn unto you in mercy and love eternall.

5 Yea ſir, God may haply deale thus with ſome poore people for example ſake, but he will regard the better ſort of men & women who are of reputation in the world, and not bring theſe heavy things upon them. But no, (ſaith your Chapter here) for this plague muſt light upon all ſorts, from the firſt borne of Pharaoh whish ſitteth upon the throne, unto the firſt borne of the Maid-ſervant that grindeth at the Mill: yea, the Lord will not ſpare the very beaſts. No honours therefore or riches, no friends or ſtrength, no pompe or port in this world may defend from him, but he will ſmite all degrees, and therefore let all degrees profit by it. Hee will bring downe the mighty from their ſeats, and caſt even crownes unto the duſt. Gold and ſilver are droſſe before him, and nothing can helpe but a reformed heart. The ſacrifice of God is a troubled ſpirit. A broken and a contrite heart, the Lord ſhall never deſpiſe. Truſt to this, but bid all earthly titles ſtand aloofe, for they will not ſerve.

6 Then there ſhall be a great cry throughout all the Land of Ægypt, ſuch as was never none like, nor ſhall be. This is a conſequent of Gods plagues ever whereſoever they light, Cries and great cries, woes and great woes. But ſhall any good child offend his heavenly Father, till he force him to make him cry? Shall we not think of the dayes of truth and peace, till we heare in every corner of the ſtreet, kill, kill? God forbid. To learne by other mens harmes was ever yet accounted wiſedome, and therefore let theſe Ægyptian cryes ſo cry in our ears and our hearts continually, as our owne cryes (through the mercy of a gracious God) may never be heard any where.

7 But againſt the Children of Iſrael ſhall not a dog move his tongue, neither againſt man nor beaſt, that you may know how the Lord putteth difference between the Ægyptians and Iſrael. A bleſſed ſeparation by a ſweet Father! able to kindle in our hearts, if wee be alive, a burning flame of love and duty towards ſuch a God. The like wee ſaw in the plague of moraine, and the plague of darkneſſe before, the Cattell of the Iſraelites were ſafe, and they had light whereſoever they were. So ſtill, and ſo ever, if you marke the Scriptures, one way or other. Betwixt the old world and his ſervant Noe, what a difference was there put? Betwixt Lot and Sodome, how did the Lord diſtinguiſh? When God ſent Ioſeph before to provide for his Father againſt that great future famine, did he not put a difference betwixt his owne and others? When the Shunamite was ſo mercifully admoniſhed of the dearth to come, and willed to goe ſojourne where ſhe might, to prevent the danger, and when ſhee came backe againe ſo to helpe her to her land with all the meane profits by ſuch accident of the Kings talke with Gehazi, and her fit comming in with her Petition while they were talking. Who ſeeth not the finger of a ſweet God, putting a difference betweene the Iſraelites and the Ægyptians? that is, betwixt his owne and others? In that great deſtruction of Hieruſalem, had he not a little Pella by to ſave ſuch as it pleaſed him to pull out of that fire? Let us then never fear, we ſee he hath care of his own, and what he will do he can doe. If it be good for us to eſcape theſe worldly woes, we are as ſure we ſhal, as we are ſure we live. And if otherwiſe it pleaſe him to wrap us with others in the outward puniſhment, yet ſhall wee ever be ſure to be diſtinguiſhed from them in the eternall paine; and thoſe outward griefs ſhall be but meanes to leade us to laſting joyes. O cleave we then faſt unto him, for you ſee the difference of being religious, and of being profane, of loving the Word, and loathing the exerciſes of the ſame. And this difference here will make a fearfull difference in the world to come, when you cannot help it, had you the treaſure of all the earth to purchaſe your eaſe withall. No not one drop of water to coole your ſcalded tongue, ſhal you be able to get with all that ever you poſſeſſed in this world, for the love whereof (againſt all admonitions) you have loſt your ſelf for ever.

2 King. 8.

8 Laſtly, more power again you ſee of this mighty God, ver. 8. where he made the rebellious heart to ſtoope, and to ſeeke with entreaty what before could not be had with any petition, All thy ſervants (ſaith Moſes) ſhall come down unto me, and fall before me, ſaying, Get thee out, and all the people that are at thy feet. They ſhall ſeek and ſue, & beg & crave proſtrate before him, that with ſpeed they would depart. O glorious God, that canſt thus humble thy foes and make them fall before them whō erſt they ſcorned. Let us knit & glue us unto thee for ever. I am amazed at thy mercy, & I cannot ſpeak what I think. Lord increaſe our faith, & it ſhal ſuffice & be wel with us.

CHAP. XII.

The generall heads of this Chapter are chiefly three:

The Inſtitution of the Paſſeover.
The execution of the former plague.
The departure of the Iſraelites out of Ægypt.

Verſe 2.

OBſerve firſt the words in the ſecond verſe: This moneth ſhall be to you the beginning of moneths: it ſhall be to you the firſt moneth of the yeare. And herein remember how diverſly divers Nations and people haue made the beginning of the yeare. Some when the Spring began: Some at the Summer Solſtitium, or ſtay of the Sunne: Some at the Winter ſtay: And ſome from the Autumne or Harveſt time, which uſually is reckoned from the ſixt of Auguſt. The old Romanes (as did the Hebrewes) began their yeare in March; which order ſeemeth moſt agreeable to Nature, becauſe all things then begin to revive and ſhew forth their life and vigour. In regard whereof, ſome are of opinion that the time of the Creation of all things was then, and that the names of our Moneths, September, October, November, December, are as if it were ſaid, the 7. and 8. the 9. and the 10. from March, making March the firſt, and ſo reckoning from thence forward. But for other policies the Jewes reckoned alſo from September: Reade Ioſephus in his Antiquities, Chap. 4. and Hierome upon the third of Ezechiel, &c. With us in England the uſuall reckoning is from the firſt day of January, which wee call New-yeares day, yet the Merchants among us uſually begin from the 25. of March. So ſeverall places have ſeverall cuſtomes, and we muſt leave them.

2 Touching the Paſſeover: the Name in Hebrew is well expreſſed in Engliſh for our underſtanding, when it is called the Paſſeover: not the paſſing over into the Land of Promiſe; nor the paſſing over the Red ſea, whereof ſee Saint Auguſtine; but the Lords paſſing over, or the Angels paſſing over thoſe houſes which had the poſts ſtricken with blood. Therefore in the 11. verſe it is expreſly called the Lords Paſſeover, and ſo Lev. 23. 5. The time of the Inſtitution, was before their deliverance, becauſe things taught in affliction both better ſinke in us, and longer are remembred of us. The place where it was eaten now was in Ægypt, but after they were come into the Land of Promiſe, and ſetled, wee reade in Deut. thus, Thou maiſt not offer thy Paſſeover within any of the gates which the Lord thy God giveth thee; But in the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chooſe to place his name there, &c. Which place being at Hieruſalem, all reſorted thither at this Feaſt, and ſince Hieruſalem hath beene deſtroyed, they have not dared, write ſome, to offer elſewhere.

Aug. tract. 55. in Ioan.

Verſe 3.

Deut. 16. 5.

3 The manner of this Paſſeover, with the ſignification of every thing, is next to be thought of. Where you ſee firſt a meeke creature, ſo was Chriſt; it was a Lambe, a harmleſſe creature, ſo was Chriſt; a profitable creature, (by wooll to cloath us, and fleſh to feed us) ſo was Chriſt; his righteouſneſſe covereth, and his fleſh feedeth all thoſe that truly beleeve in him. That this Paſchall Lambe was a figure of Chriſt, remember Iohns words in the Goſpell: But when they came to Ieſus, and ſaw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs, that it might be fulfilled, not a bone of him ſhall be broken. Words written in this Chapter, verſe 46. of the Paſchall Lambe: and ſo Iohn maketh this a foreſhewing of that, and that a true fulfilling of this. In like ſort doth S. Paul when he ſaith, Our Paſſeover is offered up, ſpeaking of Chriſt. If the family were too little to eate a whole Lambe, then muſt they take their neighbours next unto them to make a fit number. Whereby was noted and figured, that Chriſt is not divided into divers families, Kingdomes and countries, but he doth unite and gather divers houſes and Nations to make one Church, even as here many did eate one Lambe. A comfortable figure, and worthy often remembrance. Wee may not divide the Lambe, but wee muſt gather our ſelves to the Lambe, and that is the true Church, where people are ſo gathered. Be ſure then of the Lambe, and not of the place where the Lamb once was, but now is not; and feed upon this Lambe in manner preſcribed; that is, beleeve in Chriſt according to the Scriptures, and be ſure you are right: other notes may deceive you, this will not. And if as yet you be not thus gathered, make no longer ſtay in ſo dangerous an eſtate, but be reformed, and bleſſe God for his truth.

Verſe 4.

Succeſſion of place.
Succeſſion of Doctrine.

Verſe 5.

4 Your Lambe ſhall be without blemiſh, ſaith the next verſe: firſt, to prefigure the purity and unſpottedneſſe of Chriſt free and cleane from ſinne. And ſecondly, to teach what a more excellent ranſome was to be had to ſave man from ſinne, than in all mankind was to be found, which wholly was ſinfull. In apiſh imitation of which immaculate purity, our profound Romiſts take great care that their cake be whole, round and ſound, not bitten or broken, but without blemiſh, as this Paſchall Lambe was: giving themſelves rather to aboliſhed ceremonies, than to the teaching of Chriſt now come, in whom theſe ceremonies had end. It muſt be a male, not a female; thereby figuring the ſpirituall ſtrength of Chriſt, according to which, the Prophet

Eſay

Eſay ſpake of him before, That he ſhould divide the ſpoile with the ſtrong, & that great numbers of Angels about the throne, even thouſand thouſands, ſaying, that he is worthy to receive power, and riches, and wiſdome, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and praiſe. Thirdly, the Lambe muſt be of a yeare old: thereby to prefigure our Saviours experience of infirmities and miſeries, which even a dayes continuance in this wretched world yeeldeth both to man and beaſt, much more of a yeare. Of which the Prophet alſo foretold, when hee ſaid of Chriſt, He is a man full of ſorrows, and hath experience of infirmities: Surely he hath born our infirmities, and carried our ſorrows, &c. Reade over the whole Chapter. Whereunto the Apoſtle agreeth againe, when he ſaith, We have not a High Prieſt which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities: but was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſin. The cõfort & uſe whereof followeth in the next verſe. Therefore let us goe boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may receive mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. And indeed a comfort of comforts it is, that in his owne body and our true nature, it pleaſed him thus to taſte out woes. For hee did it onely that we might be aſſured of his knowledge and love, that he both knoweth our caſe better than wee can expreſſe it, and in his love towards us will helpe and ſuccour us as ſhall be fit. Fourthly, Ye ſhall take it of the Lambs, or of the Kids, ſaith the Text. To ſhadow out, Chriſt ſhould be taken from amongſt the flock of ſinfull men, from whom he deſcended without ſin, as appeareth by the Scripture.

Eſay 53.12. Apoc.5.12. Eſay 53.3.4. Heb.4.15,16.

5 And you ſhall keep it unto the 14. day of this moneth, from the 10. day (wherein it was taken.) Whereby two things chiefly were figured. Firſt, that Chriſt ſhould not by and by ſuffer after hee was borne, but live and abide a certaine time in the world, and then dye, even as this Lambe taken up the tenth day, was not killed till the foureteenth day. All which, wee know, was fulfilled accordingly, hee being at the time of his paſſion about thirty and three yeares old. Secondly, it both ſerved to prepare their hearts to the right eating of it, being a remembrance before their eyes thoſe foure dayes before; and alſo to prefigure unto us with what meditation and preparation wee ought ever unto our lives end, come to the eating of the true Paſſeover (whereof this Lambe was but a ſhadow) in that holy Sacrament which is left unto us, as a remembrance of his paſſion for mankind. Other conceits have ſome writers, which I omit; onely I will remember his words that ſaith, Decimo quarto die immolabatur, quia tunc pleniluniũ eſt, & Luna recepta luminis ſui plenitudine Sole jam occidente, in Oriente conſurgit, quia moriente Chriſto Sole juſtitiæ, Eccleſia (quæ in Luna intelligitur) ad vitam conſurgit, &c. The fourteenth day this Lambe was offered, becauſe then the Moone being at full, and riſing in her full light when the Sunne was ſet, thereby might be ſhadowed that the Church (uſually ſignified by the Moone) riſeth with the light that ever ſhall endure in great fulneſſe after the ſetting of the Sunne. That is, by the death of Chriſt the true Sunne both of light and life, to all that faithfully beleeve in him.

Verſe 6.

See Beda in Exod. 11. and Galaſius in Exod. 12. upon theſe words. Radolph. lib. 10. in Levit. cap. 1. & lib. 16. cap. 2.

6 It was to be killed at night; and why at night more than any other time? Surely to note and remember unto them alwaies the time of their deliverance out of Ægypt, which was in the night. Againe, it might ſhadow out the time of Chriſt his comming in the fleſh, which was (as it were) in the Evening of the world, that is, in the laſt times, 1 Cor. 10. In regard whereof (as ſome have noted) many of his mercies and miracles were ſhewed upon men in the evening, or towards evening, as when it is ſaid in the Goſpell, When the even was come, they brought unto him many that were poſſeſſed with devils, and he caſt them out, &c. Likewiſe in Marke, when even was come, at what time the Sun ſetteth, they brought to him all that were diſeaſed, and he healed thẽ. Thus ſhewing by the time of the evening that he was indeed that health of mankind, which in the latter time ſhould come.

Mat.8.16. Marke 1.32.

7 The blood was to be ſprinkled and ſtriken upon the door poſts with a bunch of Hyſſop; that it might be a ſigne for the Lord to paſſe over their houſes by, when he executed wrath upon the Ægyptians. Non quod incorporea natura hujuſmodi ſignis egeret; ſed quia conveniebat, ut per ſymbolũ intelligerẽt illi providentiam Dei, &c. Not that God had any need of ſuch ſignes, but that by ſuch outward means it was comfortable to them to know, and be aſſured of Gods providence for their ſafety, ſaith Theodoret. And it figuratively ſhewed the effect and vertue of Chriſts bloud, the true Paſchall Lambe, ever to ſave from the deſtroying Angell, as many as ſhould be ſprincled with it, that is, ſhould make particular application of it to themſelves. For it is not the blood without ſprinkling will helpe: Chriſt dying for all ſufficiently, but not effectually, becauſe all take not hold of the fruit of him.

Verſe 7. 22. Verſ. 27. Queſt. in Exod. 24. Sufficienter, non efficaciter.

8 It was to be eaten roſt with fire, not raw, nor boyled, or ſodden in water. Very aptly ſhadowing the bitter paſſion which our Saviour ſhould endure, being indeed tormented in the moſt cruell manner they could, Cujus corpus acerbiſſimis cruciatibus in cruce inaſſatum ac veluti torrefactum erat: Whoſe body was roſted, and (as it were) broiled with bitter cruelties of deſpight and paine. Alſo it muſt be eaten with unleavened bread, that ſuch bread might put them ever in remembrance of the ſudden and haſty manner of their deliverance, when they were forced to carry their dough unleavened upon their backes, Verſe 34: Againe, becauſe Leaven ſignifieth both corrupt doctrine and corrupt manners, Matth. 16. 12. Therefore by unleavened bread was taught and ſhadowed that we muſt abſtaine from both, if wee will be worthy partakers of Chriſt in the Sacrament. Seven daies together to eate ſuch bread, ver. 15, 19, 20. repreſented unto them how ſerious and continued their meditation ſhould be of ſuch a great mercy as their deliverance was. And if they ſo of the ſhadow, what we of the truth, namely, of our deliverance frō Hell, Death, Devill, and Damnation? Is a light, ſhort, and perfunctory remembrance of theſe things once (at Eaſter) enough for a Chriſtian man or woman? no, no, and therefore carry another care with you, or elſe be aſſured, it will be eaſier for the Jew than for you in that day.

9 It was to be eaten with ſowre hearbs, to repreſent again the ſowrneſſe of the paſſion of Chriſt Jeſus, whoſe gripes and touching woes the Evangeliſts ſet out in many words, as that his ſoule was heavy unto the death, his cries ſtrong, O Father, Father, if it be poſſible let this cup paſſe from me; his prayer ſo vehement, his agony ſo great, that blood for ſweat burſt out of his face, and an Angell was ſent to comfort him. Were not theſe ſowre hearbs? &c. Others thinke they were willed to uſe theſe hearbs to put them ever in mind of their ſowre eſtate in the Land of Ægypt under Pharaoh and his Officers, out of all which miſery they were delivered by a gracious God; either the one uſe, or the other was fit.

Verſe 10. 10 Nothing muſt be reſerved till the morning; but if any were left, it was to be burned with fire: to ſhew both literally and myſtically, that both they and all true beleevers ſhould be fully delivered; they out of Ægypt, and both they and all the faithfull out of ſinnes Bondage by the true Paſchall Lambe. Wherefore, as then it ſhould have beene a grievous tranſgreſſion to reſerve part, and not wholly to eate it, making a diviſion of that which ought to be whole; ſo now is it as odious and damnable before God, to receive the Bread and not the Cup, as Popery teacheth to doe; or to affirme that Chriſt hath freed us from originall ſinne, but left us to make ſatisfaction for our other ſinnes, partly in this life, and partly in Purgatory. For this is not to eate the Lambe whole, but to make a diviſion, and to reſerve part till the morning. Their apiſh burning alſo their conſecrated Hoſts (upon occaſion) may here be thought upon; and more and more their abſurd imitations of theſe Moſaicall ceremonies be noted. Præcepit prius numeros ſufficientes ad eſum Agni ſimul immolare paſcha; docens eos fraternā charitatē & miſericordiā erga pauperes: Iam admonet ut reliquiæ carnium comburantur, nec ſerventur in poſterum diem: hoc pacto compellens illos accerſere egenos ad feſtum communiter celebrandum. Deinde, quòd vetat carnium quippiam relinqui in craſtinū, ſic intelligimus, quòd futura vita ſymbolis non indiget, ipſas enim res tunc intuebimur. He commanded before, ſaith Theodoret, a ſufficient number to eate the Paſſeover; teaching them thereby brotherly charity and mercy to the poore. Now hee admoniſheth, that what was left ſhould be burned, and not reſerved till the next day; ſo (as it were) compelling them to call the poore and needy to them. Againe, in that nothing muſt be left till the morrow, wee may underſtand by it, how in the life to come there ſhall be no uſe of ſignes, foraſmuch as wee ſhall behold the things themſelves. Now the Paſchall Lambe, you know, was a ſigne, &c.

Verſe 11. 11 They muſt eate it with their loyns girt, their ſhooes on their feet, their ſtaves in their hands, &c. That is, they muſt eate it like paſſengers and travellers ready to depart: figuring ſo in ſhew, that whoſoever is a right eater of the true Paſchal Lambe Chriſt Ieſus, by beleeving on him, hee muſt not ſtick downe his ſtaffe in this world, and ſay in his heart, It is good being here: but hee muſt ever eſteeme himſelfe as a Pilgrim and ſtranger, have his loynes girt, his ſhooes on, and his ſtaffe in his hand, ready to depart when the Lord calleth, without any looking backe unto Sodome, and ſinfull cleaving to this wicked world, for we have not here an abiding City. Which how they do, who make this world their god, much more thinking of it both by day and night, than they doe of God, would be thought of whilſt there is time to amend the fault. Surely this kinde of men and women eate not the Paſſeover as they ought, and therefore their danger is great. Note alſo (by the way) how he ſaith, it was the Lords Paſſeover, when it was but a Signe of his paſſing over, like unto that Gen. 17. ver. 13. with many more. Whether they ſate or ſtood, if you aske, I take it to be out of queſtion, that they ſtood: but afterward (when they were delivered) they ſate, as we read of Chriſt with his Diſciples. To give a reaſon whereof, ſome ſay that it was the manner of ſervants to ſtand, of free men to ſit; and therefore they now ſtood, as a token of their bondage and ſervitude in Ægypt: but afterward (being delivered) they ſate, in token of their freedome. Yet I rather thinke that they after ſate, becauſe they uſed (after the Paſſeover eaten) to take their owne ſupper, and to bid the poore to them, thankfully diſtributing Gods gifts, and rejoycing for Gods great mercies to them. We kneel at our eating, and it is the fitteſt and moſt ſeemely manner for us, offering to God our prayers and thankſgiving as we doe. When (in the 12. ver.) God ſaid, I will execute judgement upon all the gods of Ægypt; S. Hierome reporteth it out of the Hebrew writers, that in the very ſame night they departed out of Ægypt, Omnia Ægypti templa deſtructa fuiſſe, ſive terræ motu, ſive jactu fulminū: All the tēples of Ægypt were overthrown, either with earthquakes, or thunderbolts: Sed ulterius referunt Hebræi, eadē nocte lignea idola putrefacta fuiſſe, metallica reſoluta & fuſa, lapidea cōminuta: But farther alſo theſe Hebrew writers ſay, that in the ſame night all the woodē images were rottē, & all the metal images were diſſolved & molten, & all the ſtone images broken. Which ſurely were great works & judgments, if they were ſo.

Luke 12.35.

12 And

12 And in the first day shall be an holy Assembly: also in the seventh day, &c. Where we see the lawfull end and use of Holy daies; namely, to remember the mercies and favours of God, and to give him thankes, we being by our corruption too forgetfull. As for that of Saint Paul, Yee observe daies, and times, &c. It doth not condemne Holy daies by lawfull authority ordained for the ends above said: but Superstition and confidence in the worke. For well knew Saint Paul, these and the like daies observed in the Law with Gods good liking. We see also the reverence of such kinde of meetings by the title given them, of holy Assemblies; and how monstrously wee abuse them, when wee make them drunken assemblies, and cursed assemblies, by reason of all kinde of riot and abhomination used at them. A fearefull abuse if our hearts were flesh to feele it: fitter for Heathens and Pagans, and Devils incarnate than for Christian people that professe God, and say they look to be saved by Christ. For can we say in our consciences when wee come home, that we have kept an holy Assembly unto the Lord on these daies? aske but your selfe that question, and I trust there will much amendment follow of it. Mark also how God accepteth the dressing of our meat, and alloweth it to us on these daies, still considering (in his mercy) our necessity. But yet so we ought to dresse meat, that ever we have a care of the salvation of them that dresse it: who being created & redeemed as we our selves be, ought not so evermore to be kept at this service, as that never they may hear the Word, receive the Sacrament, and praise God in the congregation with his people. For that should be to eat the flesh of them, and to drink the blood of them most cruelly, yea to bury them in our bellies: and for our bodies to destroy their soules for ever. Rather remember Davids refusall to drink the water that was bought so dear; and provide so, that the one being done, the other may not be left undone. Which may, if they goe to Church by turues, or if your estate be such, by having exercise of these duties before they begin their worke in the morning, or before they dresse supper in the evening. This holy care in you shall greatly please God, and be a comfort to your conscience in your place, as to the Apostle in his, that you are free from the blood of your servants: free I say from the guilt of casting them away for the fleshly feeding of your body.

2 Sam. 23. 16.

13 Then Moses called all the Elders of Israel, and said unto them, choose out & take you for every of your bousholds a Lamb, and kill the Passeover, &c. What God had spoken to him, he now speaketh to the people. See therefore (in it) the office and authority of the Minister, What hee hath received, that to deliver, calling and requiring his people to come together to heare it, and if hee cannot conveniently have all, then at the least the Elders and chiefe, who both ought to come, and to their best ability assist him (their Pastor and Teacher) in any thing belonging to his duty. A fit remembrance for these dayes, wherein the best are usually the worst, that is, the heads and guides of a Parish, the Gentlemen (if there be any) the Freeholders, and Wealthier sort: for who wring and wrong the Minister, but these? who insult over him, and brow beate him, but these? who looke to be lawlesse, and without controulement but these? Their word must stand, not Gods word; they must teach, and not learne; and (at a word) instead of any assistance and concurrence with their Preacher, as was here in these Elders with Moses, they are the bitterest and sowrest hinderers that the Messenger and Minister of God hath. But doth not the Lord see it, or doth he see it and not regard it? No, no, He shall ever be true in his Word, and make them one day know and feele, that the abuse of his Minister in his service is the contempt of him, and that the very dust of their feete shall stand powerfull before him against the bodies and soules of these proud despisers, to condemne them and cast them into eternall woe. Therefore good it were for them to take up betimes, and to follow the advice of Gods holy Spirit by the mouth of Saint Paul given: Obey them that have the over-sight of you, and submit your selves: for they watch for your soules as they which must give accounts, that they may do it with joy, and not with griefe: for that is unprofitable for you. But I have not spoken these things generally, for I well know upon mine own knowledge many sweet and comfortable encouragers of their Preachers and Ministers, both of Gentlemen and others of the better sort. Let them that ate faulty amend in Gods feare, and the other goe forward to their great praise.

Mat. 10. 40.
Luke 10. 14, 16

Heb. 13. 17.

14 When ye shall come into the Land which the Lord will give you, as he hath promised, then you shall keep this service. And when your children aske you, what service is this you keep? Then you shall say, &c. If ever a man or woman forget God and duty, it is most to be feared in prosperity, when they have obtained what they desired, and what with longing looks they expected; or, as this Text speaketh, when they are are come into the Land of Promise. And therefore fitly doth Moses here admonish them to performe this duty, and to beware of the lulling sleepe of forgetfulnesse: which I wish every one that readeth this Note to apply to himselfe, and to make religious use of. For who knoweth not that the heyre (whilest his Father liveth) is often well given, commeth to the Church, favoureth the Minister, distributeth to the poore, disliketh bad servants, and ill company; yea, both in his heart thinketh, and with his mouth speaketh, That if Gods will be to bring him to the Land expected, to wit, into his Fathers place, surely and certainely hee will doe thus, and so, that is, very many good things shall flow from him. But when GOD hath given him his desire, who forgetteth like this man? who groweth sluggish and and ſlack to come to the Church? who ſtandeth with the Miniſter for his due? who beateth the poore from his gate? who getteth and gathereth ſwearers and ſwaggerers to wrong every man, but this yong heyre now gotten where he wiſhed to be? If I ſpeak a truth, let ſome feele it, & for his love that ruleth Heaven and earth, leave it. Thus doth the Scholler, that wiſheth a Benefice, forget his duty when he hath got it, and ſuffer his people (the Lords Lambes) to periſh by his ſloath. Thus doth the Servant when hee is become a Maſter: and thus doe thouſands, who (when they were unmarried and had little) thought and ſaid, If they had ſome portion to live, ſome reaſonable and competent eſtate, ô how would they ſerve God, and do good things to their power? But all is forgotten, and they are not the ſame perſons, when the Lord (in mercy) hath given them more cauſe to ſerve him, than ever they had. Follow this meditation farther your ſelf, and think often in your heart what a ſweet killing poyſon proſperity is to many a one, and how needfull this note of Moſes was, that they ſhould remember their duties to God, when they were come into that pleaſant Land of Promiſe.

15 The Commaundement to teach their children what the Paſſeover meant, noteth unto us, how the Word and Sacraments ſhould goe together: not hiding in an unknowne tongue, and by neglect of preaching, what Gods ordinance is, but plainely and openly, and ever joyning Doctrine to it, that the people of God may know the Lords meaning is his holy Sacraments, and ſo uſe them as they ought, to his glory and their comfort. Yea, the children you ſee ſhould not be brought up in ignorance, as ours are, to the great provocation of Gods wrath againſt us: but even when they are yong, taught and told what a Sacrament is, and what is meant by the Paſchall Lambe: for thus would they prove good ſervants of God when yeeres came on, and the Lord be honoured in our ſeed when we are dead. Which, whether it can be without a bleſſing from his hand, both upon them and whatſoever we leave unto them, judge in your owne ſoule, when you have conſidered well how ſweet and gracious God is, how many are his promiſes, and how faithful he ever is in them. Doe therefore as followeth in this your Chapter of this people; verſe 7. They bowed themſelves and worſhipped: That is, they thankfully received the Lords pleaſure at Moſes mouth, not as the word of man, but (as it was indeed) the Word of God: And they went their way, and did as the Lord commanded Moſes and Aaron. A bleſſed obedience both in hearing and doing, a cheerefull alacrity and readineſſe, ſuch as gladded the heart of Moſes, and ever will glad all godly Miniſters, chronicled here up in the Booke of God, by the direction of God, to the laſting praiſe of them that were ſo touched and moved to obey. God (in his mercy) make it alſo profitable to thy ſoule, good Chriſtian reader, that thou likewiſe (in the book of life) maiſt be chronicled up for evermore. Amen.

The ſecond part.

1 CONcerning the death of the firſt borne, which was the ſecond generall head noted before to bee in this Chapter, that which hath beene ſpoken before in the Denunciation may ſuffice, to which I refer you, praying that here may be obſerved the great care of Almighty God to have this thing well remembred, when againe he thus repeateth it with all his Circumſtances of time, of perſons, their awaking, their crying, their deſire to be rid of the Iſraelites, their forcing of thẽ away in all haſte, &c. Surely Gods works for mankinde in generall, or for any of us all in particular to be forgotten, muſt needs be moſt diſpleaſing unto him; when wee ſee ſuch care as this to preſerve in his Church and children a due remembrance of them. Theodoret ſpeaking of theſe firſt born, ſaith, Cur interfecit primogenita Ægyptii? Propterea quòd Iſraele primogenita Dei Pharao nimis duræ ſubjecerat ſervituti. Hoc enim ipſe Dominus Deus dixit, filius meus primogenitus Iſrael, &c. Why did he ſlay the firſt born of Ægypt? Even becauſe Pharaoh had ſubjected his firſt-born Iſrael, to too hard and cruell a bondage. For thus ſpeaketh the Lord of Iſrael, Iſrael my firſt born ſon, &c. Again in this, that the firſt born only dyed both of man and beaſt, (not the ſecond born, nor the third born,) we may with profit well obſerve, how the differences of children are knowne to God, who is firſt, who is ſecond, and who is third: which may yeeld this uſe, never (for any child) to go about with craft and ſubtilty, or any unlawfull invention of man, to thruſt himſelfe into the place and prerogative thereof, which God in his providence hath not given him, but to abide in the order diſpoſed to him of God; and to truſt in his mercy, who ſo diſpoſed; for feare, leſt God who knoweth our order, ſeverely puniſh us for breaking his order. Hee could have made the youngeſt the eldeſt (if he had pleaſed;) and he could have made the third to be the ſecond (if he had ſo liked:) But hee hath not done it, and what hee doth is ever beſt, till his owne hand alter the ſame. A contented mind much pleaſeth God: and a working ſpirit, contrary to his Will, as much offendeth him. Let it be thought on, for there is too much cauſe in the world given, and ſinne is counted wiſedome.

Theodoret. in Exod. 12. 22.

2 This mighty power of God is fearefull, and comfortable. Fearefull, for that in one night, yea in one inſtant, and with one word (as it were) he deſtroyed ſo many firſt-borne in Ægypt. Comfortable, becauſe what judgement ſoever hee uſeth and executeth againſt the wicked, yet he he can ſave his owne in the very middeſt of death and danger, So that not a haire of their heads ſhall be hurt. Thouſands may fall on their right hand, and ten thouſands on their left, yet no harme happen to them. Alſo this gracious clemency and mercy in the Lord, is moſt comfortable, who when he could as eaſily and as juſtly have deſtroyed all, yet in his goodneſſe (that hath neither bottome nor meaſure) he taketh but the firſt borne, and ſo graciouſly humbleth them by a few. This is that which the Prophet ſpeaketh when he beggeth of the Lord, in wrath to remember mercy: ſo noting his manner and nature ever full of pitty, and long ſuffering. Habac.3.2.

3 Then Pharaoh called to Moſes and Aaron, ſaying, Get you hence, &c. That is, he ſent his meſſengers unto them to will them to depart: For Moſes ſaw him no more after the departing mentioned in the tenth Chapter, the laſt verſe: And in the eleventh Chapter, verſe 8. you ſee Moſes foretold that thus his ſervants ſhould intreat him to depart. Ever till now Pharaoh had ſome exceptions either of their children, or of their cattell, &c. But now all are put in, a liberty granted unto all, and glad and glad to be delivered of them. Thus can God with his mighty arme bring downe the proud ſtomacks of the greateſt, and make them yeeld to his Will wholly, not in part. A fruitfull conſideration for thoſe that daily amongſt us uſe to limit their obedience to God; ſaying either openly, or ſecretly in their hearts. Herein will I follow my teacher, and herein I will not. Adultery, murder, and ſuch like, be great ſinnes, and I will forbeare them: but for my ſwearing, my oppreſſing of my neighbours, my ſelling of my Benefices in my gift, my negligence at Church and Sacraments, and ſuch like, yee ſhall pardon me, I know what is fit as well as hee. Thus did Herod heare Iohn Baptiſt, as I have noted before, in many things, not in all things; and namely, not in the matter of keeping his brothers wife. Now Herod and Pharaoh are but bad examples for a man to follow, that hath any care of his ſoule: And therefore (rather) fixe your eye upon that wiſh of God in Deuteronomy: O that there were ſuch a heart in this people to feare me, and to keepe all my commandements, all, all, alway, that it might goe well with them, and with their ſeed for ever. This is a better example: and he that thus wiſheth, hath Heaven in his right hand, to give it us if we heed it, and Hell in his left hand, to caſt us into, if wee deſpiſe it. Follow this meditation by your ſelfe farther, and beware of reſtraining and limiting your duty to God, but performe all obedience as the Lord ſhall enable you. And if you faile in any thing, let it be frailty in you, not headſtrong boldneſſe, for that is dangerous. Remember alſo how Pharaoh here deſired to be bleſſed of theſe men, who erſt was odious in his eyes. The ſame God can pull you downe, and make you as glad of your Paſtors prayer for you, as you have beene contented ſpitefully and maliciouſly to oppoſe your ſelfe againſt him. Now is the time to thinke of theſe things, and to uſe the meſſenger of God, as hee may ever pray for you with an edge, that is, heartily and powerfully. Verſ. 31. Mat.6.10.

4 They tooke up their dough before it was leavened, and departed in haſte. The Lord knoweth ever what is beſt, (haſte or leaſure) for his children, and ſo he appointeth. Lot was long before he would get out ſo Sodome, and his wife was worſe than he. Wee are all covetous and greedy of theſe worldly matters, and too loath to leave them, when we are called. Wherefore the Lord in his great love often preventeth ſuch weakneſſe in us by a ſuddaine and conſtrained haſte. Bee it therefore ever unto us as he will, for he is alwayes more carefull of our good than we can be. Other things here mentioned have beene touched before, and therefore I paſſe them over. Verſe 34.

The third part.

1 THeir departure now out of Ægypt is the third generall head of this Chapter concerning which it is ſaid, that They tooke their journey from Rameſes to Succoth, &c. This is that Rameſes which you read of in Geneſis 47.verſ. 11. Where Ioſeph placed his father and his brethren. The number alſo is ſet downe, about ſixe hundred thouſand men of foote, beſides Children. A moſt wonderfull encreaſe from 70. ſoules, which were all that came into Ægypt. And moſt effectually it ſheweth us, how able the Lord is to encreaſe his Church, notwithſtanding all the malice of man and devill whatſoever, *Gen.*12.21. *Gen.*15 5. I will multiply thy ſeed as the ſand of the ſea: and we ſee the truth of it. A multitude alſo of ſundry ſorts of people went with them, following the proſperity hoped for in the Iſraelites, who (they ſaw) were not touched with the plagues of Ægypt: and rightly ſhadowing what after fell out, and ever will, that Chriſt ſhall be followed of many for the Loaves, and his Goſpell embraced for the proſperity and peace that often he vouchſafeth unto it. Yet (no doubt) ſome follow it for Religion and truth ſake, &c. Verſe 37.

ſo are they obſerved of him moſt mercifully, moſt graciouſly, and moſt preciſely. Why then ſhould not I (duſt and aſhes) tarry his good leaſure in aſſured hope, and in peace of ſoule, waiting for the good houre? but I muſt needs tie the Lord to my time, and my will, or elſe I faint, I fall, I ſpeake or thinke amiſſe, That the Lord regardeth me not, but hath forgotten me, and forſaken mee, and all that Satan my ſworne enemy ſuggeſteth is true, O, doe it not any more, neither ever wrong your gracious Father and deare God ſo much, who you ſee breaketh not with theſe Iſraelites one day, but the very ſelfe ſame day delivereth them, which was appointed foure hundred yeares before. God ſtrengthen us, for his Sonnes ſake; for we are weake, but he is faithfull for evermore.

Verſ.43.&6. Verſe 44,48. 3 Some other circumſtances touching the Paſchall Lambe are here noted in the end of this Chapter, omitted before; namely, That onely ſuch as were circumciſed might eate of it; ſo figuring, that of the true Paſſeover Chriſt Jeſus they onely can bee partakers, having their hearts circumciſed and purged by faith, &c. And being circumciſed ſervants might eate; ſhewing that bond and free are like accepted of God. Verſ.46. That it muſt be eaten in one houſe, ſignified that out of the Church Chriſt is not to be found. Not a bone muſt be broken, which was fulfilled in our Saviour Chriſt, as was touched before: yet here remember Theodorets words, Oſſa conterunt agni, qui male intelligentes eloquia Divina, ad ſuam impietatem illa detorquere conantur. They may be ſaid to breake the bones of the Lamb, who ill underſtanding the holy Scriptures, go about to wreſt them to their impieties. Verſe 49. One law muſt be to him that is born in the land, & to the ſtranger that dwelled among them: which ſignified, that whoſoever, unto the worlds end, will live in the Church, hee muſt and ought to be governed by the lawes of the Church. Finally, Verſe 50. The obedience of the people (here mentioned) in all things to Moſes and Aaron, teacheth us the like obedience ever to Magiſtrate and Miniſter over us, which the better we performe, the more aſſured may we be that wee are true Iſraelites. Thus may this Chapter profit us in Gods bleſſing.

CHAP. XIII.

The generall heads of this Chapter are chiefly theſe:

1. The Sanctification of the firſt-borne to the Lord.
2. By what way the Lord led them.
3. The ſignes of direction vouchſafed to them.

Verſe 1. COncerning the firſt; The Paſchal Lambe (as hath beene ſhewed) was a lively remembrance of the Lords paſſing over their houſes, and not ſlaying their firſt borne, as he did the Ægyptians: Yet doth God here againe inſtitute, for another remembrance of it, that all the firſt borne ſhould be offered to him in ſacrifice. Which plainly ſheweth our dulneſſe to bee great, that either not at all, or very ſleightly we remember the Lords mercies and benefits, unleſſe by ſundry meanes we be raiſed and ſtirred up thereunto. Let us therefore thinke of our ſelves as the Lord knoweth us to be, and reſt ever thankfull for this great care of his over us, teſtified in ſundry wayes & meanes to awake and worke in us due duties towards him, and uſe the ſame appointed meanes continually and ever, as we are commanded: otherwiſe, we condemne both the Lords care, and wiſedome: and the puniſhment at laſt muſt needs bee very fearfull. Let it ſtrike all negligent hearers of the Word, all ſecure and earthly contemners of the Sacraments, all that refuſe to read, and conferre, and to doe whatſoever elſe as a means that leadeth to the Lord. The reaſon which the Lord alledgeth of this Law of the firſt-borne to be ſanctified unto him, is, becauſe they were his, (for they are mine, ſaith he,) Which doth not note any rejection of the ſecond borne, or third, from his grace and favour, or yet tie his mercy and liking ever to eldeſt (for wee know, Hee hated Eſau, and loved Iacob:) but wee are to underſtand it thus, that albeit all were his indeed, yet theſe firſt-borne he challenged to be his by a double right; both becauſe he had delivered them from bondage and ſervitude as the reſt, and becauſe he ſaved them alive, and ſlew them not, when he killed all the firſt-borne in Ægypt. I make this uſe of it, even to thinke with my ſelfe, that the more God hath done for me, the more titles he hath unto me, and the more I am his, and ought to be in all the duties and ſervices that may flow from either heart or body of ſo wretched a creature. And if I doe not ſo think, and ſo ſtrive to ſhew my ſelfe, even ſo many witneſſes againſt me are ſundry mercies to me, & I ſhall be deſtroyed. The ends then of this Law of ſanctifying the firſt borne unto the Lord, were theſe; to be a remembrance of that deliverance; to be a witnes of the Lords right to them, & over them, whom he had ſo graciouſly and mightily delivered (even as an earthly Lord ſeeketh a penny or a roſe for an acknowledgmēt of his right, not for any increaſe of his wealth:) that the Prieſts might have hereby a maintenance to live to preſerve doctrine & knowledge among them; that Chriſt hereby might be lively ſhadowed and ſhewed,

ſhewed, who being the firſt-borne, was offered up a holy and ſufficient ſacrifice for all our ſinnes, &c.

The Law of Redemption of the Children, verſe 13.15. was to mitigate the rigour of the Law, if they ſhould have dyed; and ſtill ſheweth, how ſweet and mercifull the Lord is; afterward, the Levites were taken in their place. And the Redemption of the uncleane beaſts teacheth us, that God will have his due, if not by ſacrificing them (becauſe they were uncleane,) yet by a price for them, or by their death: Which all the wicked robbers of God in their Tithes and Offerings may make an uſe of, and ceaſe ſo to offend any more, if admonition may finde place with them. Other things have been touched before, as the unleavened bread, the inſtructing of their children, and ſuch like; wherefore I paſſe them over. The frontlets ſpoken of in the ſixteenth verſe (being for Remembrance) the Jewes afterward abuſed and had their Phylacteries, &c. As our Papiſts have ſundry ſuperſtitious things about their neckes and armes, to put them in minde of I know not what. Verſe 16.

The ſecond part.

1 CONcerning the way by which God led them, you ſee here in the ſeventeenth verſe, what is ſaid; namely, That God carried them not by the way of the Philiſtims Countrey (though it were nearer,) leſt any ſhould repent when they ſaw warre, and turne againe to Ægypt. Si enim cum longius eſſet (Numb. 14.) regredi voluerunt, quid ſi tam vicini eſſent? For if when they were further off, they would have returned (Numb. 14.) what, when they were ſo neare? (ſaith Saint Cyril:) wherein behold a moſt ſingular teſtimony of Gods fatherly care over our infirmities, in not ſuffering us to be further tried, than in him, and through him we ſhall be able to endure, and at the laſt to overcome alſo, according to the moſt gracious promiſe ſpecified by the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 10.12. Let a troubled ſpirit ever thinke upon this, and even feed upon it to the comfort of the ſoule, as one would feed upon ſweet and pleaſing meat, for the good of the body. Your weakeneſſe is knowne to God; and (as you ſee here) hee thinketh before hand what you can beare, and what you cannot; what will lead you to the Land of Promiſe, and what will make you turne backe to Ægypt; and had hee not ſtrength in ſtore for you in his good time to bee given you, thereby to overcome the troubles you now are in, whatſoever they are, ſpirituall or worldly, in ſuch ſort as he knoweth to be beſt; truely he would have prevented them, and never have ſuffered you to fall into them, more than he would ſuffer here the Iſraelites to paſſe by the Country of the Philiſtims; for he is not the God of the Iſraelites alone, but your God, and my God alſo; no reſpecter of perſons, but ſweet to all that cleave unto him. And therefore ſince theſe things are thus now with you, reſt in hope, and be cheerfull; there is a good houre comming, aſſure your ſelfe, wherein his ſtrength ſhall appeare and give you victory, theſe things turning to your good, and not to your harme. For, even as the Eagle fluttereth over her birds, ſtretcheth out her wings, taketh them and beareth them upon her wings: ſo doth the Lord for his people, ſaith the Song of Moſes; and let it comfort you, for God is true. Verſe 17. Deut. 32.11.

Another uſe againe I make of this place thus. The Lord here (I ſee) would not ſuffer them paſſe by the Philiſtims, leſt they ſhould ſtart backe, and ſo ſinne grievouſly againſt him. And what if in like ſort he prevent my ſinning, and your ſinning againſt him, by taking away from us ſuch things, as he in his wiſedome knoweth would be occaſions of evill unto us, if wee had them, whatſoever we thinke, as riches, friends, power, health of body, peace of minde, and ſuch like, is not he therein carefull of us, and as gracious unto us, as here hee was to theſe his people, in not ſuffering them to goe that way, which (though it were nearer) might endanger them? Certainly he is; and therefore pray for eyes to ſee it, and a heart to feele it with aſſurance; be content with your eſtate, and with his will, the end ſhall ſhew you, all this is true.

Why? But could not God have ſtayed them from returning, although they had gone the nearer way? Cyril anſwereth, Non Deus omnia operatur ut poteſt, ſed quandoq; (humano more) pericula fugere illos voluit, id nos facere docens, etiã dum apertiſſimè Deum adjutorem habemus: God doth not work all things as he can, but ſometimes doth eſchew perils (after the manner of men) therein teaching us to doe the like (namely, by uſing meanes) even then when moſt plainly wee have God our helper. Cyril. in Exod. Aug. quæſt. 49. in Exod. vide.

2 The children of Iſrael went up armed out of the Land of Ægypt, ſaith the text. And it may teach us warineſſe and circumſpection in our vocations; ever reckoning of the enemy in this our holy march towards the Land of Promiſe. Joſephs bones are carried away with them, according to the oath made unto him; which may teach us faithfulneſſe and truth in the deſires of dead men evermore: a thing alwayes of good regard with good men, and too little regarded by many that would be judged good men. But no ſhew of warrant here for the Popiſh fooleries, and impieties uſed about their Reliques. For this promiſe to tranſlate his bones, was taken by Ioſeph to ſhew his Faith in the promiſe of God, touching the Land of Promiſe to be given in time, and it was performed by the Iſraelites in diſcharge of truth without any ſuperſtition or Idolatry, as in Popery is uſed moſt offenſively. Verſe 18. Verſ. 19.

The

The third part.

Verſe 21. THe laſt generall Head is, concerning the ſignes of direction which the Lord vouchſafed them; namely, a cloud by day, and a Pillar of fire by night. Whereof the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, alluding to this ſtory, In the day time he led them with a cloud, & all the night long with a light of fire. And againe, He ſpred a cloud to be a covering, and fire to give light in the night ſeaſon. By this great miracle, ſhewing that the Iſraelites deliverance was from himſelfe, and by no other meanes under heaven. Secondly, that he was preſent with them, to defend and ſave them from all their enemies. And thirdly, that in like ſort he guideth and protecteth his faithfull, marching out of Ægypt towards the promiſed Land, thorow the wilderneſſe of woe and affliction: which indeed he ſtill doth by his Word and Sacraments, two guides to us, as theſe pillars were to them. So neceſſary is it after deliverance to be guided, that without the one the other will not ſerve. And if more particularly you will meditate upon them, conſider in the Cloud, how it not onely directeth the way, but is ſpread, as the Pſalme ſaith, for a covering; namely, againſt the heate of the Sun, ſaving them from the violence thereof, and comfortably cooling and refreſhing them. Remember alſo how the afflictions of this world in the Goſpell, are noted by the heate of the Sunne. And be you aſſured in a true faith, that even ever, ever, againſt theſe heats, the Lord in his good time, will ſend you defence and comfort. For ſtill you muſt know that yeſterday, and to day, and for ever he is the ſame. Meditate on the Apoſtles experience, 2 Cor. 1. Bleſſed be God, even the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, the Father of all mercies, and the God of all comfort, which comforteth us in all our tribulations, (ſee the cooling Cloud) that we may be able to comfort them which are in any affliction, by the comfort wherewith we our ſelves are comforted of God. For as the ſufferings of Chriſt abound in us, ſo our conſolation aboundeth through Chriſt, &c. Thus to Paul, thus to you, thus to all aſſuredly. In the other Pillar of fire obſerve, that (beſide direction by going before) it alſo gave light unto them in the night. And thereby learne with a feeling comfort, that whoſoever follow Chriſt as their Guide and Leader, they ſtill have light in others darkneſſe. So ſaith he himſelfe, He that followeth me ſhall not walk in darkneſſe, but ſhall have that light of life. In both the one and the other ſee a notable figure of Chriſt, in whom there is cooling, and without whom there is ſcorching heate; in whom there is light, and without whom there is helliſh darkneſſe: In the world ye ſhall have trouble, but in me ye ſhall have peace. The words which follow, (That they might goe both by day and by night) moſt notably remember us, that in travelling towards the ſpirituall Canaan we muſt not reſt, but labour forward continually. The children of this world are often looking backe toward Ægypt, and often pitch downe their Tents ſo in this wilderneſſe, that they are loath ever to take them up, and to remove. But with the ſonnes of God it is not ſo, but they ſay with themſelves, We have here no abiding City: And fixing both eye and heart on their Heavenly houſe, they journey on ſtill both day and night in true piety and obedience; and they are not quiet till they have attained to the Haven, and ſee their God, with his holy Company, in the higheſt Heavens. Laſt of all, when it is ſaid, Hee tooke not away the pillar of the Cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night from before the people; Let it ever aſſure your fearing heart, cooling and comforting, ſhining and lightning, guiding and directing, his little flocke ſhall never bee taken away from any member thereof, but ever be ready and preſent with us both by day and night, to the eternall praiſe of his goodneſſe, and unſpeakable comfort of our ſoules; bleſſed againe and againe be his name for it. And thus farre of this Chapter.

CHAP. XIIII.

The Heads of this Chapter may be theſe:

1. The purſuing of Pharaoh after them.
2. The feare of the Iſraelites when they ſaw him: verſe 10.
3. Their fall and ſinne through their feare: verſe 11.
4. The Lords deliverance of them.

Verſ. 1. & 2. TOuching the firſt, marke what a ſtraite the Lord brought his people into, when hee commanded Moſes to ſpeake unto them to campe before Pi-hahiroth, betweene Migdol and the Sea, over againſt Baal-zephon, where the Sea was before them, Mountaines on either ſide, and Pharaoh with his Hoaſt at their backes, the Lord hardening his heart to follow after them: yet was not this diſtreſſe for their hurt, but for their good, that God might bee honoured, they miraculouſly delivered, and their enemies glorioufly overthrowne. How then do we feare in in every adverſity before we ſee the end? Surely we wrong the Lord much, and our ſelves, in ſo doing: he being as good as ever he was; as mighty as ever he was, to finde ſuch meanes; and as juſt as ever he was, to puniſh our malicious enemies. O, thinke then with your ſelfe, and reaſon thus: Loe, here I am diſtreſſed on every ſide, as the Iſraelites were at the Red-ſea: and it is the Providence of God, that I ſhould be thus, as it was his Will they ſhould pitch in that place. But doe I know the Lords meaning, and what he will doe? No indeed: and therefore I will patiently waite for his bleſſed Will, not murmuring as the Iſraelites did, but comfortably aſſuring my ſelfe, that one way or other the Lord will give iſſue to his glory and my good (although as yet I ſee not how) becauſe hee is no changeling in his love to his ſervants, and did (beyond all conceit of man) deliver theſe Iſraelites from this perill. Surely there can be no perplexity in the world greater than this was, if all things be conſidered, and yet all was well in the end. Remember we therefore alwayes the words of David in his Pſalme, When I am in heavineſſe, I will thinke upon God, when my heart is vexed, I will complaine. I will cry unto God with my voyce, yea, even to God will I cry with my voyce, and he ſhall hearken unto me, &c. The whole Pſalme is comfortable, if you reade it. Pſa. 77 1, &c.

2 For Pharaoh will ſay of the children of Iſrael, they are tangled in the land; the wilderneſſe hath ſhut them in, &c. So they were indeed, if wee conſider the place where they were: yet there is no tangling where the Lord will have a paſſage. But ſee you here in your meditation, how, when the deſtruction of the wicked is at hand, the Lord (in his juſtice) offereth them ſome baite or other to pull them on: that, as here he ſaith, He may winne his honour upon them, and they know he is the Lord. So was Ahab drawne to his end, with a deſire to recover Ramoth Gilead, which once was his, the baite allured him, the wrath of God ſlew him. So were Senacherib and the Aſſyrians baited as it were, with former ſucceſſe with their multitude, and the ſmalneſſe of Ezechias his number. But how gloriouſly did the Lord deliver his, and deſtroy them that ſo boaſted? Many ſuch examples may you remember by your ſelfe, all teaching what a ſure thing it is to belong to God, and to have our truſt in him onely. For otherwiſe there will bee a time of falling for us, and we ſhall even runne upon it greedily, as theſe men did. You may alſo here thinke of the number noted by Ioſephus, who added to the ſixe hundred Chariots mentioned in the Text, verſe 7. fifty thouſand horſe-men, and two hundred thouſand footmen more, all marching after Gods people with great confidence and jollity, and yet all overthrowne in the deepe by a mighty God moſt eaſily: So great a God is our God, and it muſt ever comfort us, and make us ſtrong. Obſerve againe their words uttered before they purſued after them; Why have we this done, and let Iſrael goe out of our ſervice? Which ſheweth how quickly the wicked repent them of their good, but ſeldome or never of their evill. For to let them goe was good, and yet they repented; but to purſue after them was evill, and they repented not. Many ſuch there bee in our dayes, which often grieve at an houre ſpent in the Church, and never of dayes and yeares ſpent in ſinne. But let them looke upon theſe Ægyptians here, and be warned in time, if God ſo will. The difference of the hoaſts againe in this place is very worthy obſerving; the one all warriers and well appointed, the other full of weake women and little children. The chiefeſt men without great munition, or an exact order military to march with them, yet the weaker liveth, and the ſtronger dyeth: ever to teach us to fixe our hearts upon God, and not to bee tyed to outward ſhew, For there is no wiſedome, no counſell, nor ſtrength againſt the Lord. The horſe is prepared againſt the day of battell, but ſalvation is of the Lord. And as the Prophet Eſay ſaith, Gather together on heapes, ô ye people, and yee ſhall be broken in pieces, and hearken all ye of farre Countries: gird your ſelves, and you ſhall be broken in pieces: gird your ſelves, and you ſhall be broken in pieces. Take counſell together, yet it ſhall be brought to naught: pronounce a decree, yet ſhall it not ſtand: for God is with us, &c. Repeating things over and over, that we may be aſſured, and alwayes ſtrong in him. Verſe 3. Verſe. 4. 1 King. 22 3. Verſe 5. Pro. 21. 30, 31. Eſay 8. 9, 10.

3 Againe, I ſee here, and marke it for my good, that when wee are once delivered out of Ægypt, then doth the Devill muſter his Chariots and Horſemen, and after us hee will, if he can get leave. He cannot abide to loſe his ſervant ſo: His we were, and he hath loſt us, and his wee muſt be againe, if by all his ſtrength hee can poſſibly gaine us. A Land that floweth with Milke and honey, may not be inherited without reſiſtance. Out of Ægypt we may be delivered, but from following afflictions we ſhall not be quite freed. Hue and Cry will be made by Hell after us, and we ſhall be ſpied as God pleaſeth. Thinke of that Devill in the Goſpell, who, when hee muſt needs depart and loſe his poſſeſſion, did rend and teare the poore party moſt cruelly. Think of thoſe ſtories of the Primitive Church, how Nero, Domitian, Dioclesian, and all thoſe perſecuting Emperours purſued the Chriſtians, delivered from darkneſſe to light. What were they all but Satans Hoaſt, doing then as Pharaoh did here, by the mighty hand of a juſt revenging God. The Land of Canaan is ours, but in our way thither looke for lets. When the Deere is hued in by the Hunters, and the dogges placed to make a courſe, if he take his way upon the dogges, every man is ſilent, and letteth him goe, for that is the way to death, and it well pleaſeth the Hunters: But if he offer to breake out ſome other way, and to eſcape the dogges; then they cry and beate the hedges to drive him backe againe; and if hee eſcape, how diſcontented are they? Mark. 9. 26.

So,

So, ſo, in our deliverance from Death and Hell doe we plainly ſee it. And therefore hoping for the beſt, when God ſhall ſee it fit, be prepared alwayes in your ſelfe for the worſt, and (reckon of it) Phæraoh will purſue you.

Verſe 10,11. Philo in vita Moſis.

4 When Pharaoh drew neare, the Iſraelites were ſore afraid, and cryed unto the Lord. Others ſaid unto Moſes, haſt thou brought us out of Ægypt to dye in the wilderneſſe? &c. Philo ſaith, Quatuor Tribus in aquis ſubmergi voluiſſe, ne ad Ægyptiorum manus pervenirent; alias quatuor ſe tradere Ægyptijs conſtituiſſe, cum ſpe veniam impetrandi; ſed reliquas quatuor (ſcilicet, Iuda, Levi, Ioſeph, & Benjamin) uſque ad mortem cum illis pugnare decreviſſe. That foure Tribes reſolved to drowne themſelves in the waters, rather than to fall into the Ægyptians hands; other foure Tribes determined to ſubmit themſelves to the Ægyptians in hope of pardon and forgiveneſſe; but the foure Tribes left after theſe (namely, Iuda, Levi, Ioſeph, and Benjamin) ſetled themſelves to fight (as long as they ſhould be able to ſtand alive) againſt them. Note then here, how affliction trieth what is in us: for ſuch as here reſted upon God, cryed (you ſee) unto him, and no doubt hoped of helpe from him, well conſidering that; Vbi humanum deeſt conſilium, ibi Divinum adeſt auxilium; Where mans counſell faileth, there Gods helpe is preſent. Others not ſo grounded and ſetled, foully and ſinfully diſcovered their corruption, and quarrelled with Gods Miniſter ſent for their comfort, and reproached him bitterly, as you ſee in the Text. Looke therefore how the fire tryeth the gold, parting the droſſe from that which is pure: ſo doth Adverſity trie the ſonnes of men, and ſever the good from the evill. Be we rooted therefore in his holy promiſes, and looke not too much upon heapes of men, as theſe murmuring Iſraelites did; for it is all one with the Lord to overcome many and few, and with many, or few. Faith muſt ever looke at him, and ſay cheerefully as David, The Lord is my light, and my ſalvation, whom then ſhall I feare? The Lord is the ſtrength of my life, of whom then ſhall I be afraid? Though an hoaſt of men were laid againſt me, yet ſhall not my heart be afraid: And though there aroſe up war againſt me, yet will I put my truſt in him, &c. For if wee looke at the billow of the ſea comming againſt us, wee ſhall be afraid, and begin to ſinke.

Verſe 13,14. Ioſephus 2. antiq. cap. 14.

5 Then Moſes ſaid unto the people, feare ye not, but ſtand ſtill, and behold the ſalvation of the Lord, which he will ſhew to you this day. For the Ægyptians whom ye have ſeene to day, yee ſhall never ſee againe. The Lord ſhall fight for you, therefore hold you your peace. Ioſephus relateth a long Oration, wherewith Moſes exhorteth them: but theſe words are effectuall, and containe the ſubſtance. A worthy and wonderfull ſtrength in the ſervant of God, who heretofore looked at the difficulties of his Calling, at his owne weakneſſe and wants, and at the ingratitude of men towards thoſe that have beſt deſerved; yet now raiſeth himſelfe above all theſe, in a moſt holy Faith, and comforteth the people with aſſurance of a great and moſt gracious Deliverance. Thus can the Lord give ſtrength to any man in his vocation when he will, making him mount above all earthly conceits, and to ſee nothing but the power of God, and truth ever in his promiſe. Wherefore pray for this grace in all touches and plunges in this miſerable world: And learne of Moſes here, by uſe & experience to caſt behind us the undeſerved ſpeeches of men either malicious or unthankfull, and bee ſtrong and cheerefull in our Charge, notwithſtanding a thouſand of them. Learne alſo of him, both in our ſelves to bee aſſured, and to aſſure others in the diſtreſſes of the Church: that, as God waketh when we ſleepe, ſo will he fight for us, when wee ſtand ſtill: and that in our greateſt weakneſſe his ſtrength ſhall appeare. The Ægyptians are vanity, ſaith the Prophet, and therefore God cryeth to Hieruſalem, That her ſtrength is to ſit ſtill. And againe to Iehoſaphat, Feare not, neither be afraid for this great multitude; for the battell is not yours, but Gods. You ſhall not need to fight in this battell: ſtand ſtill, move not, and behold the ſalvation of the Lord toward you, &c. Iehoſaphat thereupon to the people, Heare O Iuda, and inhabitants of Hieruſalem: put your truſt in the Lord your God, and you ſhall be aſſured: beleeve his Prophets, and ye ſhall proſper. All notable places ever to bee in our remembrance, yea even in ſpirituall conflicts ſay thus with your ſelfe: O my ſoule, feare not, though Satan thruſt thus ſore at thee, and ſeek thy deſtruction; but looke unto him that is mightier than all Hell: beleeve his Prophets, beleeve his Promiſes, beleeve his Word, and the Ægyptians (whom thou haſt ſeene to day) thou ſhalt never ſee againe; that is, thoſe frights and thoſe feares, enemies to thy peace and comfort in God, thou ſhalt never be troubled with them any more; but God ſhall ſo drowne them in the Red-ſea of his deare Sonnes blood, that they ſhall not hurt thee nor harme thee, ſhake thee, nor ſhiver thee, nip thee, nor touch thee, as they have done. The Lord ſhall fight for thee, O my ſoule, therefore ſtand thou ſtill and waite upon him. &c. Further may you goe in this meditation, if you will.

Eſay 13. 14. 2 Chron. 15.

Verſe 15. Clamor iſte erat oratio cordis: unde Chaldeus legit, ſuſcepi orationem tuam, & Rupertus fidei magnæ vociferationem interpretatur.

6 And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, why cryeſt thou unto me, bid the people goe forward? God doth not ſpeak this, ſaith One, Quod ejus clamor illi diſpliceret, ſed ut ſe exauditum cognoſceret, Becauſe his crie did diſpleaſe him, but that he might know that hee heard him. See the courſe of a holy Governour; the people murmure and reproach him wickedly, yet hee for them prayeth moſt heartily: See alſo the mercy of God in ſparing, and not confounding ſuch unthankfull ſinners; and ſee the force of prayer, though it be but in groanes of your inward heat; it even cryeth in Gods eares, it pierceth the heavens, and pulleth downe comfort as is fit. See likewiſe the duty of of all faithfull beleevers, To goe forward, as here is ſaid to the Iſraelites, notwithſtanding Seas before us, hils about us, and whatſoever it may be that is againſt us, leaving all to the Lord who knoweth his owne purpoſe, and will manifeſt the ſame in due time. Forward, Forward, ſaith God here, ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael that they go forward. And let it ring in our eares whileſt we live. But why did Moſes cry thus in his heart to God, when it was revealed to him, what ſhould be the end of the Ægyptians? Surely, becauſe neither promiſes nor revelations hinder the children of God from uſing ordinary and appointed meanes; but in ſtead of being made any whit ſlothfull or careleſſe thereby, they are even more and more ſtirred up by the ſame to begge and crave the performance & effect of them. The lifting up of his rod to ſmite the waters (in ſhew) Verſ. 16. was but a ſimple and ridiculous thing, but when the Word concurreth with a Signe, then not the Signe but the Word is to be looked upon, and the Signe in the Word: as here, not the Rod, but the might of him that commandeth. God hardening their hearts to follow, ſheweth how in wrath Verſe 17. the Lord blindeth ſinners, till they run and ruſh into their due deſtruction, as we have noted be- Verſe 18. fore: and then they know and acknowledge him to be the Lord, when it is too late. Wherefore God in his ſweet mercy vouchſafe unto us eyes, in time to ſee him: hearts, in time to love him: and lives, in time obedient to him, that it never be ſaid unto us, It is too late. Amen. Amen.

7 And the Angell of God which went before the Hoaſt of Iſrael, removed and went behind them. Verſ. 19. Who this Angell was, we ſaw in the Chapter before, ver. 21. and we may ſee again in this Chapter, verſe 24. even Chriſt the Sonne of God, by whoſe conduction they into that Canaan, and both they and we, with all true beleevers, into the true Canaan are conducted & brought. This God going before, now removeth behind, and ſo keepeth them ſafe from their purſuing enemies. The Cloud on the one ſide gave light to the Iſraelites, and on the other ſide was darke to the Ægyptians: and in reſpect of that darke ſide, was called a cloud, although it were not of the Verſe 20. nature of other Clouds, but a more Divine thing, higher than mans mind is able to comprehend, by which (in the day time) the heat of the Sunne was tempered; and in the night a comfortable light given. Gregory Nyſſen writing of the life of Moſes, ſaith, Columna iſta non preſſo aere vaporibus conſtipata, ſed aliud quiddam divinitus atq; altius quam humana mens percipere valeat, fuit: qua in die Solis ardores temperabat: & nocte tenebras removebat. Nubem vocat Nyſſenus, quod ex parte Ægyptiorum tenebroſa & obſcura erat, licet ex parte Iſraelis lucens. This cloud was not darkned by the cloudy vapours of the ayre, but by ſome divine and higher thing than humane reaſon can perceive, who by day tempered the Sunnes heate, and removed the nights darkneſſe. Nyſſenus calleth it a cloud, that to the Ægyptians was dark and obſcure, but to the Iſraelites radiant and light. The comfort and uſe I take from it, is this, that in new perils the Lord can make new remedies at his pleaſure: Now before us, and now behind us, and evermore with us, if wee be with him by a ſure truſt in his goodneſſe, bleſſed be his Name evermore for it. The wind which the Lord uſed to cauſe the Sea runne backe, was not for any need of ſuch meanes, but that hee Verſe 21. might ſhew his power over all creatures, to uſe them and command them at his will. So by the Pſal. 22. water of Iordan he healed Naaman, when he could have healed him without it. By clay and ſpittle he opened eyes, and divers ſuch things in the Scriptures, when (at other times) by his onely Word he did as much, without any meanes at all. Then went they thorow on dry land, and the waters ſtood as a wall unto them, on the right hand, and on the left. If you aske, how they durſt adventure to paſſe ſo dangerouſly, ſeeing the waters might have guſhed together againe and have overwhelmed them? The Epiſtle to the Hebrewes telleth us, That by faith they paſſed thorow the Heb. 11. 29. Red-ſea as by dry land, which when the Ægyptians had aſſayed to doe, they were ſwallowed up. If you looke at the waters on either ſide, you may ſee the condition of Gods children in this world, beſet on the right ſide with a floud of proſperity, and beſet on the left ſide with a floud of adverſity: and yet (through a true faith) walking through both, and hurt by neither, they arrive on the other ſide ſafely, when by either of theſe many others are deſtroyed: pray wee then for this faith.

8 The Ægyptians feele the Lord againſt them, and then would flye, but it was too late. And Verſe 25. let it ever preach unto our mindes the danger of deferring our converſion to God. For when we would, we ſhall not; but even periſh and dye, as here did the Ægyptians. O what newes in Ægypt was this when it came? what woe, and what weeping? what wailing and wringing of hands by wives for their husbands, children for their fathers, and friends for their friends, which now were devoured of the cruell Sea? But it is too late: Had-I-wiſt commeth ever behind, ſaith the old Proverb. And therefore a notable Example is this to all degrees, one to perſwade with another unto Religion and the true ſervice of God, that ſuch fearefull newes may never be brought to our friends of us. For the Lord will not ever beare with our contempt, but as here was a heavy morning, when the Sea roaring returned together, and they flying and cry- Verſe 27. ing in the middeſt of it: ſo aſſuredly ſhall there bee either a morning, or an evening of miſery unto them who proudly diſdaine to be taught of their God: Happy are they that thinke of it in time.

9 The glorious victory of the Church here is a thing worthy of all due conſideration; yeelding Verſe 28.

us comfort to the worlds end in all our perplexities. For how doe they ſee their enemies deſtroyed, and themſelves delivered? How triumph they in Songs of joy and gladneſſe in the next Chapter, verſ. 1. &c. This is the Word, and we muſt beleeve it; theſe are his promiſes, and we muſt be ſtrong in them. The Church is Chriſts body, therefore it ſhall not be forſaken: It is the houſe of God, therefore it ſhall not be forſaken: Hee hath bought it with his bloud, Acts 20.28. 1 Pet. 1.18. therefore it ſhall not be forſaken: It is his Spouſe, Hoſea 2.19. 2 Cor. 11.2. Apoc. 21.2. and 9. therefore it ſhall not be forſaken: It is built upon Chriſt, Matth. 16.18. therefore it ſhall not be forſaken: In a word, the Gates of Hell ſhall not prevaile againſt it, neither of his kingdome ſhall there be any end, Mat. 16. Luke 1. 33. The harmers of his Church ſhall in their time be puniſhed, and the favourers of it bleſſed. I will bleſſe them that bleſſe thee (ſaith God to Abraham) and curſe them that curſe thee. Sehon King of the Amorites, and Og the King of Baſan, with all the reſt of that ſort, how did they fall before Gods people, and were deſtroyed? The great Monarchies of the world, the Chaldean, the Perſian, the Grecian and Roman, which were not obedient to his Truth, and favourers of his flocke; where are they? On the other ſide, how bleſſed be the Mid-wives that were kind unto his people? How ſaved he Rahab and all her family? The Widow of Sarepta loſt not her love to his Prophet; neither the Æthiopian in Ieremy, nor any other. So is his Church right deare unto him, you plainely ſee; and it is the comfort ſtrong of every member: For the love of the body draweth a love of the hand and foote, and every part, we ſee by experience in our owne bodies: No part can periſh without a great griefe to the whole, neither the vileſt part be but a little touched, without an offence to the very heart. What compariſon betwixt us and Chriſt, in our love and his? None, none, and the more hee exceedeth us, the more is our comfort and joy. We never ſaid that God wanted a Church before Luther, as we are either fooliſhly underſtood, or malitiouſly reported; but wee know he bleſſed not all times alike, puniſhing mans ingratitude often with Clouds, yet ever hee hath his people, and ever ſhall have to the end. In regard of which variable eſtate, the Church is reſembled to the Moone, which after full hath a wane, and never abideth ſtill full. It is compared to a Shippe toſſed and tumbled in the Sea, and in great perill many times, of which you may often thinke with much profit. How the Ark of Noe figured the Church, you may reade in the Notes upon Geneſis, Chap. 6. And if you deſire to peruſe the old Fathers, theſe Marginall places may direct you. Navis non ex uno ligno conſtat, ſed ex diverſis, &c. A Ship is not made of one board, ſaith Epiphanius: No more doth the Church conſiſt of one man, or of one ſort of men. A Ship is narrow at the beginning, and then much broader in the middle: ſo the Church at firſt is ſmall, and farre greater in time; yea, even ſpread abroad in the world. Narrow and ſtraite is Abel and Sheth, little and ſmall is Noe and his family, but ſeventy Soules came into Ægypt, yet thouſands and thouſands grew of them. Narrow was the Ship in Elias, but Achab and Iezabel being gone, it grew broader. The Apoſtles and Diſciples were but few; but when at one Sermon there were added three thouſand ſoules, the Ship you ſee grew broader. And ſo of thoſe perſecuting Emperours, till godly Conſtantine came. A Ship hath a Governor to direct her, and ſo hath the Church her Pilots alſo. And as in the Ship the Pilot may not be blinde that he cannot ſee rockes and promontories dangerous to be touched; may not be deafe, that hee cannot heare the advice of others; may not be unskilfull in times and ſeaſons, with many other things: even ſo much leſſe may the Church Governours be ſuch. The Mariners in a Ship may not be without hands, unable to row when there is need; no more may Men in the Church be unfit for the places they poſſeſſe. In the Ship there are many Offices, and yet all care for the Ship: ſo in the Church there are diverſitie of adminiſtrations, and yet all muſt labour for the Churches ſake. Some Prophets, ſome Apoſtles, ſome Evangeliſts, ſome paſtors & doctors. To one is givē by the Spirit the word of wiſdome: & to another the word of knowledge: to one faith, to another the gift of healing, &c. There be Ships of true men, and Ships of Pyrats; ſo there is a Church true, and a Church falſe: The falſe Church falleth, when it riſeth; & the true Church riſeth, when it ſeemeth to fall. The true Church endureth nothing ſtrange; and in the falſe Church every thing is ſtrange. Remember what you reade in the Prophet, of Tyrus; & make uſe of it to this end. They have made all thy Ship-boards of Fir-trees of Shenir: they have brought cedars fiō Lebanon to make maſts for thee. Of the oaks of Baſhan have they made thine Oares. The cōpany of the Aſſyrians have made thy banks of Ivory, brought out of the Iles of Chittim. Fine Linnen with broydered work brought from Ægypt, was ſpread over thee to be thy ſayl, blue ſilk and purple brought from the Iles of Eliſhah was thy covering. The Inhabitants of Zidon and Arvad were thy mariners, O Tyrus! Thy wiſe-men that were in thee, they were the Pilots, &c. Even ſo in the falſe Church is every thing ſtrange, and far fetcht: for if it come not from Rome, it is not for this Church, neither any account or uſe made of it. Strange doctrines in every point of Religion, ſtrange Ceremonies never knowne, or uſed of the Apoſtles: Beads and Bables, infinite toyes and trickes of hallowed traſh too long to be repeated, all as ſtrange as ever was any thing in Tyrus. Wherefore, as the fall of Tyrus was alſo ſtrange, ſo ſhall it be of this Church in good time. This Shippe in the Goſpell is ſaid to be troubled, and it noteth what the Church, and every member thereof in this world is ſubject unto. The perils of the Ship are amplifyed by certaine circumſtances there mentioned; as of time, that it was night; of place, that it was in the Sea, and in the middeſt of the Sea, of contrary winds, and of Chriſts abſence, all occaſions of more trouble and danger. For in the night there is darkneſſe, the rocks cannot be ſo well diſcerned; there is leſſe help than on the the day time: ſtorms and tempeſts are uſually greater, and many other diſcommodities. In regard whereof the Poet Virgil could ſay,

Eripiunt ſubito nubes cœlumque diemque
Nautarum ex oculis, ponto nox incubat atra:
Præſentemq́; viris intentant omnia mortem. — Lib.1. Æneid.

This night naturally may reſemble unto us a double night, wherein the Ship of the Church is much endangered, the night of Ignorance, and the night of Sinne. Either of them is a great darkneſſe, and yet little thought of. No night ſo full of perill to a ſailing Ship, as either of theſe to the Militant Church. Of the firſt S. Baſil complaineth to his Friend in his Epiſtle, ſaying, Eccleſia ſine Paſtoribus, navigatio in nocte, lux nuſquam; Chriſtus dormit, quid non igitur timendum eſt? The ſailing here of the Militant Church without Paſtors and Teachers, is a ſayling in the night, no light any where; Chriſt is aſleepe, and what therefore is not to be feared? — Baſil. Epiſt 89.

Of the ſecond night (the night of ſinne) the Scripture every where it ſelfe complaineth, ſhewing the diſtreſſe of the Church where ſuch darkneſſe abideth. In the Pſalme; Helpe Lord, for there is not one godly man left; the faithfull are gone from among men. Every one talketh of vanity with his neighbour, they flatter with their lips, and diſſemble in their double heart. There is none righteous, no not one; there is none that underſtandeth, there is none that ſeeketh after God. Their throat is an open ſepulchre, they uſe their tongues to deceit. The poyſon of Aſpes is under their lips. Their mouth is full of bitterneſſe and curſing. Their feet are ſwift to ſhed blood. Deſtruction and calamities are in their wayes: and the way of peace they have not knowne. The feare of God is not before their eyes. — Pſal.12.1,2. Pſal.14.2. & 3. Pſal.5.9. Pſal.140.3. Pſal.10.7. What a fearefull night now is this upon the Church? Yet adde unto this the third of Eſay, and many ſuch other places, and judge, if it can goe worſe with any Shippe at Sea in the blackeſt night, than with the Church in ſuch dangerous darkneſſe as this. Euſebius ſpeaketh of it, and (mee thinke) his words are much to be noted; Poſtquam res noſtræ per nimiam libertatem ad mollitiem & ſegnitiem degenerarunt, & alii alios odio ac contumeliis ſunt perſecuti, & tantũ non nos ipſos per nos ipſos armis ac telis verborum ubicunq́; contigit, impugnavimus, & Epiſcopi in Epiſcopos irruerunt, ac populi contra populos ſeditiones moverunt, deinde infanda hypocriſis & ſimulatio ad ſummum uſq́; malitiæ progreſſa fuit: Divinum judicium pro more ſuo ſenſim ac pedetentim nos inviſere cœpti, &c. After all things amongſt us through too much liberty grew unto wantonneſſe and ſloth, and every one with hatred and ſlander perſecuted another, &c. Biſhops falling upon Biſhops, and people upon people, hypocriſie and diſſimulation growing to an height, Gods judgement (according as it uſeth) by little and little viſited us, &c. See this night of the Church, which we ſpeake of, and the danger of it. And that of Virgil: — Lib.8. hiſt. cap.1.

Summa procul villarum culmina fumant,

The ſecond circumſtance was of place, the Ship was in the Sea, and in the middeſt of the Sea, not neere any Haven, farre from all help by land, and expoſed to the very full power of wind and water. A great circumſtance of perill and danger, as wee all know. And thus is the Ship of the Church ſaid to be, when either Hereſies or Schiſmes abound in it, or cruell perſecution rageth againſt it. Of the firſt S. Baſil ſpeaketh, comparing the troubles of the Church to the ſurges of the Sea, in which the ancient bounds of the Fathers are moved, every foundation and ground of Doctrine ſhaken by Schiſmaticks and Hereticks, who are as the froth raiſed by thoſe waves and ſurges. To the ſecond wee may refer thoſe raging furies of Nero, Domitian, and the reſt, of whom Theodoret writeth thus, Quod illi crudelitatis genus in Chriſtianos commenti non ſunt? An non manus pedeſq́; abſciderunt? An non aures nareſq́; obtruncarunt, &c. What kind of cruelty did not they deviſe againſt the Chriſtians? Did not they cut off their hands and feet, their eares and noſes, and invent all ſtrait bands to the height and extremity of torment, &c. Thus wee ſee the Church in the middeſt of the Sea, compaſſed about in this ſort with enemies domeſticall and forraine. Domeſticall, Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, who (as a generation of Vipers) gnaw aſunder their Mothers belly. Forraine, Pagans and Heathens, who cruelly and bloodily trouble the poore Ship: by meanes whereof, ſometimes ſhe mounteth aloft, as a Ship doth, being praiſed and commended greatly; and ſometimes ſhe is throwne by reproches and contumelies of much contempt, being in caſe even fitly to ſay with the Poet: — Baſil de Spiritu Sancto, cap.30.

Tollimur in cœlum curvato gurgite; & iidem
Subducta ad manes imos deſcendimus unda.

Or rather with the Pſalme, We are carried up to the Heavens, and down again to the deepe. Our Soule melteth in us, and we are even at deaths doore.

Another circumſtance were contrary winds, which vehemently did beat the Ship, even as ſtill and daily infinit croſſes doe the Church and members of it: as when we are in health, and ſaile merrily, ſuddenly commeth a contrary winde of ſickneſſe, and ſhaketh us ſhrewdly. When we are rich, loſſes come; when we have friends, they die; our good name is touched, our ſervants deceive us; our children miſcarry or rebell againſt us; and infinit are the contrary winds that ariſe, and trouble this ſailing Ship of ours in this world. The laſt (but not the leaſt) was Chriſts abſence from them: For as ſoone as he had ſent them away, ſaith the Goſpell, He departed into a Mountaine to pray. Let this informe us, how dangerous the abſence of the Paſtor is: When Moſes was abſent, the Iſraelites fell to great and groſſe Idolatry. Whileſt men ſleepe, the Enemie ſoweth tares. And what too much abſence of Paſtors hath done of evill in England, who can tell? Wee are preſent often in the time of profit, but abſent too often touching paines. The Shippes therefore, over which the Lord hath appointed many of us, are not only troubled as this was, but almoſt even ſunke and caſt away by contrary windes of Romiſh charmes. Theſe are the perils of the Ship. Now may wee likewiſe in the ſame place of the Goſpell obſerve our duties in theſe perils: Laborant in remigando, They tooke great paines in rowing; paines and paines together, with conſent and agreement: Two excellent things, and moſt worthy noting. We may not then caſt away hope in every ſtorme, and commit the Ship to the mercy of the Sea; for thus did not here the Lords Diſciples: but wee muſt row, and labour in rowing, and that joyntly all hands together: not ſome row, and ſome ſleepe: not ſome row forward, and ſome backward; not ſome helpe, and ſome hinder; but all, I ſay againe, and all together, as Water-men lift together, and ſtrike together, and all one way, with one heart and will, ſeeking to ſave the Ship againſt contrary windes, waves and perils: for thus did the Diſciples here. And thus did Baſil reconcile himſelfe to Euſebius, leſt the Arrians by their diſſenſion ſhould prevaile. Princes and Prelats are theſe Rowers in the Ship of this Church: and then every one that hath any intereſt in his place, and for his place, muſt ſhew his care, and joyne his helpe, that all may be ſafe. For though the Ship almoſt touched the ſhore, yet may ſhee quickly be driven back againe into the deepe, if this rowing ſlacke. Darius the father of Xerxes, was wont to ſay, that the warres made him wiſe, and ſurely ſo may the Ships dangers make every man more expert. But no man muſt faint and give over in perill, for the end will be good, and ſuch fainting feare ſhould be very ſinfull. If I ſhould enter into particulars, ſurely much negligence might appeare: But I rather wiſh every man to awake his owne heart, that whatſoever is paſt, yet hereafter it may be better, and if there be ever a ſleeping Ionas, awake him, and bid him call upon his God. Thus doing, the end (I ſay) will be good. For mark now what followeth in the Goſpell: The Diſciples thus labouring painfully in rowing, the Lord Ieſus ſaw them, came unto them, and all was well.

Niceph. l.11.18.

He ſeeth all men, and all matters; but a gracious eye hath he ever to thoſe, that are labouring and rowing according to their calling; which what a comfort it is, judge you: And he not onely ſeeth them, but commeth unto them, ſaith, It is I, and maketh all things well. This is the happy victory of the Church, and every member of the ſame at laſt, over all perils and dangers, windes and waves, ſtormes and tempeſts whatſoever. To this therefore caſt both eye and heart, and be ever cheered in the aſſurance of it. The tempeſt is great, Acts 5. but they row on, and overcome. There is a great billow riſeth againſt Saint Paul, Acts 13. even Elimas the Sorcerer; but ſtrongly Paul rowed on, and overcame. Athanaſius and Hilary againſt Arrius, Baſil againſt Eunomius, Tertullian againſt Hermogenes, Origen againſt Celſus, Auguſtine againſt Fauſtus and Pelagius, Cyprian againſt Novatus, &c. How painefully, how carefully did they rowe and overcome? Scripturæ remis Doctores æquora verrunt: With the Oares of Gods holy word, theſe Doctors overcame all thoſe waves and winds. Poſt lachrymas riſus, poſt exilium Paradiſus, dixerunt Veteres: After weeping commeth laughing, and after baniſhment commeth Paradiſe, ſaid our Elders. Cæſar bade the Mariner be of good comfort; becauſe he caryed him ſo great a Monarch. But how much more may the Ship, wherein Chriſt is, be comforted? When came Chriſt to them, ſaith the Text? Surely not till the fourth watch of the night, that is, not till the morning, or dayes dawning. For the night being divided into foure watches or parts, to wit, the beginning of the night, the mid-night, the Cocks crow about three of the clock after mid-night, and the dawning: This you ſee is laſt; ſo that all the night it pleaſed Chriſt to let them be troubled, and he did not by and by come unto them. Teaching thereby all his faithfull to be ſtrong and patient, not yeelding to temptation, if in haſte the Lord come not with helpe, but ſtoutly and ſtrongly wraſtling till he come, leaving the time to his owne good pleaſure, and comfortably being aſſured that he will come at laſt, as here and ever hee did. Turbatur mare, fluctuabat navicula: navicula Eccleſia eſt, mare ſeculum: ſed venit Dominus & ambulavit ſupra mare, & repreſſit fluctus ſpumantes, & magni (poteſtate ſcilicet) & Reges crediderunt Chriſto, & ſubjugati ſunt. The Sea is troubled (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) and the Shippe is toſſed: the Ship is the Church, and Confide, nauta, nam Cæſarem vehis.

Aug in Pſal. 92. in fine.

and the Sea is the world; but the Lord came and walked upon the Sea, and repreſſed all theſe ſwelling waves and billowes; to wit, the Kings and Potentates of the earth beleeved in Chriſt, and were ſubdued unto him. Who, whileſt they raged againſt the poore Ship, were ſo farre from ſinking her, (as they deſired to doe:) Vt plane illis perſimiles inventi ſint, &c. That altogether (ſaith Theodoret) they became like unto thoſe, that ſeeking to quench the flame, fondly poure oyle in, and ſo make it greater. And even as the buſh that Moſes ſaw was not conſumed with fire: no more could the enemies with their warres and weapons overthrow it. Simones, Marciones, Valentini, &c. The Simoneans, the Marcionits, the Valentinians, and a number more, (ſaith Greg. Nazianz.) they are all drowned in their owne deepes, and the Church is delivered. Even therefore as the Iſraelites here againſt Pharaoh and his hoaſt, ſo ſhall Gods Church have victory againſt her enemies; but in Gods time, not at her owne will; till then conſtant faith and painfull rowing be graces becomming the Church and every member of it. I am Ioſeph your brother, was a word of great comfort, you know, in the figure; and It is I, it is I, be not afraid, is a farre greater comfort in Chriſt who was figured, blotting all feares whatſoever out of our hearts.

Laſtly, Thus Iſrael ſaw the mighty power which the Lord ſhewed upon the Ægyptians: ſo the people feared the Lord, and beleeved the Lord, and his ſervant Moſes. This is the end of Gods mercies to his children, and of his judgements upon their foes, to encreaſe all good duties in them towards him: and (by name) a reverend feare of his Majeſty: and a faithfull aſſurance in his love. They beleeved before in ſome meaſure, but now in a greater meaſure, as may bee ſaid of the Diſciples, where the like ſpeech is uſed, Ioh. 2. 11. They beleeved alſo his ſervant Moſes, that is, they now plainely ſee that God was with him, whom they ſo wickedly had abuſed. Let it profit us to beware by them either to diſtruſt God, or to wrong his Miniſters appointed over us, and let us learne, that although faith reſpect God onely, yet is there ſuch an union betwixt him and his Miniſters, as in deed and truth we cannot beleeve him, unleſſe wee alſo beleeve his Miniſters ſpeaking from him. And therefore whom God hath joyned (even in this ſenſe alſo) let no man ſever, but beleeve the Lord, and his ſervant Moſes. What is paſt of unkindneſſe towards your faithfull Miniſter caring for you, praying for you, and weeping for you when you are faſt on ſleepe in your bed, let it grieve your heart in your ſecret Chamber, and doe ſo no more; the Lord is with him, and his ſervice is Gods mercy to you, the abuſe or contempt of him will ſo grieve the Lord, that you are ſure to feele his heavy hand for it. Bee wiſe therefore, and let both this particular and the whole Chapter profit you in Gods bleſſing.

CHAP. XV.

Conſider in this Chapter theſe two generall heads.

1. The thankeſgiving both of men and women.
2. The fall again of theſe Iſraelites at Marah.

1 TOuching the firſt, obſerve the antiquity of writing in Verſe, and the reaſon why Moſes uſed verſe here: even to continue a longer and better remembrance of ſo famous a work of God for his Church: for we ſhall ſee by experience, that what is written in Verſe, both more affecteth, and more ſticketh in the memory, than what is written in Proſe. Wee muſt learne alſo by this example, ever after mercies and comforts to give thankes. For the Cuſtome of the Church is the inſtruction of every particular man and woman in the Church. The cuſtome we ſee here, and in other places. What Melchiſedech did after Abrahams victory, wee reade in Geneſis. What Deborah and Barak did, we reade in Iudges. What the women ſang to Saul and David, we reade in that Story. As alſo what was carefully done after that great victory and deliverance vouchſafed to Iehoſhaphat. A feaſt was kept every yeare to remember thankfully Hamans deſtruction, and the Jewes joyfull deliverance. Iudeths ſervice and bleſſing with God is not forgotten. And if you will goe to Davids Pſalmes, how many of them are Pſalmes of thankeſgiving after benefits? Of the cleanſed Lepers, though nine forget, yet one is thankefull. The man healed of the palſie, taketh up his bed, and praiſeth God. The Criple healed, entred into the Temple, walking, and leaping, and praiſing God. God and man abhorre the contrary, and when thou art truely ſaid to be unthankfull, (but even to man) there is in that one word all evill contained and affirmed of thee. Now, if private benefits ſhould bee remembred, much more publike which touch ſo many. Wherefore, for both bee ever thankefull to God as the fountaine, and to man as his meanes. Imperfection in this duty beſeech him to pardon, &c.

Verſ. 1. 2 When was this thankeſgiving made? The Text telleth you in this word Then, Then ſang Moſes and the Children of Iſrael: That is, even preſently as ſoone as they could gather all their company together on the other ſide of the Sea, whither ſo happily they were brought on dry foot by a mighty God. In the 5. of Iudges you may note it alſo; Then ſang Deborah and Barak, even the ſame day. And ſurely, to defer, it is alwaies dangerous; ſo ſoone are we cooled, and become dull and heavy after the greateſt mercies. Doe it therefore whileſt thy heart is hot, and thy feeling ſweet of his favour found. Doe it quickly and heartily: and ſo thou moveſt the Lord to more mercy. For gratiarum actio eſt ad plus dandum invitatio: thankefulneſſe is an inviting of God to give more, ſaith Saint Ambroſe. Doe what wee can, wee ſhall be weake, and our beſt duties be full of wants: but yet ſpeed will helpe ſomewhat, and our care in making ſpeed ſhall finde mercy for ſuch wants; When dulneſſe, crept in by careleſſe delay, ſhall be puniſhed.

3 Note with your ſelfe further the manner of their Song: namely, how they being many, yet uſe the ſingular number, and ſay, I will ſing: when in a right phraſe of ſpeech they ſhould have ſaid, We will ſing. This plainly teacheth us, that a good forme of giving thankes, is, every particular perſon out of his owne feeling to ſay, I, I, good Lord doe yeeld unto thy Majeſty, my bounden thankes for my ſelfe and for my brethren, for my ſelfe and for thy whole Church And ſo every one feeling, and every one thanking, the Lord is praiſed of all, as his mercy and goodneſſe reacheth to all. A contrary courſe it is, to truſt to other mens giving of thanks for me, and to be dull and dumbe my ſelfe. Davids words have another touch, Thou art my God, and I, I will praiſe thee: even My God, therefore I will exalt thee, I, I, againe in mine owne perſon, and with mine owne heart, and with mine owne tongue, &c.

Pſal. 118. 28.

4 I will ſing, that is, not onely in heart will I feele and thinke; but with my voice will I expreſſe and publiſh the due praiſes of ſuch a God. Outward ſigns ſhall goe with inward truth: that both outwardly and inwardly I may doe my duty. As I am glad that men ſee his goodneſſe to mee, ſo thinke I it fit they ſhould alſo behold my duty to him. I publiſh the one, I will not hide the other; I am glad of the one, and far be it from me to be aſhamed of the other. David ſpeaketh of the great Congregation, and I will ſing in the middeſt of his people.

5 To whom? To the Lord will I ſing, who is the fountaine: not to my ſelfe and my wit, to my Friends and my Fortune, to my bags and my baggage, or any other thing. No Creature with me ſhall rob him of his right, but to the Lord will I ſing. And why? For he hath triumphed glorioufly: the Horſe and him that rode him hath He overthrown in the Sea: He, He hath done thus for me, for us, &c. The Lord is my ſtrength and praiſe, and he is become my Salvation. Some put their truſt in Chariots, and ſome in Horſemen: but we will remember the Lord our God. Curſed be the man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arme, and with-draweth his heart from the Lord. For he ſhall be like the Heath in the wilderneſſe, and ſhall not ſee when any good commeth, & ſhall inhabit the parched places in the Wilderneſſe, in a ſalt Land, and not inhabited. But, Bleſſed is the man that truſteth in the Lord, and whoſe hope the Lord is. For he ſhall be as a tree that is planted by the water, which ſpreadeth out her roots by the River, and ſhall not feele when the heat commeth, but her leafe ſhall be green, and ſhall not care for the yeer of drought, neither ſhall ceaſe from yeelding fruit. He is my God, and I will prepare him a Tabernacle (to worſhip him in.) He is my Fathers God, and I will exalt him. The Tabernacle of thy heart (if thy power be no greater) pleaſeth him well, and worſhip him there.

Verſe 4.

6 The Lord is a Man of Warre, his Name is Iehovah. As if hee ſhould have ſaid, The world hath had and ſtill hath men of warre and might, but the Lord our God farre paſſeth them all: for his Name is Iehovah, that is, eternall and not periſhing as theſe Warriours: Almighty, Faithfull, &c. Pharaohs Chariots in the plurall number, not one, but many. His Hoaſt hath he caſt into the Sea: his choſen Captaines alſo were drowned in the Red-ſea: that is, men Noble, men wiſe, men valiant and ſtrong, all are deſtroyed, and none of theſe gifts could preſerve them. A paſſing comfort when we are feared with mens gifts, as David was with deep wiſdome of Achitophel. Away with ſuch feare; for there is no wiſedome, no counſell, no ſtrength againſt the Lord, ſaith the Prophet. Hee ſhall blow them away as duſt before us, be they never ſo great, if wee cleave to him. The depths have covered them, and they ſanke to the bottome as a ſtone. Hee, no Angels did this. As a ſtone they ſanke; that is, violently and mightily the Lord overthrew them, that all proud fleſh may feare his power. So you reade in the Apocalyps, that a mighty Angell tooke up a ſtone like a Mil-ſtone, and caſt it into the Sea, ſaying, with ſuch violence ſhall the great City Babylon be caſt, and ſhall be found no more. Againe, as a ſtone they ſanke; that is, without recovery and all helpe. For a ſtone ſwimmeth not out, being caſt in; but goeth to the bottome, and there abideth. Fearfull therefore, and very fearfull was their deſtruction, to the terror of all thoſe that ſhall perſecute the Church of God and his people.

Verſe 5.

Apoc. 18. 21. Ier. 51. 63.

Verſe 6.

7 Thy right hand, Lord, is glorious in power; thy right hand, Lord, hath bruiſed the enemy: Not our vertue, not our merits, not our armes, or men of might, &c. Never doe the true Profeſſors of God rob him and cloath themſelves as worldly Hypocrites uſe to doe; but with Moſes here they they give all to God, where indeed it is due: and say with holy David, Not unto us Lord, not unto us; but unto thy Name give the praise.

In that they are said to have risen against God, (when they rose but against his people) obserue the union betwixt God and his Church: even such, as who so toucheth the one, toucheth the other. For he that toucheth you, saith God, toucheth the apple of mine eye. And Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me? Me in my members, and by my members? Let it feare the harmer, and comfort the harmed. The like doth the word Stubble in this same verse teach; teaching both to the oppressor, how vaine he is in the sight of God (seem he never so strong in his owne eyes) and to the oppressed, how little cause hee hath to feare such an one, being loved and protected by such an Almighty Creator. Neither is it any labour for the Lord thus to tread them downe under his feet that rise up against him and his people. For even by the blast of his Nostrils, saith the next verse, the waters were gathered, the Floods stood still as an heape, and the depthes congealed together in the heart of the Sea. Easie, and easie it shall bee for him ever to doe his good pleasure with all flesh: yet great is the confidence of the wicked for all this; for see what followeth. Verse 7. Zach.2.8. Verse 8.

8 The enemy said, I will pursue them, I will overtake them, I will divide the spoyle, my lust shall bee satisfied upon them, I will draw my sword, and my hand shall destroy them. See how the Spirit of GOD describeth the proud confidence of the wicked thus boasting and braving, as if they could doe even what they lust, not once thinking of his restraining power over them: and how the breath in their Nostrils is ever subject to his Will. Thus the Mother of Sisera made her selfe merry, saying, Have they not gotten and divided the spoile? Every man hath a maide or two. Sisera hath a prey of divers coloured garments, a prey of sundry colours made of Needle-worke, &c. Thus boasted that railing Rabshaketh with most insolent words, and haughty pride, if you looke the place. Thus stand up the Kings of the Earth (saith the Prophet) and the Rulers take counsell together against the Lord, and against his Christ: saying proudly, Let us breake their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us. But it well followeth there, He that dwelleth in the Heavens, shall laugh them to scorne, the Lord shall have them in derision. And in this place most comfortably, Thou blewest with thy winde, the Sea covered them, they sanke as lead in the mighty waters. Downe then Peacocks feathers, downe; for foule shall bee the fall evermore of Dust and Ashes that hearteneth it selfe in wickednesse: and of the Creature that riseth against the Creator, and saith, I will doe this or that. This will shall want, as here it did: and if not the Sea, as in this place, yet some other plague of Gods wrath shall sup up such pride, and bring an uncircumcised Philistime to a fearefull fall. Iudg.5.30. 2 King.18.27. Psal.2.2,3,4. Verse 10.

For as it followeth in the next verse, O Lord, who is like unto thee among the gods! Who is like to thee, so glorious in holinesse, fearfull in praises, doing wonders! Thou stretchedst out thy right hand, the Earth swallowed them, &c. Let the Proud of these times make use of these things, who say, With their tongues they will prevaile: they are they which ought to speake; and who is Lord over them? The Scripture teacheth but good things, and yet even in such good things it willeth this condition to be added, if the Lord will, and we live, And this Rule follow all that be his. Others, which boast of power, taste of confusion, &c. Vers.11. Vers.12. Iam.12.4.

9 And Miriam the Propheteſſe, Sister of Aaron, tooke a Timbrell in her hand, and all the women came out after her with Timbrels and Daunces. And Miriam answered the men, Sing ye unto the Lord, &c. In common duties due to God none sit out. The benefit of this glorious deliverance reached unto the Women also: and therefore they will give thankes in like manner, and not to be exempted. The mens good examples is a praise to them, and the womens ready following the same is as great a praise to them. Verse 20,21.

Man and Woman, and Man and wife thus to joyne and agree together to honour him that saveth them, ô blessed sight! Ioseph will goe up to Hierusalem according to the Law, and Mary his Wife, that blessed Virgin will also goe with him: No division, no difference, no jarres betwixt them in Gods matters. If the one owe a duty, the other thinketh shee doth so too, and with one heart, according to one Rule, and that prescribed of God in his holy Word they both worship him, and so come home. Miriam and the Women here will doe as their Husbands, and their Husbands and they both but what is warranted in Gods holy Booke. The praise of it is chronicled up here, that all Ages may see how it pleaseth God. Miriam leadeth all the rest; and it is noted to her praise. In our dayes when we are resolved that the thing is good, and to be done; yet by no meanes will we begin, wee may not bee the first, but if others begin happily, we will follow. Thus did not Miriam, you see here, and therefore she hath praise with God, which you must needs want following such a niceneſſe to do good things. Such Miriams in a Towne God make many, as will begin, and goe before others, taking comfort in doing well with the first, and not with the last. Thus for men to bee a meanes to stirre up Women, and one Woman to stirre up another; Fathers to move their Children, Mothers their Daughters, Masters their Servants, and Friends their Friends, what a comfort is it where God granteth it? Their Timbrels and their Dances were according to the manner of those parts, a grave and modest modeſt going in order with Songs and ſignes of joy; no light nor wanton leaping, neither men and women together, as in the commandement againſt Adultery hath beene ſhewed. Shee is called Aarons Siſter, becauſe Aaron was the eldeſt Brother, yet ſhee was Moſes Siſter alſo.

The Second part.

1 THeſe things thus ended concerning the Thankeſgiving, from the Red ſea they went into the Wilderneſſe of Shur, and in three dayes travell they found no water, afterwards they found ſome, but it was ſo bitter they could not drinke it. A new tryall of their Faith and patience: and wee may well note in it the courſe of the life of a Childe of God in this world: even to paſſe from tryall to tryall: and ſtill to be tryed one way or other: That through many tribulations
Act.14.22. at length he may enter into the Kingdome of God: and after many fights receive that Crowne of righteouſneſſe, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, ſhall give at that day unto all them that ſo have finiſhed their courſe in Faith, and love his appearing. In thoſe hot Countries the want of water is a greater affliction than elſe-where: and yet great is the want of it any where. But when they had found it, to have it ſo bitter, was croſſe upon croſſe, making Moſes words true, God tooke unto him a people by ſignes and wonders, by warre and might, by a

Verſe 24. 2 Then the people murmured againſt Moſes, ſaying, what ſhall we drinke? Who could have thought it poſſible ſo ſoone after ſuch a glorious Deliverance for ſuch infirmity to ſhew it ſelfe againe. But thus is man both to God and his Miniſters, as ſoone as any contrary winde bloweth againſt him. Truely therefore ſaid the Lord of us, That our wickedneſſe is great in the Earth,
Gen.6.5. and all the imaginations of the thoughts of our hearts onely evill continually. Let it ſtrike us and humble us, that no man thinke he is ſupported. For certainly this is our mould to murmure ever when we are diſpleaſed. Let the Miniſter of God obſerve this Nature, and bee prepared for the like in his people, if occaſion ſerve. Moſes was a great man, and full of all juſt matter, of high reverence with his Flocke; yet we ſee how he is dealt with. As ſoone as any thing toucheth them, Why? Why? And What? What? Still flying upon him with their venomed words of bitter impatience; and hee muſt anſwer for all the tryals it pleaſeth God to lay upon his Church, or any member therof. A fitter courſe it had beene for a people ſo taught with paſſed favours, to have aſſured themſelves of future helpes in Gods good time, and with patience and Faith to have expected the ſame, aſſuring themſelves that he never had done ſo great things for them to to give them over in any need. This is therefore their great fault: and let it profit us never to offend ſo: But to looke upon David, that good Patterne, who reaſoned ſoundly and comfortably, That he which had delivered him from the Beare and the Lyon, would alſo ſave him from that
2 Cor.1.10. uncircumciſed Philiſtime: to looke alſo upon S. Paul, who maketh the ſame Argument, that God did deliver him, doth deliver him, and hereafter will deliver him aſſuredly. This, this is the right way, To remember how many baskets full of broken meate were taken up: and never to feare any want where ſuch a powerfull God is. To remember what God hath done for me, and to make that an argument both of my prayer and hope, as David doth when he ſaith, Thou haſt

Verſe 25. 3 What doth poore Moſes thus grieved againe with a perverſe People? ſurely againe hee runneth to his God, and cryeth to him. And this ſtill is the refuge of the poore Miniſter, and of all thoſe that feare him. Uſe it and keepe it, God is not as man, to be weary; and thou ſhalt finde the fruit of it, as Moſes did againe in this place. For upon this his crying the Lord ſhewed him a Tree, which when hee had caſt into the waters they were ſweet: and the people dranke of them, with great contentment to their fill. Hath not God then an iſſue for every temptation, if wee would expect it? Are not the Cries of his ſervants heard? And doe not they cry to him when others murmure againſt him? Marke all theſe things with your ſelfe, and bee the better; for I paſſe them over with this pointing at them. And for this Tree, which being caſt into the waters make them ſweet, take it for a moſt excellent Figure of Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, by whom all bitter affliction is made ſweete: and the ſowre curſe of the Law, condemning all men without him, quite and cleane taken away. For who is able either to endure the croſſe, or to taſte of the Law without Chriſt; yet in him and by him both are ſweet: affliction fitting us to Gods Kingdome, and the Law teaching us what to doe, and what to flie. Conſider of theſe Marginall Quotations by your ſelfe, and adde the like unto them. And touching theſe bitter waters, marke how they are a meanes to diſcover the hidden bitterneſſe which lay in the hearts of theſe murmurers; and thinke with your ſelfe, that even ſo doth bitter adverſity in many men and women at this day, diſcloſe ſecrets, and ſhew them to have weakneſſe, before not knowne or thought of. Secondly, Note how in travelling to the Land of Canaan, we muſt aſſuredly paſſe by Marah, and there we muſt make a pitching place for a time, till it ſhall pleaſe God to grant a remove. Bitter, bitter, and very bitter will the waters prove; but murmure we not, as theſe men did: for he that was ſo gracious as to make them ſweet to ſuch Repiners, what will he doe in his good time to us, if we patiently abide his will? Surely hee will much more reſpect us, and even boaſt of our patience to our eternall good; as hee did of his ſervant Iobs righteouſneſſe.

But now for the Tree. Some aske whether there were any ſuch vertue in it by nature, to ſweeten waters? And if there were, what need God had to uſe any ſuch meanes, ſeeing with his onely word he could have helped them?

For anſwer whereunto, it may firſt be ſaid concerning the firſt, that the Lord hath given moſt excellent vertues to his creatures, beaſts, hearbs, plants, ſtones, trees and ſuch like, thereby to ſhew his mighty power, wiſedome and mercy. As for beaſts, their blood, their fleſh, their fat, what vertues are in them? For hearbs, ſome comfort and helpe the braine, ſome the eyes, ſome the liver, ſome the heart, ſome one part, ſome another, with moſt rare and ſoveraigne qualities given them of God for this end. The conſideration whereof hath greatly delighted many worthy perſons, and cauſed them both to ſpeake and write of them with great pleaſure. Ariſt. hiſt. anim. Pliny. Ælian. Zanch. de oper. Levinus Lemnius, &c.

Mithridates that great King of Pontus, and of one and twenty Kingdomes more, for his wonderfull skill in hearbs, and his foveraigne remedy againſt poyſon and contagious diſeaſes, called after his name, Mithridate, is become in all bookes and monuments of learning, renowned and famous. Lyſimachus Eupator King of Illyricum, is ſaid to have beene moſt skilfull in hearbs. Artemiſia the wife of Mauſolus the King of Caria, was an excellent Lady for knowledge in hearbs. Marcus Valerius Corvinus a worthy Romane, was ſo delighted with the ſtudy of hearbs, that he withdrew him-ſelfe into the Countrey, where hee might wholly (as it were) dwell in his garden.

But what doe I ſpeake of theſe, ſince wee all know what is written of Salomon? Namely, how hee wrote of all Trees, from the Cedar which is in Lebanon, to the Hyſſop which ſpringeth out of the wall: that is, from the higheſt to the loweſt. He wrote of plants and hearbs, beſide of beaſts, fowles, creeping things and fiſhes, worthy bookes no doubt, if it had pleaſed God to let them continue unto this day. The ſtrange vertues of precious ſtones divers likewiſe have written, whom both with pleaſure and profit we may reade. Concerning all which happy qualities vouchſafed to theſe creatures, and even particularly of this Wood we now ſpeake of, remember with your ſelfe that notable teſtimony of Ieſus the Sonne of Syrach in his booke: The Lord (ſaith he) hath created medicines of the earth, and he that is wiſe will not abhor them. Was not the water made ſweet with wood, that men might know the vertue thereof? So he hath given men knowledge, that he might be glorified in his wondrous workes. With ſuch doth hee heale men, and take away their paines. Of ſuch doth the Apothecary make a confection, &c. Such vertue therefore was in the Wood, given to it by God, who is the God of Nature, and giveth all theſe things. Franciſc. Rurus. Zanch. de oper. Dei, &c. Eccleſ. 38. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

To the ſecond, why God ſhould uſe ſuch meanes, being able with his word to ſweeten them; true anſwer may be made, That although God be able to doe all things by himſelfe, yet chooſeth he often to worke by meanes, and that for our good. As firſt, that ſo hee might teach us his ſoveraigne power over all creatures, uſing them at his pleaſure, how and when hee ſhall beſt like; and draw us to the true reverence and worſhip of him, as Creator, Ruler, Lord, and Governour of all the Creatures. Secondly, that hee might manifeſt by this meanes, his love and goodneſſe to us much more, when he maketh all his creatures ſerve to our health, comfort and good, and ſo draw and ſtirre us up to true thankfulneſſe unto him for it. Thirdly, that he might teach us thus not to abuſe thoſe his creatures, which with ſo excellent vertues and qualities are created for us, to doe us good. Fourthly, that wee might learne by this meanes not to contemne ſecond cauſes and meanes, by abuſing (through a vaine preſumption) the holy doctrine of his providence. For when God himſelfe is pleaſed to uſe theſe inſtruments, who are we that we ſhould reject them? And if we doe, what doe we contemne and reject but his ordinance? Lewd and wicked therefore are the Anabaptiſts, who as of the ſoule, ſo of the body, caſt away the meanes of health, and yet ſay, they deſire the health of both. Saint Auguſtines words I cannot paſſe over, (fit for them, and fit for us in this matter,) in his whole 29. Chapter of the 7. Booke of the City of God; ſhewing how God uſed ſecond cauſes in the government of the world, becauſe he hath created them to that purpoſe. Yet ever he doth not tie himſelfe to theſe things, but ſometime without them, and even contrary to them he worketh his will alſo; that thereby we might learne his uſing of them to be without neede, ſeeing he can worke without them if he pleaſe. Secondly, that when hee uſeth them it is hee that worketh by them, and not they without him; as hee giveth light in the Sonne, feedeth us in our meate, &c. For if without them it be he, much more in them and by them it is hee. Thirdly, that wee might ſee how how many wayes hee is able to helpe us, when any thing is wanting unto us which is needfull. And this we may well thinke was the cauſe here, why it pleaſed God to ſhew this tree, that they might be aſhamed of their impatiency and miſtruſt, never more ſo ſinning againe, ſeeing (by one meanes or other) there is with him ever ſo ready and eaſie a helpe. Yea, this is the cauſe alſo why (even contrary to Nature) he worketh often; that neither to nature we ſhould tie him, deſpairing of health, wealth or liberty, when we ſee no meanes, or meanes (in reaſon) working to the contrary; forasmuch as he is ſtill above all, and can with meanes, and without meanes, agreeably to Nature, and contrary to Nature, give his Name praiſe, and his Children comfort in a moment. Profit we therefore thus by this Tree ſhewed to Moſes in extremity to make the waters ſweet withall.

Verſe 25, 26. 4 There he made them an ordinance and a Law, and there hee provoked them, and ſaid, if thou wilt diligently hearken, O Iſrael, unto the voyce of the Lord thy God, and wilt doe that which is right in his ſight, and wilt give eare unto his Commandements, and keep all his Ordinances; then will I put none of theſe diſeaſes upon thee, which I brought upon the Ægyptians: for I am the Lord that healeth thee. Where the Lord tryed them by want of water, there hee alſo admoniſhed them by his Word, declaring unto them their juſt deſerving of ſuch plagues and diſeaſes as were inflicted upon the Ægyptians: from which they had beene free hitherto, onely by his free mercy and goodneſſe; and acquainting them that the onely way for them ſo to continue ſtill, was to hearken to his will, and to obey the ſame; otherwiſe hee being the onely Author of health, it could not be ſo with them. Which word of his, let it informe us what alſo is our defence from all evill, certainly even the ſame Lord, and none but Hee. The way alſo to obtaine it, the very ſame that was then, To hearken and to obey, not our wils but His, not our wiſdomes but His, not our Lawes but His. This, this ſhall abide, and ſtand, and onely this. All mens devices and will-worſhip ſhall vaniſh as vile from before him. Conſider well of this Pſalme, where firſt is put forgiveneſſe of ſinnes, and then the healing of all infirmities.

Verſe 27. Hierom of 12. Diſciples, &c. 5 Then came they to Elim where were twelve Fountaines of water, and ſeventy Palme trees: and they camped there by the waters. So commeth comfort after ſorrow, and plenty after ſcarcity. For now they have twelve Fountaines of water, and goodly trees to yeeld them cooling ſhadows for their comfort. And ſurely the trials of the Church, or of any particular member therein, ſhall have a joyfull end: and though they be never ſo many, yet the Lord delivereth out of them all. Who would not truſt then in ſuch a God, and tarry his time that never faileth. God, for his mercy ſake, give us faith and conſtant patience, Amen, Amen.

Chap. XVI.

The generall Heads of this Chapter are chiefly theſe.

The grievous murmuring of theſe Iſraelites.
The gift of Manna from Heaven.
The Lawes and Orders concerning the ſame.

1 BEfore their murmuring, there is in the firſt Verſe mention made of another camping, namely, in the wilderneſſe of Sin, which was the eight place they had pitched in ſince their comming out of Ægypt. And in the Booke of Numbers a particular Record is made of all the places together: as likewiſe in another place of that Booke, that at the Commandement of the Lord they journied, and at the commandement of the Lord they pitched. By all which we comfortably may ſee, that the Tabernacles or Tents of the Church, and every particular member, are pitched where the Lord will, and taken up and removed when hee will, and whither hee will. For he it is that governeth and guideth all theſe things, even as he doth all other matters in this world, and nothing is done without his will. The Lot is fallen to me (ſaith the Prophet David) in a faire place: I have a goodly heritage: thereby aſcribing to the Lord this honour, that by him every mans portion, and place in this world is appointed. He divided the Land of Canaan, and gave to every Tribe that part which by his ſervant Iacob hee had foretold long before. Which doctrine may yeeld every heart patience and peace, to bee quiet and contented with Gods will howſoever it be. For Beggars may be no chuſers; and wee are all his beggars that ruleth theſe things. Have I little? it is his will, and I ought to bee pleaſed. Have I more? it is more mercy, and God make me thankfull. Thankfull for the one, and thankfull for the other, and ever contented with his will. My pitching is here, and there by his providence, in a faire houſe, or a foule; in a rich living, or a ſmall; in a good countrey, or a bad; in England, or in France: and whereſoever, or howſoever, it is above my merit; and therefore I ſhould be pleaſed, and be thankfull.

Chap. 9. 18.

2 The time is named, to wit; the fifteenth day; to let us all know, that even ſo much more deteſtable was that ingratitude, by how much the remembrance of ſo great and wonderfull a deliverance from their enemies was more freſh in memory, being ſo late. And will it not be ſo in us? Therfore, thus would I have us profit by it, even to thinke in the morning of our ſafety by his mercy all the night, and at night of our ſafety all the day: And ſtill ſtill of freſh favours; which unleſſe I be thankfull for, I muſt needs be a great offender, ſeeing it is not poſſible to plead forgetfulneſſe in ſuch freſh and new things: Nay, if it were a fault in theſe Iſraelites to forget or be dull in a matter of fifteene dayes old, how much greater a fault in the morning to forget to be thankfull for the nights mercy laſt before, and but even now ended: but you ſee my drift, follow it further by your owne ſelfe. Surely, ſurely, freſh favours would have freſh remembrances and zealous and hearty thankes for them.

3 Their murmuring is next ſpoken of, and next by us to bee conſidered. A foule and grievous fault ever: but in this people ſo bleſſed with happy experience of care and love, of might and mercy in their All-ſufficient God, more damnable and more odious than in others. Whereupon the Apoſtle giveth them for an example, to all people in all ages to learne to avoid this wickedneſſe, ſaying, Murmure not as ſome of them murmured, and were deſtroyed of the Deſtroyer. Numbers 14.36. for all theſe things came upon them for examples, and were written to admoniſh us, upon whom the ends of the world are come. The whole courſe of Gods ſacred Scriptures cryeth out of this ſinne in men and women, chiefly profeſſing God. For doe all things, ſaith the ſame Apoſtle, without murmuring and reaſoning. And S. Peter, Be ye harbourers one to another without murmurings. The eare of Iealouſie, ſaith Wiſedome, heareth all things, and the noiſe of grudgings ſhall not be hid. Therefore beware of murmuring, which profiteth nothing; and refraine your tongue from ſlander: for there is no word ſo ſecret, which ſhall goe for nought, and the mouth that ſpeaketh lyes, ſlayeth the Soule. Cain murmured, and the Scripture noteth it as his ſinne. Theſe Iſraelites were grievous murmurers, ſometimes for their labour, ſometimes for drinke, ſometimes for fleſh, ſometimes in diſtruſt to obtaine the City ſo ſtrongly walled, ſometimes for feare to be killed of their enemies, ſometimes at Gods Juſtice upon their diſobedient Brethren, ſometimes for want of dainties, as Figges, Pomegranates, Vines, &c. ſometimes for that they were overcloyed with Manna, and for other like cauſes: upon all which the Holy Ghoſt ſetteth a brand of diſlike: and ſo by their ſinne admoniſheth us to beware. Miriam murmureth againſt her Brother Moſes, the Lords faithfull ſervant, and how fearefully was ſhee ſmitten with a Leproſie? Let this ſmite the heart of every Chriſtian Reader, and make him conſider what may quickly happen to himſelfe, if he be a murmurer. From the Old Teſtament come to the New, and obſerve as much. The Phariſes murmure at Chriſt his mercy to the poore Publicanes: there is murmuring for good done on the Sabbath day: For not waſhing before meate: that ſuch as came late had a penny as well as thoſe that had borne the heat of the day: that the oyntment was powred upon Chriſt, and not rather ſold and given to the poore: that the Widdows were neglected: and that Mary doth not helpe Martha, but ſit and heare Chriſts words. But ſtill obſerve how all theſe were ſinfull and grievous to God; and what a diligent record is made of them, and of the ſeverall cauſes; that we might learne and ſee no cauſe to warrant this lewd behaviour. For either all, or moſt of theſe occaſions might have much ſaid in defence of them. And therefore theſe Quotations of Scripture with that of S. Iude, ſhort and ſharpe: Theſe are Murmurers, Complainers, walking after their owne luſts: whoſe mouthes ſpeake proud things, having mens perſons in admiration, becauſe of advantage, &c. Murmurers and Grudgers, and Complainers, ſuch as mutter, and murmure, and grudge and groane, if all things fall not out to their contentment, ſuch as miſlike their places, and callings, eſtates and conditions, and are angry with God if in all things he pleaſe not their humours. If they be reſtrained of liberty, if they be touched with poverty, if they bee pinched with penury, if they be ſubject to affliction and adverſity, if they bee not in higheſt places, and exalted to greateſt authority, they fret, they fume, they are offended and diſcontented with the Higheſt. These are the greedy Dogges ſpoken of by David, which runne about the City, and grudge if they be not ſatisfied. Irenæus the ancient Father giveth them a fit name (but a foule name) calling them ora Diaboli, the Devils mouthes. And the words of Plato are as fit, of unbridled mouthes, ſending out injury both to Heaven and Earth. The end of which mouthes Euripides by the light he had, could well diſcerne, that it would be miſery and woe, as indeed it will, try who liſt. Circumſtances increaſe this ſinne very much; as Who murmureth? againſt whom? and in what matter? Who murmureth? A Subject, a Sonne, a Friend, to whom much favour many wayes hath beene ſhewed; a profeſſor of the Goſpell, well acquainted with the Word, and upon whom many eyes are caſt, &c. Againſt whom? Againſt Prince, againſt Parents, againſt Friends, to whom obedience, duty, and love, with all the teſtimonies thereof are due, and moſt due; againſt God, whoſe Word is in our hands, and in our mouthes, and whoſe Servants we would gladly be eſteemed. In whatmatter? In a ſmall matter, in a trifle; and wherein, or for what, we ought rather give thankes in a matter lawfull, tolerable, good, and no way to be grudged at. Theſe and ſuch like Circumſtances I ſay, make the fault much fouler and greater.

Old writers have uttered theſe kindes in theſe words, Eſt murmuratio contra Deum per diſpli-centiam, contra Prælatum per inobedientiam, & contra proximum per invidentiam: There is a murmuring againſt God by diſcontentment, againſt our Superiour by diſobedience, and againſt our neighbour by envy. But from what Fountaine floweth all this filthy water which ſo offendeth God, ſo grieveth man, and ſo infecteth the very ayre? Surely either from impatience, or from pride, both bad and very bad fountaines. Of the firſt that was an example in the Acts of the Apoſtles, about the Widowes of the Gracians: For not able with patience to endure their conceited griefe, till there might bee declaration made therof, and order taken accordingly, they fell to ſecret carping and biting, unfit for the profeſſors of the Word: and in that heat touched even the Apoſtles themſelves with want of care of the latter, that is a moſt fearfull example in Numbers, of proud Corah and his Company, whoſe pride, envy, and ambition brought them to ſo ſtrange and dreadfull a death. They grieved that Moſes ſhould have ſuch authority, they thought themſelves worthy of ſome of it, and what they thought fit, not what pleaſed him, God muſt doe. Of which kinde of murmurers and enviers S. Gregory hath a good ſaying in his Morals, Qui contra ſuprapoſitam ſibi poteſtatem murmurat, liquet, quod illum redarguit, qui eandem poteſtatem dedit: Who ſo murmureth againſt authority ſet over him, it is manifeſt that he reproveth him who gave the ſame authority. And upon the ſeventh Pſalme, Murmurantes dicuntur intrare in judicium cum Deo: Murmurers are ſaid to enter into judgement with God: they are like, ſaith another, to a filthy Swine, who whether hee wake or ſleepe, is ever grunting. Murmuratores ſimiles ſunt verſantibus in gyrum, donec capite & ſenſibus perturbatis cætera omnia perturbari putant, Murmurers are like unto ſuch as turne round about till their heads and ſenſes being turned, they imagine all things to turne round. Sed noli adverſus quemquam murmurare, eſt enim abjectorum: But be not thou a murmurer againſt any man, for it is a baſe thing, and the quality of a baſe perſon. Errata propria magis quam aliena reprehendito: Rather reprove thine owne faults than other mens. Ediſcat non murmurare, qui mala patitur; etiam ſi ignoret cur mala patitur: per hoc enim quiſquis ſe juſte pati arbitrari poteſt, quia ab illo judicatur, cujus judicia nunquam ſunt injuſta: And let him that ſuffereth harme not murmure, although he know not the cauſe why he ſuffereth it: becauſe every man may thinke he ſuffereth juſtly, ſeeing he is judged of him, whoſe judgments are never unjuſt: A very notable ſentence, if you mark it; not allowing this vice in our hardeſt eſtate, and when we know not any reaſon of it. Qui in pœnis murmurat, ferientis juſtitiam accuſat: for he that murmureth at Gods puniſhment, or any iuſt puniſhment, accuſeth the iuſtice of him that puniſheth. But goe we forward. Felicity conſiſteth not in things of this life; therefore we ſhould not murmure for want of them. Iob bleſſeth the name of God in his greateſt affliction, and murmureth not. Of the godly it is often ſaid, The praiſe of God is ever in their mouthes: Then not murmuring. Murmurers want Davids ſtaffe ſo comfortable to him, therefore we ſhould avoid it. No artificer can like that his worke be diſpraiſed of one which hath leſſe skill, or evill will: and ſhall God like to have his predeſtination, his providence, his juſtice and mercy, and whatſoever is holy and good, to be cenſured and grudged at by duſt and aſhes? No, no. The wiſe mans counſell is excellent in this behalfe; Hearken unto me, ye holy children, and bring forth fruit, as the Roſe that is planted by the brookes of the field, And give ye a ſweet ſmell as Incenſe and bring forth flowers as the Lilly. What is this ſweet ſmell that muſt be given out? Marke what followeth, Sing a ſong of praiſe; and bleſſe the Lord in all his workes. Give honour unto his Name, and ſhew forth his praiſe with the ſongs of your lips, and with Harps, ſaying after this manner: All the works of the Lord are exceeding good, and all his Commandements are done in due ſeaſon. None may ſay, what is this? wherefore is that? For at time convenient they ſhall all be ſought out, &c. Reade the whole place your ſelfe, I pray you: and ſee how farre this is from murmuring and grudging. Optimum eſt pati quod emendare non potes, & Deum, quo authore cuncta proveniunt, ſine murmuratione comitari: It is beſt, ſaith Seneca, to ſuffer what thou canſt not amend, & to follow God (from whom, as from a Fountaine, all things doe come) without murmuring. Malus eſt miles qui imperatorem ſequitur gemens: Hee is a very bad Souldier that followeth his Generall with grumbling. And certainly hee is as bad a Chriſtian, that controuleth God in his workes; and thinketh this, or that, might be better. Some will have faire weather, and ſome will have foul: ſome wet, and ſome drie; ſome dearth, and ſome plenty: who can repeate mens vaine conceits herein, never caring for others, but for themſelves: and therein alſo mightily deceived, becauſe man indeed is not able to comprehend, what will ever be beſt for him. Holcot upon the Booke of Wiſedome telleth a tale of an Hermit, that having ſowed pot-hearbs in his Garden, deſired faire weather, and foule weather, as he judged to be beſt for his hearbs, and ſo had ſtill granted of God according to his requeſt, but not one hearbe came up: whereupon he thought, there was a generall failing in all places of ſuch hearbs, till on a time walking to another Hermit not farre off, he ſaw with him a very excellent crop: Then he told him what he had begged and obtained, touching the weather, and what effect it had. Whereunto the other Hermit anſwered, Putabas te ſapientiorem Deo, & ipſe oſtendit tibi fatuitatem tuam, &c. Thou diddeſt thinke thy ſelfe wiſer than God, and hee hath ſhewed thee thy folly. I for my crop never asked any other other weather thã God ſhould pleaſe to ſend. I would this old Hermit might teach many in our daies to be leſſe wiſe in their own conceits cõcerning both weather, and other matters, & to rely more upon Gods merciſull providence and bottomleſſe wiſdome, that he both knoweth what is beſt for mans uſe, and wil accordingly (for his own goodnes) vouchſafe the ſame. Then would there not be ſo many faithleſſe feares and doubts amongſt us as are, much leſſe any opening of our mouthes againſt heaven, as I feare is. But let ſuch remember what Seneca writeth of Ceſar, who having appointed a great feaſt for his Nobles and friends of all degrees, and it falling out that the day was ſo extreame foule as nothing could be done, being highly diſpleaſed at it, in extreame madneſſe willed all them that had bowes to ſhoot up their arrowes at Iupiter in defiance of him, for that foule weather. Which when they accordingly did, their arrowes lighting ſhort of heaven, fell downe upon their owne heads, and hurt a number of them very ſore. Even ſo do our muttering and murmuring words, either for this or that which God ſendeth, not hurt him but wound our ſelves both deeply, and dangerouſly. Another deſire of men is, ever to be in proſperity, and not to taſte of any adverſity; if they do, then they murmure, and then they grudge, ſaying, or thinking, the Lord dealeth hardly. But theſe men forget that if the Phyſitian deſire a mans life and health, he reſtraineth him of many things wiſhed and longed for, and miniſtreth many things unto him bitter and unpleaſant; whereas, if he deſpaire of the parties wel-doing he ſuffereth him to eate & drink what he will. They forget that thoſe cattel which the Graſier putteth into his beſt paſtures and feedeth fat, are uſually appointed for the ſlaughter. They forget that too much rankneſs hurteth the corne, and too much fruit breaketh the trees. They forget that Chriſt gave both a ſop and a dipped ſop to Iudas, and yet he was a reprobate; the reſt (being choſen veſſels) had no ſuch thing. A whirle-wind carried Elias to heaven, and ſo hath affliction many an one. But the rich Glutton that had all pleaſure in his life time, loſt his pleaſure, and gained woe for ever. It is not good to have our wages too ſoone, but to remember cheerefully, that when the day is ended, then wages will be paid. He that travelleth in the way againſt the Sunne hath the light before him, and the ſhadow behind him: ſo have the wicked proſperity and comfort here, none hereafter. But he that travelleth with the Sun hath the ſhadow before him, and the light after him: ſo have the godly croſſes here and eternall joy after. Murmur not therefore at any wants, neither grieve if others be made rich, and the glory of their houſes encreaſed; for as the ſhadow goeth before, ſo will thy light follow: And as his light is before, ſo will his ſhadow follow moſt aſſuredly. Nothing ſhall he carry with him when he dieth, neither ſhall his pompe follow him. Qui honoratur in via, in perventione dãnabitur: & quaſi per amœna prata in carcerẽ venit, qui per proſperitatẽ præſentis vitæ ad interitũ tendit. He that is much honored in the way, at the end of his journey, is damned. And as it were through a faire paſture he paſſeth to a priſon, who by the proſperity of this life preſent goeth to deſtruction and confuſion. Greg. Moral. It is enough (if any counſell may be enough) to baniſh from us all ſinfull murmuring, either at other mens proſperity, or at our owne adverſity: For certainly as your ſelfe would be more carefull of a child of yours that you had done little or nothing for, than of one that was provided for, and had plenty: ſo is the Lord of Heaven (that kind Father above all fathers) moſt carefull of their good, who here in this life have had leaſt, and are indeed yet unprovided for. O beleeve it, they ſhall have a day, and that a ſweet day and a joyfull. Their turne will come, and though others have bin ſerved before them; yet ſhall their portions at laſt be as Benjamins was with Ioſeph, greater and better than all the reſt. Till then let your want make you as hunger doth the hawk, flie moſt earneſtly at your prey, that is, at heaven, at God, at Chriſt, at the life to come with all his joyes. Pitch your eyes upon it and your heart alſo; flye, and flye ſtrongly to that marke, thinking every day two, till the Lord grant it. If a traveller have but a little money left to bring him home, he travelleth farther in a day than otherwiſe he would: And ſo do you; by your preſent wants, take occaſion to go forward faſter and faſter in a holy courſe, that you may be at home and take your reſt. Away with murmuring and all evill ſpeaking, for a man is known by his ſpeech as metall is by his ring; and no glaſſe ſheweth more plainly the ſpots of your face, than your tongue will ſhew the ſpots of your heart: Let it grieve you to heare others do it: for the Lord is not with them: And as S. Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſunt in te viſcera pietatis, ſi ploras corpus à quo anima, & non animam à qua Deus receſſit: To be ſory for a body, from which the ſoule is departed, and not for a ſoule from which God is departed, is not piety.

Fooliſh men ſpeake fooliſhly, but our ſpeech ſhould be with a graine of Salt. S. Auguſtine noteth it very well, that S. Iames doth not ſay, none can tame, but no man can tame the tongue, that when it is tamed we might know it to be a worke of God, and not of man. It is walled in with two wals, the lips, and the teeth, to note a double triall that ſhould be taken of our words before we ſpeake; Firſt, whether it be lawfull; ſecondly, whether it be expedient that we meane to ſay. And if both theſe, then ſpeak on and ſpare not, all ſhall be well. But if either of theſe want, then keepe the doore faſt, and let not that little member have his will. The good Abbot ſaw both the good, and the difficulty of this, who being unlearned, & very deſirous to be inſtructed, when he was come to that verſe of the Pſalme (I ſaid I will look to my wayes, that I offend not in my tongue;) tongue;)bade ſtay there, till he had learned that leſſon, which he feared would be both hard and long. But happily I am too long alſo in this point, and therefore I ſhut up with this wiſh, that no tongue may be like that curſed Bay-tree whereon the proverb grew, Inſana laurus, the contagious Bay-tree. My meaning is, that no man or woman have a tongue ſo venomous to make murmuring whereſoever it is, as that Bay-tree would make chiding and ſtrife, as long as any jot of it were in ones hand: for you ſee the finne of ſuch a tongue, and let it ſuffice. For as S. Auguſtine ſaith, Deus ubiq; eſt, intra omnia non incluſus, extra omnia non excluſus, ſupra omnia non elatus, infra omnia non depreſſus. God ſeeth, and God heareth, is every where, and cannot be mocked. But happily you will think, why then doth God ſuffer any murmuring to be? And I pray you remember S. Gregory his anſwer, Permittitur murmuratio & detractio, ut caveatur elatio, God ſuffereth murmuring and detraction, that it may keepe downe in man pride and arrogancy. Thus much of this matter of murmuring, if not too much, of purpoſe enlarged, becauſe the fault is too generall both in perſons murmuring, and in matters murmured at.

4. But did they all murmure without exception? No: but although the Text make no exception, yet wee may ſafely thinke, the Lord had his number among them that did not murmure at all. Yet foraſmuch as this number was very ſmall, in compariſon of the murmurers, therefore there is no mention made of it, but all in generall are ſaid to murmure. And indeed what are the godly but as wheat hid under a great heape of chaffe, which doth not appeare ſo well, till the chaffe be winnowed and blowne away? It was ſufficient that the Lord well diſcerned both, &c.

5. The words of their murmuring are expreſſed in the third verſ, Oh (ſay they) that we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt, when we ſat by the fleſh-pots, when we eate bread our bellies full! for ye have brought us into the wilderneſs to kill this whole company with famine. Words of ſuch impiety, as I know not how to begin to ſpeak of them. O impiã & nefandã vocẽ! O wicked and horrible words! (ſaith a godly Interpreter) O ſinfull and curſed ſpeech! may all that reade it, and taſte of God ſay; eſpecially in this people ſo acquainted with Gods mercy, grace, and power, ſo made famous over the world with miracles wrought for them againſt their enemies. For, what is this which they ſay? but all one as if they had ſaid; we care not for our deliverance out of Ægypt, and from all bondage and cruelty againſt us and our children, we give God no thanks for it, for we were better ſo, and thus; O, that he had let us alone by the fleſh-pots, and come to deliver us when we had ſent for him. Such height of unthankfull contempt, who trembleth not to reade, and ſhaketh not to thinke of in his heart? But let it profit us; for to that end the Lord hath Chronicled it in his Booke.

Firſt then, let it teach us and tell us, yea ſoundly ſettle in us, how quickly theſe ſinfull hearts of ours ſlip from their duties, if once any croſſe lay hold on us, making thoſe mercies and benefits of God vile, and of no account, which at the firſt, when we received them were moſt great in our eyes, moſt welcome and acceptable; wee then ſaying, O, how ſhould we thanke the Lord enough for theſe things! But is this well? Doth the word teach us thus? or doe we our ſelves endure this meaſure to be meaſured to us by thoſe to whom we have been good and kind unto? No, no: And therefore abhor it as moſt odious both to God and man: and looke we at the rule which teacheth us otherwiſe. Great were the favours that Iob had received from his God: adverſity commeth, and that (as you know) in a great degree. Doth Iob vilifie therefore either in tongue or heart thoſe former favours, and ſay, O, that God had never beſtowed them on mee? No, you know, but holily and vertuouſly he embraceth Gods will, and telleth his repining wife, That ſince they had in former times received good things from God, ſhould not they alſo receive evill, when it was his pleaſure? Yes, yes: And therefore ſaith he, The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken: and bleſſed be the Name of the Lord, even in taking as well as giving, and ever for all things that he doth. The Apoſtles of Chriſt were exalted by him to the higheſt dignity in his Church, it was no doubt a great grace unto them and very acceptable, but afterward commeth perſecution, impriſonment, whipping, and many croſſes; Do they then ſay as theſe Iſraelites, (O, that wee had dyed by the hand of the Lord! O that we had never beene Apoſtles!) and ſo caſt the mercies of God in his face for the troubles which followed ſuch favour? Not ſo, but they went away rejoycing, that they were made worthy to ſuffer thoſe for ſo kinde a Lord as had exalted them to that dignity, and given unto them ſuch graces and places as then they had. Let us looke upon ſuch examples as theſe, and pray to God for ſtrength to follow them.

Act 5.41.

Let us often remember that good counſell of the Wiſe-man, My Son, if thou wilt come into the ſervice of God, ſtand faſt in righteouſneſſe and feare: And prepare thy ſoule to temptation. Settle thy heart, and be patient: bow down thine eare & receive the words of underſtanding, and ſhrink not away when thou art aſſailed; but wait upon God patiently. Ioyne thy ſelfe unto him, & depart not away, that thou maiſt be encreaſed at the laſt end. Whatſoever commeth unto thee, receive it patiently, & be patiẽt in the change of thine affliction. For as gold and ſilver are tried in the fire, even ſo are men acceptable in the fornace of adverſity. And ſo forth much more, if you will, reade the place your ſelfe. Forget not what the Apoſtles in the Acts, did, and ſaid; Who confirmed the Diſciples hearts, and exhord

Sirach. 2.1,2,3, 4,5.

horted them to continue in the faith; affirming that we must through many afflictions enter into the Kingdom of God. There are many such places in Scripture. Away then with those crooked wayes wherein too many do walke: and be taught by these examples what ever to do: The Gospell is welcome to many at the first, and they greatly rejoyce in it; but when either trouble groweth for it, or they are restrained by it from the accustomed sins of swearing, drunkennesse, sensuality, covetousnesse, oppression, usury, and such like; then they wish they had never beene troubled with such preaching, and all Gods mercie is returned to him with great unthankfulnesse, as here it was of these murmuring Israelites. If authority and offices either in Church or Common-wealth be given in Gods goodnesse to some men, they receive them joyfully, and say they are much bound to God for them: But when such things happen as usually follow such places; to wit, trouble and charge, lies and slanders, contumelies and reproches, with great unthankefulnesse, then they turne both tongues and hearts, and wish they never had beene so graced. For matches and mariages, O, what impiety is in many, many times! cursing the parties, and almost cursing God that gave them such a match: when yet at the beginning all was well, and every body pleased. Let all these and all other faulty in like sort looke upon these mumuring Israelites, and be ashamed of such sinne. For man and wife, let them consider but one thing which God hath given them in their owne bodies, and see how it will instruct them; Their two eyes if they goe together and looke both one way, be it upward or downeward, to the right hand or to the left, all is well and comely in the face: but if they be severed and the one eye looke one way, and the other an other, there is a blemish wee all confesse, and it is not well: So man and wife, who as the two eyes are made to looke one way, should never bee severed to goe asunder, to crosse one another, to reproach one another, to shame one another, to breake up house, and depart one from another. Surely the blemish is great, and as many as care either for piety or honesty, will consider of it. Secondly, these words of the Israelites may shew us what is the course of too many men and women in the world another way, even to prefer the flesh pots of Egypt before the land of Canaan, and bellies full of bread before a blessed deliverance out of cruell bondage, that is, earth before heaven, and the joyes of this world before all that can be given when this life is ended. A miserable a monstrous blindnes, yet such as no perswasion will prevaile against, it is so setled & rooted in sinful hearts. Remember what you reade in Ioh. 11. when Christ had raised up Lazarus to life again: And many that had seen these things beleeved on him: Then gathered the High Priests a Councel, & said, what shall we do? If we let this man thus alone, all men will beleeve in him, (now mark) & the Romans will come & take away both our place, and Nation. So before Christ they prefer their places, & for the world, adieu to heaven. Such others were those in the Prophet Ieremy, who measured Religion by plenty and scarcity, judging that best which brought most profit, and that worst wherin there was any want; The word which thou hast spoken (say they) to us in the Name of the Lord, we will not heare of thee, But we will doe whatsoever thing goeth out of our owne mouth, as to burne incense to the Queene of heaven, and to poure our drink offerings unto her, as we have done, both we and our Fathers, our Kings and our Princes, &c. For then had we plenty of victuals, and were well, and felt no evill. But since we left off to burne incense to the Queene of heaven, and to poure out drink-offerings unto her; wee have had scarcenesse of all things, and have beene consumed by the sword and by famine. But if you reade the rest of the Chapter, you shall see that the Plagues grew, because they sinned against the Lord, and would not bee ruled by his Word, to worship him, and him onely, according to his Word. Such Arguments made the Heathen against Christians in former times, as witnesseth Tertullian, Cyprian, and others; attributing all calamities (that happened) to the Christians; because that they worshipped not the Idols of the Heathens: but they answered even as Ieremy, that such calamities fell, because they (the Heathens) would not forsake their Idols, and embrace Gods true Religion, and so indeed they did. Such words, and even the self-same words use the Papists against us and the Gospell at this day; telling us often and too often (unlesse it were truer) how great plenty was in former times, when Popery swayed, how many egges, forsooth, for a penny, and all this geare, grounding an argument thereupon, that therefore that was truth, and this is falshood, even as Heathenish & Jewish Idolaters did before them. But with Ieremy and the godly Fathers, wee truly invert their argument upon them; that their contempt of truth, and foule Idolatry, in despite of truth, provoketh God to many crosses, and will yet provoke him further, if they continue without amendment. And touching their pretended plenty when Popery ruled, we say it is a tale, for as great dearth was then, as since. Touching our owne Countrey, of which I chiefly speake, let them remember what our Chronicles note in Richard the first his time, how sharpe a scarcity there was by the space of three or foure yeeres. What a Sommer that was in Edward the third his time, called the deare Sommer. In Richard the second his time, what a dearth, when the people were forced to feed upon fruit to sustaine nature, as that thereby many fell into fluxes, and dyed. How the childrens cryes were so pitifull for the want of food, which their parents had not to give them, as a stony heart could not endure to heare. Of Henry the sixt his time, when people were forced to make bread of Fearne rootes.

And (to go no further) of Acorne bread in Queene Maries time. Were there ſo many eggs a penny, and all cheape, cheape? Yet Popery twayed in blinded hearts too much. No, no, The calamities which have been in places where this Ignorance ruled, have been equall or greater, then under the Goſpell, ever, as all Stories tell us. Hath Rome it ſelfe never been afflicted? Hath the Pope himſelfe never been taken priſoner? Have Romiſh warres ever proſpered, or Popiſh conſpiracies had their wiſhed effects? Bleſſed be the God of heaven for it, they know the contrary. And that Spaniſh, Romiſh and devilliſh attempt in the yeare 1588. yeeldeth them matter of wiſdome, (if God ſo pleaſe,) and us eternall cauſe of thankeſgiving unto God for it. Ever praiſed from our heart rootes be the glorious name of him that ſo reſpected us. But yet this is not the matter; for if they had ever had plenty, and never ſcarcity, true religion is not meaſured by the belly, by fleſh-pots or great loaves, or any outward proſperity or adverſity, but by the Rule which God hath left us of his holy Scriptures: Therefore although we could object unto them the unſpeakable bleſſings of God upon this Land of ours, and thereupon reaſon as Gamaliel did; yet doe wee not; but throwing our ſelves downe at his feete who gave them all, we reſt our ſelves upon his word, and ſo both know truth, and hate errour, as in mercy he enableth, leaving fleſh pots and all fleſhly reaſons to ſuch doughty diſputers as they are, that ſtand upon ſuch arguments: and to ſtrengthen our hearts againſt this great ſinne here noted in the Iſraelites, we looke upon Demas, whoſe ſhame liveth in Gods booke, for embracing the world, and forſaking Paul. We thinke upon that fearefull cry, One droppe of water to coole my tongue. When all the pleaſures of the world, which either hee had, or can have, could not helpe. And as Elias covered his face with his mantle; ſo doe wee hide our eyes from beholding this world and the deceits thereof.

Reade Paſils Tract: Non adhærendum reb. ſeculariibus. pag. 436.

We aſſure our ſelves Saint Hierome ſaid true: Difficile, imo impoſſibile eſt, ut præſentibus quis & futuris fruatur bonis, ut hic ventrem, ibi mentem impleat, ut de deliciis tranſeat ad delicias, ut in utroque ſeculo primus ſit, ut & in cœlo & in terra appareat glorioſus: It is hard, yea it is impoſſible that one ſhould enjoy both preſent and future good things, that here he ſhould fill his belly, and there his minde; that from pleaſure he ſhould paſſe to pleaſure, that in both worlds hee ſhould be chiefe, and both in earth and heaven appeare glorious. So we leave the fleſh-pots of Ægypt to all earthly Iſraelites, and beſeech the Lord to bring us to his kingdome, although it be through many tribulations.

Verſe 4.

6. Then ſaid the Lord to Moſes, behold, I will cauſe bread to raine from heaven to you, and the people ſhall goe out, and gather that which is ſufficient for every day, &c. O admirable mercy, and bottomleſſe fountaine of all comfort and pitty! Will he now raine bread from heaven to theſe ungratefull murmurers, who much rather ſhould have been deſtroyed from the face of the earth? Let never penitent ſinner then deſpaire of mercy, let never troubled ſpirit caſt away comfort. For how can the ſighes of a groaning heart, ſorrowing for ſinne, be neglected of ſo ſweet a God, when ſuch proud offenders finde mercy? Never, never can it be, aſſure your ſelfe. Therefore lay up this place in your minde, and feeling your ſelfe grieved either for things committed, or omitted, be not too much ſhaken, as out of hope, but with faithfull aſſurance ſay cheerfully; O kinde Father, and ſweet God, doe not caſt away thy creature, that cryeth and flyeth unto thy mercy. I am unworthy, full well I know it, but thy goodneſſe hath no bottome, and with joy I remember it; Theſe murmurers and complainers againſt thy mercies thou yet ſhewedſt more mercy unto, and thy poore ſervant ſuing for grace wilt thou cleane reject? No, deare Father, thy nature is not ſo, and therefore by this favour to them, I gather comfort; and beſeech thee to be as thou haſt ever been, my kinde, my gracious, and loving Lord.

7. And can God raine bread from heaven? why then we all ſee that albeit the fields ſhould faile, and the whole earth grow barren, yet can the Lord nouriſh his people, and ſend food to all thoſe that truſt in him. It is moſt true, and it is moſt comfortable, leaving no cauſe why we ſhould in any diſtreſſe be caſt downe too much, ſeeing the Lord is not tyed to ordinary meanes, nor our maintenance to the fruits of the earth. The Ravens ſhall both finde meate, and bring meate to Elias, if he command: and a little oyle ſhall continue running till many veſſels be full, when he ſo pleaſeth. Infinite is his power, and infinite are his wayes, to comfort them that cleave to him. Lift up your thoughts therefore above the courſe of Nature, when you thinke upon God; and although you have neither bread nor money, nor the whole Land any corne; yet paſt hope take hold on hope, and leave God to himſelfe. Iacob was provided for in that extreame famine, and Gold was brought to Mary and Ioſeph from farre, when they thought not of it. What the Lord will doe, hee can doe, and on our parts Faith only is required; that we may ſee his glory and incomprehenſible mercy.

8. But why did not God thus comfort his people before they murmured? Surely becauſe he might open unto them the hidden corruption of their nature, and ſo make them ſee, and all poſterity alſo, that not merit in them, but mercy in him, drew all the favours that were ſhewed to them. And remember ever this uſe of affliction, how it is often ſent of God to diſcover us, not unto him who knoweth us well, but to our ſelves, who dote upon our worth, and thinke wee are farre otherwiſe than we are;yea,and to the world alſo,which many times is deceived by our golden ſhew. Stand wee therefore alwaies upon our watch, when the croſſe knocketh at our doores, and know there is a ſpy entred,and a very tel-tale; he will looke into us,draw out from us what is within; our faire lookes ſhall not deceive him: but as we are he will make us ſhew, that we may be knowne. How Iob and his wife differ he will diſcribe: Sarahs infirmity, and Zipporahs waſpiſhneſſe againſt their good husbands he will open; and in one word, he will tell all. Pray we therefore with David ever, O let my heart be ſound in thy ſtatutes, that I be not aſhamed. Sound without gloſing, faining and halting; ſound without grudging and inward complaining; that from ſoundneſſe within may flow holineſſe without, even patient comfort in Gods will,and ſo no ſhame grow, where no ſhameleſſe thing is done, &c. The Lord grant it us ever, Amen. The words in the 8.verſe,(your murmurings are not againſt us,but againſt the Lord) notably may feare us from abuſing of Gods Miniſters: and conferre with them the words in Samuel, They have not caſt thee away, but they have caſt me away: And the words in the Goſpell, He that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me.

The Second part.

IN the morning the dew lay round about the hoaſt: And when the dew that was fallen was aſcended, behold,a ſmall round thing was upon the face of the Wilderneſs.ſmal as the hoare froſt on the earth. And when the children of Iſrael ſaw it,they ſaid one to another, it is Man, for they wiſt not what it was. And Moſes ſaid unto them, This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eate. Here is alſo mention made of Quailes,verſ.13. but we will reſpite that for another place, and conſider now only of Manna, wherein we may obſerve many profitable and comfortable things.

Verſe 13,14 15.

1 Concerning the Name, it is ſomewhat obſcure, as it lyeth in our Engliſh; They ſaid it was Manna, for they wiſt not what it was. But the Hebrew maketh it very plaine, wherein it is thus: They ſaid this is Man,that is, as your Marginall note hath, a part, a portion, a gift, or meat prepared, for they wiſt not what it was on the ſudden, and at firſt ſight, but a thing given or prepared for them,that they knew it was. Or (which for my part I like better.) They ſaid Mah hu, or Man hu, What is this? for they knew not what it was.

Datum. Paratum. Quid eſt hoc?

2 Concerning the manner of the comming of it, ſome queſtion is made, whether it was naturall or miraculous? They that would have it naturall, tell us of the Manna of Arabia, which is ſold in our Apothecaries ſhops, and ſay that out of the earth there iſſueth and commeth dulcis halitus, a certaine ſweet vapour, which being drawne up by the heat of the Sunne, is purged from his groſſe earthlineſſe, and made more pure and ſweet, then with the cold of the night is hardened,and before morning falleth downe againe upon the earth like dew,or the hoare froſt, and ſo is gathered, dried and kept, as medicinable for mans body. They ſay that it is ſmall and white, ſo was this; That falleth downe with the dew,ſo did this; both of them ſweet, even as the hony, and haply the ſubſtance of both, one, &c. But what of all this? Therefore ſhall it follow, that this was not given miraculouſly to the Iſraelites? nothing leſſe. For as they were like in ſome things, ſo were they alſo unlike. This Manna in the ſhops is not ſo ſweet as this, given here, was: it melteth not away with the Sunne as this did, neither is it ſo hard, that it needeth to be brayed in a morter, or ground on a mill, as this was, to make bread of it. This Manna came not before a certaine time and houre, appointed by God, and foretold by Moſes, no change of the ayre, and alteration of the weather hindered the comming of this Manna, but in Summer, in Winter, in Froſt, in Raine, ſtill it kept his courſe: and fell downe every night againſt the morning, for the ſpace of forty yeares together. The abundance of it was above any naturall courſe, even inough to ſuffice for ſixe hundred thouſand men, beſide women and children,ſo long. The ſixth day it was doubled to them, that they might gather both for that day and the next, which was the Sabbath:and to reſt upon the Sabbath: a very plaine token that all was not naturall. If upon any day they gathered more than their limited proportion, it putrified and rotted, wormes grew in it, and it ſavoured ill. But on the ſixt day when they gathered double, it did not ſo, but was very ſweet and good,till the next day: yea a pot of it was kept in the Arke,ſweet and good,long,which would not have beene ſo,if all had beene naturall. Againe, whereſoever the Iſraelites were,it followed them:and was about their tents,not in other fields and places remote from them. Now,they that write of the Arabian Manna ſold in ſhops, ſay it ſpringeth not out of all earth, and by name, not out of deſert places,but out of ſome certaine places onely in Arabia,as we ſee in other matters,ſome kind of earth yeeldeth a ſweeter,a fatter,and better ſap than other earth doth. But this Manna followeth the Iſraelites, whatſoever the earth was: and by name in the wilderneſſe and deſert. No way therefore was this Manna altogether naturall. Laſtly,when they came into the land of Canaan,which was a more excellent earth,preſently it failed and came no more. A great miraculous worke therefore of God this Manna thus given from Heaven was, and ſo to be eſteemed, that God may have his due glory, and we ſuch comfort and inſtruction as wil flow from it. A taſt whereof in this that followeth you may take.

The third part.

1 THey are commanded to go forth every morning to gather this Manna. and to make them bread of it: which teacheth us thus much, that as God doth ſomething for his part toward the nouriſhing and maintaining of us, ſo will he have us likewiſe againe to do ſomething for our parts. He will give Manna in his mercy and goodneſſe, but we muſt goe out and gather it: That is, he will provide meat, money, cloath, and all worldly matters for us, as ſhall be good for us, but wee muſt labour in ſome honeſt and lawfull vocation, and ſo come by theſe things; Idleneſſe he will not foſter nor abide in any man. Corne he will give to the Husbandman, but (conditionally) that he plow and ſowe. Riches he will give to the Merchant, but ſo that hee goe to ſea and take paines. Whereupon the Heathens did ſay, Dij omnia vendunt laboribus, the gods ſell all things for labour. And for the Scripture, it is plentifull in this point, as hath beene ſhewed elſe-where. Man in his Innocency was appointed to dreſſe the Garden, and not ſuffered to be idle. Againe, every man here was appointed to gather Manna; which needed not, if God had liked of ingroſſers, to take up all into a few hands, and then to deliver out to others as they pleaſe: but follow this Note farther your ſelfe, and be bettered by it.

2 How much might every one gather? even ſo much ſaith the Text, as is ſufficient for every day, verſe 4. that is, they ſhall provide for the day and no more. Wherein note how carefull the Lord is to have men depend upon his providence, with cheerfull hope in his goodnes, and not wretchedly and deſpairfully to mucker up what ſhall never do them good, nor any peradventure that they purpoſe it for. Thus is the prayer which our Saviour taught us, Our daily bread give us for the day. And from diſtruſtfull feare the whole Scripture driveth us in every place. He that feedeth the Sparrow, ſo ſmall in price, and heareth the yong Ravens that call upon him, He that openeth his hand and filleth all things living with plenteouſnes, will He either forſake or forget man or woman truſting in him? No; it is a helliſh thought, and away with it for ever out of your heart, The life is farre more worth than meat; and the body than any raiment. We are much better than any fowles, and yet the Lord feedeth them, when they neither ſowe, nor reape, nor carry into any barnes. Could not God here have bidden them gather for many dayes, if hee had would, and lay up in ſtore for a deare yeere, as we uſe to ſpeake? yet he would not, but tieth them to a daies foode, and for the next day to depend upon him. He failed them no day, nor ever faileth us if we beleeve. Caſt your care then cheerefully upon him, and cleave faſt unto him, you ſhall ſee his Mercy, you ſhall ſee his Truth, you ſhall ſee your Comfort. If the earth yeeld neither corne, nor graſſe, and that for forty yeeres together: yet can he nouriſh you and yours with bread from Heaven, and dainty fleſh of Quailes at his pleaſure. The hard Rocke or the dry tooth ſhall yeeld drinke for your thirſt, at his will. Elias had bread and meat brought him by the wild Raven: And the little meale and oyle in the Cruze waſteth not till the dearth was paſt, and ſo forth as you heard before. Theſe Iſraelites garments were not worne, nor the ſhooes of their feet torne in ſo many yeeres: who then will diſtruſt ſuch a God? He can do what he will doe: and he will do what is beſt, be ever aſſured with joy. Many a time hath the poore woman had no bread in the morning for her children, and before night, both bread and money. Goe farther your ſelfe, for this meditation is moſt ſweet. That man liveth not, or ever ſhall, who cleaving to God, hath been forſaken by him.

Luk. 11. 3.

Verſe 16. 3 For the day then, how much might they gather? without ſtint? No. The Text ſaith, an Omer for a man according to the number of the perſons: this was the ſtint. Every man was to take for them in his Tent. This Omer was about a pottle of our meaſure. Marke how the Lord alloweth a ſufficiency, and utterly diſliketh all needleſſe ſuperfluity. Our wanton wils he will not follow: but our juſt need he will ſupply. Would we learne this bleſſed meane in all our courſes, God would joy in it, and the child unborne be the better for it. Our houſes and land would tarry with us, and deſcend from us to them wee love, our Tenants ſhould taſte of better bargaines, and live and die at our feet, the poore would ſend a ſhreeking cry to the eares of God, for mercy and goodneſſe to be poured upon us for our releeving of them. The Commonwealth ſhould finde us furniſhed, either to defend, or offend upon occaſion; and in one word, both Heaven and Earth bee glad of it. O, why then ſhould not our Omer content vs for the day? God is wiſe that made this Law, and who ever followed his wiſedome and repented? You ſee the Note, and to a feeling heart I need not amplifie it any farther.

Verſe 21. 4 But might they gather this pottle of Manna any time of the day? No. It was to be gathered in the morning: for when the heate of the Sun came, it was melted. So God would teach them, to take time whileſt time ſerved: And it may well admoniſh us to do the like. We have a Morning, and we have an Evening. Our able youth and good health is our morning: our feeble Age and ſicke eſtate is our evening. Spend not the firſt vainly, and you ſhall not want in the laſt uncomfortably. God is good, and giveth us a gathering time, he looketh we ſhould uſe it as he intendeth, that is, in the morning to go forth to our labour, honeſtly and truly to live in a lawfull vocation, vocation, to doe what we are called to faithfully and carefully. So ſhall we eate the fruit of our labours, when the evening of age and ſickneſſe commeth, and all ſhall bee well. But a careleſſe youth, and an evill ſpent health will make a wanting age, & an helpleſſe ſickneſſe. Gods bleſſings are not at our election to have them when we will; but when we ſeeke, when he bids, we ſhall finde. His Manna is ready if wee come in time, and if wee linger till wee liſt, he hath his Sunne to melt it away, and it is gone. O, take time then, and be ruled by God: youth and health you ſee is a bleſſed time. In the Booke of Wiſedome ſee another uſe of this time of this day, and ever remember it, namely, That it might be knowne, how we ought to prevent the Sunne riſing, to give thankes unto God, and to ſalute him before the day ſpring. For the hope of the unthankefull ſhall melt as the Winter Ice, and flow away as unprofitable waters. Let us doe thus then, and bee moſt aſſured that ſuch morning ſacrifice ſhall be no leſſe profitable unto us, than pleaſing to him. Wiſ. 16. 28, 29.

5 And did they juſt gather their meaſure, and no more, every man? No, the Text ſaith, Some gathered more, and ſome leſſe, yet when they did meaſure it with an Omer, hee that had gathered much, had nothing over, and he that had gathered little, had no lacke, &c. By which miracle the Lord would both reſtraine the greedy Scrapers of this world, that are never ſatisfied, and comfort his owne choſen that have not ſuch heapes. For what hath the greateſt raker that lives amongſt us at this day, touching himſelfe, but his living? and hath not the pooreſt man by his little as much? yes aſſuredly, wee ſee it daily. Nay, we ſee more, namely, that this little little, which the poore man hath, yeeldeth him often a more healthy life, and a merrier minde, ſounder ſleepe, and quieter thoughts, than that great abundance which the greedy gatherer hath gotten. Daniel with his thinne fare of pulſe and water, looketh as well or better than they that feed upon the Kings allowance, ſuch a mighty God every way is our God. And why then ſhould our deſire to have, be ſo exorbitant? or our hearts ſo dejected, if we have but little? God will make my little ſtretch to an Omer, that is, to enough, and his much ſhall be no more, doe what he can. O minde minde, then be content; Looke upon thy God, and feare nothing: he is the ſame, hee is no Changeling, &c. Verſ. 17, 18.

6 Did they reſerve nothing of all their gatherings till the morning? your Chapter goeth on, and ſaith, Let no man reſerve thereof till the Morning. Notwithſtanding they obeyed not Moſes, but ſome of them reſerved of it till the morning, and it was full of Wormes, and ſtanke; therefore Moſes was very angry with them. See ever in the world ſome diſobedient and diſtruſtfull wretches, let all the Preachers in the world (were they as good as Moſes) ſay and doe what they can; they will rake, they will ſcrape, they will hoord and mucker up: their wicked Mammon is their god, and their Cheſt their hope in time of need. But what became of Manna it ſelfe, when it was kept contrary to Gods liking? Wormes bred in it, as you ſee; it ſtanke, and no wayes ſerved to their uſe that ſo diſobediently had laid it up: Even ſo, ſo ſhall it ever be with this crue, let them make their reckoning of it, and reſt aſſured, Ill gotten goods ſhall not proſper, nor the third heire be the better for them. Our eyes daily ſee what may teach our hearts, if God bee within us: and this notable place of rotting Manna would never be forgtten. Verſ. 19, 20.

7 Yet the ſixth day they reſerved, and it corrupted not. Very true, and let it never goe out of minde whileſt thou live. For upon the ſixth day they were commanded to gather both for that day, and the day following, (verſe 5.) which was the ſeventh day, and the Sabbath: to the end they might reſt upon the Sabbath: and not goe out to gather, and it corrupted not. No more ſhall any goods you get and gather with the will and good liking, and by the commandement of the Almighty God, that is, truely, lawfully, and with a good conſcience, but the Lord ſhall bleſſe that basket, and that ſtore to you whileſt you live, and to yours when you are gone: and though it be but little, yet he ſhall make it ſufficient to ſuſtaine your ſelfe, to bring up your Children, and to doe what they which have thrice as much as you, comming in, cannot doe. Your Children againe after you, maintained with that which you have well gotten, ſhall proſper either in learning or trade, ſo that they ſhall come to great places often, and to be great men: to carry ſuch Offices of credit as are in the Countrey or Towne where they dwell, and leave Gods mercies againe to their children after them, to a thouſand generations loving and fearing Gods Holy Name, and keeping his Commandements; when the quite contrary ſhall come to paſſe with the goods ill gotten, as you have ſeene. Verſ. 24.

8 Forget not to marke here alſo the great care that God hath of his Sabbath, that it bee kept Holy according to his appointment, when hee will not ſuffer theſe Iſraelites to gather ſo much as his Manna for their food upon the Sabbath day, but appointeth them to doe it the day before. May not a good ſoule thus reaſon then with himſelfe, or her ſelfe? Good Lord, what doe I upon the Sabbath day? This people of his, might not gather Manna, and may I ſafely gad to Faires and Markets, to dancings and drinkings, to Wakes and wantonneſſe, to Beare-baytings, and Bul-baytings, with ſuch like wicked prophanations of the Lords Day? May I be abſent from the Church, where Gods people are gathered together in his Name, and hee in the middeſt of them, walking about by cloſes and grounds, ſending my ſervants and cattle to townes with corne which I have ſold before, becauſe I will not ſpare them on the weeke dayes, and ſo forth?

Are

Are theſe works for the Sabbath, Is this to keepe holy the Sabbath day? Can I anſwer this to my God that giveth me ſix daies for my ſelfe, and taketh but one day to himſelf of which I rob him alſo? No, no aſſuredly I ſhall not be able to endure his wrath, for theſe things one day; and therefore I will leave them, and regard hereafter his Holy Sabbath better than I have done. Yes aſſuredly this is a ſound and a bleſſed Reaſon: and therefore I pray God to ſet in our hearts, ſince now a daies there is ſo much offending this way.

9 When came this Manna from Heaven, in the day, or in the night? In the night, when the dew fell downe, this heavenly bread fell with it, and in the morning as hath beene noted (verſe 14.) When the dew aſcended, this lay all ſcattered upon the earth to be gathered till the heat of the Sunne melted it away (verſe 21.) What a ſweet note do I ſee here? namely, that when his children ſleepe and are at reſt, Gods providence for them ſleepeth not, but worketh and giveth things for their uſe, and for their comfort, for their health, for their life, and for their advancement unto honour. Groweth not the graſſe when we ſleepe, and the beſt hearbs for our health and uſe? Come not the ſweet ſhowers when we ſleepe that make the Husbandman rejoyce and ſing? Peter was aſleepe in priſon, the next day to ſuffer death by cruell tyranny, watched and warded, and bound with chaines: neither was there any helpe in mans eyes for him, onely the little floek of Gods children (gathered together in the houſe of a religious woman) prayed for him; but the providence of God was not aſleepe, which watched over him and his life, and ſent his Angell to deliver him in ſuch miraculous manner as you read of; ever and ever leaving us a Teſtimony of his care, love, mercy, and power as ſhall be good for us, the ſweetneſſe whereof I am not able to reach unto: but cry with the Prophet from my heart, O bleſſed, bleſſed is the man that hath the Lord for his God! it is better to truſt in him, than in all the Princes of the world: And if he be on our ſide, we need not care what man can do againſt us.

Acts 12,7,8.

Such another example is that of King Aſſuerus, not able to ſleepe, but calling for the Chronicles, and hitting upon the place where Mordecai his loyalty and faithfull ſervice was mentioned, thereby enquiring what had beene done for him, and ſo exalting him to great honour. Poore Mordochem was aſleepe when this was done, and little thought of ſuch a matter; but his ſweet and gracious God was not aſleepe you ſee, ſending from Heaven his Manna, that is, his comfortable mercy to his childs honor, and his whole Churches good by his advancement. Shall we ever then fall from this God by diſtruſtfull feare, that thus careth for his when they be on ſleepe? Lord, Lord give us the uſe of theſe things, and ſtrengthen our meditation to an immoveable faith, and ſtrong comfort in thee evermore.

Eccleſ. 2. 11.

Conſider the old generation of men, ſaith the wiſe Sirach, and marke them well: was there ever any confounded that put his truſt in the Lord? Did ever any continue in his feare, and was forſaken? or ever any call upon him, and was deſpiſed? No, no, no, no. And therefore lay it up in your heart and marke the Scriptures. If we beleeve that he hath made our bodies; ſhall we not alſo beleeve that he will provide for them, ſeeing the creation is greater than the preſervation? Hath he care over the wicked to do them good, and will he not much more rejoyce to do his children good? Did the Lord love us when we were his enemies? and will he leave us ſuccourleſſe when wee are reconciled to him, in ſo deare a price as his owne Sonnes precious blood? O, if he did us good, when he might have puniſhed us for our ſins; will not he now do us good, when through his grace we hate ſin, in ſome meaſure ſanctified by his holy Spirit? He will, he will, and never feare therefore, but cleave faſt.

Mat. 6. 25.
Pſal. 139. 17.

Thinke with your ſelfe, how the Fathers before the floud eating nothing but hearbs, yet lived ſome ſeven hundred, ſome eight hundred, and ſome nine hundred yeeres; and know by it that man liveth, not by theſe meanes, but if neither, graſſe, nor corne, nor any uſuall foode now amongſt us were in the earth, yet could God preſerve us and keepe us both alive, and in health, and in good liking. But much more now by fleſh and fiſh, and his other good bleſſings can hee do it. Moſes and Elias lived forty dayes without meate: and the Iſraelites walked (as I noted) forty yeeres in the wilderneſſe with the ſame apparell not waxen old. By which and many ſuch things moe in the Scriptures, you ſee that the bleſſing of God is all in all; and that theſe earthly meanes are but things given of God for our uſe, which yet he can want when he will, and notwithſtanding preſerve us. Up with your heart then, how hard ſoever the world goeth with you, and fixe both heart and eyes upon God, beleeve his Scriptures and read them for your comfort, all ſhall be well, aſſure your ſelfe, in his time.

1 Kings 19. 8.
Deut. 2. 7.

10. The Lord by Moſes commanded a pot of this Manna to be kept in the Arke for a remembrance ever of this great miracle, and ſo it was; which very notably may teach us, ever to bee careful to keep in minde the gracious favours of our good God ſhewed unto us, and not to ſuffer them to be forgotten. The Scripture often layeth this point before our eyes, if you remember. As in Deut. Take heed to thy ſelf, & keep thy ſoule diligently, that thou forget not the things which thine eyes have ſeen, and that they depart not out of thine heart all the dayes of thy life: but teach them thy ſonnes, and thy ſonnes ſonnes. So in the 6. Chapter againe. Theſe words which I command thee this day, ſhall bee in thine heart. And thou ſhalt rehearſe them continually unto thy children, and

and ſhalt talke of them when thou tarieſt in thine houſe, and as thou walkeſt by the way, and when thou lyeſt downe, and when thou riſeſt up. And thou ſhalt binde them for a ſigne upon thy hand, and they ſhall be as frontlets betweene thine eyes. Alſo thou ſhalt write them upon the poſtes of thine houſe, and upon the gates, &c. When they paſſed over Iordan on dry land, preſently twelve ſtones were ſet up for a remembrance. David in his Pſal. Praiſe the Lord ô my ſoul, and forget not, forget not all his benefits. So the Fathers have many good ſayings to this end. As Saint Gregory. So much ſhall thy Soul finde more ſweet reſt in Heaven, by how much thou giveſt thy minde leſſe reſt in this world from the continuall remembrance of God and his Works. If thy Corne lay in a low moiſt and dankiſh vault, where it might putrifie and corrupt: Wouldeſt thou not ſpeedily and carefully raiſe it up to a higher and ſweeter place, that ſo it might continue ſweet? Why then doeſt thou ſuffer thy Minde to lie ſo low among the rotten things of this World, that alſo will corrupt it with a grievous corruption, and doeſt not ſpeedily and carefully alſo raiſe it up to a ſweet remembrance of Gods favours and great works for thee, for thy Neighbours, for thy Countrey, for his Church and Children in all ages? Here, here, is the ſweet being of the minde, and not below. Againe, marke how the eyes of thy body (if they be in a ſmoakie place) are vexed and grieved with that foule ſmoake, and ſhed out their teares to be delivered there-hence, So think of the light of thy minde, that with vile things it is much offended, but with remembrance of good things much pleaſed and bettered. Ever therefore let it have his comfort: and looke upon that pot of Manna which God hath given thee from heaven, that is, upon his mercies and favours vouchſafed unto thee many wayes in thy life time, which to thee are the teſtimonies of his love and gracious providence, as this Manna here was to the Iſraelites. Another ſaith, will the yong lambe be drawn from her dam, or the yong kid, the yong calfe, the yong chickens, and ſuch like? will they not ſtill keepe with their kinde, not ſtray away farre, but runne to the damme againe? So certainly ſhould our minds not ſtray from God, and the thankfull remembrance of his mercies: but ever keepe here, and tarry here, and joy here, as in our ſweet and quiet comfort. A good carefull ſervant is ſtill in his Maſters eye, and cannot abide to be farre off. No more can the ſervant of God aſſuredly be pleaſed in the forgetfulneſſe of his God and his great works. The fire of the Altar went not out either by night or by day: No more ſhould the fire within you, that is, the heat of thankfull feeling & due remembrance of grace received from a ſweet God. The Prieſts did bring wood to that fire upon the Altar, and ſtill nouriſh it, that it might ever burne: So will the zealous Preacher to thy inward Soul give a holy heate continually, and keep in that bleſſed fire of love, of zeale, of thankefulneſſe, and ſo forth to Almighty God, if thou diligently frequent his company and heare his words. For the Lord hath appointed him to this end, to keepe this fire within his people, and his ordinance ſhall not be in vaine, unleſſe the fault be yours. What a heat will the fire give to the coldeſt water, if it be ſet to it? But remove the ſame water from the fire againe, and it returneth to his former coldneſſe: So, ſo it is in the matter we ſpeake of, and forget it not. The preſerved fruit that is boyled in ſugar loſeth his owne tartneſſe, and taketh a ſweeter taſte from the ſugar, that all men may know where it hath been: And even ſo aſſuredly will a minde much meditating on Gods benefits, and (to the end it may the better do it) much frequenting the reading and hearing of the Word, taſte moſt ſweetly both with God and Man. Wherefore follow this advice of Scripture and Fathers, and learne by this reſerving of Manna for a remembrance, what an acceptable thing to God, and what a fit duty for his ſervant this careſull remembrance of his works is.

Ioſhua 4 21. Pſal. 103. 2.

11. Now as by this figure of the kept Manna, men were taught to remember all Gods mercies in generall: So in particular it did lay before the Iſraelites the promiſed ſeed Chriſt Ieſus, of whom it was a very notable type, and therefore may likewiſe teach us, as to remember all Gods mercies, ſo (by name) this great mercy above all, the gift of his bleſſed Sonne our Saviour for us. The type is reſembled by learned men in this ſort. Firſt, Manna came downe from heaven, ſo did Chriſt as touching his deity. Secondly, Manna ſignifieth a gift, or a thing prepared: ſo was Chriſt given and prepared by the love of God, without all merit or cauſe in us. Thirdly, Manna was but a ſmall and contemptible thing to looke on; ſo was Chriſt little regarded of earthly minded worldlings, but as the Prophet notably declareth, much deſpiſed and ſet at nought. Manna was round, which is the perfecteſt figure, and ſo was Chriſt a perfect Saviour to all that ever beleeved in him. Manna was white, the colour of innocency, and our Saviour Chriſt without ſpot or blot of any ſinne. Manna was ſweet and like the hony, ſo is Chriſt ſweeter than any hony to all that taſte him by a true Faith. Manna was bruiſed and beaten in morters and mils, Chriſt was tormented for our ſinnes with many torments. All were commanded to gather Manna, and all that travell and are heavy laden, are commanded to come and take hold of Chriſt. Manna continued till they came into the Land of promiſe, and then ceaſed. Chriſt ſhall be with us to the end of the world, ſhall ſubdue all things under his feete, and then himſelfe be ſubject to God, deliver up the Kingdome to him, that God may be all in all. Thus notably you ſee was Chriſt fore-ſhadowed in this Manna. The Iſraelites might not forget the ſhadow, and may we forget the ſubſtance and thing it ſelfe? No, no: And therefore well prayed the old Father, Da Domine ut ſicut verbum caro caro factum est, sic cor meum fiet carneum: Lord grant that as the Word became flesh, so my heart may be also fleshy, and not stony. Majesty humbled it selfe, and shall misery exalt it selfe? Remember often, and remember ever this sweet Manna, Puer natus, Filius datus: A Child is borne,

Datus; qui non erat, Natus. Given in regard of his Deitie. Borne, in regard of his humanity. Borne, who should have an end. Given, who had no beginning. Borne, who was yonger than his Mother. Given, who was as old as his Father. Borne, who should die. Given, from whom life should spring. So he that was, was Given, and he that Iohn 14.6. was not, was Borne. Ambulare vis? Ego sum via: falli non vis? Ego sum veritas: mori non vis? Ego sum vita. Hoc dicit tibi Salvator tuus, non est quo eas, nisi ad me; non est qua eas, nisi per me. Surge homo, via venit ad te: Wilt thou walke? I am the way: Wilt not thou be deceived? I am the truth; wilt thou not die? I am the life. This saith thy Saviour to thee, There is none to go unto, but to mee; there is none by whom thou mayest go, but by mee. Arise O man, the way commeth unto thee. Thus remember (I say) againe this blessed Manna, and let thus much suffice of this Chapter.

CHAP. XVII.

The generall heads of this Chapter are two.

{ A bitter contention for want of water.
{ A warre with Abimelech.

Verse 1. COncerning the first, thus we may profit: in the wildernesse of Sinne they complaine of famine, and wish for the flesh-pots of Ægypt againe, and for their bellies full of bread; thence they remove and come to Rephidim, where they as bitterly complaine for want of water. So to an earthly minde that will not looke at God, every place ministreth some discontentment, when a heart grounded in piety, taketh all well that God sendeth: and learneth as well to want, as to Phil. 4. 12. abound. Againe, even to the godly, such, as many of these Israelites were (for we may not understand that all were guilty of these murmurings, but a great sort, or the greater sort) one crosse succeedeth another, that still our life may be a true warfare, and no heaven made of earth. A man
Iob 14. 1. borne of a woman (saith holy Iob) hath but a short time to live, and is full of trouble: full of trouble I say againe, and we must marke it, so shall we grow to the Apostles resolution, desiring to be
Philip. 1 23. loosed, and to be with Christ, which is best of all. For never shall we have permanent comfort till Revel. 22. 20. that day come, but still a mixture, and an unequall mixture, more of the sowre than of the sweet; more of the woe than of the weale, that we may cry heartily, Come Lord Iesus, come quickly.

Verse 2. 2 When they are pinched with this want of water, what do they? Not crie unto God, but flie upon Moses with an unfitting speech, saying; Give us water that we may drinke; as though Moses were God to create fountaines and springs. Thus doth corrupt man, possessed with impatiencie, take a wrong course, leave God, and run to Man, and then speake according to his
Gen. 30. 1. rage, without due and right consideration of mans abilitie and power. A like speech had good Rachel to her husband Iacob, when impatiency had caught her, Give me children: To whom Iacob answered, not without griefe, Am I God? &c. Let us therefore, in all our wants, set our faces the right way, and looke to Heaven, not to Earth; to God, not to Man: For there is the Mat. 7. 7. treasury and the bottomlesse store-house of all comforts: Aske there, seeke there, knock there, and you have a promise: Runne to creatures, and you have none. Againe, Moses was the Magistrate set over them by God, and therefore an high offence to contend with him, to be troublesome to him, and to grieve him. Such malecontents are odious to God, and their ends, if they continue in their faults, ever foule. Moses was further a meeke Governour and most milde, the Numb. 12. 3. Scripture saith of him, that he was the meekest man alive: He had delivered them from a bloody bondage, and beene Gods instrument of many benefits and comforts. The more therefore was their fault a great deale, the better and sweeter his government was to them. Let it teach as many, as have the like blessing, to avoid the like sinne, and to be thankfull both to God, and his meanes. It is registred for a praise ever to endure, and the remembrance of it God will not have 2 Sam. 20. 1. &c. put out, that when a rebellious spirit made a commotion against David the Lords annointed, and the men of Israel foolishly and wickedly followed him, and forsooke their King, yet the men of Iuda would not do it, but as the Text saith, They clave fast unto their King: to their good King, their religious King, their naturall Prince, their loving Lord and Governour, annointed and set over them by a mightie God. No charmes would they hearken unto against him, but clave fast unto him, and I say againe, the praise of it shall never dye.

3 They are said also to tempt the Lord; A further degree of sinne in them: Which all men doe, doe, when they doubt of his power, his will, and his truth, when they take upon them to prescribe wayes and meanes how they will be helped: and do not patiently expect his comfort by such wayes and meanes, and in such time as to him shall seeme good. That thus they tempted him, the seventh verse sheweth, where they say, Is the Lord among us? making that a Question which was so manifest, unlesse they might have what they would, and when they would, and as they would. Had ever people greater testimonies of Gods presence among them, then they? Did not they even at this time receive every morning a token of it, when they gathered Manna? O impatience then! whither wilt thou carry our corrupt nature, if God stay thee not? farre otherwise did that Saint of God, David, when in as great a distresse as this, he said, Carry the Ark of God againe into the City, if I shall finde favour in the eyes of God, he will bring me againe, and shew me both it, and the Tabernacle thereof. But if he thus say, I have no delight in thee, behold here am I, let him do to me as seemeth good in his eyes. Here is patience and contentment in Gods holy will, whatsoever it is, be it to weale, or be it to woe, be it to Life, or be it to Death. And what man or woman ever lost by carrying themselves thus towards their God? David found a blessing of this course, and returned in safety to his house, the Rebels against him being confounded and scattered in Gods powerfull justice. Pray it therefore with your heart, as you do with tongue, and pray it often both with heart and tongue, Thy will be done, Thy will be done, O my Father, with me ever. In it will I rest, in it will I joy, by thy helping grace, and be alwayes assured of thy true word: All things, even all things worke for the best to them that love thee. I could note by these mutinies and stirres, the difficulty of government, the nature of the multitude, the lot of Gods Ministers, and such like, but before they have been touched upon divers the like occasions; nothing must discourage a man in that calling that God hath placed him in. Væ tibi si præes, & non prodes; sed væ gravius, si quia præesse metuis prodesse refugis: Woe to thee, if thou governe and doest not profit; but more woe be unto thee, if because thou art afraid to governe, thou refuse to profit, saith Saint Bernard.

Verse 7.

2 Sam. 15. 25, 26.

4. Then Moses cryed unto the Lord saying, what shall I do to this people? for they be almost ready to stone me. The true refuge of Magistrate, Minister, and all godly, is ever to fly unto the Lord by hearty and earnest prayer, as here you see Moses doth. Thus againe, when Pharaoh pursued to the red Sea; and in both places his prayer is called a crying, for the earnestnesse of it in his heart, although he spake never a word with his mouth. So saith David in his Psalme, Thus and thus they abused me, but I gave my selfe to prayer. It is a blessed course, and never faileth them that use it. But stand you not amazed at the other part of the verse? namely, that they were ready almost to stone Moses, such a Man, such a Magistrate, so deare to God, so profitable to them, so famous in all Ægypt, and almost over the world, for those great works wherewith it hath pleased God to grace him? O turba quàm semper es turbulenta? O world, what trust is to be reposed in thee? this is the constancy of thy favour ever. The multitude is thus to be reckoned of, be a mans deserts never so good, and yet how hunt many after this breath? how spend they? how spoile they themselves and all theirs, to be great with the people, and to be spoken of by the multitude, never thinking in due time of the nature of this greatnesse, and what all monuments of learning have said of it? doe not the Scriptures shew us, how reverently the Pharisies sent unto Iohn, and yet after affirmed him to have the Devill? Whereupon, our Saviour Christ uttereth a Sentence, worthy to be written in a wise mans heart for ever, Iohn was a burning and shining candle; and yee would for a season have rejoyced in his light: Mark these words (for a season) and settle them soundly in your heart, that they may ever shew you, that were you as great as Iohn Baptist, who had not a greater amongst them that were begotten of women, yet your credit is but for a season with worldly men, and with the common multitude. To day a man, to morrow a beast; to day none better, to morrow none worse; to day a God, to morrow a Devill. The Lord Jesus himselfe found this measure, and all his Disciples and Servants after him. Absalon would write kindly to Ioab to day, and to morrow set his corne on fire. The world weigheth without Ballance, numbreth without Counters; and measureth without Rule. The Ballance, Counters, and Rule of the world, is a fickle, fading, hot and hasty humour for a time. How close and fast will the Quick-silver cleave unto the Gold? you would thinke it could never be gotten away, yet as soone as the fire commeth, it is gone, and no signe to be seene of it. Even so is the liking of the world, not loving in God and for God. They that run at Tilt, looke to the Judges what they say, and not what the vulgar people say. So must a wise man ever looke what his Judge in heaven alloweth, and not what inconstant men on earth praise.

If any man would warne you of the fall of the house wherein you are, you would soone bee gone, and shall no warning serve to make you avoid the tottering applause of the world? Glorious Haman how soone is he downe, and his glory gone as it had never beene: Great Holofernes that was so fearefull with his power, falleth and vanisheth in a moment. Mighty Antiochus, the King of Syria, what a change found he in an instant? He that hangeth upon the worlds opinion, shall to day be great, to morrow little, and the third day no body. Iezabel Iezabel, all ſecure in peace and worldly comfort, are ſlaine by Iehu, and their pompe gone. That potent Monarch Alexander, after ſuch glory and fame, dieth in his flower, and lyeth thirty dayes unburied, his friends being buſie in ſharing his Kingdomes. Valerian the Emperour, taken of the Perſian King, is made a foote-ſtoole for him to tread upon in going to his horſe. Such Stories many our Bookes have; but theſe ſuffice for a taſte. If God and man have found the worlds love fickle, ſhall you only find it faſt? beleeve it not; but remember worthy Moſes here, ready to be ſtoned, by thoſe that even now, when the Sea was divided, honoured him greatly. You can never give any people ſo many cauſes to ſtick unto you, as he did give this people to cleave unto him, and yet they failed. Write it therefore in your hands, and in your heart for ever, and in well doing depend upon God, you ſhall find him never to faile you: Marke alſo your marginall note here in your Bible.

5. What anſwereth the Lord to this inward crie of his grieved and troubled ſervant Moſes? See I pray you in the two verſes following, the fifth, and the ſixth; He biddeth him take his rod, and ſtrike a hard ſtony rock; and it ſhould yeeld the people water to drinke, and for their cattell alſo at full. A mighty powerfull worke of God, and full of good inſtructions for all thoſe that will obſerve them. As firſt, that againſt ſuch a rebellious people, ſo froward, ſo ſtubborne, and ſo forgetfull of his former favours, yet he thundreth not out wrath and judgements as they deſerved, but mildly and mercifully ſtill dealeth with them, adding mercy to mercy, favour to favour, and goodneſſe to goodneſſe, for all their evill. So teaching all Governours patience and long ſuffering, not to follow with rigour and extremitie all wrongs, not ſetting power againſt folly, and yeelding meaſure for meaſure, in full recompenſe of ill deſerts, but according to the courſe of God here, doing good for evill, even to men of bitter tongues and naughty hearts againſt us, to men forgetful of the good we have done them, and every way deſerving evill of us. I know, I know, this is ſoone ſaid, but not ſo ſoone done: For fleſh and blood cannot away with this courſe. There is a law in our members that rebelleth againſt this counſell. But what then? here is my God before me, the beſt patterne that can be followed; who hath power to puniſh, and yet ſpareth, who hath power to hurt, and yet helpeth; who hath power to kill with the breath of his mouth ten thouſand worlds, and yet ſaveth all, and ſlayeth not the meaneſt man of all this company that murmureth againſt him. And his power in me can worke that, which otherwiſe my corruption will not abide to yeeld unto. That Spirit therefore ſo powerfull, I will pray to make me able to follow this example of my Almighty Father, and I will ſet this preſident before mine eyes, to direct me and teach me, as any way I ſhall be able to learne. His bleſſed ſervant the Apoſtle S. Paul treadeth in the ſame ſteps, when he ſaith, Dearely beloved, avenge not your ſelves, but give place to wrath: For it is written, Vengeance is mine: I will repay. Recompence to no man evill for evill; but overcome evill with goodneſſe, &c.

Rom. 12. 19. 17. & 21.

Secondly, it yeeldeth a moſt ſtrong comfort unto us in all our wants: For can we ever thinke, that this God which regardeth the need of ſuch Rebels, and giveth them help even miraculouſly, will deſpiſe our wants, and ſuffer us in them to periſh without reliefe? Search (I ſay) your owne ſoule, and tell me if you can harbour ſuch a thought againſt ſo ſweet a God: If you cannot, but abhorre to doe it, then ſee how you are aſſured by this Place, of his bleſſed providence for you and yours, yea even for your very cattell, if they want but water. And clap your hands upon it, binde it to your heart, and let it never depart from you, whileſt life endureth in this world of wants. What moved him to this mercy you ſee, not their merits, but his own promiſe and goodneſſe. Reaſon then ever with your weake heart, True to them, and not true to me? O fie, fie, avoid vile thought, my God is ever true in all his promiſes, and to all his children, never failing any that relyeth upon him. I will tarry therefore the Lords leaſure, and ſubmit my ſelfe to his good will: for he that helped ſuch Repiners as theſe, will in his good time looke upon my want. The eyes of my poore children ſhall wait upon him for bread and drink; and he ſhall fill them with his bleſſing, when and how he thinketh fit.

Thirdly, it is a profitable obſervation here, to ſee how no evill in man can drive God from his promiſe; and yet Satan will ſuggeſt ſtill: O, thou art not worthy of mercy, thou art ſinfull, and a great ſinner, thou muſt be puniſhed in Gods juſtice, he cannot ſpare thee, therefore trouble him not, hope not in him, for there is no mercy for ſuch a one, &c. Why vile Satan, is my comfort repoſed in mine owne worth? or do I reſt upon mine owne merit? I tell thee I confeſſe all thou ſayeſt of mine owne unworthineſſe, and therefore have no hope that way, but I looke at his promiſe, and I conſider his truth, and I ſee here and every where, that no evill in man can make him evill by breaking his promiſe, therefore I may not deſpaire. I have his promiſe, that he will forgive a grieved ſinner at all times, for all ſinnes were they as red as blood; and that hee will never caſt any away that commeth unto him. I beleeve him, and I will be comforted in his never-failing truth: avaunt thou vile Tempter from me: Though the Lord ſhould kill me, yet will I put my truſt in him. In which holy diſpute with your ſelfe, remember I pray you, the old Fathers how they have gone before you in this point: Tota ſpes mea eſt in morte Domini mei, mors ejus meritum meum, Refugium meum, ſalus mea, vita mea, reſurrectio mea, meritum meum miſera- tio Domini. Non ſum inops meriti, quamdiu ille non eſt inops miſerationis. Et ſi miſericordiæ Domini multæ, multus ego ſum in meritis: Quanto ille potentior ad ſalvandum, tanto ſum ego ſecurior. Peccavi peccatũ grande, & multorum ſum conſcius mihi delictorum, non tamen deſpero; quia ubi abundavit delictum, ibi ſuperabundavit gratia, &c. All my hope is on the death of my Lord, his death is my merit, my refuge, my health, my life, my reſurrection: my merit is the Lords mercy. And I am not void of merit, ſo long as hee is not void of mercy: If his mercies be many, my merits are alſo many. And the ſtronger hee is to ſave, the more ſecure and ſafe am I. My ſinne is great that I have committed, yea I am guilty of many ſinnes, yet deſpaire I not; for where ſinne aboundeth, Grace hath ſuperabounded. Hee that deſpaireth of the forgiveneſſe of his ſinnes, denyeth God to bee mercifull, yea hee denyeth as much as lyeth in him that God hath Love, Truth, and Power, in which three all my comfort conſiſteth, to wit, in the love of his adoption, in the truth of his promiſe, and in his power to performe. Let my fooliſh cogitation then mutter what it liſteth within mee, ſaying, who art thou? or by what merit or worthineſſe doeſt thou hope to obtaine ſuch great glory? I comfortably will anſwer; I know whom I have beleeved, and I am ſure that in love he hath adopted mee to be his childe, that hee is true in his promiſe, and powerfull in performance. And theſe three ſo ſtrengthen my heart, that no want of merit, no conſideration of mine owne vileneſſe, no greatneſſe of the future bleſſedneſſe can caſt mee downe from the hight of hope, wherein I am ſoundly rooted. This is the threefold Cord, &c. To this effect have many other Fathers written alſo, but I omit them.

Laſtly, this example of God in this place, as it teacheth patience and long ſuffering, when we are abuſed, ſo doth it notably alſo teach conſtancy in love, where wee once have loved. A thing worthy following, if I had not beene too long in this Note, I will therefore reſerve it to ſome other place, onely now praying you to remember whom you reſemble, if this grace be in you, and from whom you ſway if it bee not. It is enough to move a childe of God.

6 Of this ſtriking of the Rocke, there is often mention made in the Scriptures; and therefore a thing worthy good conſideration, Hee clave the hard rockes in the wilderneſſe, and gave them drinke thereof, as if it had beene out of the great depths. He brought waters out of the ſtony rocke, ſo that it guſhed out like the rivers. Againe, in another Pſalme, He opened the rock of ſtone, and the waters flowed out, ſo that rivers ranne in dry places. For why, he remembred his holy promiſe, and Abraham his ſervant. The things we may thinke of are theſe: The fall of Moſes and Aaron at this time: The figure and allegory of this Rocke. Concerning the firſt, read what is written in the Booke of Numbers: Moſes and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rocke; and Moſes ſaid unto them, Hear now ye Rebels: Shall we bring you water out of this Rock? And the Lord ſaid to Moſes and Aaron, Becauſe ye beleeved me not, to ſanctifie me in the preſence of the children of Iſrael, therefore ye ſhall not bring this congregation into the Land which I have given them. Here you ſee it revealed that Moſes and Aaron ſtaggered at this matter, and offended the Lord. Whereby we are notably taught, that although there be many in this world, who through the grace that is given them, fight a good fight, having faith and a good Conſcience: yet there is none free from all ſinne, ſaving Jeſus Chriſt alone. But even Moſes himſelfe here, that Great light, hath his darkneſſe and his infirmitie. He that hath wrought ſuch great miracles, and divided the maine Sea, through the power of him that now biddeth him ſtrike the Rocke: yet here he doubteth and fainteth in faith, as God himſelfe witneſſeth of him. Truely therefore ſaid the Prophet David, If the Lord ſhall marke what is done amiſſe, Who, who ſhall be able to abide it? And the Apoſtle likewiſe, There is none that is righteous, no not one. All have gone out of the way; And in the ſight of God can no fleſh living be juſtified. Let not Satan then amaze us with our imperfections: for the ſweeteſt Roſes have their prickles; and Chriſt came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance. On the other ſide againe, Let not Satan tempt us to a conceit of purity or perfection either in our ſelves, or others: for if Moſes fall, if David fall, if Samuel fall, if Iob fall, if Abraham fall, and all have fallen, who ſhall ſay, my heart is cleane? Beware of theſe extremities both wayes, and walking in the middle way, take hold of Chriſt, by him fearing no imperfection, and for him flying all vaine thoughts of abſolute integrity. Againe, learne here and forget it never, what an odious thing in the ſight of God any doubting in him is, which yet the Doctrine of Rome ſo laboureth to maintaine. For when for this onely fault the Lord is ſo moved with his deare ſervant Moſes, that hee rejecteth him from conducting his people into the promiſed Land, and burieth him in the Deſart, certainely wee may not entertaine doubting in our hearts touching any promiſe of his, and eſpecially in ſo great a matter, or in ſuch a grand Article of Faith, as the Remiſſion of ſinnes is.

Pſa. 105. 41, 42.

Num. 20. 10, 12

Rom. 3. 10, 12.

7 For the ſecond thing, namely, the Type: you reade in the Apoſtle, that this rock was Chriſt, that is, a Figure of Chriſt. With which kinde of phraſe would the Romiſh Teachers not wrangle, that great contention about the Sacrament needed not. For to give the name of the thing ſignified, to the ſigne ſignifying, was never ſtrange among learned men, and in this very particular of the Sacrament, S. Auſtens words are well knowne, Nõ dubitabat Dominus dicere hoc eſt corpus meum, cum signum daret corporis sui: The Lord doubted not to say, This is my body, when he gave a signe of his body: To which end also speake other of the Fathers abundantly, if it were any purpose here to enter into this matter.

8 For the third thing, namely the Allegory, thus it is noted by the the learned: That when all mankinde was to be stricken by the Law for sinne; yet, through the infinite love of God, the Rocke onely was smitten, that is, Christ, of whom the Law laid hold for us, and he submitting himselfe for us, was smitten of it for us. Thus saith the Prophet, He was smitten for our transgressions, and with his stripes we are healed. Other Scriptures also, That God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Sonne to suffer, &c. That he himselfe bare our sinnes in his body on the tree, &c. This blessed Rock thus smitten for us, hath gushed out sweet water for us to drink, and to coole that scalding heate of burning sin in our soules, which else would quickly kill us, and be our bane. Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him (saith this our Rock and Saviour) shall never be more athirst, but the water that I shall give, shall be in him a well of water springing up to everlasting life. But let no man thinke that this water, that is, the sweet and chearing comfort of the Gospell, is to be got by mans merits (as some teach) but ever remember the Prophets words, Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and yee that have no silver, come buy and eate; come, I say, buy wine and milke without silver, and without money, &c. The Prophets words are full of force: First, calling to All to come, and excepting none, which is a great comfort: and then offering mercy without money, that all cursed cogitations of workes and worths in our selves might ever die and be abhorred. Come unto me all ye that travell and are heavy laden, and I will refresh you, not your owne merits and workes. The blood of Iesus Christ cleanseth us, saith the Apostle, from all sinne; all sinne, I say againe, and not our workes from any. He, he againe is the propitiation for our sins, and nothing else wholly or partly. Therefore let us do no wrong to this blessed Rocke, but being thankfull to God, Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghost, let us looke to be saved onely by that meane that so graciously is provided, and drinke wee ever and onely of this water.

Esay 53.5. Iohn 3.16. 1 Pet.2.24.

Iohn 4.14.

Esay 55.1.

The second part.

Verse 1. THen came Amalech and fought with Israel in Rephidim. I stil like to put you in remembrance, that as God hath given us bodies, so hath he given us soules; and as meate for the bodie, so for the soule, even his holy and blessed Word. If the body feed not, it cannot live; and if the soule feed not, it must likewise die. If the body eate, and yet feele no taste of sweetnesse and comfort in the meate, or digest it not well in the stomack, and convert it to good nutriment for the parts, we say and thinke the body is sicke; and verily so is it with the soule. Wherefore ever thinke with your selfe, when you have read, or heard read unto you a peece of Scripture, what you are the better for it, what taste, what relish, what use and profit you have by it: and if you finde any, thank your God, and be much comforted with it, for it is an assured token that your soule is in health: But if you finde none, call for the Physitian, even the Physitian of your soule, and pray him to helpe you; God shall bee pleased with your care, and give a blessing. But if he be absent, and not at hand, till he come, take this my labour, and as farre as it goeth make use of it: It may please God to make it profitable, at least it shall shew you how I my selfe profited, both in that which is past, and now againe in this second part.

1 First then I see here a warre, and it is the First war that these Israelites had after their deliverance out of Ægypt. I thinke with my selfe (meditating of it) why God should suffer his chosen people, delivered by him with such a mighty arme from Pharaoh, and directed altogether in their journey by him (for they travelled not but when and which way he by the cloud in the day, and the pillar of fire in the night directed them:) I say, I think with my selfe, why God should suffer his people to be troubled in their way, and set upon and fought withall? And I conceive these uses. First, that hee might fit them for great conflicts, which they must have in the execution of his justice upon the Cananites, whose places he had appointed unto them, determined to roote out and destroy all those inhabitants. Now, every thing hath a beginning and a trayning up, even as Schollers in the schoole, and Tradesmen in their trades; The young beginner is brought from easier things to harder, and at the last made a Master of his Art: So doth the Lord fit men by degrees for that which he hath appointed them unto: If he will in time have us to doe any great things, wee must begin to doe the lesse; and if we bee appointed to beare great crosses, we must begin to beare little ones: and so on, on, in our appointed warfare of this life. The good consideration whereof, will make you ever welcome what God sendeth, and thinke it is a Degree of his Schoole. You know not yet what you are appointed for, but follow him, and be cheerfull, the end, I warrant you, shall bee good. Secondly, by this (as by many other Scriptures) he teacheth his people the lawfulnesse of warres, both defensive, and offensive, contrary to phantasticall spirits, that talke they know no what. The Magistrate beareth not the Sword in vaine, but hath it to defend, and offend, as occasion serveth, that is, to protect the good, good,and to ſmite the evill. Thirdly, to tell us and his Church ever, that as theſe Iſraelites could not travell to the earthly Canaan,but they muſt fight with Amalech in the way; no more can wee travell to the heavenly Canaan, without battell given to many foes: The Devill, the World,and the Fleſh,they are fierce Amalechites; and they muſt be fought with, yea they muſt be overcome alſo,as Amalech was of Iſrael,or elſe wee ſhall never ſee Canaan. Poverty ſickneſſe, croſſes by children,by fained friends, and ſpitefull foes, ſlanders, and ill reports, with infinite more, they are Amalechites, and meet you in your way as you are travelling towards the Spirituall Canaan; they ſtop you, at the leaſt they offer to ſtay you, ſo that without buckling with them you ſhall not paſſe. At them then in the power of our God, and faint not, be valiant and of a ſtout courage: He ſtandeth at our backe that is Almighty, and hee joyeth to ſee you heartie. To Hell a man may ſayle with a forewinde, and meet never an Amalechite,but not to Heaven. When Iſrael was going to Ægypt they met no foes;but when they came frō Ægypt to goe to Canaan,they meet with many. Lazarus, poore Lazarus had a bitter battell in his way to heaven,when the Rich Glutton ſayled ſmoothly to hell, with never a rub in his way,&c. This meditation you may follow further if you will, and bee much comforted in it in your croſſes: for they are but Amalechites,and you ſhall overcome them,arriving joyfully in the glorious Canaan prepared for you,and all that fight manfully.

2 I conſider next what ſhould be the cauſe why theſe Amalechites would fight with the Iſraelites: For as touching blood, Amalech came of Eliphaz, ſonne of Eſau by Timna his Concubine,and Eſau and Iacob were brethren, ſo they were too neare to fight one with another, if all had beene well; neither is there mention made of any injury done of the Iſraelites to Amalech. Nothing then can I finde to bee the cauſe, but that which is too common a cauſe ſtill, ſtill in the world, even a bitter envy at Gods mercies vouchſafed unto them, and a wicked deſire to have the ſpoile of them. God was gracious, unto the Iſraelites,and had long beene, they could not abide it; and God meant to be further gracious. they would prevent it. In a word, God may not doe with his owne what he liſteth, but if his eye be good, theirs is evill; though themſelves had favours beyond their worth, yet ſpite they that others are favoured alſo. An old canker in mans heart; for Abel taſted of it ſo long agoe at his owne brothers hand: and I would it blemiſhed not in our dayes thoſe that ſhould bee brethren. Perhaps alſo there was in them naturally a roote of quarrelling, jarring, and contending with others, for ſuch roots there are too deepe ſet in ſome hearts. Men that cannot bee quiet, that cannot live in peace with their neighbours, but that delight in troubles and controverſies,in ſtrife and debate; and will damnably boaſt that they have health, and grow fat by going to law with their brethren, whereas if they were quiet,they ſhould die. Men I ſay of this nature, very limbes of Sathan, the world hath ever had, and ſtill hath too many. Now theſe cauſes were all naught, and therefore this warre ill grounded, ill proſpered. For Envy I have often touched it, but if the Lord alſo touch not ſuch hearts, nothing will ſerve. I ſay no more now, but wiſh they would earneſtly thinke of the ſaying of Gods Spirit in the Pſalme; The ungodly ſhall ſee it, and gnaſh their teeth: The ungodly, the ungodly be theſe gnaſhers; and let him that hath eares to heare, heare. For that filthy deſire of having from others ſtill, ſtill, that their heape may grow infinite, I wiſh that Heathen Africanus well remembred, who when hee ſhould have joyned with the Prieſt in praying for more and more encreaſe to the Romanes, anſwered no,no, our State is good already, and aboundeth rich, I will therefore rather pray that God will keepe it, and maintaine it as it is. Surely this man ſhall riſe up in judgement againſt ſuch unſatiable mindes, and bee a ſwift witneſſe againſt them. The old ſaying is wiſe,Enough is enough,and,Enough is as good as a feaſt. Mediocria firma, Meane things be firme, when great things bee fickle. In Plutarch is mentioned a reaſon why the Kings of Sparta raigned ſo long; namely, becauſe they were content with their owne limit, and deſired no more. The third vice is as bad as either of theſe, namely, To bee unquiet. And all Bookes of learning by occaſion ſpeake of the blot it made in that worthy Alexander, when the Scythian Embaſſadours truely told him, That if there were no man to fight and quarrell withall,he would fight with the woods,and the mountaines, and the wilde beaſts. Such another was Alcibiades,an excellent man many wayes,but ſo unquiet,that the ſaying grew, how Greece was not able to beare two Alcibiades. Beware then of theſe cauſes of warre and contention; and learne by the Rod of God upon Amalech, to live in peace, and to let Gods children paſſe by us without trouble. I could here with juſt honour remember Her late Majeſties moſt happy Government, Her bleſſed contentment with her owne, not ſeeking nor deſiring the right of others,no not taking that which was earneſtly offered unto her. In regard whereof ſhee renownedly flouriſhed, when other, envious, greedy, and troubleſome natures fell. But I end this Note here.

3 And Moſes ſaid unto Ioſhua, Chuſe us out men, and goe and fight with Amalech; wee may obſerve in this the antiquity of Muſters,and a warrant for them. All did not goe here,but ſome, and thoſe choſen out by a Muſter, and view taken by Ioſhua. Such uſe remaineth ſtill amongſt us, and in all Governments elſe; for it is fit, it is neceſſary, and I would have all men conſider well how full of honour and credit it ever was in theſe caſes to be choſen: as contrariwiſe what a blot it carried often with it to be omitted: as that either hee was guilty of ſome foule vice, or not truſted, &c. Then would not men runne away and hide themſelves as ſoone as they heare of a Muſter towards, as now-a-dayes they doe. Such baſe mindes and cowardly ſpirits were not wont to be in Engliſhmen: I would it were amended; for no friend can heare of ſuch a one, but with bluſhing and ſhame. And againe, it worketh another great miſchiefe, namely, to have our armie, that ſtand for God and Religion, for Prince and Countrey, to conſiſt of ſuch a ſcumme, as no bleſſing can bee expected, where ſuch inſtruments are uſed. Non recipiebantur olim milites aliquo publico judicio damnati, non relegatus ad tempus, multo minus deportatus in inſulam, ad beſtias damnatus, imo nec reus tantum criminis, &c. Ex quorum fœce tamen noſtri exercitus ſunt refertiſſimi. In times paſt (ſaith One) they were not taken for Souldiers, which were condemned by any publike judgement, or baniſhed (for a time, or finally) or to bee caſt to the beaſts, or guilty of any crime; with which froath yet all our armies are full. Obſervavit illud antiqua diſciplina militaris, ut arma pro juſtitia & repulſione inimicorum hominibus vitioſis non darentur, &c. Old military Diſcipline obſerved this carefully, that armes for juſtice and repulſing of enemies, ſhould not bee given to vicious perſons, &c. In Rome, when the Empire flouriſhed, he thought himſelfe not a man, that had not ſerved in the warres per decennium, by the ſpace of ten yeares. And with us hee thinketh himſelfe a Kill-cowe, that never ſaw hoſtem aut caſtra, either enemy or Camp; that can better skill to ſwagger and ſweare in an Ale-houſe, or in a Market-towne, with long ſhagged haire, like a bird of Newgate, than how to ſerve among men like a man. A foule degenerating from the vertue of our Elders, and of our Nation. Let it bee vile hereafter to ſuch as taſte of Man-hood, or have true Engliſh blood in the ir hearts.

4 To morrow I will ſtand on the top of the hill with the rod of God in my hand, namely, to pray: for ſo it appeareth hee did. Where ſee and note a religious joyning of Godly Prayer with the meanes of outward force. This is no new thing, but as old as Moſes: acceptable to God, and very powerfull ever. Aſa did thus, and he was a godly King There came out againſt him the King of Æthiopia or Egypt, with an hoaſt of ten hundred thouſand, and three hundred Chariots, (a huge company.) And Aſa went out before him, and uſed both theſe wayes. Firſt, they ſet the battell in aray, with all thoſe things, then joyne they in prayer alſo as moſt requiſite. And Aſa cryed unto the Lord his God, and ſaid, Lord, it is nothing with thee to helpe with many, or with no power: helpe us, O Lord our God: for wee reſt on thee, and in thy Name are wee come out againſt this multitude: O Lord, thou art our God, let not man prevaile againſt thee. Then the Lord ſmote the Æthiopians before Aſa, and before Judah, and the Æthiopians fled, &c. Iehoſhaphat did thus, and proſpered, his notable prayer is alſo expreſſed. Mauritius did thus againſt the Perſians, and proſpered. Our Chronicles tell us of Oſwald the King of Northumberland, how hee did the like, and proſpered againſt Cedwall. How Ethelred being at prayer, & hearing that his brother Alured was ſhrewdly diſtreſſed in the battell, yet went on with his prayer, and would not ſtirre till hee had ended that duty, after he went and had a notable victory, and releeved his brother. The men of S. Edmundsbury prayed againſt the cruell Tyrant Swanus, and the Lord heard them, ſmote Swanus, that hee dyed roaring and yelling, and they were delivered. Edward the third againſt the French did thus, and proſpered. Many more might be recited. Wherefore, good is that ſaying of S. Ambroſe to Gratian, Noſti fide magis Imperatoris, quam virtute militum victoriam quæri ſolere: Thou knoweſt that victory is gotten rather by the faith of the Emperour, than by the valour of the Souldiers. Both together fight ſtrongly againſt all foes and forces, as you ſee. And in this place I pray you well note what followeth.

5 And when Moſes held up his hand Iſrael prevailed: but when hee let his hands goe downe Amalech prevailed. Thus ſhewed the Lord to all poſterity and ſucceding ages, the force of holy prayer in battell or elſe-where. Surely, ſurely, it is ever with the Lord a prevailing power, as ſhall be good for the parties uſing it. Is any ſicke amongſt you? (ſaith Saint Iames) let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray for him, &c. And the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſicke, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up: and if he have committed ſins, they ſhall be forgiven him. For the prayer of a righteous man availeth much if it be fervent. Elias was a man ſubject to like paſſions as we are, and he prayed earneſtly that it might not raine, and it rained not on the earth for three yeares and ſix moneths. And he prayed againe, and the heavens gave raine, and the earth brought forth her fruit. Agreeable hereunto is that great commendation of prayer in Syrach, He heareth the prayer of the oppreſſed, He deſpiſeth not the deſire of the fatherleſſe, nor the widow when ſhe powreth out her prayer. Doe not the teares run downe the widowes cheeks? and her cry is againſt him that cauſeth them: for from her cheeks they goe up to heaven, & the Lord which heareth them doth accept them. He that ſerveth the Lord ſhall be accepted with favour, and his prayer ſhall reach unto the clouds. The prayer of him that humbleth himſelfe goeth thorow the clouds, and ceaſeth not till it come neare, and will not depart till the moſt high have reſpect thereunto, to judge righteouſly, and execute judgment, &c. As Davids Harpe wrought when the evill ſpirit vexed Saul (ſaith a learned man) ſo ſhall thy hearty zealous zealous prayer quiet thy troubled minde in all diſtreſſes, and comfort thy heart in all aſſaulting feares. Wilt thou bee raiſed up (ſaith another) then firſt caſt thy ſelfe downe in fervent and humble prayer? for no man is raiſed that firſt is not downe. Ioſhua by prayer obtained to have the Sunne ſtand ſtill, that hee might have day enough to ſlay the enemies of the Lord. In the hoaſt of M. Aurelius a company of Chriſtian ſouldiers by prayer obtained raine, when all the hoaſt was like to periſh for want of water. They alſo obtained thunderbolts to bee throwne from heaven in the faces of their foes, and thereupon had a name given them of the ſame; Legio fulminea, a thundring Legion. Oratio oranti ſubſidium, Deo ſacrificium, Diabolo flagellum. Prayer therfore to him that prayeth is a helpe, to God a ſacrifice, and to the Devill a whip. Ioſ. 10. 12, 13.

Theodoret upon Exodus ſaith, Dum extendebat manus Moſes, præ ſe ferebat typum ejus qui crucifixus eſt pro nobis. Quemadmodum enim ſervo extendente manus cecidit Amelech, ita cum Dominus manus extendit, diſſoluta eſt acies Diaboli. Whileſt Moſes ſtretched forth his hand he carried before him the Type or figure of him that is crucified for us. For as when the ſervant ſtretched out his hand Amalech fell, ſo when the Lord ſtretcheth forth his, the Devill and all his forces are overthrowne. If we receive not what we pray for at the firſt asking, we faint and ceaſe our praying ſtreight: not remembring how often wee uſe a medicine for the body, before we can be whole; how many ſtrokes an Oake muſt have before it will fall, and how we over and over, againe and againe, plow our land, and delve our gardens, to reape and gather fruite from them. Let us then amend this fault in our prayer hereafter; and never forget the force of true and godly prayer in time. Whileſt Moſes held up his hands (that is, continued praying) ſo long Ioſhua and the Iſraelites, whom hee prayed for, prevailed: But when he gave over, the enemy prevailed. Thus ſhall it be in your caſe, and in my caſe, and all others that bee troubled.

6 But Moſes hands were heavy: therefore they tooke a ſtone and put under him, and hee ſate upon it: And Aaron and Hur ſtayed up his hands, the one on the one ſide, and the other on the other ſide: ſo his hands were ſteady unto the going downe of the Sunne. And Ioſhua diſcomfited Amalech with the edge of the ſword. This heavineſſe of Moſes hands may teach us the weakneſſe of all fleſh in Chriſtian exerciſes. Wee cannot hold out and continue as wee ought; but heavineſſe and dulneſſe will ſteale upon us, and ſeeke to coole us and hinder us. The helpe that Aaron and Hur performed unto him, may teach us the benefit of Chriſtian company in ſuch holy exerciſes, and the needfull duty of praying for him that prayeth for us, that God would be with his ſpirit, that is, ſtrengthen him, and quicken him and aid him, ſo to pray, and ſo to continue his prayers, as the end may bee to his glory and our comfort. In regard whereof our Booke of Common prayer hath that anſwer; And with thy Spirit. The outward geſture may here alſo bee noted, which you ſhall finde in the Scriptures to be divers. Salomon kneeled, Ezechias turned to the wall, Chriſt fell prone upon his face, the Publican knocked upon his breſt, and here Moſes lifteth up his hands. All which geſtures pleaſe God, as long as they ariſe from zeale and truth within, and are not hypocriticall. And what the cuſtome of the Church wherein we live eſtabliſheth and uſeth, wiſe and peaceable perſons will keep and follow. Verſ. 12. Verſe 13. The ſpirit is willing, the fleſh is fraile. Miniſtri pii ſeſe mutuo adjuvent. Vide Galaſium. 1 King. 8. 54.

7 Laſtly, the Lord commandeth them to write this for a good remembrance in a Booke. And Moſes built an Altar, &c. All this hath uſe to tell us how careſull wee muſt bee in keeping a Regiſter in our hearts of Gods mercies and favours towards us in our ſelves, in our friends, in our Countrey, in our Magiſtrates, and Miniſters, or any way. The point hath beene touched heretofore, when we ſpake of Manna; and therefore I paſſe it over now: but I pray you remember examples in this caſe, and follow them, Deborah, Iudith, Heſter, Anna, Mary, Toby, the one cleanſed Leper that returned to give thankes, the Iſraelites when they paſſed over the Red Sea, &c. for all theſe built Altars in their hearts for Gods favours, by being truely and fervently thankfull. The earth rendreth the Husbandman her fruit for his paines beſtowed on her; ſo doth the Horſe and Oxe their labour for the meate which they have given them. How much more ſhould Man remember what he receiveth, and be thankfull to his good God? But I ſtay here. Theſe things may yeeld you a taſte of the uſe of this Chapter if you now reade over the Text againe, and obſerve the particulars: for what is my deſire, but to work a liking of reading the Text, by ſhewing ſome fruit which wee may receive when wee are deſtitute of better teaching? Verſ. 14. Verſ. 15.

CHAP. XVIII.

In this Chapter wee have two generall heads.

{ The comming of Iethro to his ſonne in law Moſes.
{ And the appointing of more judges to heare cauſes.

Verſ.1. CONcerning the firſt, the Text ſaith, When Iethro the Prieſt of Midian, Moſes father in law, heard all that God had done for Moſes, and for Iſrael his people, and how the Lord had brought Iſrael out of Ægypt, then he tooke Zipporah, Moſes wife, &c. and went unto him. Thereby noting, that the hearing of Gods great and wonderfull workes done for his people, moved his heart to come and joyne himſelfe to them, ſo entreth God to the heart by the eare uſually. And therfore the uſe of the eare to heare of God and his workes, out of his Word, ever cryed for in the Scriptures: and the ſtopping of the ſame ever condemned, as to God rebellious, and to the ſoule moſt hurtfull and pernicious. Oh that it might ſinke and ſettle in all men, for their amendment, and encreaſe of care and conſcience to heare.

2 What is Iethro? A Gentile. Where dwelt he? In Midian, a good way off. Gentiles then heare, and Jewes will not; they that dwell farre off come, and they that are neare will not. Hee that but heareth is much moved, they that ſee with their eyes, and feele with their hands Gods workes and mercies murmur and repine ſinfully. Doe not things fall out thus in our dayes? and finde we not by experience, to the griefe of all good minds, that plenty is no dainty? would God wee did not. But let us in time remember what is ſpoken for our admonition, if we have grace:

Mat.8.11, 12. Many ſhall come from the Eaſt, and Weſt, and ſhall ſit downe with Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob in the Kingdome of Heaven. And the children of the Kingdome ſhall be caſt out into utter darkneſſe: there

Mat.11.21. ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. Woe be to thee Chorazin; woe bee to thee Bethſaida; for if the Mat.12.24. great workes which were done in you, had beene done in Tyrus and Sidon, they had repented long agoe in ſackcloth and aſhes. The Queene of the South ſhall riſe in judgement with this generation, and ſhall condemne it; for ſhee came from the uttermoſt parts of the earth to heare the wiſdome of Salomon, and behold a greater than Salomon is here. Then Chriſt in his Perſon, now Chriſt in his Word; the ſame Chriſt God and Man, ever above Salomon who was his creature.

Iethro brought with him Moſes wife, whom he had ſent away, and her two ſonnes, verſe 3. The time when he ſent her away I doe not remember to be expreſſed in the Scripture. But of like it was when ſhee ſhewed her ſelfe ſo croſſe and wayward about the circumciſion of her ſonne, to

*Chap.*4 24. the hazard of Moſes owne life, whom the Lord would have killed for neglect of the Sacrament. Haply he thought ſhee would be croſſe and heady in other things, as well as in that; and therefore for feare leſt ſhe ſhould hinder him in his vocation now impoſed by God, he ſent her for a time backe with his children to Iethro her father. Whereof we may make, me thinks, theſe two uſes; Firſt, that it is a grievous offence for either wives or others to be an hinderance to men in their duties injoyned them by God; for this is even to ſtrive againſt God, and to ſet our will againſt his will, to the great perill both of the men ſo called, and of the parties that ſo hinder them, if they perſiſt. Secondly, that it is the duty of all ſo called, to remove from them in a lawfull ſort, thoſe hinderers; preferring the Lords worke before their owne affection, and remembring zealouſly their maſters words,

Mat.10.37. He that loveth Father or Mother more than me, is not worthy of me. And he that loveth Sonne or Daughters more than me, is not worthy of me. But whoſoever ſhall

Mat.19.29. forſake houſes, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my names ſake, bee ſhall receive an hundred fold more, and ſhall inherit eternall life. This forſaking for a time of Moſes, was a holy reſiſtance of his owne affections, and a zealous care of his impoſed Office.

And Iethro ſaid to Moſes, (that is, he ſent meſſengers to ſay) I thy father in law Iethro am come to thee, and thy wife and thy two ſonnes with her. A ſingular modeſty in Iethro, and reverence to his Sonne in law Moſes his place; when albeit he had with him thoſe gueſts that he knew in nature muſt needs be welcome, beſides his own due who was come ſo farre in love and kindneſſe: yet hee would not come to him without this reverent ſending before to acquaint him. Such reverence to mens places in our dayes is much wanting in thoſe that chiefly ſhould performe it; and familiarity breedeth contempt. But behold Iethro here, and know that God hath chronicled this for his praiſe and our profit. Reverence to Magiſtrates, reverence to Miniſters, reverence to all authority and ſuperiority, certainly it pleaſeth God, and commendeth us. The contrary is immodeſty, yea impiety, and as a great contempt of the Author of that authority, as of the party contemned, uſually puniſhed of God either with want of ever having authority, or with ſuch contempt if they have authority, as erſt they meaſured unto others.

Verſ.7. 5 How requiteth Moſes this kinde reſpect? The Text ſaith, He went out to meet his Father in law, and did obeyſance, and kiſſed him, & each asked other of his welfare; and they came into the Tent.

No

No authority and greatneſſe maketh him proud or unmindful of an old friend, who had ſhewed him kindneſſe when he was in a lower eſtate: but with a ſingular humility hee receiveth reverence in his place, and with like reſpect againe boweth himſelfe and reverenceth Iethro. Such mutuall love and recyprocall offices of complement and order ſhall you ever ſee in wiſe men, what difference ſoever is in their places: and there is no greater pride, than where leaſt worth is. Pride maketh rude, and rudeneſſe getteth little love, wee all know. Such an example as this, is in ſtead of an hundred to a wiſe heart; and yet you may joyne Davids proteſtation to it, and be much profited, Lord, I am not high minded, I have no proud lookes, &c.

6 Then Moſes told his father in law all that the Lord had done to Pharaoh and the Ægyptians, &c. Being met together, after ordinary ſalutations and kinde enquiring one of anothers health, they fall to religious and godly talke: Moſes taking pleaſure to ſpeak, & Iethro to heare of ſuch gracious favours as the Lord had ſhewed to his people, and of ſuch powerfull judgements as he had laid upon their enemies. Which may ſerve for a good motive in our dayes to cut off idle, if not very prophane conference when wee meet, and to lead us this good way: remembring ever, that of idle words we muſt give an account. Woe be to the world becauſe of offences: for it muſt needs be that offences muſt come, but woe be to that man by whom the offence commeth, &c. If any man among you ſeeme religious, and refraineth not his tongue, but deceiveth his owne heart, this mans religion is in vain. The hearty joy alſo that was in Iethro when he heard theſe things, notably telleth us the right affection of a childe of God, when God is merciſull to his Church, or to any member thereof; he envieth not, he grudgeth not, much leſſe ſpeaketh ill, but with a very loving joy he is glad, and bleſſeth the Name of the Lord for it. A thing, I feare me, much wanting now a dayes, not only in country Chriſtians, and men (as we ſay) of the Laity, endued with leſſe knowledge, but even in ſuch as be great men in the Church and of the Clergy. The old ſaying was, Laici infeſti Clericis: but in our dayes, I feare, a Clergy mans chiefe enemies are they of his owne coate. Such is the rancor and poyſoned envy of theſe times. God in mercy alter it, and make our hearts like Iethro his heart here. Gratitude againe to God for his mercies here taught by Iethro, which is ever a duty due from man: and which being performed, moveth him to give more. For as Ambroſe ſaith, Gratiarum actio eſt ad plus dandum invitatio. Thankſgiving is a moving of the Lord to beſtow more, as ingratitude, out of doubt, worketh the taking away of things given. It is written of one Timotheus, the ſonne of Conon, a very good Father, a Citizen of Athens, that after he had proudly ſaid in a great aſſembly. Hæc Ego feci, non Fortuna, This have I done, and not Fortune, he never after proſpered in any thing, but daily loſt that glory which before he had gotten. Much more faulty are they, that at leaſt in heart (though by mouth they dare not openly ſay ſo) thinke that this, or that, they have gotten or done, and not God. You may thinke of that in Dan. 4. 27. and ever pray againſt ſuch pride.

7 Then Iethro, Moſes father in law, tooke burnt offerings, and ſacrifices to offer unto God. And Aaron, and all the Elders of Iſrael came to eate bread with Moſes father in law before God. Having beene thankfull in words, now hee addeth deeds, that both words and deeds may goe together in honouring God. For a dead faith, ſaith Saint Iames, that is where workes want. And as with the heart we beleeve unto righteouſneſſe, ſo with the mouth we confeſſe unto ſalvation, ſaith S. Paul. If we learne of Iethro, ever to joyne theſe together, as the Lord ſhall enable us, wee ſhall rightly and fully give aſſurance both to our ſelves, and others of our true faith. This ſhewed againe, that Iethro worſhipped the true God, otherwiſe (in likelihood) Moſes would not have married his Daughter.

Iam. 2. 17. Rom. 10. 10.

And if Iethro here, and Melchiſedeck, and Naaman, and Cornelius, with others mentioned elſewhere in the Scriptures did ſo, having, for any thing wee know, ſmall preaching or meanes of true knowledge, beſides the working Spirit of a gracious God that mercifully pulled them out of the fire: Let us comfortably hope of our Fore-fathers living in the time of ignorance, that they found mercy with God. And yet beware that we reaſon not from thence to any contempt or neglect of that bleſſed light which God vouchſafeth now above theſe times. But ever remember that ſingular ſpeech of Saint Cyprian, Ignoſci potuit ſimpliciter errantibus, poſt inſpirationem vero & revelationẽ factam, qui in eo quo erraverat, perſeverat, ſine venia ignorantia peccat, præſumptione enim & obſtinatione ſuperatur; Mercy might bee ſhewed to them that erred of ſimplicity, but after light granted who ſhall ſo continue in his error, hee ſinneth without hope of pardon, being overcome with preſumption and obſtinacy.

Cypr. Epiſt. 63.

The kinde comming of the Elders with Aaron, to eate and bee merry with Moſes Father in law, ſheweth their love to Moſes, and was a great comfort. A like cuſtome wee have to give a man his welcome (as wee call it) with wine or meate as wee thinke good, which you ſee is commendable, being uſed rightly. For moſt good and joyfull it ever was, when men together agree in love and unity. Many ſharpe ſhowers Moſes was under by theſe Iſraelites; yet here is love and kindneſſe, which telleth us God will not ever grieve his ſervants, Magiſtrates, or Miniſters, or others faithfull, but hath his times to comfort them alſo, and mingle ſweet with their ſowre, that they may be able to beare and to goe along with their vocation. A ſweet goodneſſe neſſe in him ſo to conſider our weakneſſe, ſo to temper things to our ſtrength, and let it worke a love in us of ſo deare a Father, and to a godly carriage in all ſtormes. For clouds will blow over, and after a foule day commeth a faire. Sorrow at night, joy ere day, ſaith the experienced Prophet Pſ.30.5. David, and the Lord in mercy give us the uſe of all his ſweet comforts.

The Second part.

Verſe 13. NOw on the morrow when Moſes ſate to judge the people, the people ſtood about Moſes from morning to even, &c. Amongſt the infinite mercies of God vouchſafed to mankinde, this is one great one, that hee hath appointed government and governours, judgement, Judges, juſtice, and lawes, to defend the good, and repreſſe the evill and unruly. In the 11. Chapter of the Pro-
Zach.11.7. phet Zachary, he calleth it a Staffe, and a ſtaffe of beauty for the excellency of it; I tooke unto me, ſaith the Lord, two Staves; the one I called Beauty, the other I called Bands, and I fed the ſheepe. The firſt Staffe, was the government Eccleſiaſticall and civill, which hee eſtabliſhed amongſt them, called I ſay Beauty for the profit, comfort, and good that commeth ever by government. His ſecond Staffe, was peace, unity and concord, moſt mercifully alſo vouchſafed unto them, which being indeed a notable holdfaſt of happineſſe in any ſtate, hee calleth it by the name of Bands. And both theſe excellent mercies he calleth by the name of Staves, becauſe they have fit reſemblances with thoſe Shepheards ſtaves, that are uſed in feeding and tending the flockes of men.

For to ſpeake of government whereto the Text leadeth me, the Shepheards ſtaffe is ſaid to be a ſtaffe of direction, a ſtaffe of correction, a ſtaffe of defence, and a ſtaffe of ſupport or eaſe; Even ſo is good and juſt government if you marke it. For it directeth a man willing to live in order, what he ſhall doe, and what he ſhall not doe, as the ſtaffe guideth the ſheepe in the right way, and keepeth him from the wrong. It correcteth him that will not be ruled. It defendeth the oppreſſed and wronged, and is a ſure ſtay to leane and reſt upon, when wee are toyled with hard dealings of men, as the ſtaffe is for the ſhepheard to ſupport him when hee is weary. Very fitly therefore reſembled to a ſtaffe, and for the excellency termed not beautifull in the concrete, but very beauty it ſelfe in the abſtract. Which beauty that it may the more appeare unto you, thinke with your ſelfe of theſe points or heads. Firſt, what names are given to governours in the holy Scriptures, and holy Writings of wiſe men. They are called you know, gods, nurſing-fathers, nurſing-mothers, the Miniſters of God, Shepherds, and ſuch like; they are cal-2 Pet.2.20. led Patres patriæ, patres populi, præſidentes juſtitiæ, Vindices innocentiæ, Cuſtodes pacis; the Fathers of the Countrey, Fathers of the people, the Preſidents of juſtice, the maintainers of innocency, the preſervers of peace, and ſuch like: all to make us ſee the beauty of this ſtaffe. Secondly, obſerve with your ſelfe the courſe of God ſetled in all his creatures; for in the ſtarres, in the beaſts, in the birds, in the fiſhes, in the trees, &c. the Lord hath made ſome chiefer than others, that we might riſe up thereby into a profitable meditation, how beautifull a thing order, degrees, and government is among men, and eſpecially a Monarchy when one ruleth over all: for as Saint Hierome well noteth, among the Bees there is one chiefe; and the Cranes in flying follow one. Rome when it was built could not endure two to rule as chiefe, although they were brethren, and therefore had her beginning in brothers blood.

In Rebecca's wombe even two brethren and twinnes did ſtrive. Adam but one, to governe Paradiſe: Noah onely governour of the Arke: Moſes alone chiefe in that government and con-
Gen.26.22. duction of that people: one David, one Salomon, and ſo forth. Thirdly, thinke of the commandements given in the Word to obey government, and to honour with all duty and reverence men placed over us in Authority, and ſee in them plainly how beautifull God eſteemeth them, than whoſe judgement and wiſedome there is no greater. Fourthly, duly conſider that note which the Scripture giveth often of all wickednes and miſchiefe abounding, becauſe there was no King in Iſrael; and of that in Eſay 3.5. 2. ſo fearfull. Fiftly, meditate of that reſemblance that is uſually made of government to a joyners inſtrument, whereby if a boord be warped and caſt aſide, or awry, adding heate to it, hee can make it ſtraight againe, and fit for his uſe. To a wreſt of a muſicall inſtrument, bringing the ſtrings that are out of tune into tune againe. Doe not theſe things ſhew the neceſſity, uſe, and comfort of it? Laſtly, the reſemblance to the ſtate of our bodies, wherein the firſt qualities of heat, cold, dirth and moiſture being contraries and diſagreeing one with another, yet by order, proportion, and a due temperation they are ſo agreed as they make an excellent creature. So doth government compoſe things moſt croſſe, and make a ſweet harmony in love and peace. Indeed therefore a Staffe of beauty is government either in publike, or private, as in Salomons houſe, and they unworthy of life among men, that will not ſtoope to it, bee ruled by it, and bleſſe God for it evermore. The uſe of Government is more than of bread, water, ſunne, ayre, &c. of which yet what uſe have wee? for the benefit of government is not to make us breathe onely, and to eate and drinke and bee nouriſhed, (which all yet it doth in that it maketh us live together ſociable;)

Plures in adminiſtatione, unus in dignitate.

but it farther provideth, that Idolatry, ſacriledges, blaſphemies, and other offences againſt God doe not ſpread themſelves among the people, that publike peace bee not broken, that every man enjoy his owne in ſafety, that trade and trafficke bee preſerved among men, honeſtie and vertue be defended,&c. They that ſay under the old Teſtament it was needfull, but not for the perfection of the Goſpell, ſhew no ſuch perfection but that Magiſtrates are needfull to make them better,and forget that the Pſalme doth not bid Rulers lay away their offices, but to kiſſe the Sonne, that is, to be ſubject to Chriſt, that hee may rule over them,and be above all,as hee ought to bee. And the Prophet Eſay doth not ſay, that in the time of the Goſpell there muſt bee no Kings and Queenes,but plainly otherwiſe,that they both ſhall be, and to the Church they ſhall be profitable and comfortable,even Nurſing Fathers and Nurſing mothers, Eſay 49.23. And the holy Apoſtle expreſſely commandeth, that prayers and ſupplications be made for them, that wee may by the bleſſing of their government lead a godly and quiet life under them. Wherefore you ſee the groſſeneſſe of this error,and how bound wee are to God for Magiſtracie, even now in the time of the new Teſtament, as well as others were that lived in the time of the Old. Now this meditation,that they are as Gods Deputies and Vicegerents,Gods Miniſters & Subſtitutes here on earth,how many good things doth it teach Magiſtrates and Governours? It cheereth them up againſt all the difficulties of their places, which ſurely are many, and ſo many, as hee ſaid well that ſaid it; Who ſo knew the cares annexed to a Kings Crowne,would ſcarce take it up if it lay before him. They are even like goodly trees under which in time of a ſtorme every man will runne with haſte to be ſhielded and ſhadowed from the tempeſt; but as ſoone as the ſtorme is paſt, caſt ſtones at it, and breake the bowes of it at their pleaſure. It ſtirreth them up moſt effectually to integrity, wiſedome, meekneſſe, continency and innocency. For upon what hope ſhall they admit iniquitie into their Tribunall-ſeate which they learne and know to be the Throne of God? How ſhall they dare to pronounce a wrong ſentence with that mouth which they learne and know to bee appointed Gods inſtrument for truth? How ſhall they ſubſcribe wicked acts with that hand which God hath appointed to write his acts? No, no, it will and ought,as I ſay, ſtirre up the good even by all meanes to indeavour to ſhew ſome reſemblance in their place of heavenly providence, watchfulneſſe, goodneſſe, love, juſtice, &c. This did Moſes and Iehoſhaphat thinke when they moved the Judges with this admonition, That they executed not the judgements of man,but of God; and therefore ſhould take heed, &c. Reade the places your ſelfe I pray you. *Deut.*1.16. 2 *Chron.*19.6. Whoſoever therefore reject Governours, it may truely bee ſaid of them as was ſaid of ſuch as refuſed Samuel, and would have a King, They have not caſt thee away,but they have caſt me away. For by me Kings reigne, &c. Pro. 8. 15. 1 Pet. 2.17. The objection againſt government, that a Chriſtian may not kill, and that in his holy mountaine there may bee no ſlaying,&c. wee eaſily anſwer and ſay, that the Law of God forbiddeth to kill, and yet to puniſh killers the Lord putteth the ſword into the Magiſtrates hand. Afflict and hurt the godly wee may not; but this is neither to afflict nor hurt, to puniſh by the Lords commandement thoſe that doe afflict and hurt. For Magiſtrates ſaith the Apoſtle, beare not the ſword in vain,Rom.13. Non eſt crudelis qui crudeles jugulat, licet patientibus talis videatur; ſed qui malos percutit in eo quod mali ſunt, miniſter Dei eſt. He is not cruell that killeth which are cruell, although he ſeeme ſo to them that ſuffer; but who ſo ſtriketh the evill for that they be evill, (meaning by lawfull authority) hee is the Miniſter of God, ſaith S. Hierome. And againe; Homicidas ſacrilegos, & venereos punire,non eſt effuſio ſanguinis, ſed legum miniſterium. To puniſh murderers,ſacrilegious, and licentious perſons,is not ſhedding of blood, but the miniſtery of Law. Thus ſlew Moſes the Ægyptian, *Act.*7.28. *Exod.*2.12. Three thouſand Idolaters, Exod. 32.27. Thus commanded David his ſonne Salomon touching Ioab and Semei, 1 Kings 2.5. &c. Moſes was meeke,and David pitifull,ye thus they doe: Et uterque manus quas parcendo inquinaſſet, ſic ſæviendo ſanctificavit, dum ultionem ſibi à Deo commiſſam executus eſt. And either of them ſanctifie their hands by this ſeverity in executing juſtice belonging to them, which otherwiſe they ſhould have defiled by unlawfull lenity and ſparing. Reade by your ſelfe the places of Scripture in the margine. Onely let cruelty in juſtice be ever farre from a godly Governour; for the Kings Throne is eſtabliſhed by mercy, and all mens ſeates under him. Yet againe on the other ſide, Superſtitioſa affectatio clementiæ ne faciat crudeliſſimam humanitatẽ cum pernicie multorum: Let not a ſuperſtitious affectation of clemencie make a more cruell gentleneſſe with the perill and hurt of many. For under the government of the Emperor Nerva it was rightly ſaid; It is ill dwelling under a King or Magiſtrate where nothing is lawfull, but it is farre worſe dwelling under one where all things are lawfull. For the duty of ſubjects towards their Governours, it is firſt to thinke moſt reverently of their places, as an authority appointed of God for our good: and not as ſome men doe,outwardly to obey them,and inwardly to thinke them but neceſſary evils. For S. Peters words teach more, when he ſaith, Honour the King, and Salomon when hee biddeth, Feare God and the King. For in the word Honour, Peter includeth ſinceram & candidam exiſtimationem: A ſincere and unfeigned reverence of them. And Salomon joyning the King with God, ſheweth a holy and reverent regard of him to bee due to him from men ſubject to him.

Rom.13.5. him. That alſo in Paul hath great efficacie in it, Not for feare, but for conſcience ſake. As if hee ſhould ſay; even becauſe what duty is done or left undone to them, is done or left undone to God himſelfe, from whom their authority and power is. Whatſoever therefore the perſon is, the calling is of God, and muſt be thought of. Againe, after this inward reverend conceit muſt follow outward obedience to their lawes, in paying tribute, and undergoing what to us by them, is appointed either for publike defence, or otherwiſe. For, Let every ſoule be ſubject to the high powers, ſaith the Apoſtle, becauſe he that reſiſteth, reſiſteth to his owne damnation. And reade Tit. 3.1. 1 Pet. 2.13. The Magiſtrate may ſometimes be weake, but God will ever be ſtrong to puniſh any contempt of his ordinance. In no caſe therefore may we intrude our ſelves into their offices, and meddle with publike matters without a calling. For this is not to obey them, but to rule with them. What is amiſſe, to them muſt bee ſignified, and their helpe expected, unleſſe they appoint us, and then are wee not private perſons any more, but publike for ſuch buſineſſe. And as Counſellers are ſaid to be eyes & eares to the King, ſo are other ſubjects his hands when he pleaſeth to command them ſo. And be they never ſo evill, yet their place is of God, by whom only Kings doe rule, either to our good in his mercy, or to our puniſhment in his juſtice. Permittuntur aliquando tyrannorum imperia à deo, in vindictam malefactorum, præmium vero bonorum. Tyrants are ſuffered ſometimes to rule, for the puniſhment of the evill, and the reward of the good, ſaith S. Ambroſe. But how (will you think) for the reward of the good? The ſame Ambroſe notably ſaith for anſwer, nunquã nobis amplius cõtulerunt Gentiles, quam cum verberari Chriſtianos, atq; proſcribi ac necari juberent. Præmiũ enim fecit religio, quod perfidia putabat eſſe ſupplicium, &c. Never did the Gentiles more for the Church, than when they commanded the Chriſtians to be beaten, proſcribed and killed. For then did religion make that a reward, an honor and a crown, which infidelity reputed a puniſhment. S. Auſten, There is no power but of God, and therefore, ſaith he, our Saviour told Pilate he could have no power at all over him, except it were given him from the Father. Sed Deus regnare facit hominẽ hypocritam propter peccata populi. Tollenda eſt ergo culpa, ut ceſſet tyrannorum plaga: But God doth ſuffer the hypocrite to rule for the ſin of the people. And therefore that ſin muſt be taken away, that the plague of having a tyrant ruler may ceaſe. What manner of King Nabuchadnezar King of Babel was, which deſtroyed Hieruſalem we know; yet God ſaid, Behold, I will give the land of Ægypt unto Nabuchadnezar, and he ſhall take her multitude, and ſpoile her ſpoile, and take her prey, and it ſhall bee the wages of his army, &c. Becauſe he wrought for me (ſaith the Lord.) Mark thoſe laſt words, and ſee how evill Rulers are appointed by God for the puniſhment of ſuch as will not ſerve him. And therefore, if a King ſhall doe as it is ſaid by Samuel, Chap. 8. v. 11. &c. He is Gods inſtrument thus to chaſten us, and though things doe not ſhew what he ought to doe, yet they ſhew what ſubjects ought to ſuffer without diſloyalty, if they be done. Reade Ier. 29.7. God forbid, ſaith David, that I ſhould lay mine hand on the Lords annointed; and yet Saul ſought his life. Who ſhall lay his hands on the Lords annointed, and be guiltleſſe, &c. The wife is not freed from her husband when he is ill, nor the childe from the father; no more are ſubjects from their Prince. But in ſuch caſes God the only helper is to be thought of, and prayed unto, who can give a Moſes for a Pharaoh, and Othniel for Chuſhan; who can chaſtiſe the pride of Tyrus by the Ægyptians, and then the Ægyptians by the Aſſyrians, the Aſſyrians againe by the Chaldeans, by the Medes and Perſians, &c. yet carrying a gracious eare and eye to prayer proceeding from a penitent heart, &c.

2 The great paines of Moſes in ſitting to judge the controverſies of the people, even from morning unto even: mentioned in the 14. verſe, what a commendation it is of him? what an example unto all thoſe whom God in mercy hath raiſed up to any like government over their Brethren? Surely, diligence in the charge committed to us, is ever ſweet unto God, and good for our ſelves. Hee that is diligent in his worke, ſaith the wiſedome of God by Salomon, ſhall ſtand before Princes. Come thou good and faithfull ſervant, will God ſay to his Magiſtrate, as well as unto the Miniſter, and enter into thy Lords joy. The wicked in their ill doing, how diligent are they? and ſhall it not move ſuch as be the Lords, to carefulneſſe in well doing? Iudas watcheth when the Apoſtles ſleep; and why watcheth hee, but for a miſchiefe? The high Prieſts and all that rabble aſſemble together betimes; even before the day will the wicked bee working evill. While men ſleepe the enemie ſoweth tares among the good ſeed that was ſowne. If the driver of horſes either ſtrike or ſpeake but to one, all the reſt ſet themſelves to it, and amend their paces. Let God and Nature, the Word and experience work with wiſe perſons unto good. And for Juſtice, what a bleſſing to the people, and what a praiſe to the carefull executer of it, who knoweth not? Heathen Ariſtotle could ſay, Nec Heſperus nec Lucifer formoſior juſtitia, that no ſtarre is ſo beautifull in the skie, as juſtice is on the earth. Mens wiſdome may make them reverenced, and their power may make them feared, but Juſtice, Juſtice is that which winneth mens hearts, and maketh them beloved, and the more faithfull and painfull they are in doing thereof, the more honoured alive and dead. Looke upon Moſes in this place.

Prov.12.29. Mat.27 1.

3 And as Juſtice is a bleſſing, ſo are good lawes and ordinances in a Kingdome, in the praiſe whereof much might be ſaid, as not a little againſt idle, ſuperfluous, and hurtfull lawes; againſt obſcure obſcure and deceitfull penning of them, leaving holes and gaps in them for all the good intended by them to runne out at, and never be ſeene: but I leave it to your owne meditation.

4 In this excellent man Moſes, doth not Iethro, his inferiour farre, finde juſtly a fault, and very well adviſe him to a better courſe, which Moſes followed, and with Gods approbation? Let it tell us, that no man is perfect in all things, but may receive counſell even from a meaner perſon. Let Moſes modeſty in yeelding, make our ſpirits humble in like occaſion, where God dwelleth it will bee ſo, and pride is a ſure ſigne of an ill heart. The head ſcorneth not the foot in our bodies, and the very foote is carefull for the head. Make uſe and application of it your ſelfe. Time ſpent in theſe meditations, is well ſpent ever, and will pleaſe God and profit you. Ver. 19. &c.

5 The properties noted by Iethro to be in Magiſtrates and Governours, are worthy much obſervation. Provide men, ſaith he, of courage, fearing God, men dealing truly, and hating covetouſneſſe. All great graces, and ſhining ornaments in men of authority, as by a ſeverall conſideration of every one may well appeare. The firſt is courage, or an invincible conſtancy, wherewith all ſuch as are in authority over others to miniſter juſtice and iudgment unto them, ought to bee endued, to the end that neither by love or hatred they incline more to one or other, than ſtandeth with the right of their place, and to the end that neither by flattering praiſes, or bitter back-bitings of men given to tempt the good diſpoſition of ſuch Governours, they be moved and drawne aſide, diſcouraged or ſet downe in the worke of their calling, but what is iuſt and right that ſoundly and roundly they doe, miniſtring iuſtice to all without feare or fainting, looking to him that muſt judge them, and who will aſſuredly reward their well doing, and juſtly puniſh all their depravers and hinderers. In the booke of Chronicles we reade it for no ſmall blemiſh in a King, and no ſmall rod to the people under him, that Rehoboam the Sonne and ſucceſſor of Solomon was but a child, meaning in heart and courage, that is, (indeed) weake and faint-hearted, and ſo could not reſiſt thoſe vain and wicked men which made themſelves ſtrong againſt him. Therefore God willed Ioſhua to be ſtrong and of a moſt valiant courage. A good exhortation gave David to Salomon his Sonne, ſaying, Be ſtrong and ſhew thy ſelfe a man, for I goe the way of all the earth, &c. Such goodly fortitude was in the Apoſtle, when he ſaid, we are reviled and yet we bleſſe; we are perſecuted, and ſuffer it. We are evill ſpoken of, and we pray, &c. Meaning that he gave not over, or fainted in his duty for all theſe things. The ſecond is the feare of God, a vertue alſo moſt requiſite in Judges, for hereupon hang al vertues, as might at large be ſhewed if it were needfull. But let that example of Abraham ſuffice, who thinking that the feare of God was not in Gerar, utterly deſpaired of any other vertue, and therefore moved his wife to ſay ſhe was his Siſter. In this reſpect the feare of God is both by David and Salomon called the beginning of Wiſedome; that is, the root and fountaine of all goodneſſe, and therefore of all juſtice and true judgment in Judges. The third is a love of truth and true dealing; for who more than Judges ſhould be free in themſelves, and abhorre all in others fraud and deceit, lying and falſe witneſſe-bearing, by which all juſtice muſt needs be overthrowne, the wicked juſtified, and the halter put about the true mans necke, to the great offence of God, and the fearefull puniſhment of the Judge, that not loving truth, or not ſo carefull for it as hee ought, hath ſuffered ſuch iniquity to be done? The laſt is, that Judges bee haters of covetouſneſſe, the plague and poyſon of all juſtice, as might bee ſhewed by much proofe, were I willing to ſtand upon ſo knowne a common place. It ſtoppeth eyes, it ſtoppeth eares, it tyeth tongues, and worketh wonders woefull and hatefull, &c. To men of this ſort, that is, endued with theſe vertues above-ſaid, authority happily (and to the great good of many thouſands) is given, and God for his mercies ſake increaſe the number of them. In Deut. theſe things will come to bee ſpoken of againe, and therefore I am here the ſhorter. Verſe 21.

CHAP. XIX.

AT this Chapter beginneth the ſecond part of this Booke of Exodus, wherein you have theſe points. Firſt, a Preparation of the people to heare the Lawes of God, delivered by God himſelfe to them, for the government of their lives and actions, and that in this 19. Chapter. Secondly, the Lawes themſelves in the next Chapter. Thirdly other Lawes tending to the explication of theſe ten principall lawes, called the ten Commandements: together with the puniſhments of the tranſgreſſors, Chap. 21, 22, and 23. Fourthly, Moſes aſcending up to the Mount, firſt with the Elders, after without them all alone, and his receiving direction for the Tabernacle, and the worſhip of God, Chap. 24. unto the 32. Fiftly, the ſinne of the people, their puniſhment, and Moſes prayer for them, to the 35. Chap. where certaine Lawes are alſo repeated. Laſtly, the building of the Tabernacle, the gifts given, the finiſhing, erection, and the dedication, to the end of the Booke.

The preparation is generall and particular. The generall hath firſt an Argument drawne from from the authority of the ſpeech, to wit, that Moſes did not command out of his owne head, but was called up to the Mount to God, and there was required to ſay to the houſe of Iacob, and to tel the Children of Iſrael, &c. Secondly, an argument drawne from the former benefits of God to them, in theſe words, Ye have ſeen what I did to the Ægyptians, and how I carried you upon Eagles wings, and have brought you unto me. Thirdly, an argument from future benefits, if you will heare my voyce indeed, and keepe my covenant, then you ſhall be my chiefe treaſure above all people, though all the earth be mine: Ye ſhall be to me a Kingdome of Prieſts, and an holy Nation. All which if you will apply unto your ſelfe and make uſe of them, then may you, in like ſort ever ſtirre up your heart, and prepare your minde to good things, in this ſort, and by the ſelfe ſame arguments. As for exampie, to goe to the Church, and to joyne with the Congregation both in prayer, and hearing of the Word preached. Firſt, becauſe it is not mans commandement, but God requireth the Miniſter to call and ſpeake to you for it, as here he did Moſes. Secondly, the favours of God paſſed to you require it. Thirdly, future favours (if you doe it) ſhall bee added unto you. It is alſo worthy marking ſtill, how hee joyneth here hearing and keeping together, ſaying, If you will heare my voyce indeed, and keepe my covenant. Keepe without hearing you cannot, and hearing without keeping will never profit you or any. Joyned therefore you ſee they muſt needs be, as the Lord ſhall make us able.

Verſe 3.
Verſe 4.
Verſe 5.
Verſe 6.

Moſes doing as God bad him teacheth all Miniſters to be faithfull, and to doe their meſſage. Many are the Commandements in Scripture to them to ſpeake, to cry, to lift up their voyces like trumpets, and to tell their people what God requireth. If they doe it, great is their reward with God, and if they be falſe, and idle, and negligent, men-pleaſers, and time-ſervers, as great againe is their judgement. Grandis eſt dignitas ſacerdotum, & Grandis eſt ruina, ſi peccant: Great is the dignity of Prieſts by their Office, and as great is the fall of them, if they offend. It can never bee too often repeated, nor to much remembred.

Verſe 7.

The peoples anſwer to Moſes what is it? They anſwered all together, and ſaid, all that the Lord hath commanded we will doe. A moſt notable patterne for a Chriſtian Congregation to looke upon, and to follow. Thus ſhould it bee betweene Paſtor and people ever. He to ſpeake what God commandeth, and they to heare and anſwer zealouſly, wee will, we will doe what God commandeth us. O ſweet joy where this agreement is! Such care and ſuch conſcience both in Paſtor and people, will give no place to jarres and contentions, to ſuites and vexations, or to any thing that diſpleaſeth God, and is offenſive to the world, &c.

Verſe 8.

2 The particular preparation followeth, from the 9. verſ. to the end of the Chapter, having foure members. Firſt, the manner of Gods communicating himſelfe to Moſes, namely, in a thicke cloud, together with the end thereof, that the people may heare whileſt I talke with thee, and that they may beleeve thee for ever. A ſingular inſtruction to all men in the world, that deſire to pleaſe God: and eſpecially to great ones, ſhewing them how carefull they ſhould be to grace and countenance the Miniſters of the Word before the people, to the end their words may have more weight with their hearers, and their ſervice and paines doe more good. Would men doe thus, O how comfortable to the painfull and faithfull Teacher, and how profitable to the Church would it be? The Lord would ſee it, and acknowledge it done for him, and with eternall comforts reward it for ever. But now it is otherwiſe with too many. For great men muſt ſhew their greatneſſe in diſgracing the Lords Prophets, and meaner men muſt ſhew their malice in ſpreading falſe rumors of their ſpirituall teachers, in open aſſemblies and private conventicles: motes are made mountaines, and ſpots ſurmiſed where none are. Never I thinke ſince the world was, did mens eares ſo itch, and their hearts ſo boyle in this ſinne, as at this day. But what ſhall we ſay? Surely even turne to the Lord in prayer, and comfort our ſelves in this example of the Lords goodneſſe, who as he is not Moſes his God alone, nor Moſes alone his meſſenger: ſo will not he tie his countenance onely to him, but give every true labourer in his good time, his due credit, notwithſtanding all the malice of man and Devill. O Lord doe it for thy Names ſake; and as thou graceſt here Moſes that he might ever be beleeved, ſo convert or confound theſe diſgracers of the Miniſters; whoſe inquitie tendeth to hinder beliefe, and conſequently to deſtroy the ſoules of the poore people. Encreaſe the number of them that follow thy example, and labour by all meanes to further thy worke in the hands of thy workemen. Set a Crowne of glory upon their heads; and daily reward their love into their boſomes with thy good bleſſings unto them and theirs.

Verſe 9.

3 The ſecond branch of this particular preparation is laid downe in the 10. verſe, and the reſt following to the 16. conſiſting in certaine outward matters uſed in thoſe times among thoſe people: and figuratively teaching inward purity and cleanneſſe of heart to come to God withal. As waſhing of their cloathes, not comming at their wives, and ſuch like. The ceremonies are taken away, but the truth remaineth, namely, that we are all by our corruption moſt unfit profitably to heare the Word of God, unleſſe we be ſanctified and prepared thereunto by the good Spirit of God. And therefore we ought to make ready for ſo holy a work by all due care before-hand, and to purge our hearts from other cares, troubles and impediments whatſoever. The Word of God is not to be handled with uncleane hands, neither will enter into uncleane hearts. It is a precious pearle, it ſhould not be caſt before Swine. For this cauſe aſſuredly many heare and reade without profit, becauſe they came without feare and reverence in their mindes. This abſtaining from their wives, noted no impurity in holy Matrimony: but by this particular figuratively teacheth a godly abſtinence from all worldly pleaſures whatſoever in generall for a time, that we may more fully attend to the ſervice of God we goe about upon ſpeciall occaſion. To which end the Apoſtle Paul alſo requireth the like by conſent for a time to give themſelves to faſting and prayer, and then to come together againe, that they be not tempted of Satan to incontinencie. Thomas Aquinas himſelfe could not but ſay thus of it, Hoc ex ſe peccatum non erat, ſed multa tunc ad carnis munditias exigebantur, quæ jam non ſunt neceſſaria; quia lex noſtra ſpiritualem munditiam requirit, non carnis. This was not a ſinne of it ſelfe, but many things were then required to the outward cleanſing of the fleſh, which are not now neceſſary: becauſe our Law requireth ſpirituall cleanneſſe, not an outward of the fleſh onely, &c. 1 Cor. 7. 5.

4. The markes that are ſet about the mount to keep the people downe, with the puniſhment of death if they paſſed bounds, teach us what an odious thing to God curioſity is in matters forbidden: and how God would have every man content with that which it pleaſeth him to vouchſafe him of revelation and knowledge. Such curioſitie is to aske, what God did before hee made the world? And ſuch like fooliſh queſtions. To all which it may be anſwered, as God would not have the people to creep up to the Mountaine, and to peepe and pry what Moſes did there with him, but ſet bounds and limits for them, beyond which they could not paſſe without death: ſo it is ſtill. The Lord hath in his Word revealed his Will, and beyond our limits wee muſt not goe, having an eare where he hath not a mouth. If wee doe, for this buſie curioſitie we ſhall die eternally, as they for that, temporally, &c.

5. And the third day, when it was morning, there were thunders and lightning, and a thick cloud upon the Mount: and the ſound of the trump exceeding loud, ſo that all the people that was in the campe, was afraid. Verſe 16. This is the third branch of the particular preparation, reaching unto the 20. verſe, and containing an increaſe of the Lords manner of the communication of himſelfe, ſpecified before in the ninth verſe. By all which fearefull things the Lord declared his Majeſtie, ſaith Chryſoſtome, and the people were touched with a feeling knowledge of their infirmity. But beſides that, we may well learn by it how profitable it is to make a good & carefull hearer of Gods voice, firſt to ſhake him, and throw him down in himſelfe by ſome good wayes and means: For then aſſuredly the Word entereth more powerfully, and hee hath a more excellent touch than without ſuch humbling he would ever have had. Remember how the Lord called S. Paul when he was riding to Damaſcus. Firſt throwing him downe, and by making a ſudden light ſhine about him from heaven, and then when he trembled, and was aſtonied, ſpeaking to him with profitable effect. Remember alſo how there came ſuddenly from heaven a ſound of a ruſhing, and a mighty winde in another place. Surely, ſuch ruſhings and ſhakings and ſpirituall frightnings in conſcience hath the Lord his gracious meaning in, to beate us downe in our ſelves, that we may more carefully hearken unto him. And becauſe the greater part of men is not acquainted with them, therefore they remaine dull hearers, and dull hearted, ſo that the Preacher loſeth but his labour with them. How many have profited in ſickneſſe by words ſpoken, who in health never cared what was ſpoken? ſo in debt and poverty, in priſon and trouble, men have other eares than they have in proſperity. Doth not our Chronicle mention a Gentleman who at his death vowed openly that he had learned more good touching his ſoule in a darke hole within the Towre of London in a few dayes, than ever in all his life, when he was in light and liberty abroad? Full well knoweth God the way to win us; and happy are we if it pleaſe him to uſe it, how ſharp ſoever it be; that yet we may live hereafter in joy, though preſently for a ſeaſon we taſte of woe. I could tell you by experience (if it were needfull) of ſome that have ſaid to my ſelfe, they had heard many Sermons, and read the Scriptures, but they neither felt either Sermon or Scriptures as then when they ſo ſpake, being ſomeway touched inwardly by their loving God. But be Judge your ſelfe in your ſelfe if you know any thing. Acts 9. 4. 3. Acts 2. 2.

Againe, theſe ſignes ſhewed the terrour of the Law to mens conſciences: for it thunders, it threatens, it feareth and frighteth, and it utterly condemneth all men to hell and damnation, were there not a Chriſt to ſave us from it. The Law cauſeth wrath ſaith the Apoſtle, that is, it denounceth wrath againſt us for that we cannot keepe it. When Iudas could ſee nothing but the Law, his agony drave him for to hang himſelfe. So was Saul, Achitophel, and many others driven to deſperate concluſions, and fearefull ends. Wherefore the Apoſtle well addeth that wee are not come to this fearefull Mount, not unto burning fire, not to blackneſſe, and darkneſſe, and tempeſt, &c. ſo terrible, that Moſes ſaid, I feare and quake, But we are come unto the Mount Sion, and to the Citie of the living God, the celeſtiall Hieruſalem, and to the company of innumerable Angels, &c. And to Ieſus the mediator of the New Teſtament, &c. Here, here is our helpe againſt the Law, without whom we were caſt away every one of us: for curſed is hee and ſhee that doth not all things written in the Law. Rom. 4. 15. Heb. 12. 18. &c. 21, 22, 24.

6. This deſcending of the Lord we muſt underſtand of the ſignes of his preſence, and not that the Lord is here and not there, or there and not here, moving from place to place as man doth. Neither ſpeaketh he as man doth, but his Angell in his perſon taketh by his power the voice of man, and as God is ſaid to ſpeake by his Miniſters here, ſo by his Angels then and there as he pleaſed. Remember Stephens words in the Acts, This is hee (meaning Moſes) that was in the congregation in the wilderneſſe with the Angell, which ſpake to him in Mount Sinai, &c. The iterating of his commandement to Moſes to ſee that the people paſſe not their limits, which we touched before ver. 21. & 24. ſheweth the itching nature of man after hidden ſecrets, and to ſee and know noveltics, the great diſlike God hath of this curioſity, and how profitable the preſence of the Magiſtrate is to make people keep order. For ſurely men are marvellous apt to tranſgreſſe, and therefore againe and againe they muſt be admoniſhed by Moſes; and well if many or any admonitions will ſerve. Give Lawes never ſo good, and let there not be a Governour to ſee to the execution of them, and we ſee with griefe what little good ſuch Lawes doe. Well therefore and wiſely have they ſpoken who ſaid, Lex Magiſtratus mutus, & interdum mortuus : Magiſtratus lex loquens & viva. The Law is a dumbe Magiſtrate, and ſometimes a dead : but the Magiſtrate is a ſpeaking Law and a living.

7. The Prieſts alſo are mentioned as well as the people, that they likewiſe ſhould not paſſe their limits: whereby we ſee that no dignity, authority, or higher place, may bee a warrant to doe more than God permitteth. But rather ſhould theſe before others give example of ſobriety and order. What Prieſts were now, when as yet the Prieſthood was not eſtabliſhed, men differ in opinion; ſome thinking they were the firſt borne, and others thinking otherwiſe, as Calvin for one upon this place, to whom I referre ſuch as will, and goe no further in this Chapter.

CHAP. XX.

The ſumme of this Chapter.

THE Congregation being prepared (as you have heard) to receive the Law, now in this Chapter followeth the Law it ſelfe, and it is ſet downe in ten ſeverall branches or heads, commonly called the Decalogue or ten Commandements. Of all which becauſe I have made Expoſition in a Booke already, I will ſpare my labour here, and referre you to that Treatiſe. The other generall head of this Chapter, to wit, the peoples feare, beginning at the 18. ver. I will a little touch, Firſt then it is ſaid, That all the people ſaw the thunder, and lightnings, and the ſound of the Trumpet, and the mountaine ſmoking : and when the people ſaw it, they fled and ſtood afar off: which words yeeld us many good things to note.

Verſe 18.

Firſt, the difference of the Law and the Goſpell. The Law as it hath been ſaid, fearing and frighting, ſhaking and ſhivering the heart of Man, beateth downe his peacocks feathers and maketh him abaſhed and aſhamed in himſelf, to cry with the prodigall Son, I am not worthy, I am not worthy, O Father, to be called thy Son. Yea it maketh him ſtand afar off with the poore Publican, and ſmite his breaſt in true feeling of his ſin : and to beſeech God for mercy to a ſinner.

Luke 15. 19. Luke 18. 13.

Whoſoever is not thus humbled, he never knew what the Law meant, but like the vaine Phariſie doteth upon himſelfe without cauſe, and erreth as the Apoſtle did before the Commandement came. Contrariwiſe the Goſpell cheereth and comforteth, helpeth and healeth, and ſweetly allureth to come in all joyfull aſſurance of mercy by him who hath fulfilled the law for us, and removed away the curſe that would have ſlaine us. Reade the 12. Chapter to the Hebrewes noted before, and ſee what I ſay moſt plaine, beginning at the 18. verſe.

Rom. 7 9.

Secondly, it may teach us, to our great good now whilſt we have time, that if the law were ſo terrible when it was given, it will be a dreadfull day when all the breaches of the ſame ſhall be judged. And if the people fled now, ſtood afarre off, and were in ſuch feare, how will the Idolater, the Blaſphemer, the Adulterer, the Drunkard, the Thiefe, the Murderer, the Rebellious and Diſobedient, the falſe witneſſe, the covetous oppreſſor, and all ſuch jolly fellowes that now ſcorne and ſcoffe at all admonitions, I ſay, how will all theſe doe, and what will be their caſe at that day? Turne, turne we then unto God in time, and amend our lives, that Chriſt freeing us from that fearefull law, we may be ſafe by his holy Goſpell.

Thirdly, this place ſheweth their ignorant folly, that ſay in their hearts, O, if I might heare God ſpeake himſelfe, I ſhould be much moved, I ſhould beleeve, and bee out of all doubt, &c. For were the people here able to endure the voice of God? Doe they not ſay to Moſes? talke thou with us, and we will heare : but let not God talke with us, leſt we die. Little, little do they conceive (which thus ſay) either their own weakneſſe, or the majeſty of God. Let them therefore learn of this people here, the bleſſing of God in giving us Moſes to ſpeake to us, that is, in raiſing up among us men of our owne ſhape, mould and matter, men that we feare not, but know and love love, and are linked to in degrees of love, to ſpeake unto us in his Name, putting his holy Spirit among them, and induing them with gifts fit for ſuch a calling, in vouchſafing his Word, to direct both them and us; and ſo every way familiarly, and yet truely and effectually, labouring and working our ſalvation, if we be not obſtinate to contemne his meanes and care. This Miniſtery of man ſo deſpiſed of man, ſo wronged and ſo caſt downe, is another manner of mercy than wicked worldlings conceive or feele: but one day they ſhall know, when it will bee too late to reforme their fault, which now they may leave, if they have grace. Then ſhall they ſee God, and heare God, but with greater terrour than his people did here. They ſhall alſo ſee blackneſſe and darkneſſe, they ſhall heare thundrings and lightnings, ſmoakes and fires and flames, with trembling and perplexity, and then, if it could be had againe, Moſes voice to ſpeake unto them would be accepted, which now is ſo little regarded and ſet by.

Fourthly, This darkneſſe wherein God was, noteth the Majeſty of God to be incomprehenſible, and not to be reached unto by our wits. We muſt therefore be ſober and modeſt, and humble in talking and writing of God. Simonides found this, when undertaking to ſhew what God was, the more he ſtudyed to doe it, the more time ſtill he craved, and was further and further off. Firſt he asked three dayes, and then ſixe, and then double againe, and in the end gave over and could not doe it. To us this place may be in ſtead of a thouſand. But Moſes drew neere unto the darkneſſe where God was. God dwelleth in light, but in regard of our weakneſſe it is darkneſſe, and happy wee, if we acknowledge our weakneſſe, and crave helpe where it is to be had. Other things your ſelves may note which I paſſe over. The great charge that God giveth to beware any Images of him, either of gold or ſilver, you may conferre the fourth Chap. of Deut. with the ſecond Commandement, whereof I have ſpoken, and ſettle in your heart how odious to God that courſe is, from which yet no perſwaſion will draw ſome. If God would be remembred by an Image, hee would have ſuffered it, if he would be worſhipped in an Image, hee would have ſuffered it, and hee would have letten them ſee ſome forme which they might have followed; and if he could like of an Image of wood or ſtone, more fit for his Majeſty were gold and ſilver. But you ſee all is forbidden, and curſed with them are the makers of them, which is a fearefull thing if it were thought of. Reade Eſay 45. ver. 16. Verſe 21. Verſe 23.

2. An Altar of earth ſhalt thou make, &c. God would have but one Altar, to note one truth, and one Religion. Hee would have it of earth, or rude and without labour, that when they removed they might throw it downe, or it fall of it ſelfe, ſo that poſterity might take no cauſe of Idolatry thereby. Steppes to the ſame Altar hee forbiddeth likewiſe, for the cauſe ſpecified in the margine of your Bible, and it well teacheth, that in Gods Worſhippe all things ſhould bee done devoutly and comely, even as the Apoſtle himſelfe teacheth and requireth. Verſe 24. Verſe 26.

Ignorant and prophane men delight in pompe and earthly ſhew, but Chriſtians muſt indeavour to have all things done ſo modeſtly, and ſoberly, as to every man it may appeare what ſpirit they are guided and governed by. The multitude of Popiſh Altars might here bee remembred if it were needfull, and that good Decree of the ſecond Councell of Africa, Chap. 50. and the fifth of Carthage, Chap. 14. That ſuch ſuperſtitious Altars as were in thoſe dayes ſet up in every corner ſhould be plucked downe, being built upon dreames and ſuperſtitious conceits. And if without tumults they could not be pulled downe, then the people to bee admoniſhed not to frequent thoſe places, leſt they ſhould be abuſed by ſuperſtition, &c. Alſo it might be ſhewed how the communion Tables be called of the old Fathers both Tables and Altars indifferently; Tables, as they are indeed, and Altars as they are improperly: How they were made of boards, and removeable, ſet in the midſt of the people, and not placed againſt a wall, with divers other things: but hereafter will be a fitter place.

CHAP. XXI.

THE Lawes of God are uſually divided into Morall, Ceremoniall, and Indiciall Lawes. In the Chapter before wee have had the Morall Lawes, to wit, the ten Commandements; hereafter wee ſhall have the Ceremoniall. And now in theſe three Chapters following God layeth downe certaine Indiciall Lawes. The Morall Law of God is the Law of Nature, ſhewing what ought to bee the manners and natures of all men, and it is the ground of all lawes whatſoever, either Divine, or Humane. The Ceremoniall being in this reſpect Naturall, becauſe among men Nature requires order and decency. And the Indiciall being the execution of the Morall which is Naturall. For humane lawes they are made by probable reaſon of Governours, and tend either to directions to keepe the Morall, or to circumſtances of execution in Exod. 22. 1.

Ratio ſingularum legum quæ dicitur anima legum, ex Decalogo ſumendaeſt. Valent enim leges poſitivæ propter duas cauſas, ſcilicet propter probabilẽ rationem ex jure Naturæ, & circumſtantiis petitam, & propter authoritatem Magiſtratus à quo prolatæ ſunt.

punishing offenders. As for example, Gods Law ſaith, Thou ſhalt not kill : Mans Law forbiddeth the carying of theſe and theſe weapons, ſo to take away occaſion and meanes of breaking the Law of God. Gods Law commandeth there ſhall be Magiſtrates : Mans Law appointeth theſe or thoſe. At Rome two conſuls, in other Cities foure. At Rome annuall, in other places perpetuall, &c. Gods Law appointeth that a Debtor not able to pay ſhall be puniſhed : Mans Law appointeth differing wayes, according to circumſtances of places : as in ſome Countries by perpetuall impriſonment, in other places otherwiſe. Draco his law was, That hee ſhould be plucked in pieces, and every Creditor have a part. The Law of God requireth theft to be puniſhed by reſtitution of double or foure-fold : Mans Law by reſtitution, and ſome where by death. By all which examples you ſee how Gods Law is ſtill the ground of mans law, and the end of mans law (if a good Law) is ever the keeping of Gods Law. Now to come to the text of this Chapter. The firſt law laid downe is touching ſervants and ſervitude, which you may referre to the Morall Law, Honour thy Father and Mother. Degrees of men concerning ruling and obeying being contained in the Law. The words of the text are theſe, If thou buy an Hebrew ſervant, hee ſhall ſerve ſixe yeares, and in the ſeventh he ſhall goe free for nothing, &c. From which verſe to the 12. verſe you have the matter of ſervitude and freedome laid downe : and it ſhall bee good to obſerve the Will of God in it. Hee would not have them ever bound, as amongſt the Nations elſewhere it was; becauſe they were delivered out of Ægypt by his mercy, as well as their Maſters were : whereupon in Leviticus he challengeth them for his, and ſaith, For they are my ſervants, whom I brought out of the Land of Ægypt : they ſhall not be ſold as bond-men are ſold. Thou ſhalt not rule over them cruelly, but ſhalt feare thy God. Yet would he not have the Maſter damnified, and therefore he alloweth of ſeven yeares, commanding their liberty and recompence; ſaying, when thou ſendeſt him out free from thee, thou ſhalt not let him goe away empty. The uſe whereof is comfortable to ſervants, and profitable to Maſters. To ſervants it ſheweth the loving care the Lord hath over them, which may cheere them in all their doings, being well aſſured, that what they doe well this God will ever reward, though man doe not. Whereunto ſerveth the exhortation of the Apoſtle, and promiſe annexed, Servants be obedient unto them that are your maſters, according to the fleſh, in all things, not with eye ſervice as men-pleaſers, but in ſingleneſſe of heart, fearing God. And whatſoever you doe, doe it heartily as to the Lord, and not to men. Knowing that of the Lord ye ſhall receive the reward of the inheritance: for ye ſerve the Lord Chriſt. And the very like ſaying again he hath to the Epheſ. So rewarded he the faithful ſervice of Iacob, though his Maſter were hard; ſo Ioſeph, ſo many moe. To Maſters it teacheth moderation and mercy : for how dare they wrong thoſe whom God calleth his, and hath ſuch a tender care of? The Apoſtle in the places named, ſo ſaith alſo; Ye maſters do unto your ſervants, that which is juſt & equall, knowing that ye alſo have a maſter in heaven. Where this is not done, God is angry; as you may ſee by that fearefull ſpeech in Ieremie; Becauſe ye have not obeyed me in proclaiming a liberty to your ſervants, &c. therefore behold I proclaim a liberty to you, ſaith the Lord, to the ſword, to the peſtilence, and to the famine, and I will make you a terror to all the kingdomes of the earth. Reade the place from the 9. v. to the end of the Chap. Iob therefore a good and juſt man, had a great care of this, and proteſteth he did not contemne the judgement of his ſervant, and of his maid, when they did contend with him, becauſe he that made him in the womb, he alſo made them, & if he ſhould wrong them, what could he anſwer to God for it? A moſt worthy example for all Maſters. Thus may all other governours and Superiours make uſe of this Law, and learne to take no pride in their authority, not to affect greatneſſe, and not to ſwell and looke big over their inferiors, For certainly the Lord will puniſh it, and all wiſe men will laugh at it. Rule and government is of God, but pride and vanity is of the devill. Titles to men God will have given, but to deſire Titles he never liked, much leſſe Titles upon Titles and never enough. It ſoundeth in bookes to the Perſians ſhame, that the governours there, will be free from all Lawes, and what they liſt, that they may: but their inferiors muſt be bound with all cruell bonds, even to kill themſelves if they command, and to endure all burdens impoſed upon them : If they be cruelly beaten, to give thanks that the governors have them in remembrance. The Phariſies were vaine men to affect the uppermoſt places, & to be called Rabbi. But this proud mind is like the water to the Dropſi-man, that maketh more thirſty the more that it is drunk. Quo plus ſunt potæ plus ſitiũtur aquæ. No end of ſuperiority with ſome men. They that are noble will be Princes; Princes will be Kings; Kings will be Emperors; and Emperors muſt be gods. That vain woman Cleopatra, ſhe muſt be called Regina Reginarũ, Queen of Queens. Sapor the Perſian wrote to Conſtantius, and called himſelf King of Kings, & brother to the ſtars, the ſun and the moon, &c. Theſe that thus hunger after glory & majeſty, how can they uſe authority moderately and humbly? Such pride commeth out of the root of folly, & begetteth contempt of all inferiors, contempt breeds ſedition & rebellion, they wars, and war deſtruction, at laſt of all, both men and titles. It is written of Trajan that he was much caried away with vain-glory, in titles; and therefore painted in his houſe many inſcriptions, which Conſtantinus wiſely jeſting at, called Herbam parietariam, wall-flowers. Such a vain fellow was Herod in the Acts, and what a ſhameſull downfall had he? Let then this Law of God for Servants freedome, together with all all other Scriptures, ſhewing his care of them, and their good uſage, ſettle in our hearts the right uſe of authority, and make us neither vaine in coveting, nor cruell in uſing. The boaring of his care, was a ſigne of obedience, and figuratively admoniſhed, that ſervants muſt not bee deafe, but quick and ready, and willing to heare what is commanded to them. And ſpiritually, that if we be the Lords ſervants, he boareth by his holygrace our eare, that is, he maketh us have eares to heare his holy Word, & we are not deafe, we flie not frō it, we caſt it not away, we ſtop not our eares; but with care and zeale and love, we hearken to it, as men and women whoſe ears he hath opened or boared. This one thing well marked may ſhake the hearts and conſciences of Popiſh Recuſants, ſo preſumptuouſly deſpiſing the Lords voyce: But follow it your ſelfe, I paſſe away. Verſ. 6.

2 After theſe lawes concerning ſervants, follow other laws concerning murder and killing, which you may refer to the expoſition of that Commandement. Puniſhment God layeth upon ſinne, but not ever after one manner. Sometimes hee ſtriketh the body, ſometimes the ſoule, and ſometimes both: Sometimes hee toucheth our goods, ſometimes our name, and ſometimes our friends and deare ones. Who can reckon up his wayes to puniſh the rebelling man or woman againſt him? His ends alſo for which hee doth thus, are ſundry and divers, but all and ever moſt juſt. Firſt, for his owne juſtice, who is a conſuming fire, & muſt needs binde either to obey, or to be puniſhed. Secondly, that there may be ſeen a difference betwixt the good and the bad, which could not be, if there were not puniſhment and reward. Thirdly, for example, that others ſeeing, may feare & flie from evil, either for love of vertue, or feare of pain. Fourthly, good for the even of ſuch as are puniſhed. For as Plato could ſay, Pœnæ, & ipſis qui præferunt, & ſpectatoribus utiles ſunt: utrīq; enim reddūntur meliores, illis dolore, his exemplo. Puniſhment is for both good ſeer and ſufferer, amending the one by example, and the other by ſmart. Fiftly, that theſe ſhort puniſhments temporall, might put them in minde of the long pains eternall. Laſtly, for the preſervation of the ſociety and peace of mankind, which by ſlaughters & bloodſhed would be overthrowne, even as we ſee good Chirurgions to cut away the purified member, for the ſafety of the whole.

Oderunt peccare boni, &c. Omnes pœne mundi ſunt conciones de pœnitentia. Eſt immedicabile vulnus enſe recidendum, ne pars ſincera trahatur.

3 We ſee here degrees of faults taken from the cauſes. For all actions proceeding from the minde or judgment, and the will cōmanding the outward members, when the mind knoweth what ought to be done, and erreth not in the object, and yet the will goeth contrary to judgement and the Law of God, not forced nor compelled, but willingly and freely, ſuch actions are called voluntary. So ſlew Cain his brother Abel, and ſo tooke David Vrias his wife. But when things are done not of election, either for probable ignorance (as when the minde erreth, or taketh no counſaile) or when the will by violence is hindred, or the outward members by a violence forced, thē are thoſe faults ſaid to be involuntary. The Lawyers diſtinguiſh faults by divers names, which I ſtand not upon here, remembring for whoſe uſe I draw theſe notes; but in ſhort, thus much we learne here, that God meaſureth faults by will, and not by acts. Whereupon it is here ſaid, that wilfull murder ſhall be death, and killing without purpoſe and will, ſhall not; but another courſe is taken. For if a man hath not laid waite (ſaith the Text) but God hath offered him into thy hand (meaning, when by chance he is killed without any minde ſo to doe, which chance yet God by his hidden providence, guideth) in ſuch a caſe I will appoint thee a place whither hee ſhall flie: meaning certain Cities of refuge, or ſanctuaries uſed then in theſe caſes, as you may ſee in Deuter. at large. Of which ſanctuaries thus ordained of God for the people, and thoſe times, ſprang our ſanctuaries uſed within this Realme and others, but now in moſt places put downe and forbidden. The queſtion of them is diſputed to and fro by mens wits, and the likers of them to continue, uſe theſe and ſuch other reaſons. The anger and conceived diſpleaſure in the Judge againſt a man; The power of his adverſary that perſecuteth before that Judge; The difficulty and obſcurity of the cauſe not quickly to be determined. In all which caſes they think a ſanctuary would be fit in a Common-wealth. Secondly, againſt cruelty of Maſters, that either ſhould threaten danger to a ſervant, or by violence ſeeke to force him to foule matters, ſuch a refuge would yeeld comfort till his cauſe were knowne, and he provided for. Thirdly, in the time of war and diſtreſſe, theſe places gave ſafety to many from the bloody ſword and murdering hand of inraged enemies, for fury a while not weighing right. Fourthly, in caſuall killings, without pretended malice, great was the uſe and equity (ſay they) of the ſanctuaries. Contrariwiſe, they that ſtand for the taking of them away, alledge many evils and diſcommodities that grew from them in ſucceſſe of time, through mans corruption, albeit at the beginning there was a good end: As incouragement of Servants to be diſobedient, and very undutifull. Great defrauding of creditors by ungodly and unconſcionable debtors. Increaſing of theeves, and ſuch like evils many and many. Whereupon grew that good ſaying of S. Chryſoſtome; Nullos tam ſæpe ad Eccleſiæ aſylum fugere, quam qui nec Deum, nec Eccleſiam curabant. None more uſually and often fled to the ſanctuary of the Church, than they that cared neither for God nor the Church. If a man come preſumptuouſly upon his neighbour to ſlay him with guile, you ſee God commanded no ſanctuary ſhould ſave him, but he ſhould be taken from the Altar, and die.

Verſe 14.

4 He that ſmiteth his father or mother, ſhould die the death. This is another law in this Chapter, which maketh for the expoſition of that cōmandement of honouring them, and is to be referred to it. We may note in it, how God doth not ſay, he that killeth father or mother ſhall be killed for it; but he that ſmiteth, ſo that not ſo much as a tip is to bee given to Parents upon paine of death, no not with the tongue may we ſmite them, that is, by any evill and unfit words abuſe them, as you may at large reade in the expoſition of that Commandement. So great is the honour of Parents before God, and ſo ſharpe a Iudge is God againſt all abuſers of them: Little thought of by too many in our dayes, and the rather becauſe continually in the Church there is not a beating of theſe points of Catechiſme into childrens heads, and hearts, by carefull Miniſters. O, that they would be once drawne to doe this duty in their ſeverall Churches: Soone, ſoone ſhould they finde the fruit of it, and the greatneſſe of their ſinne in ſo long neglecting it. In Plato an Heathen we reade the like law, where is decreed, that all beating and contumelies of Parents, ſhould bee puniſhed with perpetuall baniſhment or death. By the Romane Lawes the ſlayer of his Parents was not to be ſlaine either with ſword or fire, or other ordinary puniſhment, ſed inſutus culeo, &c. Sowed in a ſack with a dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, he ſhould be throwne into the Sea or river, that the ayre whilſt he lived, and the earth when hee was dead might be denyed him, who ſo had wronged them that gave him a life and being in the ayre, and upon the earth. A good writer teſtifieth he ſaw one put to death at Tigurine, who had curſed and reviled his mother.

Verſe 16. Plagium. 5. He that ſtealeth a man and ſelleth him, if he be found with him, ſhall die the death. To flocke away (as we ſpeake) a mans ſervant, man or maid, or to buy or ſell a freeman, and ſo bring him into bondage, was a grievous ſinne with God, and therefore thus ſeverely puniſhed. Thus ſinned the brethren of Ioſeph againſt him, when they ſold him to be a bondmau, and to bee uſed as pleaſed the buyers, which might have beene ſo as twenty deaths had beene better. Great therefore was their ſinne in that action. This law is to be referred to the ſeventh Commandement, and the fifth alſo.

Verſe 18. Verſe 19. 6. When men ſtrive together, and one ſmite another with the ſtone, or with the fiſt, and he die not, but lyeth in bed. If he riſe againe and walke without upon his ſtaffe, then ſhall he that ſmote him goe quit (meaning for mans law) ſave only he ſhall beare his charges for his loſſe of time, and ſhall pay for his healing. By the ſtone or fiſt are meant all other things whereby any wound is given, although theſe onely be named for example. For with Sword or Dagger, or any weapon all was one, if he were wounded and recovered, ſo that he was as fit for his vocation as before, then this was the Law; but if he were maimed, then otherwiſe. If a man ſmite his Servant or his Maide with a rod, and he die under his hand, he ſhall ſurely be puniſhed; but if he continue a day or two, he ſhall not be puniſhed; for he is his money. Verſe 20. Verſe 21. Theſe Lawes of God were fitted for the ſtate of that people, when many things were endured which were not allowed. If the ſervant dyed preſently, it was more grievous, and therefore puniſhed, but if he lived a time after, not ſo; yet before God it was murder alſo, though by mans law he eſcaped, both in regard he was his money in his maſters power, and alſo becauſe there might in that day or two happen ſome other cauſe of death then that beating. Perfection in theſe lawes we muſt not looke for, becauſe God was pleaſed to beare with much weakneſſe; But yet know we ever what his morall law requireth, and follow that which forbiddeth the abuſing of ſervants as well as of others, becauſe they alſo beare the Image of God, and God careth for them, as hath been ſhewed.

Verſe 22. 7. If a man ſtrive and hurt a woman with childe, ſo that her childe depart from her, and ſhee yet die not, he ſhall be ſurely puniſhed as the womans huſband ſhall appoint him, or he ſhall pay as the Arbitrers determine. But if death follow, then ſhall he pay life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, ſtripe for ſtripe, &c. Verſe 23. Verſe 24. Verſe 25. Stil obſerve how theſe Lawes tend to the explanation of ſome of the Ten Commandements, and refer this to the fifth. The light of Reaſon and Nature given us of God teacheth, That what meaſure we mete, it is juſt we ſhould receive even the like againe: That he that taketh the ſword ſhould periſh with the ſword: That he which ſpoileth ſhould be ſpoiled: That by what a man ſinneth, by that he ſhould be puniſhed: That what a man doth, the ſame he ſhould ſuffer: That evill ſhould hit the worker, and the offender be preſſed with his owne example. Luke 6.38. Mat. 26.52. Eſay 33.1. Wiſd. 11.13. This Law in equality was in effect thus alſo in the 12. Tables at Rome, the equity thereof being derived to them, either from other nations or the light of nature. The verſe ſaith,

Iuſta malis hæc, admiſſo pro crimine, pœna eſt,
Si quæ fecerunt, eadem patiantur & ipſi.

Lex Talionis. It is very juſt if men ſuffer the ſame things of others which they have done to others. If any man object, that by Chriſt, in the fifth of Matthew, this law is repealed, or diſliked; we anſwer, neither; but there our Saviour condemneth the abuſe of this Law according to private affections, and for the nouriſhing of a luſt to revenge by private perſons that are not Magiſtrates, and never would be intreated to forgive any. Whereas hee liketh ever in his children mercy and kindneſſe, and patience, and ſo to overcome our enemies, as his words ſhew, Recompence not evill for evill, but overcome evill with goodneſſe.

8. The other Laws that follow in this Chapter of ſetting ſervants free, for hurts done them by ſmiting, of the Oxe that ſhould gore any body, of digging a Well, whereby my neighbours cattell receive harme falling into it, of harme by one beaſt done to another, and ſuch like: they are ſo eaſie, that without any commentary, you may by reading of them be ſatisfied. All of them teach us, with what care we ſhould live of our neighbours goods as well as of our owne, no way hurting either the one or the other, ſmall or great, free or bond, but peaceably ſpending our dayes with all men, and doing what good we can any way. God we ſee is juſt, and we ſhould be juſt. God careth for the ſafety and well being, not only of all ſorts of men, but even of the very brute beaſts; and we muſt learne to doe the like, that by our reſembling of him, wee may be knowne to be his children, one day to inherite with his deare Sonne in his eternall Kingdome. This will not ſuch curſed courſes, as many men delight in, bring them to, who in oppreſſing their neighbours, in hurting their ſervants, in ſpoiling mens goods, and killing their cattell, in fightings, and ſtrivings, and all evill, take their great and daily pleaſure. Who hath eares to heare ſhall heare, and to others doe what we can, the word of God ſhall bee a ſavour of death unto death in Gods juſtice. And thus much ſhall ſuffice of this Chapter.

CHAP. XXII.

THe Lord goeth on with more lawes, all tending to the explanation of the ten Commandements: and in this Chapter very excellent lawes are laid downe: which howſoever they are not in uſe among us, yet yeeld this good by the reading and marking of them. To teach us privately in our ſelves an honeſt, good, and holy cariage of our ſelves. Princes may alter lawes, as circumſtances of times and place ſhall require; but the equity that God had in theſe lawes ever remaineth. And therefore what hee puniſhed wee muſt avoide, if we doe well.

Verſe 1.

First, hee beginneth with lawes againſt theft, which muſt be referred to that Commandement: and according to ſeverall degrees and differences of theft, hee maketh ſeverall and differing paines. *If a man ſteale an * Oxe or a * Sheep, and kill it, and ſell it, he ſhall reſtore five Oxen for the Oxe, and foure ſheep for the ſheep.* The greater theft hath the greater puniſhment. Other nations, by the light of God ſet in them, followed much this courſe, and puniſhed theft diverſly. Draco puniſhed it with death. Solon (if it were manifeſt) with foure-fold; if not ſo manifeſt, with double. *The Romanes twelve Tables did the like. Latter lawes with us, make theft death, if above ſuch a value: following therein a conſtitution of Lotharius the Emperour, whoſe ſum was above fifty ſhillings.

* Quinque utilitates Bovis: Paſcit, arat vitulus, tritural; nos calciat, armat.
* Quatuor Ovis: Lactat, paſcit, Veſtit, immolatur. Hugo.
* Romani furtũ manifeſtum quadruplo, non manifeſtum duplo puniebant.

Another caſe concerning theft, followeth in the ſecond and third verſe. If a thiefe bee found breaking up a houſe, and be ſmitten that he dye, no blood ſhall be ſhed for him (his meaning is, if this be in the night:) But if it be in the day light, blood ſhall be ſhed for him: for he ſhould make full reſtitution: if hee had not wherewith, then ſhould hee bee ſold for his theft. The law therefore appointing that puniſhment, hee ſhould not bee killed that brake a houſe in the day. The Romanes twelve Tables followed this equity, and in the night theſe breakers might bee killed any way: but in the day not, except he defended himſelfe by a weapon. Our owne lawes have made a difference betwixt day-theeves, and night-theeves, as indeed there is much cauſe to diſtinguiſh them: the feare in the night being farre greater, and the helpe to bee had farre leſſe, with many other circumſtances. But here may be a queſtion asked, what is lawfull before God, theſe being but civill conſtitutions? And anſwer may bee made, what God permitteth. But if our owne affection, cruelty, and rage ſtep in, being meere private men, take heed, for wee may doe a thing lawfull, not lawfully, The law biddeth kill not, but if a man ſmite to drive a theefe away, and death follow without a killing minde, the caſe is altered: for there is inculpata tutela, as Lawyers tell us, within the compaſſe whereof I take this caſe to bee.

Verſe 2.

Verſe 3.

Another law followeth in the fourth Verſe, That if the theft were found with him, alive, hee reſtored double: if killed or ſould, you ſaw in the firſt verſe another puniſhment more heavy. So muſt circumſtances direct judges to ſeverall puniſhments: and the wiſdome of God make man wiſe in all his proceedings. They that thinke death too much, muſt remember that even Gods law made the ſtealth of man death: And David ſaid, he that had taken the poore mans one ſheepe ſhould ſurely die. Draco made it death, as you heard before: and the Romans decreed, That ſtealing ſervants ſhould firſt be beaten, and then throwne downe from a Rocke and ſlaine. Fures privatos in nexu & compedibus vivere, publicos in auro & purpura: Private theeves live in fetters and chaines, publike ones in Gold and Purple. But I pray you, would theſe men that thus plead for the continuance of this Law of Moſes, That theeves ſhould reſtore and not die, bee aſwell content that other lawes ſhould ſtand in force alſo, as namely, that adultery ſhould be puniſhed with death? Gathering but ſticks on the Sabbath day, with death, &c? No I warrant you. And

there-

therefore what they thinke, is not a rule, but what God alloweth, whose will is ever justice it selfe, and who by his Apostle hath taught, that so long as Lawes have this end to be a terrour to the evill, and a defence to the good, the forme of them may bee divers; neither now a dayes is all theft death, but the Judge weigheth circumstances of need for sustenance onely, of the first offence, of repentance, of youth, of towardlinesse, and such like.

Verse 5. Verse 6. 2 After theft followes Lawes for damages or trespasses done to our Neighbours: and the Text saith, If a man hurt a field or a Vineyard, and put in his beasts to feed in another mans field, he shall recompence of the best of his owne field, and of the best of his owne vineyard. And if fire breake out, and catch in the Thornes and stackes of Corne, or the standing corne, or the field bee consumed, hee that kindled the fire shall make full restitution. Who knoweth not, that the society of man cannot continue without recompence of losses and harmes? Therefore mercifully doth God regard it, and make Lawes for it. Eurypides maketh Iocasta speake of his equity, when hee giveth her these words, Melius est æqualitatem colere, quæ amicos amicis, urbes urbibus, socios sociis devincit, &c. Better it is to regard equalitie, which bindeth friends to friends, Cities to Cities, and fellowes to fellowes, &c. Now equalitie is, if I have hurt any man, to make amends, that no man bee pilled in his estate.

Verse 7. See the eight Commandement of these matters more. Verse 8. 3 Concerning Pledges, borrowing, lending, &c. If a man deliver his neighbour money or stuffe to keepe, and it be stolne out of his house, if the thiefe be found, he shall pay the double; if the thiefe be not found, then the master of the house shall be brought to the Iudges to sweare, whether he hath put his hand to his neighbours goods, or no? That is, whether himselfe have stolne it or no, &c. unto the 16. verse. In all nations faithfulnesse and truth in matters committed to trust hath beene highly regarded, and the contrary punished.

Therefore even with Heathens, besides recompence imposed, hee was infamous that offended this way, which how great a punishment it was, they see that rightly consider it. The Lawyers called it a civill death, because it leaveth to a man no honest place among men in the Common-wealth, he being disabled to sue for any thing, to give any voyce, to be any witnesse, or to be of any credit any way. There is too much iniquity amongst men in these matters, and therefore to be wished greatly, that these Lawes of God were often read and marked. Truth in trust is a Jewell of price, pleasing to God and man, and most honourable ever to the party alive and dead. Let Christians of all other men so thinke, that the wayes of God bee not ill spoken of for their faults, such men had better never have beene borne, than without care, so to sinne. Now goe we a little farther than this law expresly goeth, and judge in our owne heart, if falshood in pledges committed to mee by man be thus odious, is not unfaithfulnesse in Gods pledge much more odious? Remember the place to Timothy, Custodi depositum: That worthy thing which was committed to thee, keepe through the holy Ghost which dwelleth in us. What worthy pledge is this, but the pure and holy doctrine of the Word, which I must never mingle with mans Traditions? The manner of teaching it, if I be a teacher, must be plaine, profitable, and to the most edification, and not to the greatest ostentation. Be faithfull in these things therefore, for they are pledges left with us by God, which he will ask for againe, and require an account what we have done with them, &c.

Civiliter mortuus.

2 Tim. 14.

Verse 16. Verse 17. 4 For wanton and licentious life the Lord provideth, saying; If a man intice a maide that is not betrothed, and lie with her, he shall endow her, and take her to wife. But if her father refuse to give her to him, he shall pay money, according to the dowry of Virgins. Where you may observe the severity of God, and the remissnesse of man in punishing matters of this kinde. For man made his law disjunctive, hee shall marry her, or give her dowry: But God maketh a copulation, he shall marry her and give her dowry, yet leaving free the fathers authority, whether hee would so bestow her or no. If the father would bestow her, then both must hee marry her and endow her, because hee had thus offended with her. So God ever regarded Parents consents in the placing of their children.

Yea, Nature it selfe saw this equity in Hermio the Maid in Eurypides, who answered Orestes that sought her to wife; That the marriage of her belonged to her father. He that will may read S. Ambrose upon the story of Rebecca, and see his judgment of this thing. But why was not the maid punished also as well as the man? partly because yeares, and sex, and weakenesse of judgement might be occasion of fall in her, but chiefly because such money imposed upon her, must have come from the Parents, who were innocent, and had griefe enough by the fall of their childe. Furthermore, this is to be remembred here, that if the Parents would bestow her, never might he that had abused her, put her away by bill of divorce, as other might. The Romanes did not inforce mariage, because the man might bee Noble, and the woman meane; or contrariwise, the woman Noble, and the man meane. Whereas the Israelites were all alike Noble, descended from one and the same house, and the pedigree knowne, but if hee were rich, hee lost halfe of his goods, and if worth little, his body was punished, and hee banished, which was sharper.

Verse 18. 5 Of Witches, your Chapter saith, Thou shalt not suffer a Witch to live, which God would never never have laid downe, if either there had been no Witches, or being, yet they can doe nothing, as ſome have to their blame affirmed. The ſhifts they uſe to avoid this place are weake, and by the beſt learned rejected. God maketh no law in vaine, but for more of his matter, I referre you to the Commandement. In this place, ſaith One, God joyneth this Law next after that of inticing young women, becauſe many times theſe Witches are inſtruments to worke them to mens ſinfull deſires. The nex Law, againſt unnaturall luſts with beaſts, I paſſe over, the fact being more filthy than to be ſpoken of. Flagitia quæ ſunt contra naturam, apud omnes gentes deteſtanda ſunt, qualia Sodomitarum fuerunt; Violatur enim talibus flagitiis ſocietas illa, quæ cum Deo nobis eſt. Deeds againſt Nature are deteſted amongſt all Nations, as the ſinne of Sodome was: for by ſuch impieties, that ſociety which we have with God is broken. Death it was by Law, and death eternall followeth the Temporall. God and Nature abhorre it, and hee taſteth neither of God nor Nature that committeth it. The eyes of God ſee all things, and the juſtice of God will finde out all things in time. Verſ. 19. Aug. l.3. confeſ. cap.8.

6 He that offereth to any gods ſave unto the Lord onely, ſhall bee ſlaine. The like law you reade in Deuteronomy: If there be found amongſt you in any of thy Cities, which the Lord thy God giveth, the man or woman that hath wrought wickednesſe in the ſight of the Lord thy God, in tranſgreſſing his Covenants, and hath gone and ſerved other gods, and worſhipped them, as the Sunne and the Moon, or any of the hoaſt of heaven which I have not commanded, and if it be told thee, and ſo forth, then ſtone that perſon to death, &c. In the thirteenth Chapter, the like death impoſed upon thoſe that ſhall perſwade and draw to this ſinne: So both worker and willer ſuffered death. And indeed ſhould Theeves die for robbing man, and not man die for robbing God? Can mans goods bee compared with Gods honor? No, no. Againe, if we ſweare fealty to the Prince his enemy, Die we not worthily? To ſweare fealty to the Devill by Idolatry, is worſe to God, than that to man. Happie were deceived Creatures, if any thing would make them wiſe, and bring them backe againe to God onely, onely, and marke the word. Verſe 20. Deu. 13. 6, 9, 10.

7 Thou ſhalt not doe injury to a ſtranger, neither oppreſſe him: for yee were ſtrangers in Ægypt. Ye ſhall not trouble any widow or fatherleſſe childe. For if thou vexe and trouble ſuch, and ſo hee call and crie unto mee, I will ſurely heare his cry. Then ſhall my wrath be kindled, and I will kill you with the ſword, and your wives ſhall be widowes, and your children fatherleſſe. Our ſtate in this world is not tyed to any place, but God at his pleaſure may remove us, even when we thinke leaſt, therefore the Lord would have them then, and all men ſtil favourable to ſtrangers. Experiences of evil paſt, and expectances of future, if God ſo pleaſe to have it, muſt make men forbeare thoſe diſcourteſies to ſtrangers, that othewiſe mans corruption will offer. Verſe 21. Verſe 22. Verſe 23. Verſe 24.

Non ignora mali miſeris ſuccurrere diſco.

By the Law of Nations it was ever forbidden, and ſharply puniſhed to violate the truſt that a poore Stranger hath in us, when he liveth with us, and under us. The Athenians were good, the Lacedemonians were bad, and ſo praiſed, and diſpraiſed in bookes to this day. The next Chapter, verſe 9. teacheth this matter againe, and often is it beaten upon by God, that they may remember it. Hyppias in Plato ſaith, Simile, Natura, cognatum eſt ſimili, By Nature every like is cozen to his like, and ſurely it is a great knot among men, likeneſſe either of wit, manners, judgment or fortune, &c. Which Plutarch alſo witneſſeth, when he ſaith, Senis lingua ſuaviſſima eſt ſeni, puer puero, mulier mulieri jucunda eſt. Et ægrotus afficitur calamitate ægrotantis, & ærumnoſus ſocio calamitatum ſententiam aſcribit. The ſpeech of an old man pleaſeth another old man, a childe contenteth a childe, and a woman a woman. One ſick body feeleth the paine of another, and pitieth it. So doe fellowes in affliction talke together, and expreſſe each to other their mindes. Wherefore God uſeth this for a reaſon here, that they alſo have bin Strangers in Ægypt. It pleaſeth the good Spirit of God to uſe this comfort to his Church, touching Chriſt, if you remember: That we have not a High Prieſt, which cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities, but was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne. And thereupon concludeth, Let us therefore goe boldly unto the Throne of Grace, that we may receive mercy, and finde grace to help in time of need. If wee bee not in abilitie to doe Strangers any good, yet comfortable words ſhall pleaſe both them, and God that made this law for them. Plut lib. de diſ. crimine amici & adulatoris. Heb. 4. 15, 16.

The other Law concerning Widowes and fatherleſſe Orphanes, as the Lord made it in great mercy, ſo will hee ever puniſh the breaches with ſharpe juſtice. Affliction, ſaith Salomon, is not to be added to the afflicted. Mortuis & jacentibus omnia inſultant: All tread upon them that are downe and dead. Widowes and fatherleſſe children therefore muſt bee pitied, and comforted, and helped if need require, ſeeing they have loſt their head; and not oppreſſed and wronged, vexed and grieved, as often they are. Now: that the Lord will puniſh it, you ſee the Text plain, and how? (O reade it againe, for it is fearfull) with the ſword will he deſtroy thoſe Wringers and Cruſhers, that their wives alſo may become widowes, and their children fatherleſſe. So verifying the wiſe ſaying: By what a man ſinneth, by that ſhall hee be puniſhed. Carefull therefore Verſe 22. Sophocles. Verſe 24.

was Iob to avoide this danger, and vowed vehemently that he never restrained the poore of their desire, nor caused the eyes of the widow to faile, by long awaiting for her request. Let this move us, and strike us, and ever profit us.

Christ had a care of his mother at his death.

Iob 31.16.

If thou lend money to my people, that is, the poore with thee, thou shalt not be as an Vsurer unto him, ye shall not oppresse him with usury. This matter of Usury is so largely handled by many, and so little regarded by moe, that I spare my labour in it. To allow all that some allow, or to condemne as much as some condemne, as yet I see no reason. Many are the cases, and intricate are the questions moved and mentioned in this matter. Orphanes are left with nothing to bring them up, but a portion of money, some in the Universities, some in the Countrey. Spend the stocke and it will soone be gone; use it, and occupy it themselves they cannot. So they have money and want a Trade, others have Trades, and want money. Bucer in Cambridge was asked this question, and did not dislike of some interchange profitable to the Orphane; and yet not opening the way to flat Usury, Strangers likewise and exiles, out of their Countrey for Religion and good causes, bring a little money with them for easinesse of cariage, aud nothing else, themselves haply may not trade in a forren Land; how then shall they, their wives and children live? Worke-men peradventure they are not, but of an higher degree. In short therefore, wee know the end of the Commaudement is love: so farre then, as borrowing and lending breaketh not that, but agreeth with it, moderate men doe what is fit for them, and no scope given to the condemned Vsurer. To meete with one inconvenience, and to bring many others into the Common-wealth, was never wisdome. Wherefore let every man search his owne heart, and well observe his owne dealings, in lending to his Neighbour that liveth with him, as knowing that nothing is hid from God, but must be accounted for one day. If Contracts and Charity agree not together, but what profiteth you, hurteth your neighbour, the case is altered I speake of; and what agreeing with love, is by learned men allowed, the same disagreeing from the same, is condemned and blamed.

Verse 26, 27.

9. The next law is, concerning Pawnes and Pawne-takers: A great trade still in this wringing word: And of them thus the Lord speaketh: If thou take thy neighbours rayment to pledge, thou shalt restore it to him before the Sunne goe downe: for that is his covering onely, and this is his garment for his skin, wherein shall he sleepe? Therefore when he cryeth unto me, I will heare him: for I am mercifull. The foure and twentieth of Deuteronomie is to be referred hither, for explication further of that mercy, that God requireth in this matter from all men. Marke it, and ever remember it, that nakednesse and misery of the poore body cryeth against thee to the Lord, and he hath vowed to heare. All is not gained then that is put in thy purse, but onely that which is well put in.

Vers. 28. &c.

The other lawes of reverence to Magistrates, neither reviling them, nor thinking lightly of them, of due and true paying of tythes to the maintenance of Gods truth and Ministers, and so forth, will come hereafter to be touched againe, and therefore no more now of this Chapter.

Chap. XXIII.

Verse 1.

THis Chapter also, as hath been said, goeth on with moe lawes, tending likewise to the exposition of the Moral law, and namely of the eighth and ninth Commandements.

Touching the proceeding with moe lawes, we may make use of these and the like sayings; Arcesilaus and Laertius did not like that there should be many lawes, saying: Quemadmodum ubi multi medici, ibi multi morbi: ita ubi permultæ leges, ibi plus vitiorum. Like as where there are many Physitians, there are many diseases: so where there are very many lawes, there are moe faults. Demonax very unadvisedly spake against all lawes, saying; Leges prorsus esse inutiles, ut quibus boni non egerent, mali nihilo fierent meliores: That lawes were altogether unprofitable, because the good needed them not, the bad would not be bettered by them. But Chrysostome, with a better spirit, both approved good lawes, and would have them all to be obeyed, saying: In cythara non satis esse, in uno tantum nervo, consensum efficere, universos oportere percuti & numerose & decenter: ita ad salutem, non satis esse unam Legem, universas esse audiendas & servandas: To make musick on a Harp, it is not sufficient to play on one string, but all must bee stricken in due measure and proportion: so to salvation one law is not sufficient, but all must bee well understood and duely kept. These lawes therefore here following, continued by God himself, and serving by explanation to helpe our understanding, and consequently to direct our practice concerning former lawes, are diligently by us to be observed.

In the two first Verses, observe the vertues of a good and upright Judge, and adde them to that which was spoken in the 18. Chapter. His first vertue is Truth, Truth (I say) in his sentence and judgement, which he must ever carefully labour for, by all good wayes and meanes. Contrary to Truth are false tales and rumours, which therefore here in the first words are forbidden either to be received of the Judge, or reported by others; Thou shalt not receive a false tale, neither neither ſhalt thou put thy hand with the wicked to be a falſe witneſſe. The word ſignifieth both to receive and report, therefore both forbidden. That the Judge may thus doe, he muſt ever remember Epicharmus little ſaying, Memento diffidere, remember to diſtruſt, or be not too credulous; which Cicero ſo commendeth and liketh, that he doubteth not to call it the Synewes and joynts of all humane wiſedome. It hath place in all our private life and actions, but eſpecially in judgement. This cannot he doe, unleſſe he have another vertue included in this; namely diligence to heare both ſides, patiently, fully, and indifferently, which ever good Judges doe: for want whereof, how foully ſome have beencarryed awry, many Stories teſtifie. Non prius feras ſententiam, quam utriuſque partis cauſam cognoveris: Give not ſentence before both parties bee heard. That one let me remember of Apelles the Epheſian, who was accuſed to Ptolomie by his enemy Antiphilus, that hee had imparted to one Theodorus treaſonable conſpiracies and plots againſt the King, which Theodorus, in truth, Apelles had never ſeene in his life. The King lightly and haſtily gave credit to this tale, and clapt Apelles up, with full purpoſe to execute him for it: And indeed had ſo done, if a priſoner in the ſame priſon, moved in conſcience, had not opened the whole truth, and acquainted Apelles: which when the King ſaw, hee perceived alſo his great fault in crediting too lightly, and gave that accuſer to Apelles, and to doe with him what he would, or, as ſome write, to be his bond-man for ever. Judges therefore muſt beware of this great fault, and heare ever the defence of the accuſed. Now becauſe we be not all Judges, doth not this Law concerne us? Yes, yes, your owne heart can tell you, if they muſt not receive them, we not tell them, raiſe them and coyne them. If we doe, the Lord ſeeth it, and marketh it; and although they wiſely avoid the ſnare of them, and ſet free the accuſed and ſlandered; yet God remaineth a ſwift Judge, and very ſure to conſume ſuch wretches, who ſo againſt his Law have wrought evill againſt their neighbour and brother. Rumor eſt ſermo ſine authore, cui malitia dedit initium, credulitas incrementum, & Deus tantum finem: Rumor is a ſpeech without Author, which malice gave beginning, beliefe encreaſe, and God onely an end.

ωνδ' ἄκλυε πευσέμεν ἄμφω μῦθον ἀκοῦσαι.

Fama malum, quo non aliud velocius ullum.

If we may not raſhly ſmite and kill with the hand, although he be a thiefe, no more with the tongue, although it be true, for charity hideth a multitude of faults. The phraſe moveth mee, and therefore note it, that (if God ſo pleaſe) it may move you alſo. Thou ſhalt not put thy hand with the wicked, to be a falſe or cruell witneſſe. If to give the hearing be in ſome meaſure to put to the hand, ſurely to have an itching eare to heare evill reports of our Chriſtian brethren, with delight and contentment to beleeve them wholly or halfe, and to report them againe, is to put the hand much more, and to bee grievouſly guilty before God. Yet what ſo common in our mouths, as, I am not the author, I am not the firſt raiſer, I heard it, I have my author, and ſo forth? God that made this Law againſt receiving, knoweth hearing goeth before receiving, and if not receive, then not heare, nor beleeve, nor report to others; for he ſhall bee thy Judge, who will not be mocked with ſhifts. How many men ſatisfie their own conſciences herein, I know not, when they heare with greedineſſe, and have their inſtruments laid abroad for that purpoſe, never imparting to the party what they heare, that he may anſwer it, but keeping all cloſe from him, and thinking what they pleaſe. I know there may be ſome reaſon to conceale the accuſer, but to conceale the accuſation, I know none: For if they will heare with one eare, let them heare with the other in the name of God, the wrong ſide being as broad as the right; and after two or three accuſations cleared, they will better know both the accuſer and aceuſed to their owne good. Would God this fault were not where it leaſt ſhould be, and where the ſinne of it is as well knowne, as others feele the injury. Till it be amended, let the childe of God ſay with David, O God of my righteouſneſſe: and again, God, thou knoweſt mine innocency, and my faults are not hid from thee. To thee therefore I flie, as knowing all, both my good, and my bad, and in thy knowledge I reſt, be it unto me as thou wilt. I know thou haſt meanes to humble David, and what thou doeſt, ſhall be ever good in the end: After a cloud the Sunne breaketh forth, and the weather cleareth, and is more comfortable.

Pſal. 4. 1.
Pſal. 135. 24.

2 After truth and diligence to attaine it by hearing both ſides, the Lord alſo requireth in a good Judge, skilfulneſſe in the Law, and Conſtancy: ſaying in the next verſe, Thou ſhalt not follow a multitude to doe evill, neither agree in a controverſie to decline after many, and overthrow the truth. Skilfullnes in law to give a right ſentence, not fitting the line to the ſtone, but the ſtone to the line. The line is fitted to the ſtone, when the multitude is followed to doe evill, than the which multitude nothing is more mutable and uncertaine. The ſtone is fitted to the line, when ſentence is given according to law and truth, that the Judge having his name of Juſtice, his name and his actions may agree. Conſtancy ſtayeth the Judge skilfull to diſcerne right, and to doe what hee diſcerneth, notwithſtanding any company gain-ſaying it, and therefore is Conſtancy alſo required in him. Now if this may not bee done in civill matters, whoſe heart will not tell him, much leſſe may it be done in religion, and maters of faith. The words are plaine, multitudo non non ſequenda, Thou ſhalt not follow a multitude to doe evill, therefore a multitude may erre and doe evill. Neither decline after many to overthrow truth, therefore a multitude may overthrow truth, Vulgi judicium errore plenum: the judgement of the multitude is full of error. And how then can it be a rule to guide my conſcience by either in Civill or Eccleſiaſticall matters? O weigh it well, and with a religious heart, and let neither Popery tell you of multitude, nor Anabaptiſts of fewneſſe and paucitie, but ever look you for truth, be they many or few, and let that be the iſſue. For proofe there is too much to be recited now, that many may erre, and many hold truth, therefore neither the one number, nor the other, any rule to a Chriſtian conſcience.

3 The next vertue in a Judge is equality, which is oppoſed to reſpect of perſons. Equality giveth like unto like, according to one rule certaine, from which there muſt be no departing an haires breadth, for any qualities in men, as wealth or poverty &c. Judices ſæpe adimunt diviti propter invidiam, & addunt pauperi propter miſericordiam. Judicium inflecti non debet propter lachrymas cujuſq;. Non enim hac juſta miſericordia eſt: Judges often take from the rich man for envy, and give to the poore for mercy. Judgement ought not to be inverted for any mans teares, for that were unjuſt mercy. On the contrary part, reſpect of perſons giveth to like unlike, to like cauſes, unlike and differing judgements, for qualities in the party, corruptly carrying the Judge his affections. As Alexander the Great more reſpected Epheſtio nothing ſo well deſerving, than Craterus a valiant Gentleman, and right well deſerving of the Common-wealth. This equality and indifferency God requireth, that it may expreſſe his nature upright and indfferent to all men, either in accuſing them by his Law, or ſaving them upon repentance by his Goſpell, in neither of which, he reſpecteth any mans perſon. Which, as it is a juſt terrour, if wee doe evill, how great ſoever we be; ſo it is as a juſt comfort, if we turne from it, be we never ſo ſmall, poor, wretched, vile and miſerable. Remember S. Peters words in the tenth Chapter of the Acts: If Judges will be free from reſpect of perſons, then needs muſt they be free from gifts, for gifts will lead their affections, will they, nill they, the old ſaying being true, Beneficium accepiſti? libertatem amiſiſti: Haſt thon received a gift? then haſt thou loſt thy liberty and freedome: All this is contained in the words of the Text. Thou ſhalt not eſteeme a poore man in his cauſe. And if all Judges followed this courſe, Heſiodus ſhould not need to faine, that Aſtræa hath left the ſociety of men, and is flowne up to heaven, But it is to be feared, that as Vlyſſes ſervants, when he was aſleepe, opened a bottell which Æolus had given him, wherein the windes were all incloſed, and ſo let the windes out, they thinking there was treaſure in the bottell, which as well at ſea, as at land they loved: ſo ſome Judges opening mens purſes whileſt they look for gain, let truth eſcape from them to their own hurt, and the Common-wealths. If any doe ſo, God make his Word profitable to them, and ſo I leave them to him.

Ver. 3. 6. &c. 7. 8.

Reade Deut. Chap. 17.

4 It followeth in the Text: If thou ſee thine enemies Oxe or his Aſſe going aſtray thou ſhalt bring him to him againe. If thou ſee thine enemies Aſſe lying under his burden, wilt thou ceaſe to help him? thou ſhalt help him up again with it. Let us here remember, that Gods actions are after two ſorts, generall, and particular: Generall to all men, Particular to his friends: So muſt ours bee, taking our preſident from him. As therfore by his generall action he ſuffereth his Sunne to ſhine upon the bad, as well as upon the good, & ſuch like: ſo muſt we extend our love, which is the common bond of mankinde, as well to our enemies, as to our friends. By which common love, all hurting of the bodies or goods, wives or children of our enemies, without juſt and neceſſary cauſe is forbidden, and contrariwiſe the law of Nature to bee obſerved. Quod tibi non nocet, & alteri prodeſt, præſtandum: what hurteth not thee, and profiteth another, is to be performed. From which fountaine of this generall love ſpring many Lawes, and by name this bringing back our enemies ſtraying Oxe, and helping up his oppreſſed beaſt. That alſo, which you read in Deuteronomie, of not deſtroying the fruit-trees in the enemies ground, which they did beſiege, becauſe there is uſe of ſuch trees. Againe, as God hath his ſpeciall action to his friends and to his Church, namely, Sanctifications: ſo muſt friendſhip, which is our ſpeciall action, reach it ſelfe but to ſuch as are of the houſhold of faith, and our friends. For although we muſt love with that generall love all mankinde, Turkes, Pagans, &c. yet to ſuch may we not be friends and familiars, but muſt beware inward and uſuall converſation with them that hate God, and all his graces. Both theſe are contained in that rule of Chriſt, Be ſimple as Doves, and wiſe as Serpents: for by the Doves ſimplicity, is meant, we ſhall learne to hurt no body, but as neare as we can be helpfull to all; and by the Serpents wiſedome, that wee ſhould yet know to put a difference betwixt the houſhold of Faith and Gods enemies, betwixt the religious and prophane, betwixt the godly and the wicked. By this diſtinction, you may ſee better the meaning of that Scripture, Love your enemies. Concerning this helping up of our enemies beaſt, under his burden fallen, I pray you marke, if the margent of your Bible note it not well; That, If God commands us to helpe our enemies Aſſe under his burden, will he ever ſuffer us to throw downe our brethren with heavy burthens? It reacheth to many things, wherein is hard dealing, if you thinke of them.

ſhould not bee wronged in reſpect of his poverty: ſuch equall ſteps would God have Judgement to walke in.

Thou ſhalt take no gift: for the gift blindeth the wiſe, & perverteth the words of the righteous. The equity of this Law was ſeen by the dimme eye of Nature, for the Romanes (as appeareth by the Lawes of their twelve Tables) uſed to puniſh that Judge with death, which was convicted to take a bribe for giving judgement. Dioclesian the Emperour likewiſe enacted, Sententiam à judice corrupto prolatam, fore ipſo jure infirmam ſine provocatione: That a ſentence given by a bribed Judge, ſhould by the law be of no validity, without any further appeale. Now corruption and gifts (as One ſaith) are not only Mony, Gold, Silver and Preſents: Sed etiam propter laudem qui judicat male, munus accipit, & munus quo nihil inanius: But he alſo which judgeth wrongfully to get Praiſe thereby, receiveth a Gift, and a Gift than which there is nothing more vaine. Patuit enim illius auris ad accipiendum judicium linguæ alienæ, & perdidit judicium conſcientiæ ſuæ: For his eare hath been open to receive the flattering verdict of another mans tongue, and hee hath loſt the comfortable teſtimony of his owne conſcience. Tres ſunt acceptiones munerum: Munus à corde, eſt captata gratia à cogitatione: munus ab ore, eſt gloria per favorem: munus ex manu, eſt præmium per dationem: There are three manner of receiving gifts: A gift from the heart, is grace from the thought: a gift from the mouth, glory by favour; a gift from the hand, a reward by giving. Innocentius reproveth corrupt Judges, with theſe words: Vos non attenditis merita cauſarum ſed perſonarum, non jura ſed munera, non quod ratio dictet, ſed quod voluntas affectet, non quod liceat, ſed quod lubeat: Nunquam enim vobis eſt tam ſimplex oculus ut totũ corpus ſit lucidum: Pauperum cauſam cum mora negligitis, Divitum cauſam cum inſtantia promovetis, &c. Aliquid ſemper admittitis fermenti quo totam maſſam corrumpitis: In giving judgement, you reſpect not the worth of the cauſes, but of the perſons; not the lawes, but gifts; not what reaſon doth counſell, but what the will doth affect, not that which is lawfull in it ſelfe, but that which is pleaſing to your ſelves: For your eye is never ſo ſingle that the whole body might be light: Poore mens cauſes with prolonging delay you neglect, rich mens cauſes with inſtant earneſtneſſe you ſet forward, &c. you alwayes mingle ſome leaven which corrupteth the whole lumpe. Verſe 8. Lex 12. Tabul. Greg. Moral. 9. cap. 26.

5. The law of mercy to ſtrangers, verſe 9. hath beene touched before, and therefore obſerve next, this law of reſt to the ground, the ſeventh yeare, for the reliefe and comfort of the poore. Six yeares ſhalt thou ſow the land, and gather the fruits of it, the ſeventh yeare thou ſhalt let it reſt and lie ſtill, that the poore of thy people may eate, and what they leave, the beaſts of the field ſhall eate. In like maner thou ſhalt do with thy Vineyard, and with thy Olive-trees: With great profit wee may note, and ſee this gracious care which the Lord our God hath over all his creatures, and learne, as our power and places give us leave, to follow his example. To the poore now in the Land you ſee his love, and you reade his Law here, with your eyes: Why ſhould it not work a good effect in your heart, during your life in this matter? Firſt, it is his will we ſhould with hand ſhew our heart both to him, and to our poore and needy brethren, and without deeds vaine are our words, that we love one another. Secondly, his recompence is great in them that doe it, and never faileth; Whoſoever giveth but a cup of cold water, ſhall not loſe his reward. Come ye bleſſed of my Father, and poſſeſſe eternall comfort: For when I was hungry, you fed me, &c. Me, I ſay, in the poore with you, to whom what you did, you did it to Me, and ſo I take it: Bleſſed is the man that provideth for the poore & needy, the Lord ſhall deliver him in all his trouble. By examples might be proved, but it needeth not, only remember the Widow of Zarephath, what followed her Pietie in feeding the Prophet, when ſhe had not much for her ſelfe. It is a ſtory, in ſtead of a thouſand, to raiſe up our hearts in this matter. Verſe 9. Verſe 10, 11. Mat. 10. 42. Mat. 25. 34, 45. Pſal. 41. 1. 1 King. 17.

Of the reſt of this Chapter ſpent in the promiſes of God unto their obedience: I will only ſay this, that theſe great and ſweet promiſes are as honey, till we thinke of the condition, to wit, perfect obedience, but then we fall from all hope, had we not a Chriſt, becauſe ſuch perfect obedience to the Law wee cannot performe. Chriſt therefore we flye to, and relye upon him, who having performed that obedience for us, now juſtifieth us by faith in him, without that condition, and maketh his righteouſneſſe our righteouſneſſe by imputation. Thou ſhalt not ſeeth a Kid in his mothers milke. As Cruelty is here forbidden by God: ſo was it condemned by the very Pagans. Domitianus (apud Suetonium) muſcas necat, & crudelis, &c. Athenis, damnatur puer judicum ſententia, quod cornicum oculos confixiſſet. Suetonius writeth, that Domitian the Emperour was counted cruell for killing of Flyes, and that a Boy was ſentenced at Athens for putting out a Crowes eye. Ver. 14. &c. Verſe 29.

CHAP. XXIIII.

Verſe 1,2. Nazianzin.

IN this Chapter, firſt note how Moſes alone aſcendeth up to God, and let it remember us that there are differences of graces, and yet one Spirit, the Giver of all. They that have more may not deſpiſe them which have leſſe; neither they which have leſſe, envy them which have more. Reade the 1 Cor. 12. Chapter, &c. What if wee ſay that the Law was ſignified in Moſes going to God, becauſe it is holy and juſt, but it bringeth not his company with it, becauſe they are imperfect keepers?

Verſe 3. 1 Cor. 11. 23.

2 Moſes came and told the people all the words of the Lord, &c. So is the duty of a faithfull Miniſter, ſtill to receive of the Lord, and to deliver to his people what he hath received, not any dregges or droſſe of mans invention, for in vaine doe men worſhip him with mens precepts, &c. All the things which the Lord hath ſaid, will we doe. Concerning this raſh and confident anſwer of the people, note and remember the cenſure of learned men, that you may profit by it to a waryer kinde of ſpeaking out of a true feeling of your owne and all mens frailty of Nature, by the corruption entred into us at our fall in our firſt Parents. Saint Hierome condemning ſuch undiſcreet haſtineſſe, ſaith: Melius eſt non promittere, quam promiſſa non facere: & melius eſt ancipitem diu deliberare ſententiam, quam in verbis eſſe facilem, in operibus difficilem: It is better not to promiſe, than not to keepe promiſe: and it is better doubtfully and long to deliberate, than to grant eaſily, and performe hardly. Gregory againe obſerving this fault in the Jewes, ſaith, Judæorum populum locuſtæ ſignificabant, ſubitos ſaltus dantes, & protinus ad terram cadentes. Saltus enim dabant, cum præcepta Domini ſe implere promitterent, ad terram cadebant, cum factis denegarent: The people of the Jewes were ſignified by the Locuſts, which uſed ſuddenly to leape up, and forthwith to fall downe to the earth againe: They did (as it were) leape up, when in words they promiſed to doe all things which the Lord had ſaid, but they fell to the earth againe, when in their deeds they denyed the ſame. Let us therefore (I ſay) alwayes weigh our weakneſſe, and accordingly frame our promiſes, for (as we ſee in this people) we may purpoſe well that, which we cannot doe ſo well.

3 Moſes wrote all the words of the Lord, as a ſure and ſafe way to keepe them. Tradition by word from man to man failed in faithfulneſſe, and brought in many errours under the name of Gods word and will. Therefore writing was deviſed by God himſelfe, and ſo his appointed inſtruments, directed by him, have left unto us his holy Scriptures. This matter hath beene largely entreated of by many.

To wit, that it might prefigure that precious blood wherewith we and our hearts are ſprinkled. The ninth Chapter to the Hebrewes will bee an expoſition to this place. The promiſe of the people here againe, to obey God in all things, teſtifieth their heart, but not an ability to doe it. Therefore let us learne ſuch affection, but gather no error from ſuch places of mans power to fulfill the ſame.

5 The Aſcention of Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, with ſeventy of the Elders, together with the viſion, was a gracious confirmation of Moſes his authority, and of the law given. But we muſt know, that it was farre from the Majeſty of God which they ſaw, no fleſh being able to ſee him as he is, onely a glimple for their comfor he vouchſafed, in ſuch manner as the Text expreſſeth.

Verſe 14.

6 After, Moſes aſcendeth alone, yet ſo, that he leaveth Aaron and Hur with them, that whoſoever had any matter might come to them, ſo watchfull and faithfull was Moſes in his place, that without juſt cauſe he is not abſent, and then he leaveth able Deputies. Such care in Miniſters now a dayes would God bleſſe, and the contrary fault, as he is God, he will ſeverely puniſh.

Verſe 16.

7 Moſes aſcending is covered with a clond, and not admitted to God till after ſixe dayes, to teach all fleſh patiently and reverently to tarry Gods leaſure and gracious pleaſure, for any matter of his will to be revealed to them, not curiouſly ſearching, but humbly waiting for the thing wee ſeeke, being fit for us. At the end of the ſixe dayes, even the ſeventh day, God called unto Moſes, and he is admitted to ſpeech, and I pray you marke how? covered with a clond, for the Text ſaith, He entred into the midſt of the clond, and went up to the Mountaine. So will the Lord have a comfortable time for all thoſe that waite for him, and the knowledge of him in his word. They ſhall ſee and heare at laſt, what hee will ſay unto them. For their hearts he will touch, their eares hee will boare open, and they ſhall ſee with their eyes, heare with their eares, & underſtand with their hearts to eternall life. But how? they muſt come to God in the Clond, covered with it, &c. that is, in the humanity of Chriſt, whereof this Clond was a figure. For without him there is no acceſſe to God, and by him wee come, and that boldly. He is become fleſh of our fleſh, and bone of our bone: Search without him, and be oppreſſed of Majeſtie; ſearch by him, and bee comforted forted with mercy. Kisse the Sonne, and feare not. The sight of the glory of the Lord was like consuming fire on the top of the Mountaine, in the eyes of the Children of Israel (saith your Chapter) but to them whom he drew to him, he appeared as a pleasant Saphire, verse 10. Certainly, even so to carnall men, and such as are his, called by his holy Spirit, there is a great difference of him; the one seeing but feare and trembling, the other seeing, feeling, and tasting joy, sweetnesse, comfort and gladnesse, above that which mans pen can lay downe, or his narrow heart once conceive.

Lastly, Moses was in the Mount forty dayes and forty nights, without meat or drinke, when as God could have dispatched him in a moment: All to give authority to him and his Law, as hath been said, and that the people might see in his long abstinence, the divine power of God, and so ever esteeme of the thing wherein they saw no earthly course held. Let it teach us, still and ever to reverence Gods Ministers, to whom he hath revealed his will for our good. They are now his meanes, as then Moses was, and by his word he hath graced them, as here he did Moses, by these miracles: He that heareth you (saith he) heareth me, and he that despiseth you, despiseth me. Thus much briefly of this Chapter.

CHAP. XXV.

GOds holy Spirit having, from the beginning of this Booke unto the twentieth Chapter, laid downe such things as went before the Law; in the twentieth Chapter hee entered to declare the Lawes, and first laid downe the Morall Law, then the Judiciall lawes, Chapters 21, 22, 23. Now by a transition and way made, Chapter 24. in this five and twentieth Chapter he beginneth with the Ceremoniall lawes, and so continueth unto the one and thirtieth Chapter. Which Ceremoniall lawes were either common and touched all, whereof in the next Booke, or particular concerning onely the Levites, whereof in the next Booke, called Leviticus by reason of those Lawes. In this Chapter, first there is a Preparation to the appointed Ceremonies, even unto the tenth verse; and then a Prescription of them, thence forward to the thirtieth Chapter. In the Preparation you may note these heads:

1 A Commandement, that the people should offer.
2 What they should offer?
3 With what heart and minde?
4 To what use and purpose?
5 To what use should the Sanctuary serve? viz. that God might dwell there.
6 Of what fashion it should be? viz. Like the patterne that Moses saw, &c.

1. The Commandement to offer, is expressed in these words, Then the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speake unto the children of Israel, that they receive an offering for me of every man, &c. The use and profit whereof to us may be this. First, to observe, how although the Lord have no need of any mans goods, whatsoever it is that we possesse in this world, because the whole earth is his, and all that is in it; yet his pleasure is sometimes to seeke these things, and so to make men, as it were, his helpers in such workes as he will have done, that thereby he may even honor his creature with a great favour, and take occasion upon our ready and willing performance of what he seeketh, to heap more and more favours upon us. Remember with your selfe the fiftieth Psalm, I will take no Bullock out of thine house, nor Goates out of thy folds. For all the beasts of the forrest are mine, and so are all cattell upon a thousand hills. I know all the fowles upon the mountaines; and the wilde beasts of the field are in my sight. If I be hungry, I will not tell thee; for the whole world is mine, and all that is therein. Remember the sixteenth Psalme: My goods are nothing unto thee, &c. Whensoever therefore he seeketh it, it is for our good, and not for his need, which being well weighed, may make us more quick and ready to give. As for example, could not he relieve a poore man himselfe, or make of poore rich, all the honours in the world being disposed by him? yet you see he will not, but sendeth him to you and others for a morsell of bread and meate, that you being his instruments, he may take occasion to reward you. So in all other works of charity and piety wherein your purse is used, surely if he had not a purpose to benefit you, he would passe you over, and doe the thing without you. Hurt not your selfe then a pound by sparing a penny. A second profit may be this, to note, that as this materiall Sanctuary figured out the spirituall Temple, which the Lord hath in our bodies and mindes, 1 Cor. 6. 19. so this offering to that, noted what should be the duty of Gods servants ever to this, even to bestow part of such things as God blesseth them withall, of riches and goods, towards the maintenance of this spirituall Temple erected within us, and among us, by the preaching of his word, the administration of his Sacraments, and all other offices of the Ministry to the salvation of our soules, and all our children, servants, or neighbours that live with us, and are by Almighty God commit-committed to our charge. For as then they had grievously sinned, if they denied God an offering to that; so shall we, if we be wanting to this. Thirdly that our goods are not ours to waste at our wills, but God looketh to be honoured with them, imployed to good purposes. Lastly, in seeking this offering to erect an externall worship of his holy Name among them, we see and learne, that God will be worshipped outwardly also in our bodies, as well as inwardly with our spirits, for they are both the Lords.

2. Touching the things to be offered, as Gold, Silver, Brasse, Blew silke, and Purple, Skarlet, fine linnen, Goates haire, &c. Thus you profit by them: First, in the variety and the severall kindes, you see shadowed out unto you the difference of spirituall gifts and graces given by God to men, for the building up of the spirituall Temple or Sanctuary in our hearts, whereof remember the Apostles words in divers places of his Epistles, as to the Romans, when he saith: Seeing then that we have gifts that are divers, according to the grace which is given unto us, whether we have propheſie, let us propheſie according to the proportion of faith: Or an office, let us wait on the office; or he that teacheth on teaching: Or he that exhorteth on exhortation: he that distributeth, let him doe it with simplicity: he that ruleth, with diligence: he that sheweth mercy, with cheerefulnesse. To the Corinthians, There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit: And there are diversities of administrations, but the same Lord: And there are diversities of operations, but God is the same, that worketh all in all, &c. To the Ephesians againe, He therefore gave some to be Apostles, some Prophets, some Evangelists, and some Pastors and Teachers, for the repairing of the Saints, for the work of the ministery, and for the edification of the body of Christ, till we all meet together (in the unity of faith, and that acknowledging of the Sonne of God) unto a perfect man, and unto the measure of the age of the fulnesse of Christ, &c. Thus some men are indued with gold, some with silver, some with blew silke, some with purple, and so forth, that is, with severall gifts and graces, all profitable in some sort for the building of the Sanctuary: and such as God hath given, such must they bring and offer, and such shall be accepted. For to this end also pleased it God to appoint such severall things, that poore and meane persons might be able to offer, and no man exempted for want of power, the very poorest being able to offer Goates haire, and that their meane gift to him was as welcome, as the greater gifts of the rich. To teach us at this day to despise in no man what God himselfe accepteth well, and despiseth not. For had they in those dayes, that were able to offer Gold, Silver, precious stones, blew silke, and so forth, disdained the poorer sort that brought Goates haire, Badgers skinnes, a little Shittim wood, and such like, grievously would God have been displeased with it. And so assuredly now, if any man, upon whom God hath bestowed more, shall proudly scorne and deride him that hath lesse, yet joyning with his little to build Gods Sanctuary, as well as he that hath much, God will see it, abhorre it, and punish it. Away then with all disdaine and scorne in this matter, and humbly acknowledge, that as some men want what thou hast of Learning, Wisdome, Eloquence, and other good gifts to build withall: so doest thou want as much of others, who as farre excell thee, as thou in thine owne opinion doest excell others. O hatefull pride in this behalfe, too much, too much in some that should be wiser, and never since the world was, more then now! We trudge from place to place to feed our fancies, we choose, we judge, we censure, we shoote our bolts in every corner, never remembring this and other places telling us of the severall powers of men, and God his good acceptance of the meanest. Let it mend, and let it end, before God end us and all this pride, to our lasting paine. Joy in them that bring any offering to this worke, being the best they are able, and know it is as true as any thing is true, that the harmelesse simplicity of some Shepheards in the old Church, did sometimes more profit the Church, than the great, exquisite, and fine or delicate (but a little too proud) learning of some others. A learned man of our time saith very well: Every man must walke in his place contentedly: Non omnes possumus esse Cæsares, They that brought not gold, nor silver, nor precious stones, yet did good offices, if they brought but wood or stone. If we cannot attaine to bee Inprimis, to have the first place, yet it is praise-worthy, if we may have the second or third. In the building of the Temple, after this Tabernacle, they that laid the foundation, nay, that digged places to lay the first stone in, that hewed and squared the stone and the timber, were of lesse reputation and account, than those that carved and gilded the Temple; yet was the other works and labour farre more necessary. They that till the land, and sow the seede, that thresh and grinde the corne, are of lower place than those that live in Princes Courts, yet is their labour and service farre more needfull. In mans body the soveraignty is in the head, the eyes and eares, as in place, so in dignity excelling the hands and feete: yet cannot the eye say to the hand, I have no need of thee; nor the head againe to the feete, I may be without you. The greater may not despise the lesse, nor the lesse murmure against the greater, &c. Here therefore Basils speech is good, Attende tibi ipsi, Look to thy selfe: For every one hath in his owne house accusatorem, testem, judicem; an accuser, a witnesse, a judge: Accusat te conscientia, testis est memoria, ratio judex: Looke then to thy selfe, to thy conscience, to thy memory, to thy reason, and thou shalt censure thy selfe if thou live not in thy place accordingly, without either envy of superior, or contempt of inferior. Surgunt indocti &

& cœlum rapiunt, nos cum doctrinis in infernum detrudimur. The unlearned riſe and get heaven, ſaith S. Auguſtine, and we with our learning are caſt into hell. Thus have good men eſteemed of their brethrens meaner gifts, and not deſpiſed them. They offered their Ear-rings and Jewels, which were ornaments to them: and obſerve their zeale, learning by it that nothing ought to be ſo deare unto us, which we cannot finde in our hearts to beſtow willingly to the ſervice and honour of God. Quæ prius luxni, jam Tabernaculo ſerviunt. Thoſe things, ſaith One, that ſerved for ſuperfluity before, now ſerve for Gods Tabernacle. Even ſo ſhould our bodies, that have bin wanton and ſinfull, ſerving ſin, ſerve the Lord in his holy feare, and ſuch humane learning as hath ſerved errour, may be applyed to Religion, and ſerve God, &c. of which we ſpake in the ſpoiles of Ægypt.

3. But with what heart were theſe offerings to be made? The Lord alſo expreſſed that, when he ſaid: Whoſe heart giveth it freely, ver. 2. and in the 35. chapter, ver. 5. Whoſoever is of a willing heart, let him bring this offering to the Lord. Againe, ver. 21. And every one whoſe heart incouraged him, or lifted him up, and every one whoſe ſpirit made him willing. And ver. 22. As many as were free-hearted, &c. By all which repetition, you ſee what an eye God hath ever to the heart of one that doth any thing to him, yea although the thing it ſelfe be commanded, as here ſuch offerings were. Forced ſervice God regardeth not, but will have ever our will concurre cheerefully, and heartily. Wherefore in that great offering of David and the people towards the building of the Temple, which Solomon built, note it and mark it diligently, what mention is made of ſuch a heart, as wel as of ſuch and ſuch gifts; The people rejoyced when they offered willingly, for they offered willingly unto the Lord with a perfect heart. Again, in the 17. verſe. O my God, thou trieſt I know, the heart, and haſt pleaſure in righteouſneſſe: I have offered willingly in the uprightneſſe of mine heart all theſe things: I have alſo found thy people which are here, to have offered willingly with joy. The Apoſtle alſo witneſſeth, that God loveth a cheerefull giver, and what is done grudgingly, that is, with a ſparing and niggardly heart, or of neceſſity, that is, againſt a mans will, as loth to be evill reported of; all that, be it whatſoever, the Lord deſpiſeth and regardeth not: to which agreeth that advice of the wiſe ſon of Syrach, Give unto the moſt High according as hee hath enriched thee, and looke what thine hand is able, give with a cheerefull eye. With a cheerefull eye, I ſay againe, and doe you marke it. For the Lord recompenceth, and will give thee ſeven times as much, meaning as thou giveſt with ſuch a cheerefull eye. Such a matter in all offerings, gifts, and duties to God is willingneſſe, cheerefulneſſe and heartineſſe, making good that ſaying of S. Auguſtine: Nemo invitus benefacit, etiam ſi quod bonum eſt facit. Even a good deed unwillingly done, is not well done. Were this conſidered of people, that for feare of law or ſuch like reſpects come to Church and to the holy Communion without all conſcience and love; of ſuch as cannot be drawne to give any thing to the poore, to reparation to their Church, to the Miniſter that preacheth the word of life unto them, and is in Gods ſtead ſent by him, and directed and inabled by him for their ſalvation, more than by meere authority and ſtrength of the law and the Magiſtrate they ſhall be forced unto, ſurely it would worke ſome better diſpoſition in them I would hope, and ſo draw from a gracious God reward upon willing duties, which now periſh without any profit to them from him, becauſe they are altogether forced. He is able to make it felt and conſidered.

4. The fourth point is, to what end theſe offerings ſhould be? even for the Sanctuary, ſaith the Text, that is, for a place to offer Sacrifices in, and to heare the law in, as we now ſpeak, to make a Church. Vt faciant mihi Sanctuarium, non idolis, non ſibi, ſed mihi, &c. That they make Mee a Sanctuary, not to idols, not to themſelves, but to Mee. For this Sanctuary was in ſtead of a Church unto them till Solomon built the glorious Temple. The favourites of Rome often object to the Profeſſors of the Goſpell, that we have no Churches built by any of our Religion, &c. To whom true anſwer is made, that firſt our bodies are the Temples of the holy Ghoſt, and therefore were there no other Temples than theſe, yet God might dwell in us, and we be his. Secondly, this people of the Jewes, and our Forefathers had no ſuch Churches as now be, but worſhipped the true God in Tabernacles or Tents in the Wilderneſſe before this Sanctuary was made, and then in this Sanctuary, which was moveable alſo from place to place. Thirdly, Jeſus Chriſt in the mountaines, in ſhips, and ſuch like places taught the people, and they heard his Word and beleeved. Iohn Baptiſt in the priſon preached Chriſt, and that was his Church. Paul did the like, and begat Diſciples to Chriſt in his bands. He preached and taught two yeeres together in his owne houſe hired in Rome. Thereupon it hath beene ſaid that our Fathers (true godly men indeed) had darke Churches, and light hearts, afterward counterfeit Chriſtians had ſhining Churches, and darke hearts. Men became like the Diſciples of Chriſt in that error of theirs, when they ſo gazed upon, delighted in, and doted upon the outward forme and matter of the Temple, comming to their Maſter to ſhew him the building of the Temple, and ſaying to him, Maſter, ſee what manner ſtones, and what manner buildings are here, how it was garniſhed with goodly ſtones, and with conſecrate things. To whom Chriſt anſwered: Are theſe the things that ye looke upon? As if he ſhould have ſaid, this is but lightneſſe in you to eye ſo ſo much theſe things, for they are not the things that I moſt eſteem: And therefore the time will come, when not one ſtone ſhall be left upon another, which ſhall not be thrown down: Earthly Temples and Churches have an uſe whileſt God pleaſeth, but true religion may bee without them, and God rightly ſerved if none were. But now there are Churches in the world, and did the Papiſts build them all? No, no, aſſuredly, the Jewes and the Gentiles did build moſt of them, and their labours we enjoy. Some peradventure were built, or repaired by men of Romiſh religion, Princes, Biſhops, or others; but what ſaid their great man Campion preaching at the funerall of Sir Thomas White? Surely (ſaith he) this they did (in maxima rerum utilitate, & multorum opibus adjuti) in a time of great cheapneſſe of every thing, and helped with the riches of many men. Thus could he ſee and ſay before diſcontentment made him Popiſh, and blinde, Popery made him blinde alſo. Conſtantine the Great built Churches before ever Popery was hatched. Charles the Great built Schooles of Divinity and Univerſities in Germany, France, Italy, not for Popery, but for the Bible to be taught, and S. Auguſtines workes read at their tables. Edward the third, King of this Realme loved Wickliffe, adorned the Univerſities, and ſpeaking honourably of the bounty of Princes, blameth and accuſeth greatly the ſpoile and overthrow of Churches by Popes; the Britans, ancient inhabiters of this nation, as Beda witneſſeth, had their Churches and Temples, and yet no Popery. Therefore all was not done by Papiſts. The very Papiſts themſelves confeſſe the contrary. Churches then we have, and not built by them, which yet if we had not, we might be Gods people. Worthy perſons in our dayes which have built Colledges, and enriched Cities, with many ſuch other good workes, would alſo have built Churches if we had wanted.

Epiſt. ad Clementem, de fundationibus, dotationibus, &c.

5. To what end would God have the ſanctuary builded? That I may dwell among them ſaith the Lord, he that hath Heaven for his ſeate and earth for his footſtoole; dwelleth not in Temples made with hands, neither is included in any place. Sola inhabitatio Dei Templum Dei fecit: the only dwelling in Gods Temple makes it Gods. So ſtill becauſe in our Churches the Word is preached, the Sacraments adminiſtred, our prayers made and heard, therefore God alſo dwelleth in them according to his promiſe, where two or three, &c. But becauſe there he gave them viſible ſignes of his gracious preſence, and was not called upon in vaine, but with effect and profit to all men that rightly made their refuge to him, therefore ſuch mercy is called even dwelling among them. God is not changed in theſe dayes, but ſtill kind and comfortable to his people. And therefore even our Temples alſo are his houſes in which he is truly worſhipped, and ever preſent to heare our true prayers, and to ſend us away with his comfort as then he did. Which uſe and end of the Church is a matter of great good to all minds that rightly and righteouſly will meditate of it, and be inſtructed. My houſe ſhall be called a houſe of prayer, and he that ſweareth by the gold of the Temple ſweareth by the Temple & by him that dwelleth in it. Lord I have loved the habitation of thy houſe, & the place where thine honor dwelleth. For if it be his houſe, where he dwelleth and is preſent, if it be the houſe of prayer and the worſhip of God, with what zeale and deſire ſhall we goe to it, with what reverence ſhould we remain in it, and how unwillingly depart from it before an end, what is for the decency of it, how cheerefully ſhould wee give, and the wicked prophaners of it how ſeverely ſhould we puniſh? The Prophet David being letted by his perſecutors, that he could not be preſent in the congregation of Gods people, grievouſly complaineth for it, and proteſteth, that although he was ſeparated in body from them, yet his heart was with them, and that after a very earneſt maner: For even as the Hart deſireth the water brookes (ſaith he) ſo longeth my ſoul after thee O God, my ſoule is athriſt for God, yea even for the living God; when ſhall I come to appeare before the preſence of God? My tears have been my meat day and night, while they daily ſay unto me, where is now thy God? Now when I think thereupon, I pour out my very heart by my ſelf, for I went with the multitude, and brought them forth into the houſe of God in the voice of praiſe and thanksgiving among ſuch as keep holy thy day. In another Pſal. I was glad, when they ſaid unto me, we will goe into the houſe of the Lord. In the 5. Pſalme, But as for me, I will come into thy houſe, even upon the multitude of thy mercy, and in thy feare will I worſhip toward thine holy Temple. Again, We will go into his Tabernacle and fall low on our knees before his footſtool. Lord remember David, how he ſware unto the Lord, and vowed a vow unto the mighty God of Iacob. I will not come within the Tabernacle of mine houſe, or climb up to my bed, I will not ſuffer mine eyes to ſleep nor mine eye lids to ſlumber, neither the temples of my head to take any reſt, untill I find out a place for the Temple of the Lo: an habitation for the mighty God of Iacob, &c. Thus earneſt to have a temple, thus earneſt to go to the Temple, and thus grieved to be from the Temple was this holy King, a Prophet in whom Gods Spirit ruled. Others alſo that have zealouſly loved to go to the Church, hath God noted and chronicled in his booke, both for the incouragement of ſuch as will do the like, and for the juſt condemnation of all ſtubborn deſpiſers of the ſame. Anna, an old woman, that had beene Widow foureſcore and foure yeares, the Lord hath cauſed his holy Evangeliſt to regiſter the praiſe of her, that ſhe went not out of the Temple, but ſerved God with faſtings and prayers day and night. It is ſaid of old Father Simeon, that he came into the Temple by the Motion of the Spirit, when the parents brought the babe Ieſus, to do for him after the cuſtom of the Law.

Gods

Gods Spirit then moveth men to the Church, but never from the Church. The Phariſie and the Publican went both up into the Temple to pray. And ſo good a thing as to goe to the Church, God will not leave unnoted and praiſed in a very Phariſie. The bleſſed Apoſtles Peter, and Iohn, went up together into the Temple at the ninth hour of prayer, when they might have prayed at home, yet they would goe to the Church. Three times in the yeare, ſaid the Law of God, ſhall all the males appeare before me in the place that I ſhall chuſe: ſtill, ſtill to keep them in uſe, and love, and care of the Church, albeit they dwelled a great way off. Where you may obſerve, that although the Law reached but to the males, becauſe God graciouſly conſidered that the women might be with child, or nurſes, & not able to come, yet godly women, when they were able, and had no impediment, would goe up alſo with their husbands, ſuch a zeale had they to the houſe of God where the aſſembly met to ſerve God. So went up Anna with her huſband Elcanah, when ſhe made unto her Sonne Samuel a little coate, and brought it unto him from yeare to yeare. So went up the bleſſed Virgin to Hieruſalem every yeare at the feaſt of the Paſſeover, both of them when there were groſſe and foule corruptions. For when Anna went up, what read you of the Sons of Heli the Prieſt? and when Mary went up, Scribes and Phariſies, & wicked Prieſts were in their ruffe; yet they went up, & many other godly and well diſpoſed, to teach us ever, not to fal out with God for mens faults, nor to abſent our ſelves from Church, and Church-exerciſes, becauſe all things are not perfect in the Miniſters. O let men be men and full of miſeries! let God be God, and full of mercy to regard and reward them that ſo love him, and cleave unto him, to his houſe, and to his ſervice, as for no vices and fault of men, they will be plucked and ſevered from him. To conclude, what a care had Chriſt our Savior himſelfe of Church meetings, comming to them, and obſerving them, that he might doe good in them to many. Vnaquæq; res propria loca habet. Piſces in aqua quæruntur, Feræ in deſertis & mõtibus, Pecora in paſcuis fructus in arboribus, Chriſtus in Templo. All things have their certaine being; Fiſhes are fought in the Sea, wilde beaſts in the deſerts and hils, cattell in the fields, Fruit in the Orchards, Chriſt in the Temple: yea, even in his childhood where was he found when his Parents had loſt him, but in the Tẽple, ſitting in the midſt of the Doctors, both hearing them, and asking them queſtions? To teach it ever to the worlds end, that the place to ſeeke Chriſt, and finde Chriſt in, is the Church; for in other places you may miſſe of him, as his Parents did, but never in the Church ſhall you faile, if you ſeek him duely. It is written of S. Iohn, that when he was ſo old as he could not go to Church, he would be carried by his ſchollers and friends to it. Chryſoſt. Quod apud te precans accipere non potes, &c. That which praying privately thou canſt not obtaine, goe to the Church and pray there for it, and thou ſhalt obtaine. The prayers there made, ſaith S. Hierom, are like a great thunder clap; yea like the roaring of the ſea, ſaith Baſil. One ſtick maketh a fire, but many ſtickes a great and hot fire; one ſtring giveth a ſound, but many ſtrings a melodious ſound, &c. I could not therefore refraine teares, ſaith S. Aug. at the hearing of the ſongs, which thy Church and congregation (met together) did uſe to ſing to thee, O Lord, what time I firſt began to recover my faith unto thee, yea me thinks even yet ſtill I feele my ſelfe raviſhed, not with the ſinging, but with the ſweet matter which is ſung, &c. To the Church, to the Church then let our hearts be, ever following theſe bleſſed examples laid before us, and know it well to be but a late device of the Devill to uphold his Kingdome by ſecret perſwading of people from the Church. There is nothing in the Church but the Scriptures of God, the Sacraments of God, holy prayers, holy and comfortable exhortations to amendment of life drawne out of the Scriptures, all in a tongue that wee underſtand, inſtruction of our children and ſervants for whom wee muſt anſwer, if by our negligence they be caſt away, and in one word, nothing that may hurt or offend juſtly a religious minde. The contrary ſpeeches are ſlanders and ſhameleſſe lies, as your ſelf may ſee if you wil make try-all. Private houſes, and holes, and woods, and thickets, hay-mowes, and barnes, night and darkneſs may pleaſe them that love darkneſſe, and walk in darkneſſe, but a good man, and a good woman will love light, and open aſſemblies, will open both eare and heart to the truth, when God knocketh, and ſtand no more wilfull againſt God, that ſo made them, and bought them, and muſt judge them. The next point is reverence and fit behaviour in the Church, when wee come there, becauſe it is Gods houſe, where he dwelleth, and is preſent. In the firſt of Luke it is ſaid that the whole multitude were without in prayer, while the incenſe was burning, ſo reverently and religiouſly did they then uſe the place. But alas, in our dayes S. Chryſoſt. his complaint may bee taken up; Alios video ſtare, & nugari dum preces fiunt, neq; ſolum dum preces fiunt, ſed et dum Sacerdos benedicit. Neſcis quod cũ Angelis ſtas? cum illis cantas? cum illis hymnos dicis? & ſtas ridens? Non mirum eſſet ſi fulmen emitteretur nõ ſolum in eos, ſed etiã in nos, digna enim fulmine ſunt hæc. I ſee others ſtand & trifle while prayer is ſaid, yea not only when prayer is ſaid, but whẽ the Prieſt bleſſeth. Doeſt thou not know that thou ſtandeſt with the Angels, ſingeſt with the Angels, thou ſaiſt Hymns with them, and ſtandſt thou laughing? It were no marvell if God ſhould ſend out a thunder-bolt, not onely upon them, but upon us alſo, for ſurely theſe things deſerve a thunder-bolt. In another place againe, Non eſt Eccleſia tonſtrina, aut unguentaria taberna, aut officina forenſis, ſed locus Angelorum, Regia Cœli, Cœlũ ipſum. The Church is not a Barbers ſhop, or or an Apothecaries houſe, or a common court, but a place of Angels, the Court of Heaven, and Heaven it ſelfe. Surely, the devout behaviour of the Jewes in the Temple, will be a witneſſe to condemne Chriſtians in the great day. For they to types and figures ſhewed more reverence, than wee now a dayes to the truth and body. Such in thoſe dayes as did not regard this reverence of the place, Cum flagellis utitur, oſtendit tales homines ſervile genus eſſe, non filios ſed ſervos, vel mancipia Diaboli; He whipped out: ſhewing by that baſe puniſhment, that ſuch people are baſe, not ſonnes, but ſervile ſlaves of the Devill. If Moſes were commanded to put off his ſhoos, & told that it was holy ground where God appeared, we may fitly learne by it reverently to demeane our ſelves in the Church. The waſhing in the Law, when they entred into the Tabernacle. The forbidding of burdens to be carried through the Temple, all ſhewed then, and teach us now, reverence of Churches and holy places where Gods people are aſſembled to hear and ſerve him. And if he, ſaith Auguſtine, were worthy great puniſhment that ſhould abuſe a common Well, where all the City fetch their water, may we not ſay much more is he ſeverely to be checked, who abuſeth the common Well, where Gods people fetch the water of Life for their ſoules? Yes, aſſuredly, for the ſinne is greater. I will waſh my hands in innocency, ſaith David, and ſo goe to thine Altar; meaning, hee would ever remember what that holy place requireth. Wicked men will forget it, and do otherwiſe, till Gods wrath breake out, againſt them; See Nicanor, Antiochus, and Heliodorus in the Machabees; and Belſhazzar in Daniel. When the King conceived that Haman would have forced Q. Heſter, he tooke it worſe, becauſe it was in his houſe, and before him, and we meaner men alſo cannot abide our poor houſes to be abuſed, and polluted by any; how much more ſhould not Gods houſe, where he is and ſeeth all? Stat Sacerdos Dei orationem offerens cunctorum, tu autem rides, nihil timens? Non contremiſcis, non colligis teipſum? In aulã Regiam intraturus, & habitu, & oculis, & inceſſu cõponis te & exornas: huc autem ingreſſurus, ubi eſt aula Regis Cœleſtis, rides, garris, ambulas, negotiaris. The Prieſt ſtandeth, ſaith Chryſoſtome againe, offering up the prayers of all, & doeſt thou ſlire and laugh fearing nothing? doeſt thou not tremble and recall thy ſelf? If thou wert about to enter into a Princes Court, thou wouldeſt order thy habit, thy look, and thy gate, but entring into the Church, which is the Court of the Heavenly King, thou doeſt laugh, jangle, walke and make bargaines. As a wiſe man knoweth the difference of times and places, and when to ſpeake and when to hold his peace: ſo a foole obſerveth none, but doth in the Church what was to be done in his private houſe. And as the ſwine putteth his filthy foot in the very ſame trough where hee putteth his mouth to take his meat: ſo the prophane man and woman there ſpeake to their dogge, where they pray to their God, and ſhew no reverence to ſo holy a place.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 36 in 1 Cor.

In old times mens houſes were Churches, but now the Churches are our houſes, yea more prophaned than our houſes, with babbling, with noiſe, with gazing and ſtaring at every one that commeth in, or goeth out, with ſliring and laughing, with ſleeping, and what not that is unfit? if we will buy and bargain, meet at the Church; if you will brawle and brable, meet at the Church; thus, thus are we odious to God and men for abuſing the houſe of Almighty God. The Prieſt of Dagon, and all that came into Dagons houſe forbeare to tread on the threſhold where Dagon their Idol brake his neck, for very reverence; and wee ſhew no reverence in the Court of the High God, his Church and Temple. To goe in to pleaſe God, and further to diſpleaſe him, and ſo to increaſe the ſinne thou prayedſt pardon for, what a madneſſe is it, if it be well conſidered? Great care then let us ever have in the Church of God, where Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt behold us to doe nothing any way unfitting the place. The Lord ſhall never ſuffer ſuch Chriſtian reverence of his houſe, want a rich and comfortable bleſſing. Let us alſo conſider the dulneſſe of many men to adorne this houſe, to repaire it, to maintaine it: and doe theſe remember it is Gods houſe? What coſt we beſtow in our owne dwellings, who ſeeth not? and yet never ſhall they be ours longer than this God ſhall keepe them to us, whoſe houſe wee thus neglect. Truely it is fearfull to ſee mens backwardneſſe in this behalfe. Were God without a houſe till they built one, that will not uphold one already built, it would be long. How then can they ſay they deſire his dwelling among them, and his preſence to their comfort? No, no, they are farre from feeling the true uſe of Church-meeting, that thus hardly, or not at all are drawne to any contributions for them.

1 King. 5. 5.

To repaire our Churches.

Apol. cap. 1. 9.

They taſte not what Tertullian taſted, when he ſaid, Coit cœtus, congregantur omnes, & quaſi manu facta precationibus ambiunt Deum orantes. Grata hæc vis eſt Deo, quodque ſingulis petentibus negaturus fortè fuerat, multorum unanimitati precantium fere tribuit. The aſſembly commeth together, and all meeting as it were with an hoaſt or band of men, they ſet upon God with their joyned prayers, and the Lord accepteth well ſuch force offered unto him, granting commonly to that one voyce of many, what he would not have granted to ſome of them, if they had beene ſeverall. Surely as many ſtickes make a great fire, and many ſtrings a fuller muſicke; ſo is the meeting of many in the Church to pray together, a fire of great heate, and an harmony paſſing pleaſing to the Lord. The Churches are like thoſe Cities of refuge, which GOD appointed among the Iſraelites, whither hee that had offended might might flie and finde pardon, onely thoſe Sanctuaries were for ſome kinde of faults, and the Church is for all kinde, ſo that we heartily and unfeignedly cry, Lord forgive: and what a comfort is this meditation, if you follow it? Doth the Husbandman ſow, onely for the pleaſure he taketh to ſow, or doth he it to the end he may reape? Doth the Merchant onely adventure for a pleaſure to ſaile, or doth hee it to gaine and get? So, ſo muſt a Chriſtian man or woman goe to the Church, not for the pleaſure of walking, or ſuch like, but to get and gaine ſome ſpirituall comfort and profit, which if wee doe, certainly that God, that ſeeth our hearts, deſires, and drifts, will mercifully and graciouſly anſwer the ſame to our good contentment. Let theſe things therefore increaſe our love to the Church, to goe to it, to ſpend the time well when wee are there, and to tarry out the end of all Divine duties there: which laſt point S. Chryſoſtome exhorteth unto by much perſwaſion, finding the fault even then as it ſeemeth, which too too much aboundeth in our Churches, namely, to depart away before the end of Prayers and Sermon. Medicamentum, inquit, ſi tibi adhibeatur, nec te ſanet, an non altero die adhibebis? Si inciſor arboris uno ictu non incidat, an non plures adhibebit? Sic tu ingreſſus Eccleſiam, & admiſſus ad conſortium Chriſti, noli exire, niſi dimittaris: nam ſi exeas, tanquam fugitivus repoſceris. Totum diem in his quæ ad corpus ſpectant inſumis, & duas horas ſpiritualibus non vacas? Ad theatrum venis, & non diſcedis donec dicatur valete & plaudite; & in Eccleſiam ingreſſus, priuſquam Divina myſteria peragantur, abis? A medicine, ſaith he, if it be applyed to thee, and help thee not the firſt day, wilt thou not uſe it the ſecond day againe? A feller of a tree, if he cannot ſmite it downe at one blow, will he not ſmite againe and againe till it fall? So thou entring into the Church, & admitted to the company of Chriſt, depart not away till thou be diſmiſſed. For if thou goe forth, thou ſhalt be called for againe as a fugitive. All the whole day thou canſt be content to beſtow in things concerning the body, and canſt thou not beſtow two houres upon ſpirituall matters? To the Theater where the Play is, thou wilt come, and not depart before the end, and out of Gods houſe wilt thou depart before an end? Thus effectually did that godly Father then reprove this fault, and let it move us much. Divers Councils alſo laid downe expreſſe Decrees againſt it, as may be ſeene. But let this ſuffice of this matter occaſioned by the end and uſe of this Sanctuary, which God here would have built. Namely, that he might dwell amongſt them.

6 The laſt point is the forme and faſhion of it, which God here expreſly commandeth ſhould be According to all he that ſhewed him, even ſo ſhould he make it, and all the inſtruments of it. Afterward often it is repeated, according to that patterne which God ſhewed Moſes in the Mountaine, verſe 40. Wherein we are moſt plainly taught, that in the ſervice and worſhip of God our devices and inventions muſt have no place, but carefully and preciſely we muſt ever ſerve him according to his owne patterne and preſcription left us in his holy Word. Much hath the Word of this matter, and we muſt be very heedfull of it. Heare O Iſrael, ſaith the Lord, the ordinances and lawes which I teach you, &c. Ye ſhall put nothing to the word which I command you, neither ſhall you take ought therefrom. Againe, yee ſhall not doe whatſoever ſeemeth good in your eyes: But to the place which the Lord God ſhall chooſe, thither ſhall you bring all that I command you, &c. Againe, Ye ſhall have fringes upon the borders of your garments, and put upon the fringes of the borders a riband of blew ſilke: that when you look upon them, ye may remember all the Commandements of the Lord to doe them, and that ye ſeeke not after your owne heart, nor after your owne eyes, &c. The puniſhment of tranſgreſſing in this kinde you may reade in many places in the Old and New Teſtament. He that breaketh the leaſt of theſe commandements, ſhall be counted the leaſt in the Kingdome of God. If any man love me, he will keep my Word. Then are you my friends if you do what I command you. The Apoſtle condemneth all voluntary religion to the Coloſſians, and the place is worthy looking on. Therefore himſelfe expreſly mentioneth, that touching the holy Sacrament hee delivered nothing but what hee had received. For in vaine, in vaine, ſaith he, doe we worſhip God, teaching for doctrines mens precepts. Secondly, in that God ſheweth Moſes a patterne, we may conſider, that as a builder before hee build a houſe, in a paper uſeth to draw the whole plot and forme; ſo Almighty God before the ſending of his Sonne in our fleſh, which is the builder of the New Teſtament, in the Ceremonies of the Law, as in a paper or patterne, drew and diſcovered the manner of his worſhip, and mercies and favours in Chriſt. And as the ſame builder, after he hath finiſhed the worke, taketh away, and throweth downe all Scaffolds and props and ſtayes uſed before; ſo the Lord ſoone after the reſurrection of Chriſt, having ended the happy worke of our ſalvation, tooke away all the Moſaicall policy, with theſe Ceremonies, that onely Chriſt might be looked at, and not theſe, not ſparing that glorious materiall Temple, which if it had ſtood, never would or could men have beene drawne from theſe ſhadowes to the body and truth of all.

This matter of the Tabernacle is againe ſpoken of in the 35. Chapter, whither you may turne and reade that with this, out of which reading happily this queſtion may come in your minde, why God would have either now ſuch a ſumptuous Tabernacle erected, or afterward ſuch a glorious Temple? and you may anſwer thus. That becauſe the Heathens and Gentiles had all things ſo rich and coſtly in their Temples, therefore it pleaſed God to match and exceed that that beauty, leſt ignorant ſoules ſhould have thought him leſſe worth, being the true and everlaſting God, than thoſe Idols, and his children and people baſer, and leſſe to be regarded than thoſe Idolaters, true religion worſe than falſe, and ſo have fallen away to their utter confuſion. Which alſo was ſome reaſon, why the Lord burthened them with ſuch a multitude of Ceremonies, leſt they ſhould have leiſure to looke unto the Gentiles, and to deviſe new matters in imitation of them, as mans curious nature is too apt to doe. A bleſſed care of humane frailty, and an unſearchable goodneſſe to keepe man from falling. But a ſecond queſtion ariſeth upon this, whether now under the Goſpell it ſhould not bee ſo alſo, ſeeing Temples of Idolaters Coloſ.2.17. and Idolatry are now alſo very glorious to the eye? The anſwer is true, No, For, as S. Paul teacheth, all theſe Moſaicall Ceremonies were but ſhadowes of things to come; and the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes plainly ſaith, that the Old Teſtament was nothing but the ſhadow of the New, which ſhadowes are vaniſhed, the bodie and truth being come, as was ſaid a little before. For a time thus it pleaſed God to ſubmit himſelfe to a man, and to teach him by theſe things, but it was not the courſe hee entended to continue. Since therefore the Jewes had a commandement, and Romiſh Idolaters now have none, ſince theſe things repreſented what now is come and can no longer be preſented as future, you ſee the caſe is farre differing, and he ſaid well that ſaid it:

Dicite Pontifices, in Tempo quid facit aurum?
Nempe hoc quod Veneri donata à virgine puppæ.

Tell me ye Prieſts, what doth gold in the Church, or in Gods worſhip, &c? Thus could the Satyricall Poet reprehend the exceſſe of the Gentiles in adoring their Churches. Exuperius, Biſhop of Tolouſe a City of Narbon in France neare the Pyrene Mountains, carried the Sacrament in a little wicker basket (I meane the bread,) and the wine in a glaſſe. Saint Hierome writing to Nepotian inveigheth alſo againſt too much glory and gliſtering in Churches. Saint Ambroſe likewiſe in his Offices, Lib.2. Cap. 28. And when in the Councell it was argued, whether golden or wooden veſſels were fit for the Temple, Boniface the Martyr anſwered: Cum aurei eſſent Sacerdotes, ligneos habuerunt calices, nunc lignei Sacerdotes, volunt habere aureos calices: When the Prieſts were golden, they had wooden Cups, but now their Prieſts were wooden, they will have golden Cups. Theſe things reprove not what is fit in Churches, but condemne rightly all unneceſſary exceſſe and ſuperfluity, ſuch as is in Popiſh Churches at this day, and was in uſe among the Gentiles; God is now worſhipped in ſpirit and truth, Iohn 4.24.

Verse 7.

The Arke.

HAving passed over the Preparation of Ceremonies and shadowes, now in the tenth verse beginneth the matter it selfe, and first of the Arke. They shall also make an Arke of Shittim wood, two Cubits and a halfe long, and a Cubit and a halfe broad, and a Cubit and a halfe high. And thou shalt over-lay it with pure gold within and without, and so forth: Reade you the Text, and marke every particular thing as it is expresst. For exposition whereof, you may know, that first this Arke was an outward signe unto that people of God his presence among them, and therefore as in other things the name of the thing signified, is attributed to the signe, so is it in this. For you reade Davids words so, when he sent to fetch the Arke of God, whose name is called by the Name of the Lord of Hosts, that dwelleth betweene the Cherubins. And in the booke of Numbers, when the Campe removed, they spake to it as to God: Vp Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered, &c. Secondly, as men are apt and prone to abuse outward signes and Sacraments, tying God to them, and too much trusting in them: so did the Israelites abuse this Arke. For in the time of Heli the Priest, when they had warre with the Philistims, and were put to the worse, streight way they sent for the Arke out of Shiloh, and alledge this reason, That it might save them out of the hands of their enemies. And when it came into the Hoast, they shouted a mighty shoute, so that the earth rang againe, when God was not tyed to the Arke, but could bee present with them without it, neither could the outward matter of the Arke profit them. So abuse some men the words of the Scripture, as of Saint Iohn his Gospell, hanging them about their necks, and putting trust in the outward words, whereof S. Chrysostome much complaineth, if that be his worke upon Matthew which is ascribed to him. Thus in our time is the Sacrament of the Lords body abused, by carrying the outward signes up and downe on Horse-backe, and foote, and giving that to the signe, which is proper to the thing signified. Thirdly, for the Name you may observe, it is called the Arke of the Covenant, the Arke of the Testament, and the Arke of the Testimony. The reason, because in this Arke was the Law kept written in the two Tables, which Law is called the Booke of the Covenant, Exod. 24. 7. or the Testament of God, Psal. 78. 10. or the Testimonies of God, Psal. 119. Blessed are they that keepe his Testimonies: I have had as great delight in the way of thy Testimonies, as in all manner of riches. And in this Chapter, Thou shalt put in the Arke, the Testimony which I shall give thee, verse. 16. for the like cause also shall ye reade the whole Tabernacle, called the Tabernacle of the Covenant, or of the Testimony, because it contained this Arke wherin the Law was. Fourthly, for the signification some make this Arke a figure of Christ, and resemble it thus: the wood whereof the Arke was made, was Shittim wood, a durable and lasting wood, not subject to worms and corruption as other wood is: so representing and shadowing the humanity of Christ, whose body in the grave felt no corruption and putrefaction, as other mens flesh and bodies doe, neither was subject to sinne. That wood was overlaid with pure Gold, both within and without, so shaddowing out the divine nature of Christ united to his manhood, the incomprehensible excellency whereof, wee have nothing here in earth more precious than gold to resemble, and yet even in that no comparison. The Crowne of Gold that went about it, shadowed the Majesty of his Kingdome, of which so great things are spoken of in the Scripture. The rings and the barres by which the Arke was carryed, were shadowing figures of the preaching of the Gospell, by which Christ is carryed and borne from place to place through the world, as his owne divine will shall appoint. The barres remained ever in the rings, and might not be taken out; so figuring, that preaching and Christ must not be severed, but ever be together. Wherefore whosoever teacheth and preacheth mans merits, as either wholly or partly the cause of Salvation, the Preacher and teacher pulleth the barres out of the rings, and severeth them from the Arke, a thing forbidden and unlawfull, offending God, hurting eternally the party so doing, without undeserved mercy. The Arke must be carryed onely by the Levites, and not by every Tribe, so is there a calling still to the preaching of the Word, and every man indifferently may not doe it: those Levites were able to carry the Arke, and so should men called to the Ministerie be able to preach in some measure, though not in like measure, as neither had the Levites like bodily strength, neither had like burthens imposed impoſed upon them. They were alſo willing and carefull to doe what they were able and commanded to doe: and certainly even ſo ſhould it be in preaching: power and paines ſhould goe together, otherwiſe the ſinne is as great now, as it ſhould have beene then, in that kinde of bearing that materiall Arke, the figure and ſhadow of Chriſt, and of this bearing of him before our Brethren, if it had beene then neglected either for want of ſtrength or will. Hence are the Miniſters called the Pillers of the Church. A thing not ſo deeply conſidered of many Miniſters as it ſhould, and as I pray God make it to be. To the calling we come of carrying the Arke, but from the paines many runne, and let the Ark alone. It will not ever be borne of a juſt God, and therefore happy he that returneth ſooneſt to his office. This Arke, as hath beene ſaid, was a ſigne of Gods preſence, ſo that when the Arke was there, God was thought to bee there, but how much more is Jeſus Chriſt the cauſe that God is preſent with us? from whom our ſin had ſo ſevered us, as where we were he would not bee, and where he was, we could not be. In this Arke was the Law, to ſhadow how Chriſt for us ſhould undergoe the Law, ſatisfie and fulfill it in all points, and ſo free and deliver us from it. There was the pot of Manna ſhadowing that Chriſt ſhould be the true bread from heaven, nouriſhing to eternall life, all thoſe that faithfully feed upon him. And thirdly, there was Aarons Rod that budded, ſo to repreſent the Prieſthood of Chriſt for ever (after the order of Melchiſedech) and his reſurrection, who being dead lived againe, as Aarons rod, dead and drie, budded and bare againe. Finally, where the Arke was, there was it lawfull to ſerve God, and not in every place; and where Chriſt is, there is the true Church, and without him, no ſervice nor labour acceptable, in whom, and by whom onely wee can pleaſe. What an excellent figure then was this Arke of Chriſt, and how rightly, though ſomewhat obſcurely, (for ſo then it pleaſed God to deale) did it lay before the Jews their future Meſſiah? Others have made it a figure of the Church, and followed the application that way. As for the Name, the Arke, as you have heard, was called the Arke of the Covenant; and what is the Church but the people of the Covenant, that is, a peculiar flocke and company choſen of God, with whom he hath made a gracious league and covenant, as you read in Eſay, The Mountaines ſhall remove, and the hills ſhall fall downe, but my mercy ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the Covenant of my peace fall away, ſaith the Lord, that hath compaſſion on thee, &c. This is my Covenant with them ſaith the Lord: My ſpirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in the mouth of thy ſeed from henceforth for ever. A comfortable meditation in all the ſtormes and ſtirres of the Church Militant here on earth, to looke and runne unto his Covenant which ſhall never faile, becauſe God is true, and to conſider that whatſoever men be, or doe, or threaten to doe, the Church dependeth not upon men, nor their favours, or leagues, or promiſes, but upon Gods covenant with it, even the Almighty maker of all worldly maſſes, who bloweth upon all earthly Potentates, and they periſh, who ſaveth not with bowe and ſpeare, but with his word and will, no confederacies of men being able, to endure his wrath. He is our ſtrength and ſtony rocke, hee is our defence, our Saviour, our God and our might, in whom we will ever truſt, our buckler, the horne alſo of our ſalvation, and our refuge. By his Commandement it is ſaid to the members of his Church, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the Holy Ghoſt. As much, as if hee ſhould will his Miniſter to ſay from him to mee, to you, to every one particularly, I the Almighty God maker and preſerver of all things, together with my coeternall Sonne crucified for thee, and raiſed up againe, and with the Holy Ghoſt powred upon the Apoſtles, make with thee a covenant of everlaſting peace, which by no power of the Devill or his members ſhall ever be made fruſtrate. And to this covenant I flie in all my feares, ſeeking no unlawfull meanes, but remembring comfortably the words ſpoken, Quoniam in me ſperavit, liberabo eum; protegam eum, quia cognovit nomen meum, &c. Becauſe he hath hoped in mee, I will deliver him; I will ſave him, becauſe he hath knowne my Name. I am with him in trouble (to wit, as his confederate) I will deliver him, and exalt him to honour, I will fill him with length of life, and ſhew him my ſalvation. Then for the keeping of the Law, as the two Tables of Moſes were kept in the Arke: ſo is the Church the keeper of the Scriptures, not onely by entertaining and holding the holy doctrine in our ſeverall hearts, as in an Arke, but even alſo by preſerving the bookes and the miniſtery of the truth to the end of the world, in proſperity and adverſity. *Arca typus Eccleſiæ, quæ eſt fida cunctis Teſtimoniorum Dei, ea lignea quidem eſt, ſed operta auro mundo: ſic Eccleſia colligitur ex hominibus infirmis, ſed donis Spiritus Sancti ornata eſt, atque Dei gratia, munda, ſplendida, & illuſtris. In hac Deus ſua gratia, præſens eſt. Tegitur Propitiatorio: ſic Chriſtus tegit Eccleſiam, & caput eſt, legem nos accuſantem tegit, impetrata remiſſione merito ſuo, & communicata juſtitia ſua. In it God by his grace is preſent. It is covered with a propitiatory covers his Church and is the head of it; by his merit and communicated Justice, protecting us from the Law accusing us. The Cherubims are present with him; so the Church by the commandement of God is shadowed and defended under his wings by the Ministery of Angels. It is caried with two wheeles; so the Church having yet no certaine place upon earth is governed by the ministery of the Old and New Testament.

The Mercy-Seat.

THe Arke, as you may see, had a cover appointed to be made for it, which was the Mercy-Seat, or the Propitiatory. The words of your Bible are thus: Also thou shalt make a Mercy-Seat of pure gold, two cubits and a halfe long, and a cubit and a half broad. And thou shalt make two Cherubims of Gold, &c. How notable a Figure again this was of Christ, I pray you see: for first, it was the cover of the Arke where the law of Moses lay: and who hideth and covereth us from the wrath of God, and from the accusation of the Law but Jesus Christ? He is like a coole shadow to flie unto in the scorching heat of Gods deserved displeasure, which is a consuming fire. And were it not for him, up would the Law rise against us with his heavy curse, and cry for condemnation against us for our manifold breaches and contempts, which no flesh is able to abide. Whereupon the Psalmist saith, O Lord, O Lord, if thou wilt marke what is done amisse, who, who is able to endure it? But doe not thou, O Lord, enter into judgement with thy servant, (to wit, without this Mercy-Seat, cover, or propitiatory) for without Christ thy Sonne represented and shadowed hereby, shall no flesh be justified in thy sight. Our first Parents having sinned, covered themselves with Figge-leaves; and did they helpe? Even so are all covers beside this, against God and sinne, try them and trust them who will. One Dionysius a sowre and severe defender of that Stoicall unfeelingnesse of passions, being tormented in his reines, cryed out, that all things were false which he had till then held of paine and griefe, as that it might so easily be born and endured whatsoever it was; for now he felt the contrary, that paine pincheth and will bee felt, notwithstanding all Plaisters of Philosophy and humane reasons. Even so shall the sense of Gods Divine judgement convince all Hypocrites when he shall please to touch them with it, and make them confesse, that will-worship and outward workes whatsoever, are as Fig-leaves to hide them from God and their sinnes, whatsoever opinion they have formerly held of the force and merit of them, and that Christ onely is the cover of the Arke where the accusing Law lyeth, to whom whosoever flye, and in whom whosoever trust, Being justified by faith, they have peace with God through him. Thinke you then of it for ever, and lay hold on Him, and on Him onely, by your unfeigned faith in him, if you meane to bee sure and safe without perill and hazzard. Hee is our mouth whereby wee speake unto God, Hee is our Eye whereby wee see God, and Hee is our hand whereby wee offer to God. Quo nisi intercedente, nec nobis nec omnibus Sanctis eum Deo quicquam est, Without whose intercession, neither wee, nor any of the Saints have any thing to doe with God. Quem invenirem qui me tibi reconciliaret? An eundum mihi ad Angelos? At qua prece? quibus Sacramentis? verus Mediator Christus. Whom should I finde to reconcile me to thee (saith Saint Augustine.) Must I goe unto Angels? But with what prayer? with what Sacraments? The true Mediator is Christ. Quisquis pro peccato compunctus esurit & sitit justitiam, credat in te qui justificas impium, & per solam fidem justificatus, pacem habebit apud Deum. Whosoever feeleth compunction for sinne, and hungreth and thirsteth after righteousnesse, let him beleeve in thee that doest justifie the wicked, and by faith onely hee shall have peace with God, saith Saint Bernard. Non in fletibus & actibus nostris, sed in Advocati nostri allegatione confidimus: Wee doe not trust in our weeping or working, but in the allegation or pleading of our Advocate for us, saith Saint Gregory. Thus spake the old Fathers all, and we must marke it. Popes pardons were pro fisco, non pro Christo; for their owne gaine, not for the good of Christs people, as one of their owne side said well of them, &c.

2. Secondly, it was of gold, that so it might shadow and shew, that although Christ should suffer and die for sinne, yet he should himselfe have no sinne, but be pure as gold, that is, holy, just, unspotted, the immaculate Lambe of God in whom there is no blemish of impurity. In all things (saith the Apostle) he was tempted in like sort, yet without sinne.

3. There were two Cherubims set upon this Mercy-Seat, in manner as you see expressed in the Picture of your Bible, which Cherubims, whatsoever Iosephus saith, were in the most received opinion, like Angels, happily to shadow out the subjection of all Angels to Christ, and their ready service at his Commandement for the Church, and any particular member thereof. For unto which of the Angels, saith the Apostle, did God say at any time, Thou art my sonne, this day begat I thee? No, it is said, Let all the Angels of God worship him. And of the Angels he saith, He maketh his Spirits his Messengers, and his Ministers a flame of fire. Also to shew as they are obedient and serviceable at all appointments, so should we be; remembring the incomprehensible goodnesse of our God, who among other his infinite favours wher-

Figuring alſo the moſt comfortable protection of the Lord Jeſus our Saviour, who ſpreadeth as it were his wings over his Church, and every member of it, to repulſe any harme that may happen, other then he will graciouſly turne to his glory, and to the Churches or parties good, which then indeed is no harme, but a benefit rather, although bitter to the fleſh, and diſgraceſull in the world. Thus ſpread he his wings over Iacob, and ſaved him from Laban; over Ioſeph, and ſaved him from his brethren; over Eliah, and ſaved him from Ieſabel; over Eliſhah, 2 Kings 6. And thus ever as the hen to cover her chickens, ſo is the Lord our gracious God to all that truly feare him. A marvellous ſweet Meditation, if you follow it.

Verſe 20. Mat.17.3. See his transfiguration. Twelve Legions of Angels could he have had, &c. Acts 26.22.

5. The faces of theſe Cherubims were one towards another, and both of them toward the Mercy-Seat: ſo repreſenting the conſent of the Old & New Teſtament, in both which there is but one truth and one doctrine; the Old having his face toward the New, and the New alſo looking at the Old. For what is the Old Teſtament but the New (obſcure?) And what the New Teſtament, but the Old made plaine? And both Old and New looke upon Chriſt, the promiſed ſeed of the Woman that ſhould bruiſe the Serpents head. They being ſaved in the Old Teſtament by beleeving hee ſhould come; and we being ſaved in the New, by beleeving he is come.

Verſe 22.

6. And there (ſaid God) I will declare me ſelfe unto thee, and from above the Mercy-Seat, between the two Cherubims which are upon the Arke of the Teſtimony, I will tell thee all things, which I will give thee in Commandement unto the Children of Iſrael. Still note the excellency of this Figure of the Mercy-Seat. For as God before had ſpoken out of the buſh, Exod. 3. 4. verſe, and out of the Cloud, Numb. 12. 5. verſe: ſo hereafter, ſaith he, I will ſpeake to you from betwixt theſe Cherubims, and ſo he did. For in the Book of Numbers you reade thus; When Moſes went into the Tabernacle of the Congregation to ſpeake with God, he heard the voice of one ſpeaking unto him from the Mercy-Seat, that was upon the Arke of the Teſtimony betweene the two Cherubims, and he ſpake to him. Whereupon the Prophet Eſay ſaith, God dwelleth betweene the Cherubims. And David in his Pſalm alſo, The Lord is King, be the people never ſo impatient, he ſitteth between the Cherubims, be the earth never ſo unquiet. And againe, Heare O thou Shepheard of Iſrael, thou that leadeſt Ioſeph like a ſheep: ſhew thy ſelfe alſo, that ſitteſt upon the Cherubims. And fitly did this reſemble Chriſt, by whom God afterward would ſpeake unto his Church whatſoever he would command. As the Apoſtle writeth to the Hebrewes, when he ſaith: At ſundry times, and in divers manners God ſpake in the old time to our Fathers by the Prophets, but in theſe laſt dayes he hath ſpoken to us by his Sonne: which ſtill he continueth, and will unto the end of the world, though not by living voice and perſonall preſence in earth, as he did for a time. How then? Still looke upon the figure. Two Cherubims were upon the Mercy-Seat repreſenting (as you have heard) the two Teſtaments, and from betweene thoſe two Cherubims God ſpake: ſo doth Chriſt ſtill by the two Teſtaments the Old and the New, the Law and the Goſpell, the Prophets and Apoſtles; and ſo will he ſtill ſpeake to the end. Other wayes we muſt not now expect. Revelation and Dreames, Viſions and Miracles are ceaſed, and if they will not heare Moſes and the Prophets, neither will they beleeve if one ſhould riſe and come from the dead unto them. In Moſes and the Prophets is the New Teſtament contained, though obſcurely, as you have heard; and therefore ſtill to theſe Cherubims reſort, if you meane to heare your God ſpeake. Huge is the heape therefore of their ſinne, that bar Gods people from this way, and will make themſelves to be Cherubims, onely to bee heard and beleeved, ſhamefully affirming, that the people are not to ſearch the Scriptures, but to receive all things from their Teachers upon their bare credit, not reaſoning, not diſputing, not asking any queſtions more than the horſe asketh his maſter, why he turneth him this way, or that? but ſimply obeying. Thus never dealt God with people ſince he gave them his Scriptures, you well know: but as the other parts of their Spirituall armour, Helmet, Breſtplate, &c. ſo he bade them take their weapons, (without which what ſhould armour doe?) even their Sword, which, ſaith he, is the word of God. But truth ſeekes no darkneſſe, and lies love no light. Be you armed, being warned, and goe you to the Cherubims, where you ſhall heare God (that deceiveth not) ſpeake unto you, knowing that as theſe people of the Jewes were tyed to the Propitiatory, ſo are we now to Chriſt in his word.

The

The Table of the Shew-bread.

THen ſhalt thou alſo make a Table of Shittim wood of two cubits long, &c. The building and parts you muſt reade in your Bible. This Table againe was a third figure of Chriſt, who is propounded of God to his Church, as a Table furniſhed with all dainties and contents. Nothing is wanting in him that we can want, and is good for us to have; but aske and you ſhall have, ſeeke and you ſhall finde. He is the riches of God to all that beleeve in him. The Shew-bread upon this Table, repreſented the word, and the preaching of the ſame; whereby, as by bread man is fed, ſtrengthned, and continued alive. The one thus worketh to his body, the other affecteth it to his ſoule. A great bleſſing is the one, a farre greater is the other. And therefore labour not for the meat which periſheth, ſaith our Saviour Chriſt, but for the meat which endureth to eternall life, &c. It was called Shew-bread, becauſe it alwayes ſhewed it ſelfe before God. For it was not lawfull to remove the old, before they brought and placed their new, and ſo it never wanted, ver. 30. In Hebrew, the Bread of faces, becauſe it ever ſtood before the face of God, as a continuall remembrance of the twelve tribes of Iſrael. The being of it continually, figured how preaching ought to be continuall. Verſe 23. 1 Cor. 1. 30. Wiſdome, Righteouſneſſe &c. Iohn 6. 27.

2. When as the Iſraelites did eat of the ſame wheat whereof the Shew-bread was made (the ſame being of the firſt fruits of their corne offered) they were thereby admoniſhed by Type and Figure, to eate and drinke ever as if they ſate before God, and were his gueſts: and that the bread and meate whereon they fed, was in ſome ſort holy and conſecrate to God, to bee uſed therefore ſoberly and reverently. The like good meditation may we have at this day, although we have not the ſame Ceremony. For whoſe are all the creatures we uſe for the refreſhing of our bodies, but the Lords? And ſhould we then abuſe them riotouſly, prophanely, waſtfully, and wickedly, as many doe? The fault is manifeſt, the truth and right is as manifeſt. Such as be Gods will note it, and amend it if there be any fault, giving thankes both before and after, for ſuch goodneſſe as we little deſerve, and uſe them well.

3. Thou ſhalt alſo make diſhes (to ſet the bread upon) for it, and Incenſe cups, and coverings, and Goblets, &c. Deſervedly was that Biſhop commended, which ſold the holy veſſels in the time of famine, to relieve the poore with the money, and excuſed himſelfe to the Church: That becauſe God neither eateth nor drinketh, therefore he needeth no diſhes nor cups. But to have ſaid thus in the time of theſe ceremonies, and by that pretext to have robbed the houſe of God of thoſe things, had not been well. For every thing hath his proper time. As then to have taken them away being commanded for types and figures, had beene evill: ſo now to bring them in without commandement, and to keepe figures when the truth and body is come, is alſo unlawfull. Which might yeeld a ſober minde due contentment againſt the idle and ſuperfluous furniture of Popiſh Churches, neither to deſire it when it is wanting, nor to like it when it is preſent. Verſe 29.

Neither is the Church now in her infancy, nor true beleevers in their minority, but ſhadows are gone, Chriſt is come, and his true worſhippers worſhip him in ſpirit and truth. Moſes and the Prophets are read and preached, mens hearts are opened by the holy Ghoſt in the Miniſtery of the word, being powerfull and ſtrong: Good life is ſought, and ſin is reproved: Prayers are offered up unto God in a tongue underſtood: the Sacraments adminiſtred duly according to their inſtitution: And this is a bleſſed beauty in a Church: though there be neither gold nor ſilver ſhining upon the walls; the truth and comfort of conſcience ſhining within us is far more excellent. Iohn 4. 23.

The Candleſticke.

ALſo, thou ſhalt make a Candleſtick of pure Gold: of work beaten out with the hammer ſhall the Candleſtick be made, his ſhaft, and his branches, his bowles, and his knops, and his flowers ſhall be of the ſame. Sixe branches ſhall come out of the ſides of it, &c. Verſe 31. Verſe 32.

A fourth figure of Chriſt is this Candleſticke, and of other good things alſo taught by it myſtically. As firſt, the whole Candleſtick being an inſtrument of light, noteth out fitly, that even ſo Chriſt is the light of his Church, which light of his, in his holy Scriptures, he propoſeth continually to men and women that will reade them. The Heathens and Pagans had their Religion; but becauſe they had not this Candleſtick Chriſt, therefore they had no light, but were vaine in their thoughts, and their fooliſh heart was full of darkneſſe. They turned the glory of the incorruptible God to the ſimilitude of the image of a corruptible man, and of birds, and foure-footed beaſts, and of creeping things. They turned the truth of God into a lie, and worſhipped and ſerved the creature, forſaking the Creator, &c. The faithfull have this Candleſticke, and therefore their Religion is true, they have light and know what they worſhip. Their actions and manners alſo are directed aright: for they are made to ſee what truly pleaſeth, & what truly diſpleaſeth, not following their Rom. 1. 23, 25. Iohn 4. 22.

owne imaginations and wils, doing what ſeemeth good in their owne eyes, but what God hath commanded that doe they.

2. The Candleſticke was in the Sanctuary or Church, and the light of the word whereby Chriſt ſhineth, ſhould be in the Church, that all the congregation thither comming, might ſee and receive the comfort of it. This is the true beauty of a Church indeed as hath been ſaid, and therefore either their ignorance, or their malice was monſtrous, who ſet Candleſtickes of gold, and ſilver, and ſhining braſſe in their Church, but could not abide the word, unleſſe it were in a ſtrange tongue: all light but that light was regarded: banners, and pictures, and ſilkes, and ſmels, and all beauty, but not the Scriptures. Therefore ſeeing they had not the true Candleſtick, Chriſt in his word giving light, their glory was vanity, and their light was groſſe and grievous darkneſſe.

Greg ho. 6. ſuper Ezech.

3. The Candleſticke, as you ſee in the picture of your Bible, had an upright ſtemme, and ſixe branches iſſuing out, three on either ſide of the ſtemme. The ſtemme repreſented Chriſt, from whom all light groweth, even as the ſixe branches come out of the ſtemme. The branches are ſet in the ſtem, and ſo are all that give light ſet in Chriſt. The branch, ſaith our Saviour, cannot beare fruit in it ſelf, except it abide in the Vine, no more can ye except ye abide in me. I am the Vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit; for without me can ye doe nothing. Even ſo ſay you of light: No man is an inſtrument of any light to others, but as he himſelfe is in the ſtemme Chriſt, from whom commeth all light. In him men give much light, and ſhine unto many both farre and neare by word and writing, &c.

John 15.4.

4. There are many branches of the Candleſtick. The branches are chiefly the Miniſters of the Church, and the variety noteth their divers degrees and orders. Theſe all grafted in the Stem, and growing out from the ſtemme, doe alſo give light in the Sanctuary. A great honour to themſelves when they doe give light, and a great comfort to the beholders that ſee their light. Thus to ſhine, is rightly and truly to ſhine in Gods houſe, and all glory elſe, pompe, and port, and ſtate, is utterly vanity if this be away. The light was ever in the Church, and ſo diligent ſhould Miniſters be, that their ſound ſhould be heard ſtill, ſtill, as the Lord willeth. In ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, holy day and worke day, if the place require it, and ten thouſand times happy that ſervant, whom when his Maſter commeth he ſhall finde ſo doing. I lay no burthens on any mans backe, but the Lord that called hath enjoyned the worke, accounted us faithfull, and put us in his ſervice. He, he it is that hath delivered out his money, and will looke for a reckoning, that lent us his light, and will one day aske what we did with it. He gave it not to be put under a buſhell, but to be ſhewed out to all that are in the houſe. O that he may give the feeling remembrance of it! Then will not loyterers condemne labourers, and thinke it unfit to preach too often; curioſity ſhall not put out the Candle a quarter of a yeare together, or cenſure diligence and plainneſſe in others for want of it. Every mans labour ſhall be accepted for the end whereunto they are directed, and godly joy in every mans well doing. That ſnake of envy will flye away, and where diſcouragement hath growne, comfort will ſpring, that God may be pleaſed, and his Church profited by all mens meaſures and abilities. He that walketh in the middeſt of the Candleſticks ſeeth the light or the darkneſſe of them, and will remove any one that amendeth not, being faulty.

5. This Candleſtick had bowles, and knops, and flowers, to adorne it and beautifie it withall. The Bowles figuring againe the ſpirituall gifts wherewith God Almighty doth beautifie his Paſtors and Teachers, which are as Lights in his Church, as Wiſdome, Learning, Eloquence, Tongues, and ſuch like, teaching alſo theſe Miniſters that as Bowles doe containe or keepe Water or Wine, ſo ſhould they containe and ever keep Doctrine and Exhortation, to coole and comfort the conſciences of men, bringing (as the good Scribe) out of their ſtore things new & old. The knops and flowers ſerving for delight, well repreſented what pleaſure and contentment godly people ſhould take, in a godly Teacher placed by Gods gracious providence over them. They will not tread upon them, but ſmell to them, not caſt them at their heeles, but ſet them in their boſomes, as truly pleaſing flowers unto them. Still God is the matter and pure Gold, to ſhew out, by way of ſhadow, the excellency of Chriſt, and of his faithfull Miniſters in him, and for him.

Ver. 36.

Verſ. 37.

6. There were againe 7. Lampes, and oyle in them for this light. Septimus numerus numerus plenitudinis: The number of ſeven noting ſufficiency, as (indeed) the Lord never faileth his Church of what he knoweth needfull. Oyle commonly ſignifieth the Goſpell and Faith kindled in the hearts of men by the efficacy of the Miniſtery; and the Lampe ſhadoweth out a good conſcience. Becauſe as Oyle cannot be kept in a broken Lampe, but in a whole: ſo is true Faith ever preſerved in a good conſcience; and hurt the conſcience, loſe faith, loſe the Holy Ghoſt, and loſe eternall life. This is proved by the Apoſtle Paul, when he ſaith, Fight a good fight, having faith and a good conſcience. And again, The end of the Commandement is love out of a pure heart, and of a good conſcience, and of faith unfained. Furthermore, as the only Lampe, empty and dry, could not light thoſe fooliſh Virgins to the Bridegroomes chamber: ſo neither can a good good conſcience as Philoſophers ſpake of it, that is, honeſt externall action, ſave a man, without there be alſo the oyle of the knowledge of the Goſpell of Chriſt. Laſtly, as a Lampe of glaſſe is brittle and ſoone broken: ſo the conſcience is a very tender thing, and quickly may be crackt, if not cleane broken. A juſt cauſe to make men chary what they doe.

1 Tim. 1.18,19

7. Snuffers and Snuffe-diſhes are appointed for theſe lights, wherein we may alſo profit and be inſtructed. For firſt, in that God leaveth not the leaſt and baſeſt thing to their wils, but himſelfe appointeth and preſcribeth all, we very truly learne how odious in his ſervice mens meere inventions be, and how he ever tyed men to his owne commandement, not ſuffering them to doe what ſeemed good in their owne eyes, and to ſalve up the matter with their good intents. Amongſt then many other things in the Word, even this alſo ſhould have his force in our hearts, to beat us from will-worſhips, and to make us carefull to learne how God will be ſerved, and ſo only and ever to ſerve him. Secondly, this is a great comfort to Miniſters, and to all the faithfull of God, who are alſo here ſhadowed, namely, that although my gifts be not ſuch as to ſet me high in the Tabernacle; yet am I not therefore utterly unprofitable, or unfit, or rejected of God. But if I may be among the meaneſt veſſels of the Sanctuary and of the Church, if I may be but as the Snuffers, or Snuffe diſhes, as a door-keeper, as a beſome, or as an aſh-pan, whereof mention will bee made hereafter, even this ſhall well pleaſe mee, and herin will I rejoyce, thanking my God right humbly, that hath looked upon me in that meaſure. Every faithfull man or woman cannot be great, and have great places in the Church, the body hath divers members, and all good, and made by God: the Church hath divers degrees of beleevers, and yet all beleevers and loved of God: ſo, if you be one in any place, bleſſed be God for it: your joy ſhall be eternall alſo, and incomprehenſible. Thirdly, for the uſe of theſe Snuffers, you know they ſerved to make the lampe and light ſhine more bright: So ſhadowing out, that the Doctrine of the Church muſt be pure, bright, and light, not mixed with darkneſſe and ſnuffes in it: and to this end, the Lord hath Diſcipline in his Church and diſputations, ſo to cleere, when obſcurity groweth, and to ſet things right that went awry. Diſcipline is profitable when it is rightly exerciſed by men authoriſed, but if men not authoriſed, by meanes not allowed, will be ſnuffing of lights, (indeed) rather aiming to put them out, than to amend their light, from a good heart to have all well, although they ſo may profit the lights accidentally, yet their owne fingers may be ſo burned or blacked, as they had better have dealt more charitably. Diſputations alſo have their excellent uſe to cleere matters obſcure in the Doctrine or light of the Church, but ſo, that they be rightly ordered and guided, not being a ſtrife of words, whereof commeth envy and railings, Neither froward diſputations of men of corrupt minds and deſtitute of truth, whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, and biddeth Timothy to avoide them. Both theſe good uſes and their contrary abuſes, we may draw from the matter of the ſnuffers which was pure gold, ſo to teach, that neither men exerciſing diſcipline to remove darkneſſe and amend the light, ſhould bee braſſe or iron, wood, or worſe, nor diſputations and explications divers and differing from the matter of the Candleſticke, but both of gold, the one brotherly affected and meekly minded, the other true, right, naturall, agreeing with the body of the Scripture, with the proportion of faith, and the conſent of the godly members of the Church in their times.

Such Snuffers and Snuffing we ſhall ever praiſe God for, as heartily entreate him, on the contrary ſide, to remove away malice and rage from vexing his poore ſervants, and fruitleſſe contentions and corrupt gloſſes, from hurting or hindering his holy doctrine, the true Lamp that lighteth unto him. Thus may this Chapter profit us, if we reade it over, and yet abſtaine from too bold wading into allegories of every particular thing, as ſome men have done both in times of old, and ſince, not without danger and deſerved blame. A meaſure is fit, and that nothing bee urged againſt Faith. For, of the two Rules in theſe things to be obſerved, the firſt is, as S. Paul teacheth us, That he which hath prophecy, prophecy according to the proportion of faith, that is, ſo expound things, as nothing diſagree from the Articles of our faith, which is a ſhort ſumme of all doctrine. This did not Origen obſerve, and therefore in all ſucceeding ages he ſtill carieth a blame. The ſecond Rule is out of the old Proverbe, The ſafeſt way is the beſt way. The ſafeſt way, is that, wherein the Prophets or Apoſtles have gone before, who albeit they doe not ever at large follow an Allegory, yet many times they point their fingers at ſome, giving ſo the diligent reader occaſion to note more. So in Eſay the ſtory of Gideon is referred to Chriſt & his Church. And in S. Paul that of the Paſchall Lamb, of Moſes vaile, of Abrahams two wives, the free-woman, the bond-woman, of the propitiatory, &c.

Chap. XXVI.

THe former Chapter hath ſhewed God his purpoſe to have a Sanctuary or Tabernacle made, and what offering to that end he required: now will this Chapter goe forward with the deſcription of the ſame, and in what order things were placed in it. To the deſcription belong the firſt thirty verſes, and to the order the other laſt ſeven verſes. Touching the Tabernacle, theſe things you may marke, the firſt covering conſiſting of ten Curtaines of fine twined linnen, and blew ſilke and purple, and skarlet, with Cherubims of broydered work wrought, as you ſee in the Picture of your Bible, of which ſpeaketh the firſt ſix verſes. Then the ſecond covering made of the Curtaines of Goates haire, and ſpoken of from the beginning of the ſeventh ver. unto the fourteenth, upon which was put a covering of rammes skins coloured red, and a third covering of Badgers skins above that againe, all to defend the weather and to keep the Tabernacle dry. Laſtly, a frame of boards to ſupport all theſe coverings, and to make it a houſe for God and his people to meet in, from the fifteenth verſe to the thirty. Concerning the order of things, laid down in the laſt ſeven verſes, you muſt note, that in this Tabernacle there were three diſtinct places or roomes. Firſt, the outward Court, (as they called it) wherein the people were, where ſtood the Brazen Altar and the Laver, of which you reade in the next Chapter, which roome was as the bodies of our Churches. Secondly, a place within that, ſevered from it, wherein the Prieſts onely were, in which roome ſtood the Golden Altar of Incenſe, the Table of the Shew-bread, and the Golden Candleſticke. This was called the Holy Place, and it was as our Quires. Thirdly, there was a roome within that againe, ſevered alſo by a vaile, wherein did ſtand the Ark covered with the Mercy ſeate or propitiatory, and the golden Cenſer was there kept, Chapter 40. This was called the moſt Holy place, into which the High Prieſt but once a yeare entered, and that with blood. This was reſembled in the Popiſh time (as I take it) by drawing a Curtaine croſſe over the Quire, and ſo parting the upper end of the Quire from the reſt, which, as I remember, was done by them in Lent. Thus was the matter and forme of that Tabernacle.

2. To make Allegoricall uſe of theſe things one by one, ſhould bee unwarranted curioſity, as I have ſaid; Yet remember what Luther ſaith: Nihil putandum exiguum, ſiquidem id S. S. voluit literis mandare quod non proſit. The holy Scripture commands nothing, be it never ſo little, that profiteth not. Singuli ſermones, ſyllabæ, apices, puncta, in divinis Scripturis plena ſunt ſenſibus; The leaſt word, ſyllable, point, in holy Scriptures is full of ſenſe, Reconditum habent theſaurum; They have a hidden treaſure: or as Origen ſaith, inſtar herbæ peculiarem habent vim & proprietatem. As Hearbs, ſo they have a peculiar ſtrength and property. Onely therefore, as either others have taught us, or as well ſtandeth with Faith, let us walke and profit our ſelves. And firſt obſerve what the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes doth, whoſe ſteps we may ſafely follow, and by his example apply the Holieſt place of all to Chriſt. Reade the 9. and 10. chapters of that Epiſtle. Others, not contrary to the Scriptures, have noted by the Common Court or Tabernacle in generall, the viſible Church of God, imbracing his Word, praying to him and heard of him, defended by him in all perils, and in the end made partaker of eternall life.

To this end therefore they thinke of Davids words in many Pſalmes, when he ſaith, O how amiable are thy dwellings, thou Lord God of Hoſts! My ſoule hath a deſire and longing to enter into the Courts of the Lord, &c. Again, One thing have I deſired of the Lord, which I will require, even that I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord all the dayes of my life, and to behold the faire beauty of the Lord, and to viſit his Temple. For in the time of trouble he ſhall hide me in his Tabernacle, yea in the ſecret place of his dwelling ſhall he hide me, and ſet me up upon a rocke of ſtone. Lord who ſhall dwell in thy Tabernacle? that is, who ſhall be a member of our Church? Bleſſed is the man whom thou chooſeſt and receiveſt unto thee: he ſhall dwell in thy Courts, and ſhall be ſatisfied with the pleaſures of thine houſe, even of thy Temple. All which places, under the figure of this worldly Tabernacle, as the Apoſtle calleth it, note out the viſible Church of God, diſperſed now far and wide over the face of the earth, the comforts of it, and the bleſſings in it.

3. The ſumptuous dignity of every thing ſo pure, ſo cleane, and ſo excellent, noted figuratively the purity of the Church cleanſed in Chriſt, and how carefull every member of the ſame muſt be, to keepe himſelfe pure and cleane, as the Lord ſhall ſtrengthen him. The goodly and rich furniture and ornaments ſhadowed out (as hath beene ſaid) the rich gifts and graces of God powred upon his Church, and the bleſſed eſtate of it under Chriſt. Of which ſee a deſcription in the Prophet Eſay moſt notable. O thou afflicted and toſſed with tempeſt, that haſt no comfort, behold I will lay thy ſtones with the Carbuncle, and lay thy foundations with Saphires. And I will make thy windows with Emeraudes, and thy gates ſhining ſtones, and all thy borders of pleaſant ſtones. And all thy children ſhall be taught of the Lord, &c.

Eſay 54. 11, 12, 13.

4. The three diſtinct roomes they have applyed to three kinds or meaſures of righteouſneſs, thus; There was an outward court, & that may repreſent the firſt ſtep to God, when a man uſeth the outward ceremonies and actions commanded, then of ſacrificing, waſhing, and ſo forth, now of comming to the Church, hearing, &c. Those be good things, but yet a man is not gotten into the Church, onely into the outward Court he is gotten, and there remaineth; For evill men may doe these outward matters. Then there was an inward place, called the Holy place, and a third within that againe, called the Holiest of all. So they say there is a second degree of righteousnesse, or a second step to God, when a man doth these outward things heartily, truely and unfeignedly: And a third step, when by so doing his heart is opened, and he beleeveth in Him that redeemed him, and for ever holdeth fast by him. And now is hee gotten into both the Holy place, and the most Holy of all. Into the Holy place, in possession, that is, to bee a true and sound member of Christ his Church, and into the most holy of all, by hope and expectation, because after this life is ended, hee passeth into the presence of God in heaven, and there liveth for ever.

5 By the vaile, men have noted how the obscurity of those Rites and Ceremonies was figured, and that the time of full Revelation was not yet come, in which, things should bee most plaine, as when Christ came, they were. Those Types and shadowes being open in him, to whom they all carryed their meaning. Also they noted in it how reverently wee speak and heare of the Majesty of God, of his Word, of his holy exercises, and whatsoever belongeth to religion. And lastly, by the rending of the Vaile from the top to the bottome, when Christ suffered, plainly was shewed, that then that kinde of teaching the Church by such Figures was ended, and they also were ended. The Body and Truth was come and had finished all things; Now intending to powre out his Spirit more abundantly, and to teach more plainly whatsoever belongeth to eternall comfort. Reade Saint Peters Sermon in the 2. of the Acts, when the Holy Ghost fell upon them, and ignorant men deemed them drunke. Thus may wee profit by this Chapter, and leave many particulars which idle men have beene too busie with, abounding with unquiet thoughts and itching love of novelties. Still, still carry this in your minde, how God loveth a place of publick meeting for holy exercises, and to have all his come thither upon dayes and times appointed, and ever love you the Church, and be not drawne from it.

CHAP. XXVII.

THis Chapter also goeth forward with the description of the Tabernacle, and namely of those points which in the former Chapter were not mentioned, as the Altar of burnt offerings, the Court of the Tabernacle, and the Lampes continually burning. Concerning the Altar how it was made for matter, height, length and bredth, the Text is plaine in the eight first verses. For the use to us we may note two things: First, that it was a figure of Christ, as the Apostle to the Hebrewes expoundeth it. And secondly, that the Altars used in Popery are not warranted by this example. But that the Primitive Churches used Communion Tables (as wee now doe) of boords and wood, not Altars (as they doe) of stone. Origen was about two hundred yeares after Christ, and he saith that Celsus objected it as a fault to the Christians, Quod nec imagines, nec Templa, nec Aras haberent: that they had neither Images, nor Churches, nor Altars. Arnobius (after him) saith the same of the Heathens, Accusatis nos quod nec Templa habemus, nec aras, nec imagines: You accuse us for that we have neither Churches, nor Altars, nor Images. Gerson saith, that Silvester first caused stone Altars to be made, and willed that no man should consecrate at a wooden Altar, but himselfe and his successors there. Belike then, the former ages knew not that profound reason, that Altars must bee of stone, quia Petra erat Christus, because the Rock was Christ, as Durandus after devised. Upon this occasion in some places stone Altars were used for steddinesse and continuance, wooden Tables having beene before used, but I say in some places, not in all. For Saint Augustine saith, that in his time in Africa they were made of wood. For the Donatists, saith hee, brake asunder the Altar-boords; Againe, the Deacons duty was to remove the Altar. Chrysostome calleth it, The holy boord. Saint Augustine, mensa Domini, the Table of the Lord. Athanasius, mensam ligneam, the Table of wood. Yet was this Communion Table called an Altar, not that it was so, but onely by allusion metaphorically, as Christ is called an Altar, or our hearts be called Altars, &c. Marke with your selfe therefore the newnesse of this point for stone Altars, in comparison of our ancient use of Communion-Tables, and let Popery and his parts fall, and truth and sound antiquity be regarded.

Heb. 13. 10, &c. Fuit unicum Altare Sacrificiorum, ut unus ille significaretur Christus. Per Cornua notatur vis et potentia Salvatoris erigentis nobis Cornu Salutis. Cavitate Altaris illa Christi sig. De qua Apost. ad Philip 2. Vers. 7, & 8. Vestibus et instrumentis notantur Ecclesiæ Ministri, Christum voce sua et prædicatione fideli ex loco in locum portantes, purgantes Ecclesiam à sordibus, et foventes Charitatis ignem. Greg. hom. 22. super Ezec. ad mentem nostram, quæ ara quædam Dei est, accommodavit. 2 Sam. 22. 3.

2 Touching the hornes of the Altar spoken of, they litterally served to keepe up the sacrifice from falling off, and figuratively noted strength: so that, to binde the sacrifice to the hornes of the Altar, was to give themselves wholly with a strong Faith, and onely to rest, and trust, and stay upon him, and to tie all carnall affections fast also to the Altars Hornes, by subduing and making them captive to God. This Altar was in one place, and the Sacrifice in one place, noting how Christ should onely once, and in one place offer up himselfe for all mankinde.

3 Concerning the Lamps, as little doe they warrant Popish Tapers and Candles, as the Altars Altars before, did their Altars. And Christians used no such follies and Apish imitations of things abrogated and serving onely for the time. For Ceras non clara luce accendimus, sed ut noctis tenebras temperemus, we doe not light Candles at noone day, saith Saint Hierome, but in the night we use lights, as a comfort against darkenesse. The same saith Augustine, Eusebius, and others, whose testimonies are often used. And Lactantius asketh, Num mentis compos putandus, qui authori & datori luminis, candelarum & cerarum lumen offert pro munere? Whether they be well in their wits or no, that offer candles and lights to the author and giver of all light? Tertullian, Accendunt quotidiè lucernas quibus lux nulla est, illis competunt & testimonia tenebrarum, immo & auspitia pœnarum: they daily light Candles who have no light in themselves, to whom both agree both the testimony of darkenesse, and the reward of punishment. But by way of figure these lights shadowed the light of Gods Word, which ought ever to shine in his Church, as hath beene said; and oyle usually in the Scriptures noteth the Holy Ghost. As in the Psalme, He hath anointed thee with the oyle of gladnesse above thy fellowes. And that anointing which he received of him, dwelleth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you, but as the same anointing teacheth you all things, &c. This Holy Spirit Christ giveth to his Church, therefore he said, It is good for you that I goe away. For if I goe not away, that Comforter will not come unto you: but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And this Spirit maketh the light of the Word in the heart, as that oyle made the light of the Lampe in the Church. But the Lampes were attended and fed ever with more and more oyle, and so God by his Ministers dealeth still. They attend upon this light, and read and interpret this Word unto Gods people, that they may have light: which holy work and profitable service should yeeld them all comfort and favour from the people again, if it were well considered, as of some, blessed be God, it is. These Lampes and lights were not in the holy place of all, but in the Sanctuary; and so in the Church Militant, the light of teaching and preaching is onely necessary: in Heaven, which was resembled by the most Holy Place, no such matter shall be requisite. I am shorter in these things, because I trust the long and happy use of the Gospell hath removed such errours out of our hearts, and we are not now to be perswaded in these matters. The truth is manifest, and wee are grounded. Popish follies may deceive and carry away such as refuse knowledge, not any others. Blessed be God for his mercies, and ever so establish and strengthen us with his gracious Spirit, as wee may not looke backe to Ægypt any more, but stil take comfort in the light of his Word, which is light indeed, and leave Romish tapers and trinckets to the abusers of God his offered grace, praying yet for them, that if it may stand with his blessed will, he would vouchsafe to open their eyes, and to touch their hearts, that at last they may thinke, What the whole world will profit a man if he lose his soule, and what an horrible sinne it is, to pin that soule (for which the Lord Jesus suffered such things) upon any mans sleeve, that refuseth to shew the ground of his doctrine out of God his written Word, as all true teachers ever did.

CHAP. XXVIII.

AFter God had spoken of the Tabernacle, and the severall things to be placed and set in the same; now he cometh to the persons that should governe, and as it were, bee the masters in the same, namely the Priests. And first, hee calleth and chuseth the men that hee will have, then he adorneth them with fit and decent apparell for so high a calling. Concerning the first, Cause thou, saith God to Moses, thy brother Aaron to come unto thee, and his sonnes with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may serve me in the Priests Office, I meane Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar, Aarons sonnes. No reasons God here alledgeth why hee would have these to bee his Priests rather than any others, but simply commandeth to chuse them, thereby plainly teaching us, that out of his owne will and pleasure hee ever maketh choyce of his Ministers, not regarding any dignity or excellency in man, but onely moved with his owne mercy and favour first to choose him, and separate him even from the wombe to such service, and after (in time, by degrees, and as he will) to fit and frame him to performe it. The inward calling hereunto, every man rightly entring into the Ministery feeleth in his heart and conscience within, which maketh him a true Minister to God, and his conscience. The outward is not now by voyce, as here it was, and after in the New Testament, but by the approbation of such, as in the Church where wee live, have authority committed to them so to approve, which maketh him a Minster before men, not to be refused upon every private mans fancy before authority have heard the reasons, and allowed them well: knowing that his insufficiency or fault maketh not the Ordinances of God void to them that rightly use them, but that so to thinke, is altogether Anabaptisticall. I referre the willing Reader to my Treatise upon the Lords

Verse 1. Moses having not the like dignity, neither anoynted, nor apparelled, &c. yet is bidden to call them. Ergo Sacraments depend not upon men, but upon the commandements of God. See Calvin. No man ought to take his honour, except called as Aaron was, Heb. 5.

2 In this choyce againe of his Prieſts, you may note the words, from among the children of Iſrael; which are all one, as if he had ſaid, Men as you are, and of your acquaintance, not my ſelfe, or my Angels, who might feare you with Majeſtie and excellency: and ſurely this both then was, and ſtill is a great favour. For you remember before, how when God ſhewed himſelfe in the Mount by thoſe fearfull ſignes, the people cryed to Moſes, Talke thou with us, and wee will heare: but let not God talke with us, leſt we die; ſo unable is man to endure the voyce of God. How Angels alſo have feared men, the Scripture is full of teſtimonies. Wherefore, in great mercy was Moſes then, and ſtill are the Miniſters now, uſed as meanes betwixt God and his people; to ſpeake from him to them, without any terrifying feare, a thing to make us more careſull to heare them, and to uſe them well, thankfully acknowledging both that bleſſing to our weakneſſe, and the honour done unto our Nature, when our owne fleſh is in the ſtead of God unto us, &c.

Chap. 20. 19.

3 When God had made this choyce of the perſons, he pleaſeth to preſcribe them a kinde of apparell differing from others, and teaching them and that people (figuratively) many things, wherof ſtill unto the end of the world, there may be uſe for profitable inſtruction. Alſo thou ſhalt make (ſaith the Text) holy garments for Aaron thy brother, glorious and beautifull; ſo to ſhew, as the marginall note ſaith, his Office and function to be glorious and excellent; ſo to ſhew the Majeſtie and glory of the true High Prieſt, Chriſt Ieſus, of whom Aaron was a figure; and ſo to teach, with what excellent vertues the Prieſts of God, as with garments, ought to be adorned and beautified. The ſhadowes of the law I confeſſe are gone, and Miniſters of the Word are not now figures of another Chriſt to come, yet ſtill it is both lawfull and commendable, that they ſhould be diſtinguiſhed from other men by a decent and fit attire, &c.

Verſe 2. So to teach mans unworthineſſe to approach before God in ſuch ſort. Niſi exutus communi habitu, tanquam novus homo prodiret.

Verſe 3.

4 But who ſhall make theſe glorious garments for Aaron the Prieſt? The Text anſwereth: Thou ſhalt ſpeake to all cunning men, (or men wiſe in heart) whom I have filled with the Spirit of Wiſdome, that they may make Aarons garments to conſecrate him, &c. By which words two things are taught us. Firſt, that in the ſervice of God, nothing ought to be done, but what proceedeth from the direction of God his Wiſedome and Will, that being the Rule, and onely Rule of his owne worſhip. Mens inventions, without warrant from him, have no place, be they never ſo gloriouſly coloured and painted with good intents and meanings. Secondly, that Mechanicall Arts, Trades, Occupations, and Handy-crafts, are not found out by men, without direction of Gods Spirit: but God is the Author of them, as here appeareth to the great comfort of the uſers of them well. Many men (otherwiſe good men) doe condemne Gold-ſmiths, Iewellers, Perfume-makers, Imbroyderers, Arace-weavers, and ſuch like, as though they ſerved onely for vanitie and exceſſe, when indeed they be the workes of God (I meane their ſeverall skils) and fruits of his Spirit, as here wee ſee. If any man abuſe them, it is the fault of man, not of the skill; and what may not be abuſed? The very Heathens have acknowledged theſe things, Inventa Deorum, the inventions of God. Our Bookes mention * ſtrange Garments, the workes of mens hands: Yet none like unto this have been deſcribed, being Exquiſitioris artificii, divinioris inventi, utpotè à Spiritu ſapientiæ cœleſtis, & dignioribus ſanctioribuſq; hominibus tributus. Of a more exquiſite workmanſhip, and of a more Divine invention, given by the Spirit of Heavenly wiſedome, to more worthy and more holy men. Let us give God the glory, and make right uſe of the skill of men.

5 The ſeverall ſorts are laid downe in the fourth verſe, and are ſixe in number: A Breſt-plate, an Ephod, a Robe, a Broydered Coate, a Miter, and a Girdle. The matter is ſpecified of all theſe garments, namely, Gold, Blew-ſilke, and Purple, and Scarlet, and fine linnen. Hee beginneth with the Ephod, verſe 6. and ſheweth how that ſhould bee made, unto the fifteenth verſe. Where you are to remember, that there were two ſorts of Ephods, one of this ſort that is here deſcribed, rich and precious, uſed onely of the High Prieſt, and another of plaine linnen, which was common to others; whereupon it was ſaid, that Saul cauſed foureſcore and five perſons, that did weare a linnen Ephod, to be ſlaine, that is, ſo many Prieſts. Little Samuel alſo, being a child, is ſaid to miniſter before the Lord, girded with a linnen Ephod: and his mother made him a little coat, (that is, ſay ſome, a little Ephod) and brought it to him from yeare to yeare, when ſhee came up with her huſband to offer the yearely Sacrifice. David, againe, danced before the Arke girded with a linnen Ephod. Touching the firſt kinde of Ephod, you ſee here it is ſaid, that in two Onyx ſtones the names of the children of Iſrael were to be graven. Six names of them in one ſtone, and ſix in the other. And theſe ſtones to be put upon the ſhoulders of this Ephod, that Aaron might beare their names before the Lord, &c. Whereupon Beda thus noteth, Lib. 3. de Tabernac. cap. 4. Tres ob cauſas Aaron *nomina Patriarcharum in humeris portaſſe ſicut in pectore. beare the names of the Patriarks upon his ſhoulders, as upon his breaſt. Firſt, that he might remember to imitate the faith and life of the Patriarks. Secondly, that hee might remember both in his prayers, and in his ſacrifices, the twelve Tribes who of the Patriarkes ſprang. Thirdly, that the people ſeeing the Names of their Fathers written in the garments of their High Prieſt, might diligently take heed that they fell not from the vertue which was in them, unto vice and error. Myſticus uſus, ut ſignaret Chriſtum humeris ſuis portantem, inſtar Paſtoris, oves perditas, &c. A myſticall uſe of this Ephod with theſe Names, to repreſent or ſhadow Chriſt, like a Shepheard bearing his ſheepe upon his ſhoulders, &c.

The ſecond is the Breſt-plate, from the fifteenth verſe to the one and thirtieth. In which Breſt-plate was Vrim and Thummim, Vnde certior factus eſt Sacerdos de Dei erga ſe & populum voluntate, quoties de jure conſulentibus reſponſa erant danda, Numb. 17. 21. Eſdr. 2. 63. Nehem. 7. 65. By which the Prieſt was informed of Gods will toward himſelfe and the people, as often as counſell was ſought, and anſwer to be given. How this was done, ſeverall men are of ſeverall mindes. Ioſephus ſaith, Tantus erat ſplendor in 12. lapidibus quos ſupra pectus Pontifex portabat, ut omni fieret multitudini manifeſtum, eorum auxiliis adeſſe Deum: Lib. 13. Antiq. cap 12. The twelve ſtones which the Prieſt did beare upon his breſt, did ſo ſhine and gliſter, that the whole multitude might obſerve Gods favours to thē. Suidas in this word Ephod (if I forget not, having not the booke now with me) maketh mention of an Adamant in the Ephod, which the Prieſt putting on when hee ſought counſell of God, and putting his hands under it, Cum detraheret, deprehendebat eas quaſi colore quodam infectas; When he drew them out, he did finde them, as it were, ſtained and coloured with a certain colour. Et ſi Deus petitioni annuebat, confeſtim micabat lapis Adamas; ſin negabat, nihil ad proprium & priſtinum lapidis fulgorem accedebat: quod ſi Deus voluit pop. objicere gladio, lapis reddebatur cruentus; ſi autem imminebat mors, lapis fiebat niger: And if God would grant the petition, preſently the Adamant ſtone would gliſter extraordinarily, but if God denied it, then the Adamant remained ſtill without any change in his colour and ſhining: if God would deliver the people to the ſword, then the ſtone was made bloody; and in caſe of death, it would ſhew blacke. The like things Epiphanius hath, ſpeaking of the Adamant which the High Prieſt did beare and weare. Auguſtine was of another minde, and beleeved not thoſe things; Queſt. 117. in Exod. And ſo you ſee in a matter obſcure, mens gueſſes. Divers others I might repeate, but let it be a vertue ſometimes to profeſſe ignorance.

Virtus eſt Theologica rerum arcanarum ignorantia.

The third is the Roabe, from the one and thirtieth verſe, to the ſixe and thirtieth.

The fourth is the Golden-plate upon his forehead or Miter, whereon was graven Holineſſe to the Lord, from the ſixe and thirtieth verſe, to the nine and thirtieth.

The fifth is the Broydered coate, verſe 39. And the ſixth, the Girdle, the ſame verſe. Of every parcell to ſtand and ſearch out particular ſignifications, ſhould bee more curious than profitable: Divers have done ſo, but with little contentment to their Reader, becauſe their aſſertions are but gueſſes, and very uncertaine.

What wanteth in us to bee ſought for in Chriſt our true High-Prieſt, and his interceſſion for us. The Names graven in the Onyx ſtones, might teach both the Prieſt to remember the people, and the people to reſt in the judgement of the Prieſt. And therefore in all perils flie comfortably to this Meditation. The Breſt-plates twelve ſtones with particular Names, figure, that God hath not onely a joynt care and knowledge, but even a particular of one by one, &c. Sweet alſo againſt temptation, &c. The bearing of the names of the Tribes upon Aarons breſt, being ingraven in the precious ſtones which were upon his breſt, may profitably remember a godly Miniſter, how deare unto him his flock and people committed unto him ſhould be, even graven (as it were) in his breſt, and ever in his minde to profit them by all the meanes he may, that they may be ſaved. Chiefly it noted the love of Chriſt to his Church and every member of it, who beareth us not onely in his armes as a Nurſe, or on his ſhoulders, as a ſtrong man, but upon his heart, and in his heart, as a moſt kinde God. Eſay 49. Can a mother forget, &c. The Vrim noting Knowledge, and Thummim Holineſſe, ſhew how fit for a Miniſter theſe vertues are. The Bels about the garment, how a Miniſter ſhould not bee dumbe, but heard ever in his Church preaching and teaching the Goſpell of God: for woe be unto me, ſaith the bleſſed Apoſtle, if I preach not, &c. The Pomegranats, good workes with goods words; Gold, life with true doctrine. From the fortieth verſe to the end of the Chapter, Apparell is appointed for the inferiour Prieſts. So both Superiour and Inferiour the Lord had a care to have fitly attired for their holy Calling: and it much ſhould move all honeſt mindes to obey the lawfull Orders of a Chriſtian Church, wherin they live. The puniſhment of contempt, in going in without theſe garments, is death; and ſhall contempt of Chriſtian Magiſtrates in diſobeying their good lawes be life? Let it ſinke and be religiouſly thought upon.

CHAP. XXIX.

OBserve how the Lord proceedeth: First, he will have a Church; then Priests to serve in the same; thirdly, comely and fit apparell for them, and now a very reverent and solemne consecration of them, to, and for their holy office: Of which consecration, as before of the apparell, there is much good to be taken by due consideration of it; for it served greatly to the honouring and gracing of this high function in the eyes of the people, who are much moved with outward Ceremonies. It served (being no idle shew) for the procuring of Gods blessing upon them. For the Lord graciously wrought in their hearts by his holy Spirit, what was outwardly shadowed by Ceremony. The anoynting oyle outwardly was powred upon them, and the holy Ghost (signified by the oyle) was effectually given, 2 Cor. 3. We are not the Ministers of the Letter, but the Spirit; that is, by our preaching, the Holy Ghost is not only effectuall, but indeed truly given to them that beleeve. By oyle the Holy Ghost was signified for the fitnesse of resemblance betwixt them. For the oyle hath igneam vim, a force of fire, and so hath the Holy Ghost: Oyle penetrateth and pierceth inwardly, so doth the Holy Ghost; Oyle cherisheth and comforteth, so doth the Holy Ghost. It served to shadow out the anoynting of Christ with the holy Spirit, without measure. The Spirit of the Lord hath anoynted me to preach, &c. Esay 61. God, even thy God, hath anoynted thee with the oyle of gladnesse above thy fellowes, Psal. 45. But to justifie Popish oyling, or necessary use of it now, by this example, were to reduce the Ceremoniall Law againe, and not to bee Christians, but Jewes. Consecration againe in this sort, notably served to seale up to their consciences their vocation to this office, that in all troubles and afflictions they might be cheared with it, they had not thrust themselves in, but of God were appointed, and that God never would forsake either them, or his owne ordinance. In the beliefe whereof, let us ever reverence and defend the Ministery, use the blessing of it with true thankfulnesse to the Author, and beseech him heartily, that in his tender mercy to his poore Lambs, he would continually send faithfull labourers into his harvest. In this faith againe let us cheare up our hearts, when we see the Church shakē with rage of worldly troubles, so that many fall away in weakenesse: For if the Lord will ever have a Ministery greater or lesse, surely he will ever have a flock for those true Pastors to employ their gifts upon, greater or lesse. Thinke of the speech in Amos often: Behold the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinfull Kingdome, and I will destroy it cleane out of the earth. Nevertheless I will not utterly destroy the house of Iacob, saith the Lord. And let faithfull Ministers of God lay up in their hearts that example of Alexander the Great, to Iaddus the High Priest, and his company at Jerusalem, with other such like testimonies of Gods power, when he pleaseth to use it. This great conquerour of the world, Alexander, having besieged seven moneths the strong City of Tyrus, sent to his neare neighbours the Jewes, for some men and helpe to bee sent unto him, but they by pretence of gratitude to the Kings of Persia, who had ever beene kinde (they said) to them, denyed him any ayde. Whereupon entring into a great rage against them, as soone as he had gotten the City, hee gathered all his forces to goe against Hierusalem to be avenged of them, which when Iaddus the High Priest understood, hee put on all his Priestly attire, and tooke the rest of his company also with him, and went to meet Alexander in the way, desiring peace at his hands; whom when Alexander saw (now see the finger of God with his Minister) he presently allighted downe from his horse, and falling upon his knees to the High-Priest, granted him and all the Jewes their desired peace. A most admirable sight in such a warriour, such an Emperour, such a powerfull Prince, as made all the world to stoope, himselfe so to humble his body to an unarmed Priest, unknowne to him, and never seene before. His chiefe Councellers Parmenio, Clitus, and others were amazed at it, and asking a reason, Alexander told them, God had shewed him in a dreame the very same man so attired, and so accompanied, and promised him victory; which now remembring, and having prevailed against Tyrus, in reverence of that vision, and hope of further successe, according to the promise, he held it most fit to behave himselfe in such sort. So was the case altered by an Omnipotent God, striking even that Lyon with a reverence of his Minister, and after great gifts given to the Colledge, he departed peaceably into Ægypt. Not an unlike reverence did God strike into the heart of Herod, of Iohn Baptist, the Text saying, Herod feared Iohn, knowing that he was a just man, and a holy, and reverenced him, and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly. Surely, the Lord is the same both in power and mercy, if we will be true Pastors, and Ministers to him and his people. Well may the mountaines be moved, and the lesser hils tremble, but his mercy shall never depart from his Ministers, nor the Covenant of his peace bee altered. Onely, onely let us looke to our part of the Covenant, and performe it, not loytering, but labouring, and that in such sort, as maketh most for the edifying of our flocke. Let not them gape upon us, and catch nothing, our words passing like a streame for our praise, not for their profit, &c.

be ſhadowed, how the preaching of the Goſpell concerning the blood and paſſion of Chriſt, ſhould be publiſhed and founded through the foure corners of the world, even over the whole earth. And all the reſt of the blood thou ſhalt powre at the foot of the Altar; So noting againe how the blood of Chriſt, though in it ſelfe ſufficient for all, yet becommeth not helpfull to all, but is unprofitably powred out for many, as this here was, at the foot of the Altar, through their owne unbeliefe and wicked hardneſſe of heart, treading under their feet that holy atonement, Hebr. 10. The fat was to be offered unto the Lord, even the fat that covered the inwards, and the kall that is on the Liver, and the two Kidneyes, &c. That ſo men might learne to give unto God their beſt ſervice and dutie, moſt thankfully ever confeſſing that all fatneſſe, that is, all comfort, and proſperity, and joy, commeth from him, as from the fountaine, and is due to him as his owne, from all men. But O change of mens hearts in theſe dayes from this perſwaſion and duty! When the very worſt is thought good enough for God, our worſt corne, our worſt calfe, our worſt Lambe, and too often neither good nor bad ſhall God have of us. Is this to burne the fat upon the Altar unto the Lord? Then for thankfull feeling, as given of God, it is alſo farre from us (many I meane,) as we are neare to conſuming vengeance for the ſame. We ſacrifice praiſe to our purſes, to our wits, to our friends, and to any thing rather than to God. So that I feare the prophane Atheiſme and wickedneſſe of Ajax and Timotheus, two Captaines of Athens, ſtealeth into the hearts of men in theſe dayes. Of which Ajax it is written, that when hee went to the Trojan warre, his carefull father Telamon adviſed him to behave himſelfe manfully, and to be valiant in attempting great things, honourable and praiſe-worthy, adjutore Deo, God being his helper. But Ajax like a mad Atheiſt anſwered, Timidis & ignavis opus eſſe auxilio Divino, That fearfull and cowardly men had need of Gods helpe; he would attaine to victory without God. Which odious and damnable ſpeech of an arrogant wretch, Sophocles ſaith, was puniſhed, Ardentibus tedis furiarum, with burning torches of Furies, whereby he was bereaved of his wits, and ſo being mad, ſlew himſelfe: A fit end for ſuch a Monſter.

Of Timotheus the other Atheiſt thus we reade: That when certaine envious perſons ſpiting his ſucceſſe, and made ſpread abroad certain pictures or fables, wherein they portrayed Fortune hanging nets about ſuch Cities as he had ſubdued, he ſleeping faſt, and doing nothing, whereby they maliciouſly ſought to rob him of his due praiſe, and to give it to Fortune: hee unadviſedly out of a proud and prophane heart, brake out into theſe words: Ego feci, non Fortuna, Theſe things, I tell you, my ſelfe have done, not Fortune: After which words he never had ſucceſſe in any ſervice more. Underſtand by Fortune, God, as the better Heathens did, and the wickedneſſe will appeare better of this ſpeech. Let us then learne to burne the fat unto God, that is, ever and ever to acknowledge, that all our proſperity and ſucceſſe, all our comfort and good is from him, and from him onely, without whom we can doe nothing.

3 But the fleſh of the Calfe, and the skin, and his dung, ſhalt thou burne with fire without the hoſt; It is a ſinne offering. By theſe things was repreſented the Old man, ſubject to ſinne and curſe, which hath no place in the Church, but muſt be carryed out of the hoaſt: fleſh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdome of God. Others apply it to Chriſt, as a figure of him, and alleadge the Apoſtles words to the Hebrewes, where he ſaith, The bodies of thoſe beaſts, whoſe blood is brought into the Holy place by the High Prieſt for ſinne, are burnt without the Campe. Therefore even Ieſus, that he might ſanctifie the people with his owne blood, ſuffered without the gate. As if hee ſhould have ſaid, the carrying out of theſe things out of the hoaſt, and burning of them there, was a notable figure how Chriſt ſhould ſuffer (being an offering for ſinne) without the gate, not in the City. The uſe whereof followeth in the ſame place. Let us therefore goe forth to him out of the campe, bearing his reproach. See your marginall note in your Bible upon the words.

4 Going from this ſacrifice to the next, of the Ramme, verſe 17. hee ſaith, Thou ſhalt not cut the Ramme in pieces, &c. It was not lawfull to teare and rend the ſacrifices, but there was uſed a cunning and right cutting of every part whole up, as it grew upon the body, both for reverence of the ſacrifice, and to the end every part appointed by God to an uſe, might truely and rightly and wholly be ſo uſed. From this cuting and dividing the Apoſtle drew this word ὀρθοτομεῖν, 2 Tim. 2.15. To divide the word aright. Not to rend and teare, not to wring and wreſt to our fancies the holy ſayings of Gods, not to bring a ſenſe, but to take a ſenſe, and to keepe the purity of doctrine, the ſoundneſſe of truth, the proportion of Faith, teaching, convincing, correcting, and inſtructing in righteouſneſſe rightly, that the man of God may be abſolute, being made perfect to all good workes. How men have failed in this, who ſo readeth the Monuments of times may ſee to his griefe, in Tertullian and others, how the Valentinian Hereticks, and many moe, abuſed the holy Scriptures by their interpretations, every man may reade. Origen was learned, yet how ill he divided holy Writ, by forced and conceited Allegories, it is pittifull to ſee. Thus may you goe over older times. And for theſe latter times, our Romiſh teachers have exceeded all that went before them in this fault, as may be ſhewed by many miſerable expoſitions, when time ſhall ſo require.

upon the lappe of the right eare of his ſonnes, and upon the thumbe of their right hand, and upon the great toe of their right foote,&c. By the eare is noted obedience; whereupon the ſervant that would ſtill continue with his maſter, was put to the poſt of his maſters houſe, and boared in the eare, in token of perpetuall ſervice and obedience: So by this figure the Lord would ſhadow out that the Prieſts (from whom others ſhould draw example) ſhould themſelves be obedient to his word in all things, and firſt heare, and then teach: Obedience was ever acceptable and pleaſing to God: Sacrifice and meat offerings, ſaith the Pſalme, thou wouldeſt not have, but mine eare thou haſt opened. Hath the Lord as great pleaſure in burnt offerings and ſacrifices, as when his voyce is obeyed? Behold, to obey is better than ſacrifice, and to hearken is better than the fat of Rammes,&c. Eſpecially in them that call upon others to obey, obedience muſt needs be looked for, and the want ſeverely puniſhed. [a] The right eare is choſen, to ſhadow a right hearing of the Word for amendment of life, and not a left, for confirmation of errour and further obſtinacy againſt the Lord, as many doe heare it. The thumbe of the hand is touched with blood, to teach that we muſt not onely bee hearers but doers of the Word, joyning workes to faith, and a holy life to a ſound beleefe. For the Kingdome of God ſtandeth not in word, but in power. The right thumbe, not the left, to ſhadow out, that wee may not deceive our ſelves in our workes, and doe what ſeemeth good in our owne eyes, thinking to pleaſe God with our good and faire intents, but our workes muſt be right, commanded by God, not invented by us.

Pſal.40.6. 1 Sam.15.12.

For want of which due conſideration, O, how many are deceived, and weary themſelves in doing what God never will accept or reward? Woe be to the Teachers, that for their owne advantage have thus adviſed Gods poore people, the worke of his hands, the price of his deare Sonnes blood. The thumbe is touched, but it is the right thumbe, and both by figure and plaine teſtimonies the Scriptures are manifeſt in this point. To the like end, was the great toe of their right foote alſo ſprinckled with blood, that they might ſo remember to walke worthy of their vocation. And uſually, by the foote, in Scripture, is both action and affection noted. Their feet are ſwift to ſhed blood, that is, their actions are cruell and tyrannicall. My feete had almoſt ſlipped, ſaith David, meaning both action and affection. Looke to thy foote when thou entereſt into the houſe of God, that is, to thy minde, intent and affection. Laſtly, both Aaron and his garments, and his ſonnes, and their garments were ſprinkled with blood: To teach, that hee and all his ſervice, and interceſſion for the people, was only in his blood acceptable, who ſhould ſhed his blood for mankinde, the true Aaron and High Prieſt Chriſt Ieſus.

[a] *Alii, ſignificatum eſt omnem piorum miniſtrorum ſufficientiam & aptitudinem à Chriſto eſſe, qui tum aures verbo percipiendo, tum pollices actionibus ſacris præparat aſperſo ſuo ſanguine, ut officio ſuo rectè fungantur. 6 The breſt and the ſhoulder were the Prieſts part, as you ſee, allotted by God to them for their maintenance, yet not without ſome figurative reſemblance: for the breſt is often uſed to ſignifie wiſdome, and the ſhoulders to note ſtrength in bearing. So by theſe parts given to the Prieſts, God would ſhadow how the Prieſts ought ever, both in wiſdome and judgement, and in bearing and enduring the many difficulties of their owne function, and all other croſſes whatſoever, goe before the people, and be examples to them of comfort and courage, of counſell and good advice in all things. Great uſes are then of Miniſters, if people had eyes to ſee them, and hearts wiſely to conſider them, that with thankfulneſſe both to God and his inſtruments, they might rightly uſe Gods goodneſſe provided for them.

Verſ. 21. Verſe 26. & 27.

7 The head was caſt away, not without an excellent figure: For thereby was ſignified, that in matters divine and heavenly, we muſt caſt away our owne heads and wits, as not able to attaine to ſuch depth, and pray with the Prophet David, Open mine eyes O Lord, that I may behold the wonderfull things of thy Law. The naturall man, ſaith Saint Paul, underſtandeth not the things that belong to God, neither can he, for they are fooliſhneſs to him. This meditation is a notable ſtay when we cannot underſtand, and ſo are tempted to thinke it falſe and abſurd, &c.

Pſal.119.18.

8 And the holy garments which appertaine to Aaron, ſhall be his ſonnes after him, to be anoynted therein, and to be conſecrate therein, &c. The ſame garments continued, although the Prieſts by mortality (being a naturall man) changed: and ſo was ſignified, that our High-Prieſt (not meere man, but God and Man) is one, and his righteouſneſſe (our bleſſed garment) remaineth to father, ſonne, and ſonnes ſonne, to the worlds end, in them that feare him; and by a true faith beleeve in him. Againe (by the way) wee may note that by Gods law the High Prieſt was not buried in his Roabes and Pontificalibus, as now (forſooth) Biſhops be among apiſh imitators of theſe Jewiſh Ceremonies, a toy taken up without reaſon, unleſſe this may be reaſon, becauſe being dead, they meane to diſcharge that duty of their place, which alive they never made any conſcience of.

Verſe 29. The garments of the inferiour Prieſt were not ſo rich and glorious, as the garments of the High Prieſt. Quæ res diſcrimen adumbrare debuit inter Chriſtum qui ſine menſura conſecutus eſt Spiritum Sanctum, et alios Sanctos qui de ejus acceperunt plenitudine, et quidem ἀνὰ μέτρον, nec non inter Sanctos ipſos, quos donorum varietas diſpares facit, unoquoque proprium ferente donum à Deo. See Ioh.3. verſe 34. Ioh.1.16. 1 Cor.7.18.

9 Aaron and his ſonnes ſhall eate the fleſh of the Ramme,&c. But a ſtranger ſhall not eate thereof, becauſe they are holy things. When any ſacrifice was effected in this ſort, the bringer or owner, and the Prieſt, did eate part, and ſo were as Gods gueſts invited of him to a holy Feaſt: which that it might be with more reverence and ſpirituall preſence, all things were done in the Holy Place, the meate ſodden and eaten, &c. ſo a difference made betwixt that and their ordinary dyet at other times, their minds drawne to the meditation of ſuch myſteries, and they preſent rather at a Sacrament, than an earthly repaſt. No prophane perſon was admitted, but onely ſuch as were of the family of God, and yet in our dayes they that will ſeeme moſt religious, teach and ſtrive to maintaine, that wicked and prophane perſons may as well eate the body, and drinke the blood of Chriſt, as the godly may; and to that end teach a groſſe reall preſence of materiall fleſh and blood by tranſubſtantiation. Nothing will draw them from their madneſſe, neither the figures of the Law, nor the plainneſs of the Goſpell, but headlong to hell they will runne with it againſt Scripture, Fathers, Reaſon, and whatſoever ought to perſwade wiſe men. The late beginning of this curſed error, they reade and ſee as well as we: Tertullians rule they acknowledge with us, That Truth is firſt, and that which was firſt, is Truth; and yet they faile, and ſtill will faile to grant and make the Concluſion. Their hands are red in their poore brethrens blood, who have avowed truth, and choſen rather to loſe life, than to forſake truth: what remaineth but fearefull confuſion, without repentance? God give them eyes.

Verſe 34. 10. Now, if ought of the fleſh of the conſecration, or of the bread remaine unto the morning, then thou ſhalt burne the reſt with fire. It ſhall not be eaten, becauſe it is an holy thing. Firſt, this was done for more reverence of thoſe Sacrifices, leſt by reſervation, either any loathing might have grown from wormes and ſuch like, or neglect and contempt, by caſting it away or loſing it. Secondly, by this is ſhadowed, that God will have no part of his worſhip put over till another day, but cheerefully ever will he be ſerved without delayes. Cras, Cras, to morrow, to morrow, is the noyſe of a Crow, not the voyce of a Chriſtian. But, To day if you will heare his voyce, harden not your hearts: And, while it is called To day, exhort one another, with many other ſuch ſpeeches in the Scripture, are we ſtirred up to that preſent time, and not to delay. Thirdly, by this denying them to keepe any, the Lord would prevent ſuperſtition by abuſing thoſe parts kept contrary to Gods will: as, to heale diſeaſes, to keepe away ill ſpirits, to hang them about their necke, to ſweare by them, and ſuch like, as at this day is to be ſeene in the Popiſh Church by reſervation of the Sacrament. Satan was ready then, had not this law prevented him; but after, in the time of the Goſpell, he prevailed, and even in Tertullians time were crept in foule abuſes growing to adoration of the bread.

Hebr. 3. 15. 13.

Verſe 39. 11 Theſe things thus paſſed over belonging to the conſecration of the Prieſts, your Chapter commeth to the Sacrifice which was continuall. A Lambe in the Morning, and a Lambe at Even, with what further is ſpecified in the Text. By which kinde of Sacrifice notably the Lambe Chriſt Jeſus was figured, which taketh away the ſins of the world. The manner how the Lambe reſembled Chriſt, you may reade in the twelfth Chapter of this Booke, where ſpeech was of the Paſchal Lamb, and thither I referre you.

Verſe 40. Oyle and Wine were added to this Sacrifice, to ſignifie, that unto theſe holy exerciſes of the Law, they ſhould bring with them faith and repentance, which ſhould make the taſte of them good, as Oyle and wine doth the Sacrifice. For without theſe two, what ſavour or reliſh could God have of them? Sorrow for my ſinne, and faith in him that hath redeemed me from my ſinne, is all the comfort God can conceive in mee; and therefore beware of doing any duty to him, without theſe two, leſt the Lord ſay, I have no pleaſure in them. Oyle and Wine then with that Legall Sacrifice, and faith and repentance with our ſpirituall duties and ſacrifices, agree well.

As all Sacrifices then led unto Chriſt, ſo did this daily Sacrifice of the two Lambes morning and evening, moſt plainely; and therefore after Chriſt was exhibited in the fleſh, accordingly theſe legall Sacrifices had their end all, and by name this, whereof reade the prediction of Daniel in the ninth Chapter. Yet nevertheleſſe the Synagogue of Antichriſt is not aſhamed hereupon to build that filthy Idoll of their Maſſe, ſaying, that all they are Antichriſts which take away their daily Sacrifice of their Maſſe: But their mouthes are no ſlander. The truth we hold, and God ever make us hold it, both in this point and the reſt. In this point wee ſay thus, that this daily ſacrifice of the Lambes, figured Chriſt; he is come, and therefore no longer to be figured as to come. But theſe Lambes are gone, and hee the true Lambe remaineth, once offered upon the Croſſe, but daily ſaving us from our ſinnes, upon our true repentance and faith in him. He is our daily Sacrifice and continuall Mediatour. And who ſo taketh Him away, hee is an Antichriſt ware he thrice three Crownes upon his head: But that doth the Man of Rome and his Succeſſion, who teach that the remiſſion of ſinnes may be obtained by other meanes than by Him onely. We have none but Him, yeſterday, and to day, and the ſame for ever. His bleſſed Sacrament he hath left us, to remember us of his worke wrought for us, and we ſo uſe it to thankſgiving, and not as a Sacrifice for quicke and dead, as they do. Judge betwixt us, good Chriſtian Reader, and the Lord give thee wiſdome in all things.

12 Finally, the Lord promiſeth, they uſing theſe his appointments rightly, hee will dwell among them, and will be their God. It is not hard in proſperity to thinke God is preſent, and careth for us, being indeed, as Philoſophers could ſay, Deus eſt mens æterna, cauſa boni in Natura: the cauſe of all good things in Nature. But when the cloudy day of adverſity commeth, and wee are over-whelmed (as it were) with perils and croſſes, then it is a gracious ſtrength to thinke and beleeve ſo ſtedfaſtly. Cato, a wiſe-man, as long as Pompey ſtood and flouriſhed, defended ſtoutly a Providence, but when he fled into Ægypt, and was ſlaine of a baſe fellow, and lay upon the ſhore without any honour of buriall, when Cato himſelfe alſo was beſet with Cæſars Armie, then in this miſt of miſery, hee fell from his former doctrine, turning his tale, as if there were no Providence at all, but every thing went by Happe; and ſaying, There was a great darkeneſſe in Divine things, ſeeing Pompey, who had many times proſpered and had good ſucceſſe in ill cauſes, now was overthrowne in a good cauſe moſt miſerably, namely, in the defence of his countrey. Too many taſte of this weakeneſſe, which know more than Cato knew; and therefore in the day of comfort and faire Sun-ſhine, it is good to gather ſtrength againſt a change; and to remember ſuch ſpeeches, as this of God to his Church, and to his people. I will dwell among you, and will bee your God. He is true in his promiſe, as well in foule weather as in faire, and we muſt be aſſured of it. Other like ſpeeches there are many; If any man love mee (ſaith Chriſt) hee will keepe my word, and my Father will love him, and wee will come to him, and dwell with him. The Pſalmes are full of ſuch comforts: The Lord is neere unto all them that are of a troubled ſpirit, the Lord is neare unto all them that call upon him faithfully. It is a memorable place, where Eſay the Prophet bringeth in God, ſaying, Ego Deus habito cum contrito & humili ſpiritu, ut erigam ſpiritum humilium, & vivificem corda contritorum, I the Lord will dwell with the contrite and humble ſpirit, that I may raiſe up the ſpirit of the humble, and revive the hearts of them that are contrite.

It is the manner of ſinfull men to inſult over them that are in affliction, and to go over where the wall is broken, but with our ſweet and gracious God it is farre otherwiſe, of whom the Prophet Hoſea ſpeaketh thus, Quomodo affligam te, Iſrael? Aut quomodo puniam te, O Ephraim? Iuſtè quidem te delerem, ſed converſum eſt in me cor meum. Exarſit commiſeratio mea, non faciam furorem iræ meæ, quia Deus ego ſum, & non Homo, &c. How ſhould I afflict thee, O Iſrael? Or how ſhould I puniſh thee, O Ephraim? Juſtly might I deſtroy thee, but my heart is turned within me, and my mercy burneth towards thee, I will not execute the fury of my wrath, becauſe I am God and not Man, &c. Thus, thus let us gather comfort, and in all ſtormes looke unto him, and hold faſt by him: he is the ſame, and no changeling, good before, good now, and good ever: chaſtiſe us he may for our good, but forſake us to our harme, hee will never. Fire trieth Gold, and affliction the godly. Abraham even paſt hope, yet beleeved under hope; and ſo do you. If the Lord ſhould kill me, ſaith Iob, yet will I put my truſt in him. Aske ſince the world was made, who ever clave faſt unto him, and was ſhaken off by him? No, ſaith Chriſt, whom I love, to the end I love, and he that commeth unto me, I never caſt away. God for his Sonnes ſake ſtrengthen our hearts in all our wayes, and give us aſſurance immoveable, that he dwelleth with us according to his promiſe. Amen, Amen.

2 Concerning the myſtery and meaning of all theſe, thus you may ſafely meditate of them. The Altar of Incenſe was of wood, and covered with gold, figuring ſo, Chriſt in both his Natures, the wood his Humanity, the gold his Divinity, the Deity yeelding glory and Majeſty to his Manhood, as the gold adorned and beautified the Shittim wood. You remember another Altar in the Court of the Tabernacle, whereupon all the Sacrifices were offered, and that was of Braſſe, now this overlaid thus with gold, and as it were of Gold; both of them ſhadowed our Chriſt, and this difference of matter, haply the difference of his eſtate, when humbled here on earth, and when glorified now in heaven. The Brazen Altar ſtanding in the Court, might note his meane account in the world before his Paſſion. This golden Altar, ſtanding in the Sanctuary,

Holy Place, the meate ſodden and eaten, &c. ſo a difference made betwixt that and their ordinary dyet at other times, their minds drawne to the meditation of ſuch myſteries, and they preſent rather at a Sacrament, than an earthly repaſt. A Lambe in the Morning, and a Lambe at Even, with what further is ſpecified in the Text. By which kinde of Sacrifice notably the Lambe Chriſt Jeſus was figured, which taketh away the ſins of the world. The manner how the Lambe reſembled Chriſt, you may reade in the twelfth Chapter of this Booke, where ſpeech was of the Paſchal Lamb, and thither I referre you.

Verſe 40. Oyle and Wine were added to this Sacrifice, to ſignifie, that unto theſe holy exerciſes of the Law, they ſhould bring with them faith and repentance, which ſhould make the taſte of them good, as Oyle and wine doth the Sacrifice. For without theſe two, what ſavour or reliſh could God have of them? Sorrow for my ſinne, and faith in him that hath redeemed me from my ſinne, is all the comfort God can conceive in mee; and therefore beware of doing any duty to him, without theſe two, leſt the Lord ſay, I have no pleaſure in them. Oyle and Wine then with that Legall Sacrifice, and faith and repentance with our ſpirituall duties and ſacrifices, agree well.

As all Sacrifices then led unto Chriſt, ſo did this daily Sacrifice of the two Lambes morning and evening, moſt plainely; and therefore after Chriſt was exhibited in the fleſh, accordingly theſe legall Sacrifices had their end all, and by name this, whereof reade the prediction of Daniel in the ninth Chapter. Yet nevertheleſſe the Synagogue of Antichriſt is not aſhamed hereupon to build that filthy Idoll of their Maſſe, ſaying, that all they are Antichriſts which take away their daily Sacrifice of their Maſſe: But their mouthes are no ſlander. The truth we hold, and God ever make us hold it, both in this point and the reſt. In this point wee ſay thus, that this daily ſacrifice of the Lambes, figured Chriſt; he is come, and therefore no longer to be figured as to come. But theſe Lambes are gone, and hee the true Lambe remaineth, once offered upon the Croſſe, but daily ſaving us from our ſinnes, upon our true repentance and faith in him. He is our daily Sacrifice and continuall Mediatour. And who ſo taketh Him away, hee is an Antichriſt ware he thrice three Crownes upon his head: But that doth the Man of Rome and his Succeſſion, who teach that the remiſſion of ſinnes may be obtained by other meanes than by Him onely. We have none but Him, yeſterday, and to day, and the ſame for ever. His bleſſed Sacrament he hath left us, to remember us of his worke wrought for us, and we ſo uſe it to thankſgiving, and not as a Sacrifice for quicke and dead, as they do. Judge betwixt us, good Chriſtian Reader, and the Lord give thee wiſdome in all things.

12 Finally, the Lord promiſeth, they uſing theſe his appointments rightly, hee will dwell among them, and will be their God. It is not hard in proſperity to thinke God is preſent, and careth for us, being indeed, as Philoſophers could ſay, Deus eſt mens æterna, cauſa boni in Natura: the cauſe of all good things in Nature. But when the cloudy day of adverſity commeth, and wee

are over-whelmed(as it were)with perils and croſſes,then it is a gracious ſtrength to thinke and beleeve ſo ſtedfaſtly. Cato,a wiſe-man,as long as Pompey ſtood and flouriſhed,defended ſtoutly a Providence, but when he fled into Ægypt, and was ſlaine of a baſe fellow, and lay upon the ſhore without any honour of buriall,when Cato himſelfe alſo was beſet with Cæſars Armie,then in this miſt of miſery, hee fell from his former doctrine, turning his tale, as if there were no Providence at all, but every thing went by Happe; and ſaying, There was a great darkeneſſe in Divine things,ſeeing Pompey,who had many times proſpered and had good ſucceſſe in ill cauſes,now was overthrowne in a good cauſe moſt miſerably, namely, in the defence of his countrey. Too many taſte of this weakeneſſe, which know more than Cato knew; and therefore in the day of comfort and faire Sun-ſhine, it is good to gather ſtrength againſt a change; and to remember ſuch ſpeeches, as this of God to his Church, and to his people. I will dwell among you, and will bee your God. He is true in his promiſe, as well in foule weather as in faire, and we muſt be aſſured of it. Other like ſpeeches there are many; If any man love mee (ſaith Chriſt) hee will keepe my word, and my Father will love him, and wee will come to him, and dwell with him. The Pſalmes are full of ſuch comforts: The Lord is neere unto all them that are of a troubled ſpirit,the Lord is neare unto all them that call upon him faithfully. It is a memorable place,where Eſay the Prophet bringeth in God, ſaying, Ego Deus habito cum contrito & humili ſpiritu, ut erigam ſpiritum humilium, & vivificem corda contritorum, I the Lord will dwell with the contrite and humble ſpirit, that I may raiſe up the ſpirit of the humble, and revive the hearts of them that are contrite.

It is the manner of ſinfull men to inſult over them that are in affliction, and to go over where the wall is broken, but with our ſweet and gracious God it is farre otherwiſe, of whom the Prophet Hoſea ſpeaketh thus, Quomodo affligam te, Iſrael? Aut quomodo puniam te, O Ephraim? Iuſtè quidem te delerem, ſed converſum eſt in me cor meum. Exarſit commiſeratio mea, non faciam furorem iræ meæ, quia Deus ego ſum, & non Homo, &c. How ſhould I afflict thee, O Iſrael? Or how ſhould I puniſh thee, O Ephraim? Juſtly might I deſtroy thee, but my heart is turned within me, and my mercy burneth towards thee, I will not execute the fury of my wrath, becauſe I am God and not Man, &c. Thus, thus let us gather comfort, and in all ſtormes looke unto him, and hold faſt by him: he is the ſame, and no changeling, good before, good now, and good ever: chaſtiſe us he may for our good, but forſake us to our harme, hee will never. Fire trieth Gold,and affliction the godly. Abraham even paſt hope, yet beleeved under hope; and ſo do you. If the Lord ſhould kill me,ſaith Iob, yet will I put my truſt in him. Aske ſince the world was made,who ever clave faſt unto him,and was ſhaken off by him? No, ſaith Chriſt, whom I love,to the end I love, and he that commeth unto me, I never caſt away. God for his Sonnes ſake ſtrengthen our hearts in all our wayes, and give us aſſurance immoveable, that he dwelleth with us according to his promiſe. Amen, Amen.

CHAP. XXX.

THe holy Ghoſt having thus paſſed over the ordinary Sacraments of the Law in the 25. and 26. Chapters, the obſervations belonging thereunto in the 27. and 28. the Sacrifices in the 29. Chapter: Now in this 30. hee layeth downe ſuch things as belonged to the miniſtring of all the former; And by name noteth five ſorts of holy inſtruments, whereof the firſt belongeth to Gods ſervice, the ſecond to the whole Miniſtery, to wit, the money for the maintenance of the Sanctuary: the third is the Laver; the fourth is the Holy Oyle; the fifth is the Incenſe, and the manner to make it. Touching the Altar of Incenſe, if you marke the Text,you ſhall ſee in the firſt verſe the matter of it,Shittim wood: in the ſecond verſe the forme of it,thus long, thus broad: in the third verſe the adorning of it, it was overlaid with gold: in the fourth and fifth verſes the helpes to carry it,as rings, barres, &c. in the ſixth verſe, the place for it, to wit, before the vaile neare the Arke: in the ſeventh and eight verſes,the uſe if it,to burne ſweet perfume upon it morning and evening: in the ninth verſe the holineſſe of it, in that no ſtrange Incenſe might be offered upon it: And laſtly, in the tenth verſe, a peculiar reconciliation by Sacrifice to be made upon the hornes of this Altar, once in a yeare by blood.

2 Concerning the myſtery and meaning of all theſe, thus you may ſafely meditate of them. The Altar of Incenſe was of wood, and covered with gold, figuring ſo, Chriſt in both his Natures, the wood his Humanity, the gold his Divinity, the Deity yeelding glory and Majeſty to his Manhood, as the gold adorned and beautified the Shittim wood. You remember another Altar in the Court of the Tabernacle, whereupon all the Sacrifices were offered, and that was of Braſſe,now this overlaid thus with gold,and as it were of Gold; both of them ſhadowed our Chriſt, and this difference of matter, haply the difference of his eſtate, when humbled here on earth, and when glorified now in heaven. The Brazen Altar ſtanding in the Court, might note his meane account in the world before his Paſſion. This golden Altar,ſtanding in the Sanctuary, might note his Glory and Majesty in heaven after his Ascension: For the Sanctuary is a figure of heaven. The forme of this Altar square, significantly represented the firme stability of Christ, who cannot bee overthrowne. The Crowne about it, the regall dignity of Christ, and of all those that are ingrafted to him. For wee are Kings and Priests in him and by him. Saint Peter saith, A royall Priesthood, &c. The hornes of the foure corners, the power and force of our heavenly Altar Christ dispersed over the World to the East, West, North and South, in such as will beleeve in him. The sweet Incense generally noted all duties and services which the people of God do to him, by his appointment and warrant, and that they shall smell sweet before him as Incense, and are accepted of him: but particularly the prayers of Gods faithfull, for so David in his Psalme expounded it, saying, Let my prayer come before thee as the Incense, and the lifting up of my hands be as the Evening Sacrifice. And so the Custome noted, which was, That whilst the Priest was burning this Incense within in the Sanctuary, the people were without at prayer. Also in the Revelation thus you reade, That the foure and twenty Elders fell downe before the Lambe, having Harps and Golden Vials full of Odours, which are the Prayers of the Saints. Againe in the eight Chapter, Another Angel stood before the Altar, having a golden censer, and much odours was given unto him, that hee should offer with the prayers of all Saints upon the golden Altar which is before the Throne. This resemblance was very fit, if you marke it, and shewed the Nature of true prayer. For what doth the smoke of the Incense but ascend upward, and scatter it selfe abroad in the ayre every way? so shewing, that the faithfull prayers of true beleevers ascend up to heaven, and the profit of them disperseth it selfe farre and wide over the world, the members of the true Church praying one for another throughout the world, and being profited one of another by mutuall prayer, although they live in severall countries, and never know or see one another. The burning of this Incense upon the Altar, which was a figure of Christ, shadowed out, that in Christ, and for Christ onely, our prayers are of force with God: and therefore by him they ought to be offered to God, hee himselfe telling us, That No man commeth to the Father, but by Him, and whatsoever wee aske the Father in his Name, we shall receive it. No Saint nor creature was shadowed by the Altar of Incense, but Christ; and therefore let them take heed that will pray to others, and make others the presenters of their desires to God. Againe, no strange Incense was to be offered upon this Altar: and prayers eyther to others than to God in the Name of Christ, or for unlawfull and unfit things, are strange Incense, and therefore not to be offered to God. The Lord by the Prophets much complained of Incense offered without faith in those dayes, and prayers without faith, are as odious. Lip-labour, and much babling by number upon Beads for to keepe the reckoning, is not Incense that pleaseth God. It was forbidden that any man should make such Incense, as this in the Law was, and that also shadowed, that no creature is to be prayed unto, but this honor reserved onely to God. Every morning and evening this Incense was offered up, that so might be shadowed the continuall use and exercise of prayer, both when we rise, and when we go to rest. The Apostle therefore commandeth true Christians to pray continually. Thinke with your selfe, I pray you, as you read this Note, what fearefull negligence is in this behalfe, and for your owne next part never be guilty in it, but let the Lord smell your sweet odours morning and evening at least, sent up to him, which many wayes hee assureth you are to him acceptable, and to your selfe most profitable. Last of all, note it; that this Altar of Incense was once a yeere sprinckled with the blood of the Expiatory sacrifice, to signifie so, that no prayer availeth any things with God, unless hee or shee that prayeth be reconciled to God in the blood of his Son Jesus Christ, the true Sacrifice of reconciliation. So have you this figure of the Law, every way leading your prayers to God onely in the name and mediation of his Sonne Christ, and all other wayes and meanes condemned: which, if you be the Lords, shall so sinke in your heart, as all the Inchanters of Ægypt shall not remove you from the manner of praying. You may follow the meditation further, if you please.

Verse 11. & 12. &c.

13 Afterward the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, when thou takest the summ of the children of Israel after their number, then they shall give every man a redemption of his life, &c. unto the 17. verse. This is the second part or point of this Chapter, concerning a Tribute raised upon the people of Israel, towards the maintenance of the Tabernacle, and what belonged thereunto, and divers things we may observe in it. First, that to number people in a Land is lawfull. And if you thinke of David, why hee was plagued for so doing, surely it was not for that he numbred the people, but because hee did it in a pride and confidence in mans strength, which indeed is very odious before God, all victory and prosperity resting in the helpe of God, and not in man, or horse, or any humane meanes. These are things men may use, not trusting in them, but in the Lord: but to slippe from the Lord in any measure or degree, to a confidence and vaine hope in these, is most sinfull. The Hebrewes say. David offended because hee numbred the people, and tooke not this Tribute here spoken of, according to the Law. But the former opinion is more like. Among the Romans wee read one Servius Bullus first ordained this mustering or numbering of the people, that so he might know the number of able men for the warres, the worth of them them in worldly eſtate, and ſo impoſe a Tribute accordingly, with other ſuch ends and uſes. But here neither wealth, nor other ſuch ends were reſpected, rather obedience was aimed at, and that they ſhould profeſſe themſelves thus Gods people, him their King, and themſelves his tributaries, and ſo bee ſtrongly comforted ever in his protection and defence of them, whoſe power no worldly Princes could match. It was a redemption of their lives, or a matter expiatory to them, that there ſhould bee no plague among them when they were numbred. How often this was, is not mentioned, whether every yeare, or every five yeare, as it was in Rome. How Moſes numbred, you may reade in the Booke of Numbers at large. Num. 1, 2. &c. From twenty yeares old and upward they were numbred, and what they gave you reade in the Text. That the poore paid as much as the rich, and the rich no more than the poore, it is worthy noting. It was a perſonall tribute, impoſed to teſtifie obedience to God, and therefore equally was paid, to ſignifie that God is no reſpecter of perſons, but the poore are as deare and acceptable unto him (doing his will) as the rich, we are all wholly the Lords, the price of our redemption is one, the precious blood of the immaculate Lamb Chriſt Jeſus. In worldly matters they may go before us, but in matters belonging to Gods ſervice and worſhip, wee ought to bee as forward as the rich, &c. Againe, here may you thinke what an acceptable thing to God it is to preſerve the Miniſtery, and to give to the Church: on the contrary ſide, how odious to ſpoyle the Miniſtery, and to take from the Church what men and women of better hearts than we have, gave to the Church. You ſee how this was not poſted over to Princes and great men only, but even private men alſo muſt joyne in this. For if he be borne to inherit heaven, he muſt think himſelfe borne to maintaine the meanes that leads us unto heaven. Our ſheepe and cattell we provide for, becauſe they labour for us and feede us, what hearts then ſhould we have to ſee them comfortably maintained that labour for us in a farre higher ſort, and feed us with much better foode? They draw body and ſoule out of the pit of death, and leade them both to eternall comfort. Of this tribute againe was the queſtion mooved in Chriſts time: for the Romans having conquered, tooke this tribute to themſelves, which was here appointed for God: and this offended much the Jewes: but Chriſt knowing theſe legall types were ended by his comming, bade them give Cæſar that which was his, and God that which was his. Himſelfe alſo paying for himſelfe and Peter. Mat. 17. 27. A piece of 20. pence for himſelfe and Peter, &c.

4 This Laver (ſpoken of in the next place) wherein the Prieſts waſhed their hands and feet, when they went to performe their office, plainly reſembled, how with unwaſhen hands we ought not to meddle with holy things; that is, with prophane hearts, tongues, or mindes, as they do that reade the Scriptures not to guide their lives, but to maintaine table-diſcourſes, and with unholy tongues ſpeak moſt unholy and falſe things, drawing the Scriptures to their judgments, and not framing their judgments according to the Scripture. The Phariſees were great waſhers of the out-ſide, and ſtill left the in-ſide very foule. Such waſhers ſtil the world is full of. Of this Laver ſee S. Auguſtine in his tenth Tome, and thirty eight Sermon, ad Fratres in Eremo. Et Sacerdotibus jam conſecratis ac ſanctificatis imponitur manuum pedumque lotio, ut Sanctis etiam quotidiana peccatorum venia opus eſſe agnoſcamus, Pſal. 31. 6. *Et præterea fidelium infantibus (quamvis generalis ad eos gratiæ promiſſio ſpectat) non minus quam gentilium liberis neceſſarium eſſe ſalutarẽ S. Likewiſe unto the Prieſts, after conſecration and ſanctification, is enjoyned the waſhing of their hands and feete, that thereby wee may underſtand even the Saints to ſtand in need of daily remiſſion of ſinnes, Pſal. 31. 6. Moreover, that there is no leſſe neceſſity of the ſaving uſe of Baptiſme for the children of the faithfull (although the generall promiſe of grace belongs unto them) then for the children of Gentiles: for to be borne of Chriſtian Parents maketh not a Chriſtian, and it is not generation but regeneration that makes Chriſtians: Auguſtine in his booke of ſinnes, merits, and remiſſion, cap.9. Hierome ſaith, We are not borne Chriſtians, but made ſo. Gregory ſaith that by repentance is ſignified waſhing: for waſhing was occaſioned upon womens glaſſes, &c. Glaſſes ſhew the ſpots, &c. in his 17. Homily on the Goſpell you may reade more. The efficacy and quality of our prayers are alſo myſtically noted in theſe divers formes. Firſt, Balſamum having the vertue of healing and taking out, doth expreſſe that fruit of prayer, whereby God is moved both to blot out our offences, and to heale the infirmity both of our ſoule and body, *Eccleſ.*38. Iames 5. Secondly, the whiteneſſe and odor of the Onyx ſignifieth that our prayers ought to be free from all hypocriſie, and ſincere, *Mat.*6.5. Thirdly, Galbanum, which being fired killeth ſerpents with the ſent thereof, ſhewes that evill ſpirits are put to flight by prayer, *Mat.*17.21. And becauſe Galbanum is ſaid to be of a ſweet ſavour, and yet mingled with things of an ill ſmell, it ſetteth forth unto us, that although the odor of the croſſe be irkſome unto us, yet it is withall healthfull unto us, and acceptable to God. Fourthly, Frankincenſe, which is of a redolent ſavour, and hath the property of drying, doth admoniſh us that many vices incident to us by nature, are averted and avoided by prayer. Fiftly, the quantity of weight ſheweth (without queſtion) that that invocation is the beſt, which proceeds from faith, hope, and charity, and a deſire of thankfulneſſe. Sixtly, the pounding or bruiſing of the ſpices, is the ſigne of a contrite and humble heart, which God accepts for the beſt ſacrifice. Seventhly, the ſituation over againſt the Propitiatory, did prefigure Chriſt, without whom our prayers are never acceptable; who ſweetly ſpeaketh of himſelfe, *Eccluſ.*24.21. I ſmelled as Galbanum and Onyx. Eightly, the workmaſter of this Syntheſis exhorteth us that we lend not eare to any other maſter of prayer than Chriſt. Ninthly, the precept to ſhun abuſe, doth intimate that wee ſhould not give the worſhip of prayer to any other creature but to God onely, becauſe he will not give his glory to any other, Eſay 48. *Chryſ. hom.*12. As Thymiam being well confected, delights the man that ſmels to it, ſo the prayer of the juſt is pleaſing before God. But as Chriſt rebuked that ſuperſtitious folly in them, ſo he wil judge ſharply this hypocriticall mockery in us. Thoſe waſhings againe in the Law had a further reach, being uſed in faith, even unto the inward waſhing of the Spirit, wherof they were true Sacraments to the beleevers. So you ſee by David in his Pſalm, Waſh me O Lord and I ſhall be cleane, that is, inwardly, inwardly ô Lord by thy bleſſed Spirit from my foule tranſgreſſion and fall. So may you ſee in the Prophet Eſay 1.16.17. Waſh you, make you cleane: how? it followeth, Take you away the evill workes from before mine eyes: ceaſe to do evill, learne to do well, ſeeke judgement, releeve the oppreſſed, judge the fatherleſſe, and defend the widow, This waſhing was ſhadowed by the other, and wrought by Gods holy Spirit as verily in all true beleevers, as they truly were partakers and uſers of outward waſhings. So *Pſal.*15.1. Lord, who ſhall dwell in thy tabernacle? even he that is thus waſhed and made cleane. Reade it over.

5 In the two and thirtieth verſe it followeth after this manner: Take unto thee principall ſpices, of the moſt pure Myrrh ſo much, of ſweet Cynamon ſo much, & ſo of the reſt. Thou ſhalt make hereof the moſt holy anointing Oyle, even a moſt precious oyntment, wherewith al things appertaining to the Tabernacle were anointed, and the Prieſts, verſe 25. &c. No man might uſe this for his private uſe, &c. This holy and moſt excellent oyle was a figure of the holy Ghoſt, without whom nothing is pure or ſweet. All things were anointed therewith, Prieſt, Arke, Table, Candleſticke, &c. to teach us that all the exerciſes of religiõ are utterly unprofitable without the inward working of the holy Ghoſt in our hearts, by whom onely we are made partakers of Chriſts holineſſe. Private uſes it might not ſerve unto, nor be for ſtrangers, to maintaine the reputation of it, and to keepe under the proud deſires of corrupt mindes. Of the Perfume the like is ſaid: and happy were men if all theſe could make them ſee how things belonging to Gods ſervice ought not to be transferred to private uſes. The Romiſh Church hath taken upon her, and ſtill doth, to imitate this Ointment and Perfume; and therefore their Prieſts ſhew that they are rather Prieſts of the Law, than Miniſters of the Goſpell: and by continuing theſe Ceremonies of the Law, they (as much as they can) labour to teach that Chriſt (the end of theſe Ceremonies) is not yet come. What a ſtirre they make in imitation of this Oyle, who is able to repeate without laughter. The mitred Biſhop he charmes the Oyle with certaine words whiſpered and muttered over it; then he breatheth upon it with his unſweet breath: twelve prieſts ſtand by ready, which (one after one) come and breathe into the cup where the Oyle is. Then the Biſhop addeth more charming prayers, and maketh mention of Moſes and Aaron, of David, Kings, Prophets, and Martyrs, deſiring that this Chriſme or oyntment when it is made, may have power to confer upon men ſuch gifts as they in their times were partakers of. With the Oyle he mingleth a quantity of balme, and then prayeth againe. At length a Deacon taketh away the cloath that covered the cup, and then bowing himſelfe he ſaith, All haile holy Chriſme, three times over, lifting his voice higher and higher, he kiſſeth the lip of the cup, the like do the twelve prieſts arow one after another, and then it is goodly oyntment as they ſay. Now where have they learned in Gods Book theſe toies? let it bee noted for our good, they are wholly apiſh in all their doings, ſetling their owne devices as holy matters for Gods people, &c. In their perfumes and cenſers they are as childiſh againe, and will not ſee it. But let this ſuffice of this Chapter.

CHAP. XXXI.

THe Lord having thus appointed a Tabernacle to be made, it pleaſeth him now to give gifts to men, to be able to worke and make theſe goodly things, appointed to be made. And this uſe I would make of it, to learne, that he which thus provided for the building of his earthly Tabernacle, aſſuredly will never be careleſſe of raiſing up the ſpirituall: onely let us be carefull to provide they may have a cheerefull maintenance that worke this ſpirituall worke, as they had that wrought this earthly worke.

2 In that the Lord ſaith, he had called by name Bezaleel, it may comfortably aſſure us, that ſuch a care hath the Lord of us, as even our very names are knowne unto him. He knew the City called Damaſcus, he knew the ſtreet in it which was called Streight, he knew the houſe, the roomes upper and neather, the furniture, &c. He knew Ananias name, Simon the Tanners name, and here Bezaleel his name. We account it a great matter to be knowne by name to the King here on earth, and how much more ſhould we joy to be knowne ſo particularly to the King of Heaven? He that beſt knoweth what is true comfort, nameth this by the Prophet Eſay, ſaying, Feare not Iacob, for I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine. The like in Cyrus, Chap. 45 verſe 4. and in other places, Rejoyce that your names are written in Heaven, ſaith the Goſpell.

Verſe 2.

3 In that God ſaith, he had filled theſe workemen with the Spirit of God, in wiſedome and underſtanding, and in knowledge, and in workmanſhip, it plainly ſheweth, that handicrafts are the works of Gods Spirit, therefore ought to be duly eſteemed. In the Proverbs of Salomon it is ſaid, The Lord hath made both theſe, even the eare to heare, and the eye to ſee; meaning, that both in governours and craftſmen, wiſdome and skill to do the worke well is of the Lord. Thankes are to be given to this gracious God for raiſing up in all ages ſuch men. And their cunning workes conſequently may be uſed, ſo that pride and vanity be abandoned. Nay note the words again in the Text, and you may ſee that not onely the firſt gift in theſe things is of the Lord, but all increaſe and going forward in the ſame: for the Lord ſaith, It is of him that they ſhall be able to finde out curious works, that is, to deviſe more and more daily.

4 Notwithſtanding keepe yee my Sabbath, &c. A place never to bee forgotten touching the Lords care of the Sabbath, for he will not have his owne worke medled withall on that day. O what can we thinke of our workes! His Tabernacle builder muſt be forbidden, and our buildings muſt go on. Reade and feele that place in Ieremy with a tender heart, If the Sabbath be kept, Kings & Princes ſhal enter in at the gate, &c. that is, the government ſhal ſtand & flouriſh: if not, the Lord will kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it ſhall devoure the places of Ieruſalem, and it ſhall not be quenched: that is, the Lord will overthrow all with a very fearefull and grievous deſtruction. He is the ſame now that he was then, and his glory is as deare to him. Let it move us.

Verſe 13.

Ier. 17. 25. &c.

5 When the Lord had made an end of communing with Moſes, he gave him two Tables of ſtone, written with the finger of God. By which name of the Finger of God, S. Auguſtine ſaith, the Holy Ghoſt was ſignified: Neque enim Deus forma corporis definitus eſt, nec ſic in illo membra & digiti cogitandi ſunt, quemadmodum videmus in nobis; ſed quia per Spiritum Sanctum dona Dei ſanctis ſic dividuntur, ut cum diverſa poſſint, non tamen diſcedant a cõcordia charitatis: in digitis enim maxime apparet quædam diviſio, non tamen ab unitate præſciſio: Sive propterea, ſive propter aliam quamcunque cauſam, Spiritus Sanctus appellatus eſt digitus Dei. For God is not limited or concluded within any forme or ſhape of body, neither are limmes and fingers to be imagined ſo to bee in him, like as we ſee them in our ſelves, but becauſe by the holy Ghoſt the gifts of God are ſo diſtributed unto holy men, that although they be able to doe differing things, yet they doe nothing contrary to the quietneſſe of love: for in the fingers moſt of all is ſeen ſome certaine ſeparation, howbeit no cutting off from unity among themſelves: either for that cauſe, or for ſome other cauſe (whatſoever it be) the holy Ghoſt is termed the finger of God. Theophilact thinketh, Spiritum Sanctum Dei appellari digitum propter ὁμοούσιον. Sicut enim (inquit) Digitus toti corpori eſt ὁμοούσιος: ita Spiritus Patri & Filio. That the Holy Ghoſt is called the Finger of God, becauſe of the ſame ſubſtance: for even as (ſaith he) the finger is of the ſame ſubſtance with the whole body, ſo is the holy Ghoſt with the Father and the Sonne. Ambroſe noteth that the naming of the finger is to be referred, ad formam unitatis, non ad diſtinctionem poteſtatis, to the manner of unitie in the Godhead, not to the diſtinction of power. But an objection is made, how they were written with the finger of God, when Moſes is ſaid to have written them, Exod. 34. 28. And divers men anſwer diverſly. S. Auguſtine thinketh the firſt were written by God, which being broken, the ſecond were written by Moſes. But Moſes plainly affirmeth that both were written by God, Exod 31. 18. Deut. 10. 2. Lyra therefore ſaith, Deum ſcripſiſſe authoritative & dictando: Moſen miniſterialiter & figurando: God wrote as the Author that preſcribed, but Moſes

Moſes as the Miniſter and a figure. Then not liking this ſo well, Fieri potuit (ait) ut Moſes manum tabulæ admoverit, Deus autem miraculoſe litteras formavit. It might be (ſaith he) that Moſes his hand was put to the Table, but God miraculouſly framed the letters. Hugo ſaith, Moſes wrote the Tables, that is, he received them written. Later Writers make this anſwer, that the words, Exod. 34.28. referred to Moſes, ſhould be referred to God. And for Moſes writing, it was that volume, Exod. 17. ver. 14. CHAP. XXXII.

The Idolatry of the people,
The wrath of God,
The Interceſſion of Moſes,
The fact of Moſes.

Verſe 1. TOuching the firſt, follow the words, and note things as they lie. The Text ſaith, When the people ſaw that Moſes tarried long ere he came down from the mountain, &c. The cauſes of Idolatrie are moe than can be reckoned up, but ſome you may here thinke of: and firſt of this that appeareth in theſe words, Impatiencie to ſtay for Moſes comming downe from the mountaine. Such impatiency made Saul run to a Witch, and even at theſe times many to do the like. God doth defer many times his help for the triall of men, and then having not his holy ſpirit to make them patient, they raſhly and haſtily flie to forbidden meanes for helpe. It was truly ſaid Timor fecit in orbe Deos, Feare maketh gods, to wit, falſe gods. For in diſtreſſes and agonies, as I ſay, men do, as here they did, run to wicked devices, thinking ſo to comfort themſelves.

Lucanus.

A ſecond cauſe of Idolatry is often an ignorant imitation of things not rightly underſtood, as, becauſe Abraham was commanded to offer up his ſonne Iſaack, and his readineſſe to do it, ſo well taken; therefore men would follow him herein, and offer up their ſons and daughters, with bloody hands to their falſe Gods. A third cauſe, fooliſh doting love and affection. Thus was Salomon made an Idolater for his love to his wives: and it is written of Alexander, that he ſo loved Epheſtio, as he decreed divine honor to be done unto him. Adrian the Emperor did the like to a moſt wicked and naughty perſon, whom he loved. A fourth cauſe, good hap or proſperity. Thus did the Athenians, who having but 10000. in their armie againſt the Perſians at Marathe (the Lacedemonians being not yet come) it is ſaid a certaine ſpirit appeared in their armie in the likeneſſe of Pan, and mightily daunted their adverſaries, aſſuring them after of victory in the ſame likeneſs. Whereupon in great kindneſs (forſooth) they would ever after worſhip Pan, and build him a Chappell under the Temple of Pallas. Thus is mans nature prone to Idolatry, and taketh very ſmall occaſions to fall from God. The roote of this foule Idolatry here, was that foule and odious vice of ingratitude, forgetting all the great workes and wonders of God, done and ſhewed for them; and by name, their ſo comfortable deliverance from ſuch thraldome and miſery in Egypt. Such vice and ſuch effect of it ruleth ſtill in too many, whoſe eyes have beene lightened, and whoſe hearts have been comforted with the truth of the Goſpell, and yet curſedly and damnably they fall from this kind God, and run a whoring after their own inventions, whoſe wiſedome herein is much like the Thracians, that could not (as Ariſtotle ſaith) number above five. Wherefore againſt this fearefull inconſtancy and mutability of our natures, let us often uſe (from our hearts) the words of the Pſalme, Make me a cleane heart, O God, and renue a right ſpirit within me. Caſt me not away from thy preſence, and take not thy holy Spirit from me. Give me the comfort of thy help againe, and ſtabliſh me with thy free Spirit. I am thy ſervant, O give me underſtanding to learne thy Teſtimonies.

Pſal. 51. 10.

2 They gathered themſelves together againſt Aaron, and ſaid unto him, Vp, and make us gods to go before us. They never aske Aaron whether it might be done lawfully or not, but up and do it; moſt preſumptuouſly directing him, who ſhould direct them, and audaciouſly urging him to approve what they liked. Thinke here of ſome people, and ſome pariſhes, where if the miniſter will not doe as they fancy, allowing their dancings and drinkings, their bowles and their paſtimes, full of diſorder and ſin (for orderly recreation is good) they fall out with him, they turne both heart and hand from him, and he is now become their greateſt enemie, becauſe he heartily wiſheth their ſalvation. But I ſaid, I would not amplifie much, and therefore your ſelfe meditate of this hatefull and pernicious boldnes in ſome Congregations.

3 For this Moſes (the man that brought us out of the land of Egypt) we know not what is become of him. And is this all the care of him, if he be gone? Such an inſtrument of God and good to them, ſuch a deliverer, ſuch a famous Governor, ſo deare to God, ſo familiar with God, and ſo graced and honoured by God? O ingratitude, O world, and fickle and tickle hold-faſt of the multitude! A man would have thought they would have wept out their eyes almoſt, and ſighed their hearts in ſunder for ſuch a man, if they had conceited the loſſe of him: but it is not ſo; and therefore by this example let all men be wiſe, and look at the author of their calling, joy in their obedience to him, reſt upon his gracious acceptance, which ſhall never faile a ſingle heart, and leave the world to be a world full of unthankfulneſſe to all degrees of well deſervers. Marke alſo how contemptuouſly they ſpeake of this worthy man, when they ſay, This Moſes, This Moſes, &c. How many circumſtances taught them more reverence to ſuch an one? make uſe of it, and prepare for the like, forewarned, forearmed, if it happen.

4. Aaron demanded their golden eare-rings, thinking they would not have given them: for in the Eaſt countries ſuch eare-rings were ornaments, and the pleaſures of women; tokens alſo of Nobility, as the Romanes had their Bullas. But he was deceived: ſo pleaſing to our corruption is Idolatry and ſuperſtition, that no coſt is much unto us to ſet forward that. Women in all countries are much wedded to their Jewels, yet to ſuch a purpoſe they will part with them, when unto goodneſſe and truth a very halfe-penny grieves them. Reade Nehemiah, 13. ver. 10. and Agge 1. ver. 2. Vt lapis Thracius ignem & flammas concipit, quando in aquam mergitur, contra vero perfuſus oleo, extinguitur: ſic quidam magnam operam in rebus fictis ponunt, nulliſq; ſumptibus parcunt; contra vero, audita voce Evangelii (quod eſt ſalutare oleum mitigans dolores vulnerum) fiunt ſegnes ad omnia bona, &c. As the ſtone, that caſt into the water burneth, and having oyle powred upon it, is extinguiſhed; ſo ſome men beſtow much labour about vaine things, and ſpare no coſt; but as ſoone as they heare the voyce of the Goſpell (which is a wholſome oyle mitigating the griefe of wounds) they become dull and heavy to all goodneſſe, &c. As wicked Adulterers will beſtow much upon their harlots, and pinch for any thing to their lawfull wives: ſo doe Idolatrous and ſuperſtitious men and women, &c. Aaron maketh them an Idoll when hee ſaw their rage; and from the folly of the people, and the weakneſſe of the Miniſters, what Idolatry and impiety hath come? Hee maketh it like a Calfe, following the manner of Ægypt, wherein Calves, Oxen, and Serpents were worſhipped, and ſhewing how apt we are to learne the corruption of any place where we ſojourne and abide. This fearefull fall of Aaron doth not encourage any to fall as he did, in hope to finde mercy as he did, more than the example of one that hath broken his legge, and been healed, heartneth any man to doe the ſame. But it well teacheth and ſheweth the ſhameleſſe pride of them, who being neither in calling nor gifts like Aaron, yet ſay, they cannot erre. I would they ſaw their errors themſelves, as well as the world ſeeth them. And being great and grievous errors, had hearts themſelves to leave them, and to thinke well of thoſe that for them only (without any hatred to their perſons) diſſent from them. The Leviticall High Prieſt (by the ordinance of God) was above all Prieſts, and yet Ieremie, Zacharie, and others diſſented from them that had the place. And the Apoſtle giveth it for a true courſe, If an Angell from heaven teach amiſſe, he muſt not be followed, but accurſed. Some have excuſed Aaron here, as Bernard, Aharon ſceleratis tumultuantis populi clamoribus contra voluntatem, &c. Aaron againſt his will gave place to the cries of this tumultuous people. Theodoret ſaith, Vitulum formare neceſſario coactus eſt. He was forced to make this Calfe. Auguſtine, Aharon erranti populo ad idolum fabricandum non conſenſit inductus, ſed ceſſit obſtrictus: Aaron did not yeeld to this erring people for an Idol, induced by perſwaſion, but forced by compulſion. Ambroſe leaveth it in doubt, ſaying, Neq; excuſare tantum Sacerdotem poſſumus, neq; condemnare audemus: Neither can we excuſe ſo excellent a Prieſt, neither dare we condemne him, &c. Thus in reverence and modeſtie have men written, when indeed the fall was foule, and not to be excuſed: for ſeeing the Idoll ſo to pleaſe, He made alſo an Altar, and appointed an Holy day, &c. See Deut. 9. 10. how angry God was, &c.

5 They did not take this Calfe for God, neither was it their meaning to worſhip the metall that themſelves had given; but it muſt be a repreſentation of God to them, and they will worſhip God in the Calfe; therefore they proclaime a holy day unto the Lord, not to the Calfe. But did all theſe excuſes mock God? No, no. The Lord by David ſaith, they worſhipped the molten Image: they turned their glory into the ſimilitude of a Calfe that eateth hay. And they forgat God (O mark this) they forgat God their Saviour, which had done ſo great things in Ægypt; and therefore the fierce wrath of God purſued them, as followeth. Let it teach our Romiſh Idolaters what will be their end, for even in this ſort they excuſe their worſhipping ſtocks and ſtones.

6 When Aaron ſaw this, he made an Altar before it, &c. Is not this ſtrange, that ſuch a man ſhould thus fall, and goe forward in evill? Let it ſtrongly ſettle in your thonghts what fleſh is, if God hold not up; and how one error begetteth another: an ill beginning draweth on a further proceeding; and therefore ever the counſaile good, Obſta principiis, ſtop the beginnings.

7 They offered burnt offerings, and brought peace-offerings betimes, riſing in the morning to this golden Calfe, that we might have a lively patterne of mans corruption.

Vt jugulent homines ſurgunt de nocte latrones.
Vt teipſum ſerves non expergiſceris?

For who would ever have beleeved thus much, if we had not ſeene it in this ſort. Thoſe Sacrifices were ſuch as God appointed, but now diverted from their uſe, and therefore nothing leſſe leſſe than pleaſing to God. Even ſo learne you, that although wee uſe the ſame words in our prayers, and doe the ſame things that the Scripture appointeth, as to give almes, and ſuch like; yet, if we do not them in manner and forme as they are appointed, they differ from right, as theſe Sacrifices did here; and wee provoke God to his fearefull wrath inſtead of reward, or any bleſſing. Be not blinded then with the matter, but carefully looke alſo at the manner, and uſe things appointed by God to the very end that God appointed them for.

Luxuriant animi rebus plerumque ſecundis.

The people ſate downe to eate and drinke, and roſe to play, namely to daunce, to leape and be merry, rejoycing in their new god. Duo ſimul admiſſa capitalia crimina, opprobria carnis & mentis ſacrilegia. Two capitall crimes uſed, the opprobry of the fleſh, and the ſacriledge of the minde.

Ambroſ. Epiſt. 36. ad Sabinum. Greg. 1. Moral.

So did the Gentiles at their Sacrifices and great meetings, ſo do the Romiſh company at this day, and ſo it will ever be, where mans will, and not Gods will is followed. Gregory ſaith, Cum corpus in refectionis delectatione reſolvitur, Cor ad inane gaudium relaxatur. When the body is given over to the belly, the heart is left to a vaine joy. Chryſoſtome ſaith, Mens aſſueta deliciis, nec exculta diſciplinæ ſæculo, multas contrahit ſordes, &c. A minde uſed to delights, and not within the bound of order, doth foule things. When men have made unto themſelves a golden Calfe, it is a wonder to ſee how they pleaſe themſelves with it, and how they joy in their abſurd invention. The Scripture ſpeaketh of workes in ſome places, and of faith in others; joyne therefore (ſay ſome) both together in the matter of juſtification, and then all is well. This is their Calfe, and who may ſpeake againſt it? Thus thinke of more, Never was the world ſo full of Calves, as now, &c.

Verſe 7.

8 Then the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, go, get thee down: for thy people which thou haſt brought out of the land of Ægypt, have corrupted their wayes, &c. Thus knoweth the Lord ever what men doe, albeit they little thinke of him in their actions. Thus dangerous againe is the abſence of the Paſtor, which is too little thought of, either by the Paſtor many times, or the flocke. Note it alſo that he ſaith, tuus populus, thy people, giving a propriety by reaſon of his charge over them: it may worke good thoughts if it be meditated upon, both in people and in Paſtor.

9 Sometimes the Lord endureth mens miſdoings long, and ſometimes ſpeedily he toucheth them, and reſtraineth them, as here. The latter is the better if God vouchſafe it, and to be prayed for: more ſinne heaping up more wrath againſt the great and generall day of wrath. The Lord calleth them Moſes his people, ſaying, Thy people have done thus, which thou haſt brought out of the land of Ægypt: when as they were the Lords people, and by his mighty arme delivered, not by Moſes his ſtrength. Thus doth the Lord aſcribe to his Miniſters what his power worketh by them, that ſo they may be incouraged in their paines, and the people know to love them deerely, hearing God himſelfe to ſay, that They be their people.

Ingratitudinem notat q.d. tuus Pop. quem eduxiſti, quem docuiſti &c.

10 They are ſoone turned out of the way which I commanded them, ſoone, ſoone: Note the word, and note our manner, if the Lord keepe us not in his true obedience, and ſend us good guides, Levitatem & inconſtantiam notat populi, qui cito, &c. It noteth the levity and inconſtancy of the people, who ſuddenly, &c. To fall away from God is fearefull, but ſoone to be turned aſide is an amplification of the faulr, and maketh it greater. Pray that neither the one, nor the other happen unto us.

The Second part.

1 AGaine, the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, I have ſeene this people, and behold, it is a ſtiffe-necked people. Now therefore let me alone, that my wrath may waxe hot againſt them, &c. Still obſerve with your ſelfe how inwardly God knoweth all people: before hee told their action, now he telleth their hearts full of hidden contumacie and ſtubbornneſſe againſt him: and let it have this fruit in you, to make cleane both the inſide and outſide of the platter, that is, watch over your actions, for they are ſeene of God, and watch over your heart from whence your actions proceede, for even that alſo is well knowne to God. Deceive your ſelfe you eaſily may, but deceive him you never can. Bee wiſe and bee warned, qualis vita, finis ita, ſuch life, ſuch end uſually, &c.

That God willeth Moſes to let him alone that his wrath may breake out, it is a place to be laid up in your heart, and ever to be ready in your remembrance for your comfort. Non abducit ſervum ab interceſſione pro pop. ſed potius accendit, ut ignem furoris ſui precum imbre extinguat. Hee leades not his ſervant aſide from the interceſſion for his people, but rather he inflames him, that by the ſhower of his prayers, he may quench the fire of his wrath. Conſidera hic, quid precibus tribuatur Sanctorum, quomodo illis Deus teneatur, vinciatur & ligetur. Quis te ligavit, Domine Deus? Ligatum habent Sancti Deum, ut non puniat, niſi permiſerint ipſi; ut non puniat, niſi

dimissus ipse, Here consider what is attributed to the prayers of the Saints: how God is restrained, bound and obliged by them. Who hath bound thee O Lord God? The Saints have God so bound that he cannot punish without their permission and licence. Bernard Sermo 30. super cantica. For it sheweth the incomprehensible mercy and loving kindnesse of the Lord towards such as truely feare him and serve him, making them in his goodnesse, in his bottomlesse goodnesse (I say) so powerfull and so mighty with him, that they are to him (as it were) bands to tye him, and a wall against him, that he cannot execute his anger against offenders, unlesse they will suffer him, and (as it were) stand out of his way. O sweet God, what is man that thou shouldest thus favour him, and have respect unto him? Is there any thing in man to deserve this? No, no. It is thy meere mercy and love to such as thou pleasest to love, and the comfort of it unspeakeable. When Sodom was to be destroyed, what reade you? for so many, and so many I will not do it. In the Prophet Ezechiel, when sinne so abounded, and wrath was so due, what saith the Lord, but thus? I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it, but I found none. Therefore have I powred out mine indignation upon them, and consumed them with the fire of my wrath: their own wayes have I rendred upon their owne heads. As if hee should have said, might I have found but one to stand in the gap against my wrath, even for that one, I would have shewed mercy and loving kindnesse. What a speech of God is that in the Prophet Hosea? I pray you reade it often, and often taste the sweetnesse of it: How shall I give thee up, O Ephraim? How shall I deliver thee Israel? How shall I make thee as Admah? How shall I set thee as Zeboim? My heart is turned within me: my repentings are rowled together. I will not execute the fiercenesse of my wrath: I will not returne to destroy Ephraim, for I am God, and not man, &c. Could ever Father speak more compassionately over his child, when he were about to beat him? Surely no tongue can expresse the Lords goodnesse and pittie. Therefore settle with your selfe this comfort, that if for other mens sinnes a true Moses bee such a stop to God, that he shall not punish them, and if ten righteous persons, that is, men and women truely loving God, though full of humane weakness, shall save so many thousand soules as were in Sodom and Gomorrah; nay, if the Lord himself have such a melting heart towards his poore people, that when the rod is up, and he ready to smite, hee stayeth his hand of himselfe, and breaketh into these speeches; How shall I doe it? My heart is turned up and downe in mee, &c. What force have your owne sighs and grones for your owne sinnes before him? Your true teares flowing from a grieved heart, that you have offended him? Can hee strike you holding up your hands for mercy, and looking upon him with watrie eyes, humbled in the dust before him; and for Christ, Christ his deare Sonne in whom he is perfectly pleased, begging pardon? O no, no, be assured. And therefore ever make up this wall of defence by true prayer and repentance against him, and stand your selfe in the gap, thus crying to him in his Sonne, against your own sinnes, and be assured you shall prevaile. By Moses for these Israelites, and by Christ for you, God is stopped and will not destroy.

Gen. 18. 19.

Ezech. 22 30.

Hosea 11. 8.

3 Note againe with your selfe, how intollerable a sinne Idolatry is before God, when the Lord useth such vehement words as these, that my wrath may waxe hot against them, and that I may consume them. Thus sinne our Romish Catholikes every day, and because God striketh not presently, they thinke he will never strike. Their Idolatries are many, and you may consider of them by other learned Treatises published in this manner.

The Third part.

1 THen Moses prayed and said, O Lord, &c. Here, here then see a faithfull Magistrate, a faithfull Minister, a true Shepheard over his people committed to him of God. Who knoweth what judgements godly Governors turne away by their earnest intercession to God for their people? Wee see this place, wee read what Hester did, and the mercy of God is plaine for their sakes. It should worke in us all love, and obedience, and duty to them, and make us day and night pray for the continuance of them. Treasons and trecheries, raylings and revilings, slanders and defamations, wrongs and injuries any way, are not fit requitals of such good received by them and for them. This prayer of Moses, if you marke it, is most vehement, as comming from a moved heart, and using vehement and urging arguments unto God, Verse 1.

1 A peculio & hereditate, quia tuus, inquit populus, from the flocke and heritage, because, saith he, it is thy people.

2 A memoria beneficiorum præteritorum, quæ irrita essent omnia, populo non amplius superstite. From the memory of forepassed benefits, all which were to no purpose, if there were no people surviving.

3 A gloria Dei, quæ ab Ægyptiis obscurabitur ad interitum tãta gentis. From the glory of God, which shall be hidden from the Ægyptians, to the destruction of so great a Nation.

4 A promissionibus quæ Patribus facta sunt, quarum fidem toti mundo constare oporteat. From the promises that were made to the fathers, whose faith ought to be manifest to the whole world.

As

As first of his favour alwaies extended to them, vers. 11. Secondly, of his glory which would be obscured by the Ægyptians lewd speeches, if hee destroyed them, vers. 12. Thirdly, of his promises made unto their Fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, the truth whereof might not be violated, verse 13. with which the Lord moved in mercy, stayeth as you see. Such reasons serve even at this day, and may be used to the Lord in our prayers. Hee hath beene good to us infinite wayes, and we may intreat him by these passed favours to vouchsafe future, and to stay his wrath which we have deserved. Nothing more common with David in every Psalme, if you marke it. Againe, even by our punishment the enemy will be proud, and speake evill, they will call both himselfe and his truth into question, and eclipse his glory to the uttermost. His promises also we have most richly, and therefore in all these respects wee may crave pardon, and doing of it heartily with true repentance and purpose to amend, he is the same God still, and we shall finde favour.

2 Upon this earnest prayer the Lord (saith the Text, vers. 14.) changed his mind from the evill which he threatned to do unto his people: with which comfort Moses came away, and drawing neare the hoast, he first heard the noyse of singing, vers. 18. (for they were making merry about their new god:) then comming neere he saw the Calfe and the dancing, verse. 19. But then (although he were the meekest man in the world) yet his wrath waxed hot, and he cast the Tables out of his hands, and brake them in peeces beneath the Mountaine. Which breaking of the first Tables allegorically shewed, that the Law of God lighting upon our unregenerate nature, is broken (as it were) and by the meanes of our inability cannot justifie us. But the second written tables are put in the Arke, that is, when God by his Spirit worketh in us, we are regenerated, and the Law is obeyed of us, though not fully, yet in measure, and this imperfect obedience is made perfect by Christ. Magno etiam mysterio figurata est iteratio Testamenti novi, quoniam vetus erat abolendum & constituendum novum. Quest. 144. By a great mystery the abrogating of the old Testament by the comming of the new was figured. But understand Augustine rightly, Factum est, (inquit Augustin.) magnum Sacramentum. Et addit, O ira prophetica, & animus non turbatus, sed illuminatus, &c. Vide eundem prolixius lib. 22. contra Faustum, Cap 43. Omnia inquit impietatis vestigia abolere volnit & de populo: obsorbuit omnem & perfidiam & superbiam, ne eum absorbeat impietas & arrogantia. Aug. in expos. Phal. 73. It is made, saith Augustine, a great Sacrament: and hee addeth, O propheticke wrath, and a mind not troubled but enlightened: See more at large in the 22. Booke against Faustus. Hee would abolish all the steps and wayes of the people, &c. Then he tooke the Calfe which they made, and burned in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strowed it upon the water, and made the Children of Israel drinke of it, verse. 20. Partly to despight them, and partly that they should have no occasion to remember it: After he rebuked Aaron, verse 21. And if Aaron now elect High Priest, and a figure of Christ, be so sharply rebuked of Moses, surely, great men must be reproved, and it is a cursed doctrine, that, though the Pope should carry thousands of soules to hell, yet no man may say, Sir, why doe you thus? Secondly, in matters concerning the glory of God, wee must rebuke even our neere ones as others; no place for affection. After that, he called for such as would revenge this wrong done to the Lord, verse 26. And the sonnes of Levi gathering to him, he bade every man put his sword by his side, goe to and fro, from gate to gate, through the host, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour, vers. 27. so that there fell of the people the same day about three thousand men, vers. 28. yet this fact made them not irregular, nor unfit for the Ministery. Ambrose was a man that had sit in judgement of blood before, yet a good Bishop, &c. This was the zeale of his heart to the glory of God, and it must be a glasse for us to looke in whilst we live in this world. The Lord hath placed the Commandements in the Decalogue, and the petitions in the Lords prayer which concerne his honour, before those which concerne our selves, to teach us that we ought to preferre his glory before all worldly things, yea, even life it selfe, if they come in question together. Thus did Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, thus did Daniel, when he opened his window, and made his prayer to God, notwithstanding that cruell Law: thus did the mother and her seven sonnes in the Maccabees: thus did Elias, Phinees, David, and others. Thus did not old Heli, and therefore the Lord smote him. Mine eyes gush out with teares (saith the holy Prophet) because men keepe not thy Law. And doe not I hate them that hate thee, and am grieved with them that rise against thee? Yea, I hate them right sore, even as though they were mine enemies. He that loveth Father or Mother more than me, is not worthy of me. And he that loveth Mat. 10.37. Son or Daughter more than me, is not worthy of me, &c.

Verse 30. 3 And when the morning came, Moses said unto the people: ye have committed a grievous crime, 31. but now I will goe up to the Lord, if I may pacifie him for your sinne. Moses therefore went againe unto the Lord, and said: Oh, this people have sinned a great sinne, and have made them gods of gold.
32. Therefore now if thou pardon their sinne, thy mercy shall appeare: but if thou wilt not, I pray thee, raise me out of the Booke which thou hast written. When Moses had fought in Gods part with the Sword, now he striveth for the people with his prayer; so both true to God in a holy zeale, and carefull of his people in the bowels of love, was this holy man, this faithfull Governour and Leader

Leader of this multitude. Another example for all Magiſtrates and Miniſters ever to follow. But here is more than I ſaid in the former Note. For here is a preferring of Gods glory before even life and comfort eternall, which is far more than this temporall life, and all the joyes of it. So ſhall you ſee in S. Paul to the Romanes, and what a meaſure of Gods holy Spirit it was, conſider you. Farre are we from this, that preferre every ſmall profit and pleaſure before this glory of God, and yet ſay, We hope to be ſaved as well as they. A true feeling of our owne iniquity herein may much amend us hereafter, and God for his Sonnes ſake give it us. Againe, you may note here how Moſes doubleth over and over in this Chapter the foulneſſe of their fault, calling it a great ſinne, a grievous ſinne, &c. ſo learning you not to extenuate faults before God, if you ſue for mercy, but to ſet them out in their true colours, that mercy may the more appeare. Rom.9 3.

4. Touching this Booke of life, you muſt know it to be a figurative ſpeech, borrowed from the manners of men, who uſe bookes and writings for their memory, and not conceive that God hath, or needeth any ſuch things. It is therefore (in ſenſe) as if Moſes had ſaid, O Lord pardon them, or deprive me of that ſalvation which is as ſure before me, as if it were regiſtred and written in a Booke. Such borrowed ſpeeches you have more in Scriptures, as you may remember. In the Pſalme you reade of a Book wherein David ſaith were all his members written, which day by day were faſhioned, when as yet there were none of them. In the Revelation you reade of bookes againe, when he ſaith, I ſaw the dead both great and ſmall ſtand before God, and the Bookes were opened, &c. And for the Book of life, you reade perſons written in it of two ſorts, one as it ſeemed, the other true indeed. Of the firſt ſpeaketh the Pſalm: Let them be wiped out of the book of the living, and not be written among the righteous, meaning wherein they ſeemed to be written, or might perſwade themſelves they were written, but indeed were not. For then they could not be wiped out. Of the latter you reade here, and in other places. Where though Moſes ſpeake of raſing out, yet indeed there is no ſuch matter, being nothing but the eternall election of God, which never can be altered. This is more plaine in the words following, when God anſwered Moſes, that Whoſoever ſinned againſt him, he would put them out of the Book: meaning, he would make it appeare that he never was written in it. Si homo dicit, quod ſcripſi ſcripſi, multo magis Deus, &c. If man ſay, What I have written I have written, much more God, &c. For the houſe built upon the Rocke can never fall. They ſhould deceive the very Elect if it were poſſible; as if he ſhould ſay, but it is impoſſible. He that commeth to me, I never caſt away. No man taketh my ſheep out of my hand. And many ſuch other places. Pſal.139.16. Apoc.20.12. Dan.12.1. Apoc.20.12. Auguſt. Mat.7.25. Mat.24.24. Iohn 6 37. Iohn 10.28.

Laſtly, conſider and note here, how he biddeth Moſes goe on with his charge, but for the people, he will viſit them, ver.34. And ſo the Lord plagued the people, becauſe they cauſed Aaron to make the Calf which he made, ver.35. No certain time noted, but often were they puniſhed. Aaron was very ſory, and, Quem pœnitet peccâſſe, pene non peccavit; quem pœnitet peccâſſe, pœna eſt: He that repenteth him of his ſinne, hath ſcarce ſinned. It plainly telleth Magiſtrates and Miniſters that they may not deſiſt from their duties for the peoples frowardneſſe, but endeavoring to the uttermoſt of their power to reforme them, they muſt goe on, though they periſh; and even in them ſo periſhing, they ſhall be a ſweet ſavour to the Lord. That Aaron thus eſcaped among them, if you thinke of it, anſwer your ſelfe with this of S. Auguſtine: Dominus novit cui parcat uſq; ad commutationem in melius, & cui parcat ad tempus, quamvis eum præſcierit in melius non mutari: & cui non parcat ut mutetur in melius, & cui non parcat ita ut vitæ mutationem ejus non expectet: The Lord knoweth whom to ſpare for their amendment, and whom for a time to ſpare, though he know they will never amend. O, how unſearchable are his judgements, and his wayes paſt finding out! Grievous, and thrice grievous is the ſinne of Idolatry, that not for Moſes his ſo earneſt prayer may be freed wholly from all further puniſhment, though in part the Lord yeeldeth, as ver.14. you ſaw. God make it ſinke where it is ſo much uſed by deceived Romiſh Recuſants. Plautus & Seneca.

CHAP. XXXIII.

GReat was the ſinne which this people had committed, mentioned in the former Chapter; and therefore the Lord (whoſe mercy hath neither bottome nor meaſure) not willing the death of any ſinner, much leſſe of ſo many thouſands, but rather that (by repentance) pardon may be procured; in this Chapter graciouſly uſeth the meanes that their hearts may ſmite them with true feeling of their fault, and ſo they turne and be ſpared. Their ſinne (I ſay) was great, and great ſinnes are not ſo eaſily repented of as they ought to be.

Againe, in ſinnes of this kinde, namely when they are coloured and covered over with a good intention, by them to ſerve God, moſt hardly are men and women drawne to acknowledge an errour and miſtaking. Matters of the ſecond Table committed againſt our neighbour we much better diſcerne, than matters of the firſt Table concerning the worſhip of God. For here we thinke wholly our meaning ſhould be accepted, which was, to worſhip God, bee the thing we doe, either never ſo void of warrant in the Word, or never ſo contrary to the Word. The meanes that God uſeth here, is by letting them know, that he will be no more with them as he had been, nor travell with them as he hath done. Moſes ſhall goe on with them to the land which God had promiſed to give them; and to ſend his Angell to drive out the Canaanites; But himſelfe would not goe, for they were a ſtif-necked people, leſt he ſhould conſume them in the way. The Lord noteth a maner of repentance, namely, to put away their coſtly raiment from them, not that this is a neceſſary part of repentance alwayes, but that at this time, by this outward ſigne, the Lord would have them teſtifie that which is needfull indeed, the true remorſe and ſorrow of their hearts. And upon the hearing of this fearefull newes, that indeed the Lord would thus deale with them, they caſt from them accordingly their beſt attire, and ſorrowed for their fault.

Ver. 1,2,3,4.

2. For further working of this ſaving ſorrow in them, the Tabernacle wherein the Lord will conferre with his ſervant Moſes, untill the other (now ſo much ſpoken of) was ready, is, by the appointment of God to Moſes, pitched without the Hoaſt farre from the Hoaſt, that by this ſigne alſo it might be ſhewed, how God was eſtranged from them for their ſinne, who earſt ſo comfortably, and ſo powerfully had ſhewed himſelfe for them, and amongſt them. All which things religiouſly conſidered, manifeſt unto our ſoules what a ſweet God, the Lord whom we ſerve, is, who thus ſeeketh his loſt people; even a father full of pitty and compaſſion, that they may returne to him againe, and have that which ſo ill they have deſerved, his favour and love for ever. Will this God (can you thinke in your conſcience) ever caſt away the poore ſinner that commeth in ſorrow, when hee worketh thus to draw men to ſorrow? Feele and bee comforted with it.

Verſe 7.

3. And when Moſes went out unto the Tabernacle, all the people roſe up, &c. Now reverencing him, whom before they ſpake very lightly of, ſaying: This Moſes we know not what is become of him. What cauſed this, but that ſtill he was in favour with God, and they out. So, ſo ſhall a ſound and upright heart to God ever in the end procure honour, howſoever for a time contempt may be ſhewed: for God will honour them that honour him; it is his word, and it ſhall never faile. Aquila per ſenectutem tam curvum acquirit roſtrum, ut veſci non poſſit, niſi ad lapidem percutiendo, adunci tatem frangat: ſic peccatori moriendum fame, niſi ad petram Chriſtum per pœnitentiam ſe fortiter ac diu percutiat, uſq; ad propoſiti mutationem & dumitiei abjectionem. The Eagle by old age becomes ſo crooked billed, that ſhe cannot feede, unleſſe by ſtriking her bill againſt a ſtone ſhee breakes the hardneſſe; ſo a ſinner unleſſe he ſtrongly and continually ſtrike againſt the rocke Chriſt Jeſus by penitence, yea, even to the purpoſe of changing and caſting away hardneſſe of heart, doth famiſh. That union that was betwixt God and his ſervant Iohn Baptiſt, (when hee was true to God, and God truely favoured him againe), gave him more honour and eſtimation in the heart of Herod (though an evill man) than they had, whoſe worldly ſhew was farre greater. For Herod feared Iohn (ſaith the Goſpell) knowing that he was a juſt man, and a holy, and reverenced him, and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly. Would God then men might be moved to ſeeke honour this way. Surely the Lord is the ſame ſtill, and will make them riſe up to you, that have formerly little (and too little) regarded you, as well as here he did to Moſes, if you with Moſes keepe faſt your foot with him, when others wickedly fall away, as theſe unhappy Iſraelites had now done.

Verſe 8.

Mat. 6. 20.

4. In the 14. ver. and ſo to the 18. ſee and mark the faithfull heart of a true Governor, how he prayeth, and never giveth over till the Lord hath yeelded to go with this people, as in former time, whereas he had ſaid he would not doe it. O force of faithfull prayer! It ſubdueth all things in time; yea, it pleaſeth the Almighty Maker of all worlds maſſes to be ſubdued with it. In the end it prevaileth, though it belong, but ſtill this is mercy, and not merit, no not in Moſes himſelfe. For I will doe this alſo that thou haſt ſaid (ſaith God:) becauſe thou haſt found grace in my ſight, and I know thee by name. Grace it is therefore, and no merit, and a bleſſed grace it is, to ſee and hold it firme, againſt all proud and ignorant Merit-mongers.

Verſ. 17.

Verſe 18.

5. Againe, Moſes ſaid, I beſeech thee ſhew me thy glory, &c. Hitherto Moſes kept himſelfe in his deſires, within the bounds of modeſty, but now he exceedeth, ſeeking what was neither lawfull, nor profitable; for ſo by the deniall and repulſe which God gave him, it appeareth. Yet was it not any fooliſh curioſity that moved Moſes, but a very earneſt deſire to be further ſtrengthned in this charge. Wherefore, if to ſuch a minde, that might be hurtfull which he ſo much deſired, and thought ſo profitable; let it ſchoole us, and teach us what we doe, when in vain curioſity of our corrupt nature, we ſearch and pry into ſuch things as God hath kept hidden and cloſe from us. It is a true ſaying, Mitte quod eſſe nequit, quære quod eſſe poteſt. Let that alone which cannot be found out, and ſeek that which may be found out. The ſecrets of God are to himſelfe, and revealed things for us. He that curiouſly ſearcheth his glory, ſhall juſtly be oppreſſed of his Majeſty. To profit and go forward in knowledge is good, but the right way muſt alſo be held, which is, To follow God going before, that is, to have an eare to heare where God hath a mouth to ſpeak, and not elſe.

6. But

6. But concerning this ſight thus deſired of Moſes to ſpeake a little more, to an ignorant man, the Scripture in that point may ſeeme contrary to it ſelf. For here it is ſaid, There is no man ſhall ſee God and live, And S. Paul, That he dwelleth in light not to be attained to, whom no man hath ſeen, neither can ſee. Againe, To the King immortall, inviſible. And Iohn, No man hath ſeene God at any time. On the other ſide it is often in Scripture teſtified, that God was not ſeene of the old Fathers and Patriarches, and in the Goſpell, Bleſſed are the pure in heart, for they ſhall ſee God. Saint Iohn ſaith, We ſhall ſee him as he is. Saint Paul, Now I know in part, but then ſhall I know even as I am knowne. To the Epheſians, That ye being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth, and length, and height, and depth of Chriſt, &c. But to a diligent obſerver of the Scriptures theſe places are not contrary. Therefore conſider with your ſelfe, that ſeeing is of two ſorts, with the outward eye, and with the inward minde. Mat. 5. 8. 1 Cor. 13. 12. Eph. 3. 17, 18.

Concerning the outward ſight (whereby indeed curious and ignorant men would be glad to ſee God, hardly thinking (oftentimes) that there is any God, when none in this ſort can bee ſeene) the truth is, God cannot be ſeen. For if he could, then muſt he be a body; and if a body, then to be divided into parts, and included in a place, and ſo not infinite, & therfore not God. Wherefore groſſe are thoſe old Heretikes that gave to God an humane forme: becauſe the Scriptures (ſpeaking after our capacity) give unto him the parts of man, as feet, hands, face, &c. And concerning thoſe viſions and apparitions which the Fathers had, as Abraham, of three going to deſtroy Sodome, &c. We anſwer with S. Auguſtine, that God appeared unto them. Yet not in his nature, but in ſuch forme as it pleaſed him. Many ſaw, ſed quod voluntas elegit, non quod natura formavit, but what ſaw they? ſurely what his will choſe, not what nature formed. Men ſaw him when he would, in ſuch forme as he would, not in his nature, wherein he lay hid even then when he was ſeen. The Divinity when it taketh theſe ſhapes, is not converted into theſe ſhapes, but appeareth under them. God his nature is ſimple, one, and immutable; thoſe formes in Scripture were divers and ſundry; therefore by the very diverſity of them wee know none of them were the true nature of God. Only in our fleſh we may ſay God was ſeene, after Chriſt had taken it into the unity of his perſon, but that is not the matter now ſpoken of. So touching the firſt kinde of ſeeing, with bodily eyes, we conclude, that No man hath, or can ſee God at any time, and live, as here God himſelfe ſaith in this Text. The ſecond kinde of ſeeing is by minde, wherein we muſt diſtinguiſh our eſtate here from that it ſhall be in the next world. For neither by minde (whileſt we live here) are we able to ſee God as he is. The reaſon; Becauſe all our knowledge is by ſome formes and faſhions which we conceive in our minde, and for the moſt part floweth from the outward ſenſes; but God (as hath been ſaid) cannot be perceived by our ſenſes: Therefore, neither by our minde can we comprehend him as he is. And for theſe words in that Chapter, That the Lord ſpake to Moſes face to face, as a man ſpeaketh unto his friend, they note out a more familiar and gracious manner of ſpeech, than before was vouchſafed to any, but not any bodily ſight of God in ſubſtance and eſſence as he is. But in the life to come we ſhall in farre more excellent manner ſee God, yet not ſimply, neither as he is, becauſe he is infinite, wee ſtill finite, although changed from our corruption. Anthropomorphite Monks. Audiandi. See Epiph. 1 Iohn 1. 1. Verſe 10. Verſ. 11.

So, no way can God be ſeene as he is of any creature, either with his bodily ſenſe, or with his minde in this life, or that to come. Yet ſuch a meaſure ſhall be afforded to us, as no heart can comprehend now the comfort of it. Let it ſuffice, and be carefull rather to attaine to it, than curiouſly and unprofitably to ſift and ſearch the manner of it.

7. The covering of Moſes face with Gods hand till he was paſt him, is but a borrowed ſpeech from the faſhion of men, who uſe to hold their hands over their eyes when they looke upon the Sunne: for the brightneſſe and glory thereof, is more than their eyes can endure. It is fit therefore to note and teach us the incomprehenſible glory and Majeſty of God, above all power in man to looke upon, but it may not leade us to any erroneous conceit, that God hath hands or humane forme, or did thus in any materiall manner. So his back-parts note ſuch a meaſure of glory as Moſes (a mortall man) was able to endure. Otherwiſe God hath no backe nor back-parts, but is a Spirit incomprehenſible, and above all mens ſtrength to know fully as he is, in Majeſty, glory, ſubſtance, and nature. Wee may be ſaid to ſee the back-parts of God, becauſe there is much more which we know not, than which we know, and we muſt ſtill goe forward while we live, in the knowledge of him. Omnia Chriſto rectiſſime accommodat, qui petra eſt unica, in qua conſiſtendum fidelibus, quia poſteriori viſus & agnitus eſt à Indæis, hoc eſt, poſt mortem & reſurrectionem ſuam omnis gloria poſterioribus temporibus (interprete Tertul.) nobis revelata eſt. He very fitly accómodates all things to Chriſt, who is the only rock for the faithfull to reſt on: becauſe he is acknowledged of the Jewes by the ſight of his back-parts; that is, after his death and reſurrection all glory (as Tertul. interprets) ſhall be revealed to the latter times. Gloria mea quam videre deſideras poſterioribus temporibus revelabitur. My glory that thou deſireſt to ſee, ſhall be revealed to the latter times. Deus videri non poteſt, quia viſu clarior; comprehendi non poteſt, quia tactu purior; non æſtimari, quia ſenſu major eſt. Ideo tam digne æſtimemus, cum inæſtimabilem dicimus. In noſtra dedicandus eſt mente, in noſtro conſecrandus eſt pectore, &c. God Vide Hier. In Mat. cap. 8. in Eccleſ. cap. 4. Hilar. lib. 4. de Trin. Aug. quæſt. 154. in Exod. &c.

cannot be ſeene, ſaith Saint Cyprian, becauſe he is brighter than our ſight; God cannot be comprehended, becauſe he is more pure than can be touched, he cannot be eſteemed as he deſerveth, becauſe he is greater than our ſenſe. Therefore we rightly eſtimate him, when we ſay he is ineſtimable. In our minde to be dedicated, and in our breaſt to be conſecrated, &c. Dionyſius. Solemne eſt Deum dicere inviſibilem, cum ſit lux clariſſima; ineffabilem, cum multis inſigniatur nominibus. Attribuunt ergo ei privationes, ut habituum excellentiam demonſtrent. It is uſuall to call God inviſible, when indeed he is a moſt cleere light; to call him ineffable, when indeed hee hath many names. The reaſon is, that theſe negatives or privations might ſhew the excellency of the affirmative or habit.

Chap. XXXIV.

THere is little in theſe Chapters following, which hath not been touched already in the former: and therefore I may in few words end them, and referre you to that which hath been ſaid. Firſt then, you reade here that the former Tables being broken, the Lord reneweth them againe. Verſe 1. And obſerve thoſe things for your good. Moſes is commanded to hew the ſtones, but the Lord would write in them; ſo may Gods Miniſters by preaching and crying upon men, as it were hew their ſtony hearts, that is, prepare them for writing, but onely the Lord muſt write in them by the finger of his bleſſed Spirit, and no man can make any thing enter without him. Paul may plant, &c. But He, He giveth all increaſe. Cathedram in cœlo habet, qui corda movet, His chaire is in heaven that moveth the heart. And did God write before the ſtones were hewed? No: No more aſſure your ſelfe will be ever in your heart ſet any good, if you contemne and deſpiſe the outward hewing and preparing of you by the Word in the miniſtery of his ſervants. Take heed therefore what you doe, you deſpiſe not men, but God and your owne good. Others by theſe former Tables broken, and latter Tables remaining, have thought to be figured the abrogation of the old Law, and the eſtabliſhment of the new, the Law of the Goſpell: the cutting off of the Jewes, and the grafting in of the Gentiles: Our old corruption which muſt be broken, and our new regeneration which muſt come in place, &c.

Verſe 2. 2. And be ready in the morning, that thou maiſt come up early to the mount Sinai, &c. The godly muſt be ready to aſcend at all hours when the Lord ſhall appoint, and they neither muſt, nor will ſtay to bid their friends farewell, or to regard any earthly impediment whatſoever. O Lord, make us thus ready ever: For here we have no abiding City. Early, early muſt we aſcend, and ſo did the Apoſtle, when he deſired to be looſed, and to bee with Chriſt: Forward, not backward was that happy man, and ſo muſt we be.

Verſe 3. 3. Let no man come up with thee, &c. Feare and reverence is ever fit for holy things, and preſuming boldneſſe ſavoureth never of that holy Spirit, whoſe effects feare and reverence are.

Verſe 4. Moſes did with ſpeed (as God commanded) hew two Tables of ſtone, and went up early. Two biddings he needeth not, and a thouſand thouſand will not ſerve us, &c.

Verſe 5. 4. And the Lord deſcended in the Clond, &c. Moſes aſcendeth, and God deſcendeth; So it is in our manner of knowing him: we muſt aſcend in heart, and minde, and will; he doth deſcend, moſt graciouſly ſubmitting himſelfe to our weake and feeble capacities, &c.

Verſe 8. 5. Conferre the 6. and 7. ver. with that which was in the former Chapter, ver. 18. and ſo forth, and the one will notably explaine the other.

6. Then Moſes made haſt, and bowed himſelfe to the earth, and worſhipped. The greater meaſure of manifeſtation of God and his truth is vouchſafed unto us, the more ought we to humble our ſelves and be thankfull, worſhipping and adoring that God which ſo mercifully dealeth with us. Againe, when God vouchſafeth ſignes of his preſence, let us haſt unto him, and not ſuffer him to paſſe away whilſt we are hindered with this and that. He giveth ſignes of his preſence in the word preached, hee giveth ſignes of his preſence in my heart by good motions. O let him not paſſe away, but make haſt, as Moſes here did, bow downe and worſhip, &c.

Verſe 9. 7. Moſes ſaid, O Lord, I pray thee, if I have found favour in thy ſight, that the Lord would now goe with us, for it is a ſtiffe-necked people, &c. The promiſes of God kindle prayer, and ſee it in Moſes here, wherefore uſe (when you are dull to pray) to meditate a time upon the promiſes of God, generall, particular, ſo many, ſo ſweet, ſo full of power to inflame an heart halfe dead, and when you feele the fire kindle, then pray, it will flame out at laſt. His prayer is for aſſiſtance in his charge, and well noteth the heavy burthen of Government which ſo many deſire that little thinke of the weight. Demoſthenes ſaid, if there were two wayes before him, the one leading to government, and the other to death, he would take that which leadeth to death, before the other. Æſchines deſired to bee delivered from government, as from a mad Dogge. Trajan ſaid, who knew the cares of an Emperours Crowne, would not take it up in the way if he found it there. Such, and many ſuch ſpeeches reade we, and all to note the great charge, and to ſnub the vaine ambition of man. Yet government is of God, and God in Governours is honoured greatly, ever was, and ever will be.

8. Keep diligently that which I command thee this day, and behold, I will caſt out before thee the Amorites, &c. Who ſubdueth enemies and caſteth them out? God, and God onely; man is but by his meanes, and prevaileth and faileth as the Lord will. Why doth God ſubdue? That we may keep diligently what he commandeth, doe this and proſper, as ſhall bee good ever; doe it not, and vaine ſhall all ſtrength be, when the Lords patience is expired, and juſtice taken in hand. Publikely and privately this is true, thinke of it. Verſe 11.

9. Take heed thou make no compact with the Inhabitants of the Land, whither thou goeſt, leſt they be the cauſe of thy ruine among you. It ſeemeth cruell, if the Inhabitants would yeeld and ſubmit themſelves, not to receive them. But learne here and ever, that God is the true line of mercy, and where he condemneth beware pitty: For that is to condemne him, and to exalt thy ſelfe above him in mercy. Becauſe, ſaith the Prophet to Benhadad, thou haſt let him goe, whom I appointed to die, thy life ſhall goe for his life, and thy people for his people. Leſt (ſaith the Text) they be the cauſe of thy ruine. Falſe Religion (you ſee) in the end worketh deſtruction, and how then is it policy? how better for a Common-wealth, as Romiſh Catholicks vainely have written? Verſe 12. 1 King. 20 42.

Thirdly, Thou ſhalt overthrow their Altars, &c. Then no toleration to be had of two Religions in one Government. If the Lord be God he muſt be worſhipped, but if Baal be he, he muſt be worſhipped ſolely and only, not God and Baal both. Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve. God is a jealous God, and will not give his glory to another. David a Prince truly religious, ſaith, Their offerings of blood will I not offer, neither make mention of their names within my lips. Princes deſtroying Idolatry and purging the Church, are renowned in Scripture with a bleſſed memory. Solomon for his mingling was plagued. Valentinian ſought of Ambroſe a Church in Millan for the Arrians, and Ambroſe denied it, &c. But by whom are the Altars to be broken downe? By the Magiſtrate only, or by private men alſo, and by every one that is zealous? Surely publike things by publike perſons in authority, Conſtantine, Theodoſius, and ſuch like. But for private things, private men may doe them, as Iacob purged his owne houſe of his wives Idols. And the Councell condemneth Maſters that will ſuffer in their houſes Images, and not take them away. Private men to meddle with publick things, is very dangerous. Paul came to Athens and found an Altar, yet he threw it not downe. The Councell decreed, that he which (being not a Magiſtrate) ſhould break down an Image, and be ſlaine in the fact, ſhould not be numbred among Martyrs. Theodoret maketh mention of Anda, a Biſhop, who overthrew Pyreum Perſarum, and ſaith thus, that a private man overthrew this, I praiſe it not, &c. Extraordinary inſtincts God hath given, but let men take heed they be not deceived. Gideon had Gods inſtinct, every motion to ſuch matters muſt not be ſuch a warrant. Ambroſe defendeth the Biſhop that burned the Jewiſh Synagogue, and reckoneth one among Martyrs, which in the time of Iulian threw downe an Altar, and was condemned. Our own times have yeelded ſome examples. But you ſee, all are not of one minde. Therefore beware of falſe ſpirits that will raſhly write of reformation, without tarrying for the Magiſtrate. So every man may bee a Magiſtrate, and the ſweet ſociety of man with man turned to blood and ſlaughter. Some yet are too milde, and they tell us Idolatry muſt firſt of all be taken out of the heart by true teaching, &c. They ſay well, that true teaching goeth before; but what then? Therefore is the Magiſtrates worke excluded? No. For, are not the ſinnes againſt the ſecond Table alſo to be taken out of the heart by teaching? And yet I hope the Magiſtrate may concurre with teaching, and puniſh Theeves, and Murderers, and Adulterers, &c. Much more in the firſt Table touching Gods honour and ſervice. Verſe 13. 1 King. 18. 21. Mat. 4. 10. Pſal. 16. 4. Euſeb. lib. 3. Concil. Atrelatenſ. Canon. Concil. Eliber. Ambr. Epiſt. 24.

10. Mariages with theſe Idolaters is forbidden, and I wiſh it marked: I have elſewhere touched it, and the curſe of God is often ſo great upon ſuch matches, as I wonder at the preſumptuous provoking of Gods wrath that I ſee in many. A Recuſants living is reſpected, and body and ſoule deſtroyed for ever. The father wilfully throweth his deare childe away, and never thinketh of the judgement he ſhall have with God at his fearefull day for the ſame. I know where I am, and I ſtay. God in mercy worke feeling and true repentance. Tertullian perſwadeth Chriſtian Widowes to take heed of theſe mariages. Solomon was overthrowne by them, &c.

11. When Moſes came downe from the mountaine, Aaron and all the Children of Iſrael looked upon him, and behold the skinne of his face ſhone bright, and they were afraid to come neere him. Hoc ſigno intolerabilis divini judicii ſplendor adumbrari debuit, & legis Divinæ operatio, quæ conſpicientibus peccata ſua terrorem incutit. At per velamen, cum naturæ noſtræ caligo, tum Iudæorum excæcatio, de qua anagogice. 2 Cor. 3. 13. &c. Myſticam expoſit: By this ſign the unſufferableneſſe of the Divine ſplendor ought to be ſhadowed, and the Divine operation of the Law, that ſtrikes a terror into them that look into their ſins. But by a ſhadow, &c. Divers and ſundry cauſes might cauſe the Lord thus to change Moſes face. Firſt, to aſſure him by this outward token, that his prayers were accepted, and Gods favour againe reſtored to the people. Secondly, that thus the Verſ. 29. & 30. Orig hom. 12. *in Exod. Law written in the two Tables now the ſecond time, and Moſes alſo the Miniſter of the Law, might receive authority and dutifull regard with the people. Thirdly, that it might note Moſes to ſhine with heavenly knowledge and wiſdome, inſtructed by the Lord for the good of the people. Fourthly, to note that Miniſters faces, that is, their outward actions and words (which appeare to men) ſhould gliſter and ſhine: So let your light ſhine, that men may ſee your good works, &c. Fiftly, to ſhadow that the Law which Moſes now repreſented, is onely bright and ſhining in the face; that is, outwardly, for the righteouſneſſe of them that obſerve the Law for outward actions, is only a ſeeming Juſtice, ſhining before men, who looke no further then to the outward appearance; but before God (who ſeeth the heart and reines) it is none: Whereas the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt is all glorious within and without. Sixtly, to teach that the Law lightneth the conſcience, which is as the face of the inward man, making it ſee and know ſinne; but the minde it lightneth not with any faith to ſave from ſinnes, Chriſt only doing that by his holy Spirit, &c. Therefore the people feare, and dare not approach, the Law ever ſtriking a terrour into the hearts of them that behold their ſinnes in it, and by it. Moſes himſelf (ſaith your Chapter) knew not of this glory of his face. And modeſt men are not caried away with knowledge of their own gifts, but are as it were ignorant of them. Socrates, when all men judged him moſt learned, yet of himſelfe held this both thought and ſpeech, That he knew nothing. And in matter of our almes, the Lord biddeth, That the right hand know not what the left hand doth.

12. Moſes put a covering over his face, &c. For the ſignification whereof you may reade S. Paul, 2 Cor. 3. 7. It was a figure of the Cover that is over our underſtanding, till the Lord take it away, whereby we are not able to diſcerne the things of God. Pray we therefore ever, that as our Saviour hath come out of the boſome of his Father to reveale all truth, and hath in his holy word perfectly taught the ſame; ſo he would be pleaſed to open our eies, to boare our eares, and to ſoften our hearts, that we may receive to our endleſſe comfort what hee hath revealed. Thus much of this Chapter.

Ver. 33.

Chap. XXXV.

These laſt ſix Chapters following do but repeat how theſe things were done, which God in the former Chapters commanded to be done; and therefore need not further to bee ſtood upon, the chiefe things in them having beene before ſpoken of: As, in the five and twentieth Chapter you have this Chapter, and ſo on, if you conferre them together. Only I will remember two or three things out of the Fathers, not noted before (as I take it) in the five and twentieth Chapter. The firſt is an earneſt and an affectionate ſpeech of Origen. hom. 13. in Exod. Domine Ieſu, præſta mihi, ut aliquid monimenti habere queam in tabernaculo tuo. Ego optarem (ſi fieri poteſt) eſſe aliquid meum in illo auro, ex quo Propitiatorium fabricatur, vel ex quo Arca contegitur, vel ex quo candelabrum fit luminis & lucernæ: aut ſi aurum non habeo & argentum, ſaltem aliquid inveniar offerre, quod proficiat in columnas & baſes earum: aut certe vel aris aliquid habere queam in Tabernaculo, unde circuli fiant, & cætera quæ ſermo divinus deſcribit. Vtinam mihi eſſet poſſibile unũ eſſe ex Principibus, & offerre gemmas ad ornamentum pontificis humeralis atq; λογείου. Sed quia hæc ſupra me ſunt, certe vel pilos caprarum habere merear in Tabernaculo Dei, tantum ne in omnibus jejunus & infœcundus inveniar. Lord Jeſu, grant that I may have ſome monument in thy Tabernacle. I would wiſh, if it could be, that ſome part of that gold might come from me, whereof the Propitiatory is made, or with which the Ark is covered, or whereof the Candleſtick is made, or if I have no gold or ſilver, at the leaſt I may bee found to offer ſomething that may help forward the pillars and ſockets of them: or that I may have ſome braſſe in the Tabernacle, whereof the rings may be made, and other things preſcribed by the Word. O that it were poſſible for me to be one of the Princes, and to offer precious ſtones to the adorning of the Prieſts garment! But becauſe all theſe are above my power, at leaſt let me finde favour to offer Goates haire in the Tabernacle of God, that I be not found empty and unfruitfull in all. Let this devout Speech much move thee, good Reader. The ſecond thing is concerning the skilfull work-men, Bezaleel and Aholiab: For the firſt being well deſcended of the honourable Tribe of Iuda; and the ſecond not ſo well, but from a more unnoble Tribe, the Tribe of Dan, it affordeth us this good obſervation; that God beſtoweth not his gifts ever according to birth, but maketh them in vertue equall, whom earthly reſpect and humane deſcent have made very unequall. Neither doth he yeeld them praiſe for birth, but for gifts and graces of his Spirit in themſelves, and for a ſingular ability to teach others, which every man cannot doe, either by ſome impatiency in his nature, or for ſloth, or for one thing or other. Very well therefore ſaid S. Hierome, Summa apud Deum nobilitas clarum eſſe virtutibus: neſcit religio noſtras perſonas, nec conditiones hominum, ſed animas inſpicit. In Epiſt. ad Celantium. It is the chiefeſt nobility with God, to be endued with vertue: Religion knoweth not our perſons, neither doth it looke upon the conditions of men, but upon their mindes. Thirdly, in the example of theſe worthy work-men, is notably commended mended unto us the vertue of agreement and consent in the Lords worke, that they joyne and are not severed: A thing of great consequence, if I would follow it by discourse. But God make us all follow it in our places: their faithfulnesse in not converting any thing to their owne use, and many other good things might be noted in them; but I stay.

CHAP. XXXVI.

TUrne back to the one and thirtieth Chapter, for the explanation of this Chapter, concerning these work-men thus raised up of God, and enabled with skill for this great work. In this place note the singular liberality of the people to this house of God, when they brought so much that they were stayed and stopped from bringing any more. O, where are these hearts now a dayes? Verse 6. Note also the rare faithfulnesse of the work-men, who gave notice of this bountie, and said, verse 5. It was more than needed, being much of it gold and precious stones, and costly things. What might they in such plenty have put aside for their private profit, if they had beene men of such a stampe? Thirdly, see the Magistrate in this matter, how he also will not have the people further charged than is cause, when once he knoweth of it. All these are examples to us, to learne in our severall places to doe the like, that with God and man wee may reape like commendation.

CHAP. XXXVII. XXXVIII. XXXIX.

REeade over againe the five and twentieth, fixe and twentieth, and seven and twentieth Chapters, where these things now repeated are explained.

CHAP. XL.

OBserve how often in this Chapter is repeated (as the Lord commanded) and see how sweet commanded obedience is. Were it as sweet to God to be served with inventions, never would these repetitions be made. Beware therfore of these wayes, and in very reason conclude, that if you looke of your servant service according to your will, and not according to his; much more may God: and if your commandement be a discharge to your servant, much more is God to his a sure rest and comfort.

2 Consider here what Saint Augustine noteth: Moses that is appointed to anoynt and consecrate others, was never anoynted and consecrated himselfe; that so wee might learne not to value externall Sacraments or signes by the dignity of the Minister, but by the Ordinance of God. Againe, that the invisible grace is of force without the visible signe, when God will have it so, as in Moses here. Aug. Quæst in Levit.

3 The Cloud covered the Tabernacle, and the glory of the Lord filled it: That thus he might grace that outward place now appointed for holy assemblies to serve him, and to the worlds end teach how great account all people ought to make of their Churches, and Church-meetings, whereof I have spoken before, Chap. 25. The Cloud ascended when they should travell, and was unto them a direction when to remove: by the day also it went before them, and a fire by night; so day and night the Lord directed them in their way to Canaan. Blessed were those men (thinke you) that were thus directed. And is God now changed? No, no: in his Word hee is, and by his Word he offereth to lead you to the true Canaan in heaven as comfortably, as plainly, and as powerfully, as he did his people by these outward meanes, unlesse you; bee wilfull, and will not follow. Looke therefore, in his name I begge it, at his Word; have it, reade it, love it, and meditate upon it, and continually (as you may) exercise your selfe in it: It will set you at the last where all the pleasures of the world cannot set you, and from whence you would not come (when once you are there) for ten thousand millions of such worlds. These helpes of mine to this end accept, and use as the pledges of his love, that wisheth you eternall comfort and peace. Reade first a Chapter in your Bible, and then reade these Notes upon the same, they will stirre up your minde to further meditation: for who is able to sound the full depth of the Lords Word? God that hath no measure in mercy, for his deare Sonnes sake make them profitable unto you. Amen, Amen. Verse 34. Verse 36. Verse 38.
